Yet draw near they muſt, and take their trial,—their deciſive trial at his righteous bar. Every action comes under examination. For each idle word they muſt give an account. Not ſo much as a ſecret thought eſcapes this exact ſcrutiny.—How ſhall the criminals, the impenitent criminals, either conceal their guilt, or elude the ſentence? They have to do with a ſagacity too keen to be deceived, with a power too ſtrong to be reſiſted, and (O! terrible, terrible conſideration!) with a ſeverity of moſt juſt diſpleaſure, that will never relent, never be entreated more.—What ghaſtly deſpair lours on their pale looks! What racking agonies rend

* 1 Cor. xv. 52.

* Rev. xx. 11.

† Rev. xx. 11.

* their

their distracted hearts! The bloody axe and the torturing wheel, are safe, are down, compared with their prodigious woe. And (O holy GOD! wonderful in thy doings! fearful in thy judgments!) even this prodigious woe is the gentlest of visitations, compared with that indignation and wrath, which are hanging over their guilty heads,—which are even now falling on all the sons of rebellion,—which will plunge them deep in aggravated and endless destruction.

And is there a last day? and must there come
A sure, a fix'd, irrevocable doom?

Surely then, to use the words of a pious prelate *, it should be "the main care of our lives and deaths, "what shall give us peace and acceptation before the "dreadful tribunal of GOD. What but righteousness? "What righteousness, or whose? Ours or CHRIST's? "Ours, in the inherent graces wrought in us, in the holy "works wrought by us? or CHRIST's, in his most "perfect obedience and meritorious satisfaction, wrought "for us, and applied to us? The Popish faction is for the "former. We Protestants are for the latter. GOD is "direct on our side, as his word can make him; every "where blazoning the defects of our own righteousness, "every where extolling the perfect obedience of our "REDEEMER's."

Behold! says the everlasting KING, I lay in Zion, for a foundation, a stone; a tried stone; a precious corner-stone; a sure foundation: HE THAT BELIEVETH, SHALL NOT MAKE HASTE †. As this text contains so noble a display of our SAVIOUR's consummate ability for his great work; as it is admirably calculated to preserve the mind from distressing fears, and to settle it in a steady tranquillity; you will give me leave to touch it cursorily with my pen; just as I should descant upon it in conversation, was I now sitting in one of your agreeable arbours, and enjoying your more agreeable company.

How beautiful the gradation! how lively the description! and how very important the practical improvement! or, I might say, the inscription which is engraven on the wonderful stone.——Behold! Intended to rouse and fix our most attentive regard. The GOD of heaven speaks. He speaks, and every syllable is balm; every sentence is rich with consolation. If ever therefore we have ears to hear, let it be to this SPEAKER, and on this occasion.

A stone. Every thing else is sliding sand; is yielding air; is a breaking bubble. Wealth will prove a vain shadow; honour an empty breath; pleasure a delusory dream; our own righteousness a spider's web. If on these we rely, disappointment must ensue, and shame be inevitable. Nothing but CHRIST, nothing but CHRIST, can stably support our spiritual interests, and realize our expectations of true happiness. And, blessed be the divine goodness! he is, for this purpose, not a stone only, but

A tried stone. Tried, in the days of his humanity, by all the vehemence of temptations, and all the weight of afflictions; yet, like gold from the furnace, rendered more shining and illustrious by the fiery scrutiny.—Tried, under the capacity of a SAVIOUR, by millions and millions of depraved, wretched, ruined creatures; who have always found him perfectly able, and as perfectly willing, to expiate the most enormous guilt,—to deliver from the most inveterate corruptions,—and save, to the very uttermost, all that come unto GOD through him.

A corner stone: which not only sustains, but unites the edifice; incorporating both Jews and Gentiles, believers of various languages, and manifold denominations,—here in one harmonious bond of brotherly love,—hereafter in one common participation of eternal joy.

* Bishop Hall. † Is. xxxviii. 16.

A precious stone. More precious than rubies; the pearl of great price; and the desire of all nations. Precious, with regard to the divine dignity of his person, and the unequalled excellency of his mediatorial offices. In these, and in all respects, greater than Jonah,—wiser than Solomon,—fairer than the children of men,—chiefest among ten thousand,—and, to the awakened sinner, or enlightened believer, altogether lovely *.

A sure foundation †: such as no pressure can shake: equal, more than equal to every weight; even to sin, the heaviest load in the world.—The Rock of ages; such as never has failed, never will fail, those humble penitents, who cast their burden upon the LORD REDEEMER; who roll all ‡ their guilt, and fix their whole hopes, on this immoveable basis.——Or, as the words may be rendered, a foundation ‖! a foundation! There is a fine spirit of vehemency in the sentence, thus understood. It speaks the language of exultation, and expresses an important discovery. That which mankind infinitely want; that which multitudes seek, and find not; it is here! it is here! This, this is the foundation for their pardon, their peace, their eternal felicity.

Whosoever believeth, though pressed with adversities, or surrounded by dangers, shall not make haste §: but, free from tumultuous and perplexing thoughts, preserved from rash and precipitate steps, he shall possess his soul in patience; knowing the sufficiency of those merits, and the fidelity of that grace, on which he has reposed his confidence, shall quietly and without perturbation wait for an expected end.——And not only amidst the perilous or disastrous changes of life, but even in the day of everlasting judgment, such

* Cant. v. 16. † Fundamentum fundatissimum.

‡ Roll—This is the exact sense of the sacred phrase, גול על in Psal. xxii. 8. xxxvii. 5. Prov. xvi. 3. I am not ignorant, that some people have presumed to censure, and many have been shy of using this bold and vigorous metaphor: which nevertheless appears to me, of all others the most just, the most significant, and therefore the most truly beautiful.

A burden, that is manageable and comparatively light, we carry, we throw. But that which is extremely ponderous and quite unwieldy, we move only by rolling. Accordingly, stones of an enormous size, are called by the oriental writers, stones of rolling, Ezra v. 8.—Consider the expression in this view, and nothing can represent, with greater or with equal energy, that prodigious load, which, heavier than the sand of the sea, oppresses the guilty conscience.—By substituting any other word, we enfeeble and dilute the sense; we lose the capital and striking idea.

Vain man would be wise. Let him not then, for the credit of his ingenuity, adventure to correct the language of omniscience. This, if any thing in nature, is Periculosæ plenum opus aleæ.

This will be sure to discover, not his fine taste, but his grovelling apprehension, and his rampant pride. To improve, with the painter's brush, the glowing colours of the rainbow; to heighten, by fuller's soap, the lustre of the new-fallen snows; would be a more modest attempt, and a much easier task, than to make an index expurgatorius, or a table of errata, when the SPIRIT of inspiration dictates.

משכ טיסר ‖

§ Shall not make haste, לא יחיש This metaphorical expression, though it might be very intelligible to an Hebrew, is, to an English reader, like some fine picture placed in a disadvantageous light. We may possibly illustrate the prophet's meaning, and exemplify his assertion, if we compare the conduct of Moses, with that of the Israelites, on viewing the fatal catastrophe of Dathan and Abiram.—When the earth trembled under their feet; when the ground opened its horrid jaws; when the presumptuous sinners were down alive into the pit; when the tremendous chasm closed upon the screaming wretches; the children of Israel, it is written, fled at the cry of them; fled in wild and hasty confusion; for they said, Lest the earth swallow us up also.—But Moses, who denounced the dreadful doom; Moses, who was sure of the divine protection; Moses made no such precipitate or disorderly haste. He stood calm and composed; saw the whole alarming transaction, without any uneasy emotions of fear, or any unnecessary attempts to escape. So that his behaviour seems to be a clear and apposite comment on Isaiah's phrase. See Numb. xvi.

persons

persons shall stand with boldness.——They shall look up to the grand ARBRITATOR,—look round on all the solemnity of his appearance,—look forward to the unalterable sentence,—and neither feel anxiety, nor fear damnation.

Such, in that day of terrors, shall be seen
To face the thunders with a godlike mien.
The planets drop: their thoughts are fix'd above;
The centre shakes; their hearts disdain to move.

This portion of scripture, which, I hope, will both delight and edify my friend, recalls our attention to the subject of my present letter;—to those propitiatory sufferings, and that justifying righteousness, which, imputed to sinners, are the ground of their comfort, and the bulwark of their security.——And what say the writers of the New Testament upon this point? they, whose understandings were opened by the "WONDERFUL COUNSELLOR," to discern the meaning of the ancient oracles; who must therefore be the most competent judges of their true import, and our surest guides in settling their sense.——Do they patronize our interpretation of the prophets? do they set their seal to the authenticity of our doctrine?

St Luke, in his ecclesiastical history, has preserved this weighty declaration of the apostles; We believe, that, through the grace of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, we shall be saved even as they *. Here the thing is implied.——St Peter, in the introduction to one of his theological epistles, thus addresses his happy correspondents: To them that have obtained like precious faith, in the righteousness† of our GOD and SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST. Here the point is expressly asserted.——With equal clearness is the doctrine delivered by Matthew the evangelist; Seek ye first the kingdom of GOD and his righteousness‡. What can the kingdom of GOD mean? An experience of the power, and an enjoyment of the privileges of the gospel. What are we to understand by his righteousness? Surely, the righteousness which is worthy of this grand appellation, and peculiar to that blessed institution.

Would we learn, what is the great and distinguishing peculiarity of the gospel? St Paul informs us; Therein the righteousness of GOD is revealed, from faith to faith. As this text leads us into the epistle to the Romans;—as this epistle is, for the propriety of its method, as well as for the importance of its doctrine, singularly excellent,—it may not be amiss to examine its structure, and inquire into its design.

The apostle writes to a promiscuous people; who had been converted, partly from Judaism, partly from Gentilism. His aim is, to strike at the very root of their former errors respectively,—to turn them wholly to the superabundant grace of GOD, and establish them solely on the all-sufficient merits of CHRIST.

The Gentiles were, for the most part, grosly ignorant of GOD, and stupidly negligent of invisible interests. If any among them had a sense of religion, their virtues, they imagined, were meritorious of all that the DEITY could bestow. If they fell into sin; sin, they supposed, might easily be obliterated by repentance, or compensated by a train of sacrifices ‖. A few of their judicious sages taught, that the most probable means of securing the divine favour, was a sincere reformation of life.

The Jews, it is well known, placed a mighty dependence on their affinity to Abraham, and the covenant made with their fathers; on their adherence to the letter of the moral law, and their scrupulous performance of ceremonial institutions:—Gentiles and Jews agreeing in this mistake, that they looked for the pardon of guilt, and the attainment of happiness from some services done, or some qualities acquired by themselves.

Against these errors the zealous apostle draws his pen. He enters the lists like a true champion of CHRIST, in the most spirited and heroic manner imaginable. I am not ashamed of the gospel of CHRIST: for, however it may be deemed foolishness by the polite Greeks, or prove a stumbling-block to the carnal Jews, it is the power of GOD unto† salvation; it is the grand instrument, which he has ordained for his blessed purpose, and which he will certainly crown with the desired success.——Whence has the gospel this very peculiar power? Because therein a righteousness is revealed; a true and perfect righteousness, which obliterates all guilt, and furnishes a solid title to eternal life.——What righteousness is this! The righteousness not of man, but of GOD; which was promised by GOD in the scriptures; was introduced by GOD in the person of his SON; and, on account of its consummate excellency, is both acceptable and available in his sight.

This righteousness is from faith to faith‡; held forth, as it were, by a promising GOD, and apprehended by a believing soul: who, first, gives a firm assent to the Gospel; then, cordially accepts its blessings; from a conviction that the doctrine is true, passes to a persuasion that the privileges are his own.——When this is effected, a foundation is laid for all happiness; a principle is wrought, to produce all holiness.

But why was it requisite, that such a righteousness should be provided by GOD, and revealed in the gospel?—Because both Gentile and Jew neither possessed, nor could attain, any righteousness of their own; and this righteousness, though so absolutely necessary for their fallen state, was infinitely remote from all human apprehensions. The latter assertion is self-evident. The former is particularly demonstrated.—First, with regard to the Gentiles; the generality of whom were abandoned to the most scandalous excesses; and they who had escaped the grosser pollutions, fell short in the duties of natural religion.—Next, with regard to the Jews; many of whom lived in open violation of the external commandment; and not one of them acted up to the internal purity required by the Mosaic precepts.——From which premises, this conclusion is deduced; that each of them had transgressed even their own rule of action; that all of them were, on this account, utterly inexcusable; therefore by the works of the law, whether dictated by reason, or delivered by Moses, no mortal can be justified‡ in the sight of GOD.

---

* Acts xv. 11.

† 2 Pet. i. 1. The phrase is τησιν τ δικαιοσυν. If we retain the common translation, it proves another very momentous truth: that the righteousness of our GOD, even of our SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST, is the one meritorious procuring cause of all spiritual blessings; of faith, as well as of fruition; of grace, as well as of glory.

‡ Matth. iv. 33.

‖ See WITSII Animadversiones Irenicæ, cap. vii.—A choice little piece of polemical divinity, perhaps the very best that is extant. In which the most important controversies are fairly stated, accurately discussed, and judiciously determined; with a perspicuity of sense, and a solidity of reasoning, exceeded by nothing, but the remarkable conciseness, and the still more remarkable candour of the sentiments.

The Oeconomia Fœderum, written by the same hand, is a body of divinity; in its method so well digested,—in its doctrines so truly evangelical,—and (what is not very usual with our systematic writers) in its language so refined and elegant,—in its manner so affectionate and animating, that I would venture to recommend it to every young student in divinity: I would not scruple to risk all my reputation upon the merits of this performance; and I cannot but lament it, as one of my greatest losses, that I was no sooner acquainted with this most excellent author.—All those works have such a delicacy of composition, and such a sweet savour of holiness, that I know not any comparison more proper to represent their true character, than the golden pot which had manna: and was—outwardly, bright with burnished gold,—inwardly, rich with heavenly food.

* Rom. i. 16. † Rom. i. 17.

‡ Rom. iii. 20. There seems to be a kind of humbling or degrading turn in the apostle's language, εκ εργ, which may possibly Left any ſhould imagine, that righteouſneſs may be obtained, if not by a conformity to the law of nature, or the law of Moſes, yet by an obſervation of evangelical ordinances; he farther declares, that ſinners are juſtified freely, without any regard to their own endowments; through the redemption, the complete redemption of JESUS CHRIST *: after ſuch a manner, as may lay them low in humiliation, even while it exalts them to the kingdom of heaven: after ſuch a manner, as may bring life and ſalvation to their ſouls, while all the glory reverts to GOD the FATHER, and his SON JESUS CHRIST.

In the proſecution of this very momentous ſubject, our ſacred diſputant removes an objection, which is as common, as it is plauſible. Do we make void the law through faith? Do we render it a vain inſtitution; ſuch as never has been, never will be fulfilled?—GOD forbid! This were a flagrant diſhonour to the divine LEGISLATOR and his holy commandments; ſuch as we would abhor, rather than countenance.——On the contrary, we eſtabliſh the law †; not only as we receive it for a rule of life, but as we expect no ſalvation without a proper, without a perfect conformity to its injunctions. ——How can this be effected? By qualifying its ſenſe, and ſoftening it into an eaſier ſyſtem? This were to vacate the law; to deprive it of its honours; and hinder it from attaining the due end, either of obedience or condemnation.——No; but we eſtabliſh the law, by believing in that great MEDIATOR, who has obeyed its every precept; ſuſtained its whole penalty; and ſatisfied all its requirements, in their utmoſt extent.

Farther to corroborate his ſcheme, he proves it from the renowned examples of Abraham and David.—The inſtance of Abraham is ſo clear, that it wants no comment. Any paraphraſe would rather obſcure, than illuſtrate it.——The other, derived from the teſtimony of the pſalmiſt, may admit the commentator's tool: yet not to hammer it into a new form, but only to clear away the rubbiſh; to reſcue it from miſrepreſentation, and place it in a true light. Even as David deſcribeth the bleſſedneſs of the man, to whom GOD imputeth righteouſneſs without works, ſaying, Bleſſed are they, whoſe unrighteouſneſs is forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered: Bleſſed is the man, to whom the LORD will not impute ſin ‡.——Here is imputation aſſerted;—the imputation of righteouſneſs;—of righteouſneſs without works; without any reſpect to, or any co-operation from, any kind of human works. It is a bleſſing vouchſafed to the ungodly; not founded on a freedom from ſin, but procuring a remiſſion of its guilt.

Some, I know, have attempted to reſolve all the force of this paſſage, into an argument for the fameneſs of pardon and juſtification. Whereas the apoſtle undertakes to prove, not that forgiveneſs and juſtification are identically the ſame, but that both are abſolutely free. To maintain which poſition, he argues,—"This doctrine is "as true, as it is comfortable. It agrees with the expe"rience, and has received the atteſtation of David. "When he ſpeaks of the bleſſed and happy man, he "deſcribes him, not as an innocent, but guilty perſon; "not as having any claim to the divine favour, on ac"count of deſerving performances, or recommending "properties; but as owing all his acceptance to that ſo"vereign grace which forgives iniquities, and blots out ſin. "Such is the caſe with regard to that evangelical juſtifi"cation, which we preach. Even as; it is, in the manner "of its vouchſafement; perfectly ſimilar to the bleſſedneſs "celebrated by the pſalmiſt."——This apoſtle's eye is not ſo directly upon the nature of the privilege, as upon the freeneſs with which it is granted. Nor can any infer from the tenor of his reaſoning, that to be forgiven, is the ſame as to be juſtified; only that both are acts of infinitely-rich mercy, deſigned for ſinners, promiſed to ſinners, beſtowed on ſinners; who have nothing, nothing of their own, either to boaſt, or to plead.

In the fifth chapter, from verſe the twelfth to the end, the ſacred penman points out the cauſe, and explains the method of juſtification. Of which this is the ſum;—That CHRIST, in purſuance of the covenant of grace, fulfilled all righteouſneſs in the ſtead of his people;—That this righteouſneſs, being performed for them, is imputed to them:—That, by virtue of this gracious imputation, they are abſolved from guilt, and entitled to bliſs; as thoroughly abſolved, and as fully entitled, as if in their own perſons they had undergone the expiatory ſufferings, and yielded the meritorious obedience.—Leſt it ſhould ſeem ſtrange, in the opinion of a Jew or a Gentile, to hear of being juſtified by the righteouſneſs of another, the wary apoſtle urges a parallel caſe, recorded in the Jewiſh revelation, but ratified by *univerſal experience; namely, our being condemned for the righteouſneſs of another.—In this reſpect, he obſerves, Adam was a type of our LORD; or a figure of him that was to come †. The relations the ſame, but the effects happily reverſed. Adam the head of his poſterity; CHRIST the head of his people. Adam's ſin was unputed to all his natural deſcendents; CHRIST's righteouſneſs is imputed to all his ſpiritual offſpring. Adam's tranſgreſſion brought death into the world, and all our woe; CHRIST's obedience brings life and all our happineſs ‡.——The whole cloſes with the very obvious and no leſs weighty inference; Therefore, as, by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even ſo, by the righteouſneſs of one, the free gift came upon all men unto juſtification of life ‖.

I do not recollect any other ſimilitude, which the apoſtle ſo minutely ſifts, and ſo copiouſly unfolds. He explains it; he applies it; he reſumes it; he dwells upon it; and ſcarcely knows how to deſiſt from it. I am ſure, you will not blame me, if I imitate the ſacred author; revert to the ſubject; and quote another paſſage from the ſame paragraph.——Much more ſhall they who receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteouſneſs, reign in life by one, JESUS CHRIST §.—Here, I am ready to think, the inſpired writer puts a difference between the two grand bleſſings purchaſed by EMMANUEL, remiſſion and righteouſneſs ¶. For who are the perſons which receive abundance of grace? They, I apprehend, that, having ſinned much, have much forgiven.——Who are the perſons which receive abundance of the gift of righteouſneſs? They that, having in their own conduct wrought out none, which will bear the teſt of GOD's impartial ſcrutiny, have one placed to their account, which the all-ſeeing eye of heaven approves.——However, whether the diſtinction I have ventured to propoſe, be fanciful or ſubſtantial, of this I am perſuaded, that the gift of poſſibly be preſerved in the tranſlation, no mortal.—We may farther obſerve the very nice and exact manner of the ſacred argumentation. Leſt it ſhould be ſaid, and from the authority of St James, a man is juſtified by works; our unerring writer tacitly allows, that before men this is practicable, before men this is proper; but not παρα θεω, not before GOD.

---

* Rom. iii. 24.

† Rom. iii. 31. An inconteſtable proof, that the apoſtle treats of the moral law.

‡ Rom. iv. 6, 7.

* By the pains and death which infants, in every nation, endure; which are unqueſtionably puniſhments, and to which they are doomed by the righteous judgment of GOD.

† Rom. v. 14.

‡ Quemadmodum peccatum Adami, ſays Bengelius, ſine peccatis quæ poſtea commiſimus, mortem attulit nobis, ſic juſtitia CHRISTI, ſine bonis operibus, quæ deinceps a nobis fiunt, vitam nobis conciliat. That is, As the ſin of Adam, without any concurrence of the ſins which we ourſelves reſpectively commit, occaſioned our ruin; ſo the righteouſneſs of CHRIST, abſtracted from all conſideration of our perſonal obedience, procures our recovery.

‖ Rom. v. 18. § Rom. v. 17.

¶ Non tantum peccata ſublata, ſed juſtitia præſtita.

righte-

righteouſneſs * muſt ſignify a righteouſneſs, not originally their own, but another's; not what they themſelves have acquired, but what was fulfilled by their SURETY; and is, by an act of heavenly indulgence, conſigned over to them. Accordingly, it is repreſented not as a work, but as a gift; and thoſe who are intereſted in it, are ſtyled not workers, but receivers.

I ſhould but faintly copy the apoſtolic example, if I did not once again avail myſelf of this important topic. Suffer me, therefore, to tranſcribe one more verſe from this admirable chapter. As by the diſobedience of one man, many were made ſinners; ſo, by the obedience of one, ſhall many be made righteous †:—The diſobedience of one, is the diſobedience of Adam; his actual tranſgreſſion of the divine law. Hereby many were made ſinners; ſinners, in ſuch a ſenſe, as to become obnoxious unto condemnation and death.——All this, I think, is, from the apoſtle's own words, indiſputable. And if we would preſerve the propriety of his antitheſis, or the force of his reaſoning, we muſt allow, that the obedience of one is the obedience of CHRIST; his actual and complete performance of the whole law. Hereby many are made righteous; righteous in ſuch a ſenſe, as to be releaſed from condemnation, and veſted with a title to life eternal.—How clear and eaſy is this meaning! how juſt and regular this argumentation! What ſubtilty of evaſion muſt be uſed, to give a different turn to the inſtructive text!

This is the moſt conſiſtent ſenſe in which I can underſtand Rom. viii. 5. That the righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the SPIRIT: That the righteouſneſs required by the holy but broken law, might be thoroughly accompliſhed; accompliſhed by our public REPRESENTATIVE, and in our human nature; ſo as to be deemed, in point of legal eſtimation, fulfilled for us and by us ‡. This, I ſay, is moſt conſiſtent with the tenor of St Paul's arguing, and with the exact import of his language.—With the tenor of his arguing: for he undertakes to demonſtrate the impoſſibility of our juſtification, by any perſonal conformity to the law. Whereas, if we could ſatisfy its penalty, and obey its precepts; or, in other words, fulfil its righteouſneſs; this impoſſibility would ceaſe.——With the exact import of his language: for the original phraſe denotes, not a ſincere, but a complete obedience; not what we are enabled to perform, but what the law has a right to demand. Which, every one muſt acknowledge, is not fulfilled in any mere man, ſince the fall; but was fulfilled by JESUS CHRIST, for our good, and in our ſtead.——This interpretation preſerves the ſentences diſtinct, and makes a very natural introduction for the following clauſe; where the perſons intereſted in this privilege, are deſcribed by their fruits, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the SPIRIT: implying, that juſtification and ſanctification are, like the ever-correſponding motion of our eyes, inſeparable concomitants; and we vainly pretend to the former, if we continue deſtitute of the latter.

We have produced poſitive proofs of our doctrine.—We have heard an apoſtle declaring the aſſured happineſs, and complete juſtification of true believers.——Let us now obſerve the ſame ſagacious judge of men and things, diſcovering the danger of thoſe ſelf-juſticiaries, who reject the REDEEMER's righteouſneſs.

He is filled with the darkeſt apprehenſions, concerning his brethren the Jews. He is impreſſed with melancholy preſages, relating to their eternal ſtate †.—What was the cauſe of this tender ſolicitude? Had they caſt off all religion, and given themſelves over to groſs immoralities? On the contrary, they were worſhippers of the true GOD; and had, in their way, not only a regard, but a zeal for his honour ‡.——Wherefore then does this compaſſionate father in Iſrael feel the ſame trembling uneaſineſs, for his kinſmen according to the fleſh, as Eli felt for the endangered ark? Himſelf aſſigns the reaſon: Becauſe they being ignorant of GOD's righteouſneſs, and going about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, have not ſubmitted themſelves to the righteouſneſs of GOD ‖. Not knowing that immaculate holineſs, which the perfect nature, and equally perfect law of the moſt high GOD, require;—being wilfully ignorant of that conſummate obedience, which an incarnate GOD vouchſafed to perform, for the juſtification of his people;—they ſedulouſly, but fooliſhly endeavoured, to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs; to make it, ſcanty and decrepit as it was, the baſis of their hopes.——Thus were they reſting their everlaſting ALL on a bottom, not precarious only, but irreparably ruinous. A boundleſs eternity the fabric! yet they built (wonder, O heavens!) on the foam of the waters! and (which added ſtubbornneſs to their folly) in avowed contempt of that ſtrong and ſure foundation, laid by GOD's own hand in Zion.——For this the good apoſtle was afflicted, with "great heavineſs and continual ſorrow." For this he made the prophetic complaint his own; Oh! that my head were waters, and my eyes a fountain of tears, that I might bewail, day and night §, the incorrigible perverſeneſs of my people! For my people have committed two evils; in not thankfully ſubmitting to the righteouſneſs of GOD, they have forſaken the fountain of living waters; in attempting to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, they have hewed themſelves out ciſterns, broken ciſterns that can hold no water ¶.

Having ſhewed their fatal error, he ſtrengthens his repreſentation, by diſplaying the happy ſucceſs of the Gentiles. What ſhall we ſay then? This, however improbable it may ſeem, we confidently affirm, That the Gentiles, who followed not after righteouſneſs, who had

* I cannot but wonder at the aſſertion of a late writer, who roundly declares, "That there is not one word in this whole chapter relating to the antecedent obedience of CHRIST's life, but expreſſing only his paſſive obedience."—Muſt then this group of expreſſions—δικαιοσυνη—δικαιωμα—υπακοη—be confined barely to the ſufferings of our LORD? To put ſuch a ſenſe upon the words of the apoſtle, is, according to my apprehenſion, not to hear his voice, but to gag his mouth; not to acquieſce in the ſacred oracles, but to make them ſpeak our own meaning.—Beza, who perhaps is inferior to no critic, with regard to a maſterly ſkill in the Greek language, thus explains δικαιωμα; Juſtificationis eſt materia, nempe CHRISTI obedientia; cujus imputatio nos juſtos facit.—Schleuſner, in his accurate and copious lexicon for the Greek Teſtament, gives this interpretation of δικαιοσυνη; Opera CHRISTO a patre Præſcripta hoc nomine veniunt; nimirum omnia quæ ab ipſo præſtanda erant, tam ad legis divinæ impletionem, quam ad generis humani redemptionem; quæ nobis imputata, et per fidem accepta, faciunt ut coram DEO juſtificemur.—And as for υπακοη, ſurely that cannot, without the utmoſt violence to its native ſignification, be ſo applied to the paſſive, as to exclude the active obedience. The contrary opinion, if an artful diſputant ſhould eſpouſe it, might appear somewhat plauſible; but this has not the leaſt air of probability.

* Rom. v. 19.

‡ It is remarked by a judicious critic, and very valuable expoſitor, that the prepoſition εις ſometimes ſignifies by or for; and is ſo tranſlated Matth. v. 34. Heb. i. 1. See Dr Guyſe's expoſition of the New Teſtament.

* It may be worth our while to obſerve, that St Paul, when treating on this ſubject, uſes three diſtinct words, all derived from the ſame original.—Δικαιωσις, which expreſſes juſtification, the accounting or declaring a perſon righteous.—Δικαιοσυνη, which never ſignifies juſtification, but righteouſneſs, either performed by us, or imputed to us.—Δικαιωμα, the phraſe which occurs in this place, and denotes the right or demand of the law; as that which is indiſpenſably neceſſary to the juſtification of man.

† Rom. ix. 2. ‡ Rom. x. 2.

‖ Rom. x. 3. § Jer. ix. 1.

¶ Jer. ii. 13.

no knowledge of it, and no concern about it; even they have attained to righteouſneſs *.—Strange aſſertion! How is this poſſible! Doubtleſs, the righteouſneſs which they attained, could not be any perſonal righteouſneſs. Of this they were totally deſtitute. Inſtead of practiſing moral virtues, or religious duties, they were immerſed in ſenſuality, and abandoned to idolatry. It muſt therefore be the evangelical, the imputed righteouſneſs, even that which was wrought by CHRIST, and is received by faith †.

Iſrael, in the mean time, the nominal Iſrael, who, with great pretenſions to ſanctity, and many coſtly oblations, followed after the law of righteouſneſs, hath not attained to the law of righteouſneſs. Attained! They have done nothing leſs. They are fallen vaſtly ſhort of it; they are pronounced guilty by it; they ſtand condemned before ‡.——Wherefore did they ſo groſsly miſtake, and ſo grievouſly miſcarry? Becauſe they forſook the good old way, in which Abraham, David, and their pious anceſtors walked. They adopted a new ſcheme; and would fain have ſubſtituted their own, inſtead of relying on a SAVIOUR's righteouſneſs. They ſought for juſtification, not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law ‖. A method which their fathers knew not; which their GOD ordained not; and which proved, as it always will prove, not only abortive, but deſtructive.—At this ſtone they ſtumbled; on this rock they ſplit. Let their ruin be a way mark, and the apoſtle's obſervation a light-houſe to my Theron.

Our zealous writer tries every expedient. He mingles hope with terror. Having pointed out the rock on which the Iſraelites ſuffered ſhipwreck, he directs us to the haven, in which ſinners may caſt anchor, and find ſafety. He gives us a fine deſcriptive view of the Chriſtian's complete happineſs. He opens (if I may continue the metaphor) a free and ample port for periſhing ſouls; not formed by a neck of land, or a ridge of mountains, but by a magnificent chain of ſpiritual bleſſings. All proceeding from, and terminating in that precious corner-ſtone JESUS CHRIST: who of GOD is made unto us wiſdom, and righteouſneſs, and ſanctification, and redemption §; wiſdom, to enlighten our ignorant minds; righteouſneſs ¶, to juſtify our guilty perſons; ſanctification ¶, to renew our depraved natures; redemption, to reſcue us from all evil; and render us, both in body and ſoul, perfectly and eternally happy.——Let it be remarked, how careſully our inſpired writer lets aſide all efficiency, as well as all merit in man. He repreſents the whole of our ſalvation, both in its procurement and application, as a work of freeſt grace. CHRIST is, and not we ourſelves, the author of this glorious reſtoration, the cauſe of this great felicity. He is made all this unto us.—How? Not by our own reſolution and ſtrength; but of GOD, by the agency of his mighty power, and bleſſed SPIRIT. He ſhews us the all-ſufficient fulneſs of CHRIST. He brings us by ardent longings to CHRIST. He implants us into CHRIST, and makes us partakers of his merits.

In the proceſs of the ſame epiſtle, the ſacred penman enumerates the conſtituent parts of that great ſalvation, which the SON of GOD has procured for ruined ſinners. But ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified in the name of the LORD JESUS, and by the SPIRIT of our GOD *. Ye are waſhed; cleanſed from the filth, and diſcharged from the guilt, of all your iniquities. Ye are ſanctified; delivered from the death of ſin, and endued with a living principle of holineſs. Ye are juſtified; reſtored to a ſtate of acceptance with GOD, and inveſted with a title to eternal glory. All which ineſtimable prerogatives are conferred upon the believer, in the name of our LORD JESUS CHRIST; in conſideration of his atoning blood and meritorious righteouſneſs. By the SPIRIT of our GOD; through the efficacy of his operation, revealing CHRIST, and working faith in the heart.

Some gentlemen have talked of a new remedial law; whereas the apoſtle declares, that CHRIST is the end of the old, the unalterable, the Moſaic law, for righteouſneſs to every one that believeth †.—Follow the courſe of a river, it will conſtantly lead you to the ocean. Trace the veins of the body, they invariably unite in the heart. Mark likewiſe the tendency of the law, it no leſs conſtantly and invariably conducts you to CHRIST, as the centre of its views, and the conſummation of its demands. The moral law aims at diſcovering our guilt, and demonſtrating our inexpreſſible need of a SAVIOUR. The ceremonial points him out, as ſuffering in our ſtead, making reconciliation for iniquity, and purging away every defilement with his blood.—They both direct the wretched tranſgreſſor, to renounce himſelf, and fly to the REDEEMER; who alone has paid that perfect obedience, and brought in that everlaſting righteouſneſs, which the ſinner wants, and the law exacts; who is, therefore, the only proper accompliſhment of the one, and the only ſuitable ſupply for the other.

What is the grand deſign of the whole ſcripture? St Paul, diſplaying their ſublime origin, and enumerating the gracious purpoſes they are intended to ſerve, writes thus: All ſcripture is given by inſpiration of GOD; and is profitable——for doctrine, to declare and eſtabliſh religious truth;—for reproof, to convince of ſin, and to refute error,—for correction ‡, or reformation of the heart, and reformation of the life;—for inſtruction in righteouſneſs, in that righteouſneſs, which could never have been learned from any other book.

* Surely, this muſt ſignify more, than "attaining to the profeſſion of a religion, whereby they may be juſtified and ſaved." To this multitudes attain, who continue, as the prophet ſpeaks, ſtout-hearted and far from righteouſneſs: who derive no real benefit from their profeſſion; but are rendered utterly inexcuſable, and liable to more aggravated condemnation.

† Surely, the righteouſneſs, which is by faith, cannot conſiſt "in "humbly committing the ſoul to CHRIST, in the way that he hath "appointed." According to this notion, the juſtifying righteouſneſs would ſpring from ourſelves; would be conſtituted by an act of our own, and not by the perfect obedience of our LORD.

I am ſorry to ſee this, and the preceding interpretation, in the works of an expoſitor, whoſe learning I admire, whoſe piety I reverence, and whoſe memory I honour. Yet I muſt ſay, on this occaſion, with one of the ancient philoſophers, Amicus Plato, amicus Socrates, ſed magis amica Veritas.

‡ This, I apprehend, is the purport of the apoſtle's ſpeech, when he tells us, that his countrymen had not attained unto the law of righteouſneſs. He uſes the figure μειωσις, and means more than he expreſſes. Somewhat like the dramatic poet, who ſays of certain literary pretenders,

Qui ſe primos eſſe rerum omnium exiſtimant,
Nec tamen ſunt,

That is, they are quite the reverſe.—Or like the prophet in the cloſe of this chapter, who aſſures the believers in JESUS, They ſhall not be aſhamed; that is, they ſhall be encouraged, emboldened, eſtabliſhed.

‖ Rom. ix. 30. 31. 32.

§ 1 Cor. i. 30.

¶¶ Righteouſneſs and Sanctification; the former imputed, the latter inherent. This preſerves a diſtinction between the noble articles, and aſſigns to each a grand ſhare in the œconomy of ſalvation.—To ſay, that, if one of the bleſſings is communicated by way of imputation, the other ſhould be communicated in the ſame manner, ſeems to be cavilling, rather than arguing: becauſe the ſubjects are of a different nature, and therefore muſt be enjoyed in a different way.—The cocoa tree is, to the American, food and clothing, a habitation and domeſtic utenſils. But muſt we ſuppoſe, in adminiſtering to all theſe uſes in one and the ſame unvaried method? Becauſe in one reſpect it is eaten, in another it is worn, muſt it be thus applied in all? I believe, the illiterate ſavage, who enjoys the ſeveral gifts, need not be taught, the abſurdity of ſuch a ſuppoſition.

* 1 Cor. vi. 11. † Rom. x. 4.

‡ Tim. iii. 16. Προς επανορθωσιν.

in which alone sinful men may appear with comfort before their GOD.

We have seen the principal scope of the law, and the leading design of the scriptures: let us add one inquiry more. What is the chief office of the SPIRIT?—If all these coincide, and unitedly terminate in the imputed righteousness of CHRIST, we have a confirmation of its reality and excellence, great as man can desire, I had almost said, great as GOD can impart.——What says our LORD upon this point? When he, the SPIRIT of truth is come, he shall convince * the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. Of sin, because they believe not on me: of righteousness, because I go to my FATHER, and ye see me no more: of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged †.——Is it possible for words to be more weighty and comprehensive? Here is a summary of Christian faith, and of Christian holiness. Not that superficial holiness, which is patched up of devotional forms, and goes no farther than external performances; but that which is vital, and springs from the heart; consists in power, not in mere profession; whose praise, if not of men, who are smitten with pompous outsides, is sure to be of GOD, who distinguishes the things which are excellent.

He shall convince the world of sin; of original and actual sin. The sin of their nature, as well as the sin of their life; the sin of their best deeds, no less than of their criminal commissions, and blameable omissions. Above all, of their sinning against the sovereign, the only remedy, by unbelief; because they believe not on me.——He shall convince of righteousness; of the divine REDEEMER's righteousness, which the foregoing conviction must render peculiarly welcome: convince them, that it was wrought out in behalf of disobedient and defective mortals; that it is absolutely perfect, and sufficient to justify even the most ungodly. Of all which an incontestable proof is given, by his resurrection from the dead, his triumphant ascension into heaven, and session at the right hand of his FATHER; because I go to my FATHER, and ye see me no more ‡.——He shall convince of judgment. Those who are humbled under a sense of guilt, and justified through an imputed righteousness, shall be taught by happy experience, that the prince of this world is condemned and dethroned in their hearts: that their souls are rescued from the tyranny of Satan; are made victorious over their corruptions; and restored to the liberty,—the glorious liberty of the children of GOD.

You wonder, perhaps, that I have not strengthened my cause, by any quotation from the epistle to the Galatians. What I design, my dear Theron, is not to accumulate, but to select arguments. However, that I may not disappoint an expectation so reasonable, I proceed to lay before you a very nervous passage, from that masterly piece of sacred controversy.——Only let me just observe, that the epistle was written to persons, who had embraced Christianity, and professed an affiance in CHRIST; but would fain have joined circumcision, would fain have superadded their own religious duties, to the merits of their SAVIOUR, in order to constitute, at least, some part of their justifying righteousness.—— Against which error, the vigilant and indefatigable assertor of the truth as it is in JESUS, remonstrates,—We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles, knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of JESUS CHRIST, even we have believed in JESUS CHRIST; that we might be justified by the faith of CHRIST, and not by the works of the law; for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified *.

We, who are Jews by nature, the descendents of Abraham, and GOD's peculiar people; have the tables of his law, and the ordinances of his worship; we who, in point of privileges, are greatly superior to the Gentile nations, and have all possible advantages for establishing (if such a thing were practicable) a righteousness of our own; what have we done?—We have believed on JESUS CHRIST: we have renounced ourselves; disclaimed whatever is our own; and depended wholly on the righteousness of CHRIST.——For what end? That by this faith in CHRIST, which receives his righteousness; pleads his righteousness; and presents nothing but his righteousness before the throne, we might be justified.—— What motive has induced us to this practice? A firm persuasion, that by the works of the law, by sincere obedience, or personal holiness, no man living has been, and no man living can be, justified before GOD.

Are you tired, Theron? have I fatigued your attention, instead of convincing your judgment?—I will not harbour such a suspicion. It is pleasing to converse with those, who have travelled into foreign countries, and seen the wonders of creation. We hearken to their narratives with delight. Every new adventure whets our curiosity, rather than palls our appetite. Must it not then afford a more sublime satisfaction to be entertained with the discourses of a person, who had, not indeed sailed round the world, but made a journey to the third heavens? who had been admitted into the paradise of GOD, and heard things of infinite importance, and unutterable dignity?—This was the privilege of that incomparable man, whose observations and discoveries I have been presenting to my friend. And I promise myself, he will not complain of weariness, if I enrich my epistle with one or two more of those glorious truths.

GOD hath made HIM to be sin for us who knew no sin; that we might, not be put into a capacity of acquiring a righteousness of our own, but be made the righteousness of GOD in him †. In this text, the double imputation of our sin to CHRIST, and of CHRIST's righteousness to us, is most emphatically taught, and most charmingly contrasted.—Most emphatically taught. For we are said, not barely to be righteous, but to be made righteousness itself; and not righteousness only, but (which is the utmost that language can reach) the righteousness of GOD. ---Most charmingly contrasted. For one cannot but ask, In what manner CHRIST was made sin? In the very same manner we are made righteousness. CHRIST knew no actual sin; yet, upon his mediatorial interposition on our behalf, he was treated by divine justice, as a sinful person. We likewise are destitute of all legal righteousness; yet, upon our receiving CHRIST, and believing in his name, we are regarded by the divine MAJESTY as righteous creatures. This therefore cannot, in either case, be intrinsically; but must be, in both instances, imputatively.——Gracious, divinely-gracious exchange §!

* He shall convince, seems to be the most proper translation of ἐλέγξει, as it implies the sure success, which attends the operation of the divine SPIRIT.—Man may reprove, and no conviction ensue. Whereas that almighty AGENT not only reproves, but reproves with power; so as to determine the judgment, and sway the affections.

† John xvi. 8, 9, 10, 11.

‡ For, if the work had been imperfect in any degree, our REDEEMER, instead of taking up his stated and final residence in the regions of glory, must have descended again into this inferior world, to complete what was deficient.

* Gal. ii. 15, 16. Observable, very observable is the zeal of our apostle, in this determined stand against the most specious, and therefore the most dangerous, encroachments of error. To express his ardent concern for the truth and purity of the gospel, the works of the law are mentioned no less than three times, and as often excluded from the affair of justification. The faith of CHRIST likewise is thrice inculcated, and as often asserted to be the only method of becoming righteous before GOD.

† 2 Cor. v. 21.

‡ Ita scilicet mirabili permutatione mala nostra in se recepit, ut bona sua nobis largiretur: recepit miseriam, ut largiretur misepregnant with amazing goodneſs, and rich with ineſtimable benefits. The inceſſant triumph of the ſtrong, the ſovereign conſolation of the weak believer!

Ceaſe your exultation, cries one, and come down from your altitudes. The term uſed in this verſe denotes, not ſo properly ſin, as an offering for ſin.——This is a mere ſuppoſal, which I may as reaſonably deny, as another affirm. Since the word occurs, much more frequently in the former ſignification, than in the latter; and ſince, by giving it the latter ſignification in the paſſage before us, we very much impair, if not totally deſtroy, the apoſtles beautiful antitheſis.

However, not to contend, but to allow the remark; I borrow my reply from a brave old champion * for the truths of the goſpel: "This text," ſays he, "invincibly "proveth, that we are not juſtified in GOD's ſight by "righteouſneſs inherent in us, but by the righteouſ-"neſs of CHRIST imputed to us through faith." After which he adds, what I make my anſwer to the objection; "That CHRIST was made ſin for us, becauſe "he was a ſacrifice for ſin, we confeſs: but therefore was "he a ſacrifice for ſin, becauſe our ſin was imputed to "him, and puniſhed in him."——The poor delinquents under the Moſaic diſpenſation, who brought their ſin-offering to the altar of the LORD, were directed to lay their hand on the devoted beaſt; ſignifying, by this uſage, the transferring of guilt from the offerer to the ſacrifice. Conformably to the import of this ceremony, CHRIST aſſumed our demerit; like a true piacular victim, ſuffered the puniſhment, which we had deſerved; and which, without ſuch a commutation, we muſt have undergone. So that our LORD's being made a ſin-offering for us, does by no means invalidate, but very much confirm our doctrine. It neceſſarily implies the tranſlation of our iniquity to his perſon; and, on the principles of analogy, muſt infer the imputation of his righteouſneſs to our ſouls.

One paſſage more permit me to tranſcribe into my paper; and, at the ſame time, to wiſh, that it may be written on both our hearts; written, not with ink and pen, no, nor with the point of a diamond, but with the finger of the living GOD. Yea, doubtleſs, and I count all things but loſs, for the excellency of the knowledge of CHRIST JESUS my LORD; for whom I have ſuffered the loſs of all things; and do count them but dung, that I may win CHRIST, and be found in him; not having mine own righteouſneſs which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of CHRIST, the righteouſneſs which is of GOD through faith †.

Be pleaſed to obſerve, that in this confeſſion of faith, and with reference to the caſe of juſtification, the apoſtle renounces all thoſe acts of ſuppoſed righteouſneſs, which were antecedent to his converſion.——Nor does he repudiate them only, but all thoſe more excellent ſervices, by which he was ſo eminently diſtinguiſhed, even after his attachment to CHRIST, and engagement in the Chriſtian miniſtry. As though he ſhould ſay,—"The privi-"lege of being a Hebrew by birth; the prerogative of "being a Phariſee by profeſſion; together with a beha-"viour exemplary, and a reputation unblameable; all "theſe, which were once reckoned my higheſt gain, as "ſoon as I became acquainted with the glorious perfec-"tions of CHRIST, I counted * loſs for him.—And now, "though I have been a diſciple many years; have walked "in all holy converſation and godlineſs; have endured, "for my divine MASTER's name, tribulations above "meaſure; have laboured more abundantly, and more "ſucceſsfully than all the apoſtles; yet even theſe and "all other attainments, of what kind or of what date ſo-"ever, I count † but loſs, for the tranſcendent excellency "of CHRIST JESUS my LORD.——Yea doubtleſs ‡ "it is my deliberate and ſtedfaſt reſolution; what I have "moſt ſeriouſly adopted, and do publicly avow, that, "ſpecious as all theſe acquirements may ſeem, and va-"luable as they may be in other reſpects, I reckon them "but dung, that I may win CHRIST ‖. They fade into "nothing, they dwindle into leſs than nothing, if ſet in "competition with his matchleſs obedience; and were "they to ſuperſede my application to his merits, or "weaken my reliance on his mediation, they would be "not contemptible only, but injurious,—irreparably in-"jurious,—loſs itſelf."

You will aſk, If he rejects all his own righteouſneſs, on what are his hopes fixed?—On a foundation, extenſive as the obedience of the REDEEMER's life and death, unſhaken as the dignity of his eternal power and GOD-HEAD. They are fixed on the righteouſneſs which is of GOD; the righteouſneſs which GOD the FATHER, in unſearchable wiſdom, provided; and which GOD the SON, in unutterable goodneſs, wrought.—Do you inquire, How he came to be inveſted with this righteouſneſs? The anſwer is ready and ſatisfactory. It was by the application of the divine SPIRIT, and the inſtrumentality of faith.——Leſt any ſhould imagine, that this faith might be ſubſtituted inſtead of his own obedience to the law, he puts an apparent difference between the righteouſneſs which juſtifies, and the faith by which it is received; not the righteouſneſs which conſiſts in, but is THROUGH the faith of CHRIST.——To ſhew the great importance of this diſtinction, how earneſtly he inſiſted upon it as a preacher, how much it tended to his conſolation as a Chriſtian, he repeats the ſentiment, he reinculcates the doctrine, the righteouſneſs which is of GOD BY faith.

Will you now, Theron, or ſhall I, poor unprofitable creatures, preſume to rely on any performances or any accompliſhments of our own? When that diſtinguiſhed ſaint,—a perfect prodigy of gifts, of graces, and of zeal,—indefatigable in labours, unconquerable by afflictions, and of whoſe uſefulneſs there is neither meaſure nor end;—when he denies himſelf in every view; in ſericordiam; recepit maledictionem, ut benedictionis ſuæ compotes nos faceret; recepit mortem, ut vitam conferret; recepit peccatum, ut juſtitiam impertiretur. Thus writes the judicious Turrettine. To which, in concurrence with the accurate Witſius, I ſubſcribe both with hand and heart.

* See Dr Fulk's annotation on the place, in that valuable piece of ancient controverſy and criticiſm, The examination of the Rhemiſh Teſtament. Which, though not altogether ſo elegant and refined in the language, nor ſo delicate and genteel in the manner, as might be wiſhed, is nevertheleſs full of ſound divinity, weighty arguments, and important obſervations.—Would the young ſtudent be taught to diſcover the very ſinews of Popery, and be enabled to give an effectual blow to that complication of errors, I ſcarce know a treatiſe better calculated for the purpoſe.

† Phil. iii. 8, 9.

* Ηγημαι, I have counted.

† Ηγουμαι, relates to the preſent time, and comprehends preſent attainments, I do count.—Not ſome, or the greateſt part, but all things.—What? Is a courſe of ſobriety, and the exerciſe of morality, to be reckoned as dung? All things, ſays the apoſtle.—What? Is our moſt elevated devotion, and enlarged obedience, to be degraded at this monſtrous rate? All things, ſays the apoſtle. This is his invariable reply. And we may venture to affirm, that he had the mind of CHRIST.

‡ Perhaps αλλα μενουνγε may be tranſlated, but truly. As if he had ſaid, "But why ſhould I mention any more particulars? In "truth, I count all things, &c."

‖ Δια Χριστον—δια το υπερεχον—ινα Χριστον κερδησω—plainly imply this comparative or relative ſenſe. Virtues, which are the fruits of the SPIRIT, and labours, which are a bleſſing to mankind, muſt not be reckoned abſolutely or in all reſpects deſpicable; but only in a limited and qualified acceptation: deſpicable, not in themſelves, but as compared with the divinely-perfect righteouſneſs of CHRIST, or as referred to the infinitely-important article of juſtification.

That Aſpaſio, in this whole paragraph, ſpeaks the ſenſe of our church, will appear from the following extract:—"The apoſtle "St Paul ſaith, He doth glory, in what? In the contempt of his "own righteouſneſs; and that he looketh for the righteouſneſs of "GOD by faith."

Homily of ſalvation, part II.

depre-

depreciates all; disavows all; and makes mention of nothing, but the incomparable righteousness of his obedient, dying, interceding SAVIOUR.

What shall I say more? Shall I attempt to play the rhetorician, and borrow the insinuating arts of persuasion? This, after all the cogent testimonies produced, and all the great authorities urged, would be a needless parade. When our pen is a sun-beam, there is but little occasion to dip it in oil.

Instead of such an attempt, give me leave to make a frank and honest confession. I would conceal nothing from my friend. He should have a sash to my breast; throw it up at his pleasure; and see all that passes within.——Though I never had any temptation to that pernicious set of errors, which passes under the character of Socinianism; yet I had many searchings of heart, and much solicitous inquiry, how far we are indebted to CHRIST's active righteousness. Thoroughly persuaded, that other foundation can no man lay, save that which is laid, even JESUS CHRIST *; and that there is no other name given under heaven, whereby men can be saved †; yet, whether we were not to confine our believing regards to a dying SAVIOUR, was matter of considerable doubt.—At first, I was inclined to acquiesce in the affirmative. After long consideration and many prayers, my faith fixed upon the whole of CHRIST's mediatorial undertaking: which began in his spontaneous submission to the law; was carried on through all his meritorious life; and issued in his atoning death.——This is now the basis of my confidence, and the bulwark of my happiness. Hither I fly; here I rest; as the dove, after her wearisome and fruitless rovings, returned to Noah, and rested in the ark.

This scheme first recommended itself to my affections; as making the most ample provision for the security and repose of a guilty conscience; which, when alarmed by the accusations of sin, is very apprehensive of its condition; and will not be comforted, till every scruple is satisfied, and all the obstructions to its peace are removed. Thus I reasoned with myself: "Though there is, undoubtedly, something to be said for the other side of "the question; yet this is evidently the safest method. "And, in an affair of infinite consequence, who would "not prefer the safest expedient?—Should the righteousness of JESUS CHRIST be indispensably requisite, "as a wedding-garment; what will they do, when the "great immortal KING appears, who have refused to "accept it? Whereas, should it not prove so absolutely "necessary, yet such a dependance can never obstruct "our salvation. It can never be charged upon us as an "article of contumacy or perverseness, that we thought "too meanly of our own, too magnificently of our LORD's "obedience. So that let the die turn either way, we "are exposed to no hazard.—This scheme takes in all "that the other systems comprehend, and abundantly "more. In this I find no defect, no flaw, no shadow "of insufficiency. It is somewhat like the perfect cube; "which, where-ever it may be thrown, or however it "may fall, is sure to settle upon its base.—Supposing, "therefore, the important beam should hang in equilibrio, with respect to argument; these circumstances, "cast into the scale, may very justly be allowed to turn "the balance."

Upon a more attentive examination of the subject, I perceived,—that this is the doctrine of our national church; is enforced by the attestation of our ablest divines; and has been, in all ages, the consolation of the most eminent saints:—That it is the genuine sense of scripture; and not some inferior or subordinate point, incidentally touched upon by the inspired writers, but the sum and substance ‡ of their heavenly message; that which constitutes the vitals of their system, and is the very soul of their religion. On which account the whole gospel is denominated from it, and styled the ministration of righteousness.——I was farther convinced, that this way of salvation magnifies, beyond compare, the divine law; is no less honourable to all the divine attributes; and exhibits the ever-blessed MEDIATOR in the most illustrious and the most delightful view:—All these considerations, under the influence of the eternal SPIRIT, have determined my judgment, and established my faith. So that I trust, neither the subtilties of wit, nor the sneers of ridicule, nor any other artifice, shall ever be able to separate me from the grace and righteousness which are in JESUS CHRIST.

Let me now, by way of conclusion, review that awful subject which introduced the letter. Let me suppose the JUDGE, who is at the door, actually come; the great and terrible day, which is hasting forward ‖, really commenced.——Hark! the trumpet sounds the universal summons. The living are struck with a death-like astonishment; the dead start from their silent abodes.—See! the whole earth takes fire; the sun is turned into darkness; and the stars fall from their spheres.——Behold! the LORD JESUS comes with myriads of his angels. The judgment is set, and the books are opened.

Observe those exemplary Christians, whose sentiments I have been collecting. They renounce themselves, and rely on their glorious SURETY, Methinks I hear them say, each as they quit their beds of dust; I will go forth from the grave in thy strength, O blessed JESUS; and, at the decisive tribunal, will make mention of thy righteousness only.—At the same time, will you, Theron, or shall I, stand forth and declare,—before the innumerable multitude of anxious sinners and adoring seraphs,—"Let those pusillanimous creatures fly for re"fuge to their SAVIOUR's righteousness. We will "confide in works, in accomplishments of our own. "We are the men, who have personally kept the divine "law, and want no supposititious obedience from another. "Let the eye that glances through immensity, and pe"netrates the recesses of the heart; let that holy and "omniscient eye, examine our temper, and sift our "conduct. We are bold to risk our souls, and all their "immortal interests, on the issue of such a scrutiny."

Perhaps, your mind is impressed with this solemn scene, and your thoughts recoil at such daring presumption. If so, it will be proper for me to withdraw, and leave you to your own meditations. At such moments to obtrude on your company, would render me the troublesome and officious, rather than

The respectful and affectionate,

ASPASIO.

---

* 1 Cor. iii. 11. † Acts iv. 12.

‡ This doctrine runs through St Paul's writings, like a golden warp. While privileges, blessings, and evangelical duties are like a woof (if I may allude to the ornaments of the sanctuary) of blue, of purple, of scarlet, and indeed of every pleasant colour. The righteousness of GOD, Rom. i. 17.—The righteousness from GOD, Phil. iii. 10.—Righteousness by faith, Rom. iii. 22.—Righteousness of faith, Rom. iv. 11.—Righteousness without the law, Rom. iii. 21.—Righteousness without works, Rom. iv. 6.—Righteousness in the blood of CHRIST, Rom. v. 9.—Righteousness by the obedience of CHRIST, Rom. v. 19.—Righteousness not our own, Phil. iii. 9.—Righteousness imputed by GOD, Rom. iv. 6. 10. 22.

‖ The sacred writers, I observe, often remind their readers of this grand event; often display this delightful dreadful scene.—Their manner of speaking shews, that they themselves lived under the habitual and joyful expectation of it; as persons, who were looking for, and hasting to, the coming of the day of GOD.—They represent it, not only as sure, but near; yea, very near, and upon the point to take place. The LORD is at hand. The JUDGE is at the door. Yet a little while, and HE that shall come, will come, and will not tarry.—The last passage is the most spirited and emphatical of them all; but has lost much of its emphasis, by the English version. It is in the original μικρον οσον οσον. A beautiful pleonasm; by which the Septuagint, though too often inaccurate in translating the prophetic text, have very happily expressed Isaiah's כמעט רגע which may, I think, be rendered in our language, yet a very, very little while. Heb. x. 37. Is. xxvi. 20.

LETTER VI.

THERON to ASPASIO.

Dear ASPASIO,

THE laſt evening was one of the fineſt I ever ſaw. According to my cuſtom, I made an excurſion into the open fields; and wanted nothing to complete the ſatisfaction, but my friend's company *. I could not but obſerve, how much your improving converſation heightened the charms of nature. When religion applied philoſophy, every thing was inſtructive, as well as pleaſing.—Not a breeze ſwept over the plains, to clear the ſky, and cool the air, but it tended alſo to diſperſe our doubts, and enliven our faith in the ſupreme all-ſufficient GOOD.—Not a cloud tinged the firmament with radiant colours, or amuſed the ſight with romantic ſhapes, but we beheld a picture of the preſent world, of its fading acquiſitions and fantaſtic joys, in the mimic forms and the tranſitory ſcene.——Even the weakeſt of the inſect-tribe, that ſkim the air in ſportive ſilence, addreſſed us with the ſtrongeſt incitements, and gave us the loudeſt calls, to be active in our day, and uſeful in our generation. They cried, at leaſt when you lent them your tongue,

Such is vain life, an idle flight of days,
A ſtill deluſive round of ſickly joys,
A ſcene of little cares, and trifling paſſions,
If not ennobled by the deeds of virtue.

How often at the approach of ſober eve, have we ſtole along the cloyſters of a ſequeſtered bower; attentive to the tale of ſome querulous current, that ſeemed to be ſtruck with horror at the awful gloom; and complained with heavier murmurs, as it paſſed under the blackening ſhades, and along the root obſtructed channel!—Or elſe, far from the babbling brook, and ſoftly treading the graſſy path, we liſtened to the nightingale's ſong; while every gale held its breath, and all the leaves forbore their motion, that they might neither drown nor interrupt the melodious woe.——From both which penſive ſtrains, you endeavoured to temper and chaſtiſe the exuberant gaiety of my ſpirits. You convinced me, that true joy is a ſerious thing †; is the child of ſedate thought, not the ſpawn of intemperate mirth; nurſed, not by the ſallies of diſſolute merriment, but by the exerciſe of ſerene contemplation.

Sometimes, at the gladſome return of morn, we have aſcended an airy eminence; and hailed the new-born day; and followed, with our delighted eye, the mazes of ſome glittering ſtream.——Here ruſhing, with impetuous fury, from the mountain's ſide; foaming over the rifted rocks, and roaring down the craggy ſteep; impatient as it were, to get free from ſuch rugged paths, and mingle with the beauties of the lower vale.—There ſlackening its headlong career, and ſmoothing its eddies into an even flow. While, deep emboſomed in the verdant mead, it glides through the cheriſhed and ſmiling herbage. Sometimes loſt amidſt cloſing willows; ſometimes emerging with freſh beauty from the leafy covert; always roving with an air of amorous complacency, as though it would careſs the fringed banks, and flowery glebe.—Reminded, by this watery monitor, of that conſtancy and vigour, with which the affections ſhould move towards the great centre of happineſs, CHRIST JESUS;—of that determined ardour, with which we ſhould break through the entanglements of temptation, and obſtacles of the world, in order to reach our everlaſting reſt;—and of the mighty difference between the turbulent, the frothy, the precipitate gratifications of vice, and the calm, the ſubſtantial, the permanent delights of religion.

Or elſe, with eager view, we have ſurveyed the extenſive proſpect, and wandered over all the magnificence of things;—an endleſs variety of graceful objects, and delightful ſcenes! each ſoliciting our chief regard; every one worthy of our whole attention; all conſpiring to touch the heart with a mingled tranſport of wonder, of gratitude, and of joy.—So that we have returned from our rural expedition, not as the ſpendthrift from the gaming-table, curſing his ſtars, and raving at his ill luck; gulled of his money, and the derided dupe of ſharpers: not as the libertine from the houſe of wantonneſs *, ſurfeited with the rank debauch, dogged by ſhame, goaded by remorſe, with a thouſand recent poiſons tingling in his veins. But we returned, as ſhips of commerce from the golden continent, or the ſpicy iſlands, with new acceſſions of ſublime improvement, and ſolid pleaſure: with a deeper veneration for the almighty CREATOR; with a warmer ſenſe of his unſpeakable favours; and with a more inflamed deſire, "to know him now by faith, and after this life to have "the fruition of his glorious GODHEAD."

Sometimes, with an agreeable relaxation, we have transferred our cares, from the welfare of the nation, to the flouriſhing of the farm; and, inſtead of enacting regulations for the civil community, we have planned ſchemes for the cultivation of our ground, and the proſperity of our cattle.—Inſtead of attending to the courſe of fleets, and the deſtination of armies, we have directed the plough, where to rend the graſſy turf; or taught the honeyſuckle to wind round the arbour, and the jeſſamine to climb upon the wall.—Inſtead of interpoſing our friendly offices, to reconcile contending kingdoms; we have formed a treaty of coalition, between the ſtranger cyon, and the adopting tree; and, by the remarkable melioration of the enſuing fruit, demonſtrated (would contending empires regard the precedent) what advantages flow from pacific meaſures, and an amicable union.—Inſtead of unravelling the labyrinths of ſtate, and tracing the fineſſes of foreign courts; we have made ourſelves acquainted with the politics of nature, and obſerved, how wonderfully, how myſteriouſly, that great projectreſs acts.—In this place ſhe rears a vaſt trunk, and unfolds a multiplicity of branches, from one ſmall berry. She qualifies, by her amazing operations, a few contemptible acorns, that were formerly carried in a child's lap, to bear the Britiſh thunder round the globe, and ſecure to our iſland the ſovereignty of the ocean.——In another

* Tu quod abes excepto, cætera lætus.
† Res ſevera eſt verum gaudium. SEN.

* Solomon, in order to deter unwary youth from thoſe ſinks of uncleanneſs, repreſents the harlot under the character of a peſtilent hag, or baleful ſorcereſs. Her feet go down to death, Prov. v. 5. Her houſe is the high road to hell, Prov. vii. 27. yea, her gueſts are in the depths of hell, Prov. ix. 18.—The ſecond clauſe ſeems to be emphatical. The original expreſſion is in the plural number רדמי. I chuſe therefore to render it not ſimply the road, but more largely the high road: from which many other ways of guilt branch out, in which many other paths of ruin coincide. There Murder is often known to drench her dagger in blood; and Robbery forms the raſh reſolve, which ends in the ignominious halter. There Intemperance daily brews the bowl, which enervates the conſtitution, and transforms the man into a beaſt. While Diſeaſe, pale cadaverous noiſome diſeaſe, anticipates the putrefaction of the grave, and cauſes the wretched martyrs of vice to rot even above ground.—Well may every one, who loves life, and would fain ſee good days, cry out with a mixture of deteſtation and dread, "O my ſoul, come not thou into their horrid "haunts!"

Dii meliora piis, erroremque hoſtibus illum! VIRG.

place,

place, ſhe produces from a dry grain, firſt the green blade; then the turgid ear; afterwards the full-grown and ripened corn in the ear *: repaying, with exact punctuality, and with laviſh uſury, the huſbandman's toil, and the huſbandman's loan; cauſing, by a moſt ſurpriſing reſurrection, the death of one ſeed, to be fruitful in the birth of hundreds.

But I forget your caution, Aſpaſio; forget how kindly you have checked me, when I have been haranguing upon, I know not what, powers and works of nature. Whereas it is GOD who worketh hitherto †: who to this day exerts, and to the end of time will exert, that ſecret but unremitted energy, which is the life of this majeſtic ſyſtem, and the cauſe of all its ſtupendous operations.——Let this ſhew you, how much I want my guide, my philoſopher, and friend. Without his prompting aid, my genius is dull; my reflections are awkward; and my religious improvements jejune; ſomewhat like the bungling imitations of the tool, compared with the maſterly effects of vegetation.——However, I will proceed; yet not from any view of informing my Aſpaſio, but only to draw a bill upon his pen; and lay him under an obligation to enrich me with another letter, upon the grand and excellent ſubject of his laſt.

Art is dim-ſighted in her plans, and defective even in her moſt elaborate eſſays. But Nature, or rather nature's ſublime AUTHOR, is indeed a deſigner, and a workman that need not be aſhamed ‡. His eye ſtrikes out ten thouſand elegant models, and his touch executes all with inimitable perfection.——What an admirable ſpecimen is here, of the divine ſkill, and of the divine goodneſs! This terraqueous globe is intended, not only for a place of habitation, but for a ſtorehouſe of conveniencies. If we examine the ſeveral apartments of our great abode; if we take a general inventory of our common goods; we ſhall find the utmoſt reaſon to be charmed with the diſplays, both of nice œconomy, and of boundleſs profuſion.

Obſerve the ſurface of this univerſal meſſuage. The ground, coarſe as it may ſeem, and trodden by every foot, is nevertheleſs the laboratory, where the moſt exquiſite operations are performed; the ſhop, if I may ſo ſpeak, where the fineſt manufactures are wrought. Though a multitude of generations have always been accommodated, and though a multitude of nations are daily ſupplied by its liberalities, it ſtill continues inexhauſted; is a reſource that never fails; a magazine never to be drained.

The unevenneſs of the ground, far from being a blemiſh or a defect, heightens its beauty, and augments its uſefulneſs.——Here it is ſcooped into deep and ſheltered vales, almoſt conſtantly covered with a ſpontaneous growth of verdure: which, all tender and ſucculent, compoſes an eaſy couch, and yields the moſt agreeable fodder for the various tribes of cattle.——There it is extended into a wide, open, champaign country; which, annually repleniſhed with the huſbandman's ſeed, ſhoots into a copious harveſt: A harveſt, not only of that principal wheat, which is the ſtaff of our life, and ſtrengthens our heart; but of the appointed barley ‖, and various other ſorts of grain, which yield an excellent food for our animals; and either enable them to diſpatch our drudgery, or elſe fatten their fleſh for our tables.

The furrows, obedient to the will of man, vary their produce §. They bring forth a crop of tall, flexile, ſlender plants ¶: whoſe thin filmy coat, dried, attenuated, and ſkilfully manufactured, transforms itſelf into ſome of the moſt neceſſary accommodations of life, and

* Mark iv. 28. † John v. 17.

‡ 2 Tim. ii. 1. ‖ Iſ. xxviii. 25.

§ One may venture to ſay of the earth, with regard to its vegetable operation,

Omnia transformat ſeſe in miracula rerum.

¶ Flax and hemp.

genteeleſt embelliſhments of ſociety.——It is wove into ample volumes of cloth; which, fixed to the maſt, give wings to our ſhips, and waft them to the extremities of the ocean. It is twiſted into vaſt lengths of cordage; which add nerves to the crane, and lend ſinews to the pulley; or elſe, adhering to the anchor, they faſten the veſſel even on the fluctuating element, and ſecure its ſtation even amidſt driving tempeſts. It furniſhes the duchets with her coſtly head-dreſs, and delicately-fine ruffles.—— No leſs ſtrong than neat, it ſupplies the ploughman with his coarſe frock, and the ſailor with his clumſy trowſers. Its fibres, artfully ranged by the operations of the loom, cover our table with a graceful elegance, and ſurround our bodies with a cheriſhing warmth. On this the painter ſpreads the colours, which inchant the eye; in this the merchant packs the wares, which enrich the world.

Yonder, the hills, like a grand amphitheatre, ariſe. Amphitheatre! All the pompous works of Roman magnificence, are leſs than mole-banks, are mere cockle-ſhells, compared with thoſe majeſtic elevations of the earth. Some clad with mantling vines; ſome crowned with towering cedars; ſome ragged with miſhapen rocks, or yawning with ſubterraneous dens: whoſe rough and inacceſſible crags, whoſe hideous and gloomy cavities, are not only a continual refuge for the wild goats, but have often proved an aſylum to perſecuted merit *, and a ſafeguard to the moſt valuable lives.

At a greater diſtance, the mountains lift their frozen brows, or penetrate the clouds with their aſpiring peaks. Their frozen brows arreſt the roving, and condenſe the rarefied vapours †. Their caverned bowels collect the dripping treaſures, and ſend them abroad, in gradual communications, by trickling ſprings. While their ſteep ſides precipitate the watery ſtores; rolling them on with ſuch a forcible impulſe ‡, that they never intermit their unwearied courſe, till they have ſwept through the moſt extenſive climes, and regained their native ſeas.

The vineyard ſwells into a profuſion of cluſters: ſome tinged with the deepeſt purple, and delicately clouded with azure: ſome clad with a whitiſh tranſparent ſkin, which ſhews the tempting kernels, lodged in luſcious nectar.——The vine requires a ſtrong reflection of the ſun-beams, and a very large proportion of warmth. How commodiouſly do the hills and mountains, miniſter to this purpoſe! May we not call thoſe vaſt declivities, the garden-walls of nature? which, far more effectually than the moſt coſtly glaſſes, or moſt artful green-houſes, concenter the ſolar heat, and complete the maturity of the grape: diſtending it with a liquor of the fineſt ſcent, the moſt agreeable reliſh, and the moſt exalted qualities; ſuch as diſſipate ſadneſs, and inſpire vivacity; ſuch as make glad the heart of man, and moſt ſweetly prompt, both his

* To David, from Saul's malice; to Elijah, from Jezebel's vengeance; to many of the primitive Chriſtians, from the rage of perſecuting emperors: they wandered in deſerts and in mountains, in dens and caves of the earth, Heb. xi. 38.

† Therefore ſtyled—nimboſa cacumina montis. VIRG.

‡ It is obſerved, that the largeſt rivers in the world, thoſe which roll the heavieſt burden of waters, and perform the moſt extenſive circuit through the nations, generally take their riſe from mountains. The Rhine, the Rhone, and the Po, all deſcend from the Alps. The Tygris derives its rapid flood from the everlaſting ſnows and ſteep ridges of Niphates. And, to mention no more inſtances, the river Amazones, which pours itſelf through a multitude of provinces, and waters near eighteen hundred leagues of land, has its urn in the caverns, and its impetus from the precipices, of that immenſe range of hills, the Andes.

If the reader is inclined to ſee the origin and formation of rivers deſcribed, in all the ſublimity of diction, and with all the graces of poetry, he may find this entertainment in Mr Thomſon's Autumn, lin. 781. laſt edit.

Amazing ſcene! behold, the glooms diſcloſe.
I ſee the rivers in their infant beds!
Deep, deep I hear them, labʼring to get free! &c.

grati-

gratitude, and his duty, to the munificent GIVER.——I grieve, and I bluſh for my fellow-creatures, that any ſhould abuſe this indulgence of heaven; that any ſhould turn ſo valuable a gift of GOD into an inſtrument of ſin; turn the moſt exhilarating of cordials into poiſon, madneſs, and death.

The kitchen-garden preſents us with a new train of benefits. In its blooming ornaments, what unaffected beauty! in its culinary productions, what diverſified riches! It ripens a multitude of nutrimental eſculents, and almoſt an equal abundance of medicinal herbs; diſtributing refreſhments to the healthy, and adminiſtering remedies to the ſick.——The orchard, all fair and ruddy, and bowing down beneath its own delicious burden, gives us a freſh demonſtration of our CREATOR's kindneſs; regales us, firſt, with all the delicacies of ſummer-fruits; next, with the more laſting ſucceſſion of autumnal dainties.

What is nature, but a ſeries of wonders, and a fund of delights! That ſuch a variety of fruits, ſo beautifully coloured, ſo elegantly ſhaped, and ſo charmingly flavoured, ſhould ariſe from the earth! than which nothing is more inſipid, ſordid, and deſpicable.——I am ſtruck with pleaſing aſtoniſhment at the cauſe of theſe fine effects, and no leſs ſurpriſed at the manner of bringing them into exiſtence. I take a walk in my garden, or a turn through my orchard, in the month of December. There ſtand ſeveral logs of wood faſtened to the ground.——They are erect indeed and ſhapely, but without either ſenſe or motion. No human hand will touch them, no human aid will ſuccour them; yet, in a little time, they are beautified with bloſſoms, they are covered with leaves, and at laſt are loaded with mellow treaſures; with the downy peach and the poliſhed plum; with the muſky apricot and the juicy pear; with the cherry, and its coral pendants, glowing through lattices of green, ——and dark

Beneath her ample leaf, the luſcious fig.

I have wondered at the ſtructure of my watch; wondered more at the deſcription of the ſilk-mills; moſt of all, at the account of thoſe prodigious engines invented by Archimedes. But what are all the inventions of all the geometricians and mechanics in the world, compared with theſe inconceivably-nice automata * of nature! Theſe ſelf-operating machines diſpatch their buſineſs, with a punctuality that never miſtakes, with a dexterity that cannot be equalled. In ſpring, they clothe themſelves with ſuch unſtudied but exquiſite finery, as far exceeds the embroidery of the needle, or the labours of the loom. In autumn, they preſent us with ſuch a collation of ſweetmeats, and ſuch blandiſhments of taſte, as ſurpaſs all that the moſt critical luxury could prepare, or the moſt laviſh fancy image.——So that thoſe coarſe and ſenſeleſs logs firſt decorate the divine creation, then perform the honours of the table.

If, amidſt theſe ordinary productions of the earth, GOD appears ſo great in counſel, and mighty in work †; what may we expect to ſee in the palaces of heaven; in the hierarchies of angels; and in that wonderful REDEEMER, who is, beyond all other objects, beyond all other manifeſtations, the wiſdom of GOD, and the power of GOD *!

The foreſt rears myriads of maſſy bodies, which, tho' neither gay with bloſſoms, nor rich with fruit, ſupply us with timber of various kinds, and of every deſirable quality †. But who ſhall cultivate ſuch huge trees, diffuſed over ſo vaſt a ſpace? The toil were endleſs. See therefore the all-wiſe and ever-gracious ordination of Providence! They are ſo conſtituted, that they have no need of the ſpade and the pruning knife. Nay, the little cares of man would diminiſh, rather than augment their dignity and their uſefulneſs. The more they are neglected, the better they thrive; the more wildly grand and magnificent they grow.

When felled by the axe, they are ſawed into beams, and ſuſtain the roofs of our houſes; they are faſhioned into carriages, and ſerve for the conveyance of the heavieſt loads.——Their ſubſtance ſo pliant, that they yield to the chizel of the turner, and are ſmoothed by the plane of the joiner; are wrought into the niceſt diminutions of ſhape, and compoſe ſome of the fineſt branches of houſehold furniture.——Their texture ſo ſolid, that they form the moſt important parts of thoſe mighty engines; which, adapting themſelves to the play of mechanic powers, diſpatch more work in a ſingle hour, than could otherwiſe be accompliſhed in many days. At the ſame time, their preſſure is ſo light, that they float upon the waters; and glide along the ſurface, almoſt with as much agility, as the finny fry glance through the deep.——Thus, while they impart magnificence to architecture, and beſtow numberleſs conveniencies on the family; they conſtitute the very baſis of navigation, and give expedition, give being to commerce.

Amidſt the inacceſſible depths of the foreſt, an habitation is aſſigned for thoſe ravenous beaſts, whoſe appearance would be frightful, and their neighbourhood dangerous to mankind. Here the ſternly-majeſtic lion rouſes himſelf from his den; ſtalks through the midnight-ſhades; and awes the ſavage herds with his roar. Here the fiery tyger ſprings upon his prey, and the gloomy bear trains up her whelps. Here the ſwift leopard ranges, and the grim wolf prowls, and both in queſt of murder and blood.——Were theſe horrid animals to dwell in our fields, what havock would they make? what conſternation would they ſpread? But they voluntarily bury themſelves in the deepeſt receſſes of the deſert; while the ox, the horſe, and the ſerviceable quadrupeds, live under our inſpection, and keep within our call; profiting us as much by their preſence, as the others oblige us by their abſence.

If, at any time, thoſe ſhaggy monſters make an excurſion into the habitable world, it is when man retires to his chamber, and ſleeps in ſecurity. The ſun, which invites other creatures abroad, gives them the ſignal to retreat. The ſun ariſeth, and they get them away, and lay them down in their dens ‡. Strange! that the orient light, which is ſo pleaſing to us, ſhould ſtrike ſuch terror on them! ſhould, more effectually than a legion of guards, put them all to flight, and clear the country of thoſe formidable enemies!

If we turn our thought to the atmoſphere, we find a moſt curious and exquiſite apparatus of air: which, becauſe no object of our ſight, is ſeldom obſerved, and little regarded; yet is a ſource of innumerable advantages. And all theſe advantages (which is al-

* Automata, or ſelf-operating machines; not meant to ſet aſide the ſuperintendency of Providence, but only to exclude the co-operation of man.

The word αὐτόματα is uſed by our MASTER; is a very fine, and moſt expreſſive word; for which reaſons, I have ventured to give it a kind of Engliſh naturalization. It ſignifies, ſays a Greek ſcholiaſt, τὰς μηχανὰς, αἱ κατ' αὐτὰς ἐνεργοῦσαι. See Mark iv. 28.——It is an explication and an abridgment of that remarkable phraſe, which occurs in the Moſaic hiſtory of the creation, לעשות אשר בראו אלהים Gen. ii. 3. Which GOD created and made, appears tautological, and is by no means an exact tranſlation. It ſhould rather be interpreted, which GOD created in order to make; to make, by theſe prolific inſtruments and reproducing principles, a continual ſucceſſion of animals, vegetables, and creatures.

† Jer. xxxii. 19.

* 1 Cor. i. 24.

† Tully has given us an abridgment of all the preceding particulars: which, I think, is one of the fineſt landſcapes in miniature, that the deſcriptive pen ever drew.——Terra univerſa cernitur, veſtita floribus, herbis, arboribus, frugibus; quorum omnium incredibilis multitudo inſatiabili varietate diſtinguitur. Adde huc fontium gelidas perennitates, liquores perlucidos amnium, riparum veſtitus viridiſſimos, ſpeluncarum concavas altitudines, ſaxorum aſperitates, impendentium montium altitudines, immenſitatesque camporum. De nat. Deor. lib. II.

‡ Pſal. civ. 22.

moſt

most incredible) are fetched from the very jaws of ruin. My meaning may be obscure, therefore I explain myself.

We live plunged, if I may so speak, in an ocean of air. Whose pressure, upon a person of moderate size, is equal to the weight of twenty thousand pounds. Tremendous consideration! Should the ceiling of a room, or the roof of a house, fall upon us with half that force, what destructive effects must ensue? such a force would infallibly drive the breath from our lungs, or break every bone in our bodies. Yet so admirably has the divine wisdom contrived this aereal fluid, and so nicely counterpoised its dreadful power, that we receive not the slightest hurt; we suffer no manner of inconvenience; we even enjoy the load. Instead of being as a mountain on our loins, it is like wings to our feet, or like sinews to our limbs.——Is not this common ordination of Providence, thus considered, somewhat like the miracle of the burning bush; whose tender and combustible substance, though in the midst of flames, was neither consumed nor injured *? Is it not almost as marvellous, as the prodigy of the three Hebrew youths, who walked in the fiery furnace, without having a hair of their head singed, or so much as the smell of fire passing on their garments †?—Surely we have reason to say unto GOD, O! how terrible, yet how beneficent, art thou in thy works!

The air, though too weak to support our flight, is a thoroughfare for innumerable wings. Here the whole commonwealth of birds take up their abode. Here they lodge and expatiate, beyond the reach of their adversaries. Were they to run upon the earth, they would be exposed to ten thousand dangers, without proper strength to resist them, or sufficient speed to escape them. Whereas, by mounting the skies, and lifting themselves up on high, they are secure from peril, they scorn the horse and his rider ‡.—Some of them perching upon the boughs, others soaring amidst the firmament, entertain us with their notes; which are musical and agreeable, when heard at this convenient distance; but would be noisy and importunate, if brought nearer to our ears.——Here many of those feathered families reside, which yield us a delicious treat; yet give us no trouble, put us to no expence, and, till the moment we want them, are wholly out of our way.

The air, commissioned by its all-bountiful AUTHOR, charges itself with the administration of several offices, which are perfectly obliging, and no less serviceable to mankind.—Co-operating with our lungs, it ventilates the blood, and refines our fluids. It qualifies and attempers the vital warmth, promotes and exalts the animal secretions. Many days we might live, or even whole months, without the light of the sun, or the glimmering of a star. Whereas, if we are deprived, only for a few minutes, of this aerial support, we sicken, we faint, we die.——The same universal nurse has a considerable share in cherishing the several tribes of plants. It helps to transfuse vegetable vigour into the trunk of the oak, and a blooming gaiety into the spread of the rose.

The air undertakes to convey to our nostrils the extremely-subtile effluvia, which transpire from odoriferous bodies. Those detached particles are so imperceptibly small, that they would elude the most careful hand, or escape the nicest eye. But this trusty depositary receives and escorts the invisible vagrants, without losing so much as a single atom: entertaining us, by this means, with the delightful sensations, which arise from the fragrance of flowers; and admonishing us, by the transmission of offensive smells, to withdraw from an unwholesome situation, or beware of any pernicious food.

The air, by its undulating motion, conducts to our ear all the diversities of sound; and thereby discharges the duty of a most seasonable and faithful monitor. As I walk cross the streets of London, with my eye engaged on other objects; a dray, perhaps, with all its load, is driving down directly upon me. Or, as I ride along the road, musing and unapprehensive, a chariot and six is whirling on, with a rapid career, at the heels of my horse. The air, like a vigilant friend, in pain for my welfare, immediately takes the alarm; and, while the danger is at a considerable distance, dispatches a courier, to advertise me of the approaching mischief. It even thunders in my ear; and, with a clamorous but kind importunity, urges me to be upon my guard, and provide for my safety.

The air wafts to our sense all the modulations of music, and the more agreeable entertainments of refined conversation. When Myrtilla strikes the silver strings, and teaches the willing harpsichord to warble with her CREATOR's praise; when her sacred sonata warms the heart with devotion, and wings our desires to heaven.—When Cleora tunes her song, or the nightingale imitates her inchanting voice: when she heightens every melodious note, with her adored REDEEMER's name; and so smooths her charming tones, so breathes her rapturous soul, "that GOD's own ear listens delighted."——When Wisdom takes its seat on Mitio's tongue; and flows, in perspicuous periods, and instructive truths, amidst the chosen circle of his acquaintance.—When Benevolence, associated with Persuasion, dwell on Nicander's lips, and plead the cause of injured innocence, or oppressed virtue.—When Goodness, leagued with Happiness, accompany Eusebius into the pulpit; and reclaim the libertine from the slavery of his vices; disengage the infidel from the fascination of his prejudices; and so affectionately, so pathetically invite the whole audience, to partake the unequalled joys of pure religion.——In all these cases, the air distributes every musical variation with the utmost exactness; and delivers the speaker's message, with the most punctual fidelity. Whereas, without this internuncio, all would be sullen and unmeaning silence. We should both lose the pleasure and the profit; neither be charmed with the harmonious, nor improved by the articulate accents.

The breezes of the air, when vague and unconfined, are so very gentle, that they sport with the most inoffensive wantonness amidst Ophelia's locks, and scarce disadjust a single curl. But, when collected and applied by the contrivance of man, they act with such prodigious force, as is sufficient to whirl round the hugest wheels, though clogged with the most encumbering loads. They make the ponderous millstones move as swiftly, as the dancer's heel; and the massy beams play as nimbly, as the musician's finger.

If we climb, in speculation, the higher regions, we find an endless succession of clouds, fed by evaporations from the ocean. The clouds are themselves a kind of ocean, suspended in the air with amazing skill. They travel, in detached parties, and in the quality of itinerant cisterns, round all the terrestrial globe. They fructify, by proper communications of moisture, the spacious pastures of the wealthy; and gladden, with no less liberal showers, the cottager's little spot. Nay, so condescending is the benignity of their great Proprietor, that they satisfy the desolate and waste ground; and cause, even in the most uncultivated wilds, the bud of the tender herb to spring forth *: that the natives of the lonely desert, those savage herds which know no master's stall, may nevertheless experience the care, and rejoice in the bounty, of an all-supporting PARENT.

How wonderful! that the water, which is much denser and far heavier than the air, should rise into it; make its way through it; and take a station in the very uppermost regions of it! This, one would imagine,

* Exod. iii. 2. † Dan. iii. 27. ‡ Job xxxix. 18.

* Job xxxviii. 27.

were almoſt as impoſſible, as for the rivers to run back to their ſource. Yet Providence has contrived a way to render it not only practicable, but matter of continual occurrence.

How wonderful! that pendent lakes ſhould be diffuſed, or fluid mountains heaped over our heads; and both ſuſtained in the thinneſt parts of the atmoſphere! We little think of that ſurpriſing expedient, which, without conduits of ſtone, or veſſels of braſs, keeps ſuch loads of water in a buoyant ſtate. Job and Elihu conſidered this, and were ſtruck with holy admiration. Doſt thou know the balancings of the clouds! how ſuch ponderous bodies are made to hang with an even poiſe, and hover like the lighteſt down? Theſe are the wondrous works of HIM, who is perfect in knowledge *. He bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds; and the cloud, though nothing is more looſe and fluid, becomes, by his almighty order, ſtrong and tenacious as caſks of iron; it is not rent † under all the weight.

When the ſluices are opened, and the waters deſcend, we might reaſonably ſuſpect, that they ſhould burſt forth in cataracts, or pour out themſelves in torrents. Whereas, inſtead of ſuch a diſorderly and precipitate effuſion, which would be infinitely pernicious, they coaleſce into globules, and are diſpenſed in gentle ſhowers. They are often attenuated into the ſmallneſs of a hair‡: they ſpread themſelves, as if they were ſtrained through the orifices of the fineſt watering-pot; and form theſe ſmall drops of rain, which the clouds diſtil upon man abundantly ‖. Thus, inſtead of drowning the earth, and ſweeping away its fruits, they cheriſh univerſal nature; and, in conformity to the practice of their great MASTER, diſtribute their humid ſtores to men, to animals, and vegetables, as they are able to bear them §.

Beſides the reſervoirs of water, here are cantoned various parties of winds, mild or fierce, gentle or boiſterous; furniſhed with breezy wings, to fan the glowing firmament, and diffuſe refreſhment on a fainting world; or elſe fitted to act as an univerſal beſom; and, by ſweeping the chambers of the atmoſphere, to preſerve the fine aereal fluid free from feculencies. Without this wholeſome agency of the winds, the air would ſtagnate; become putrid; and ſurround us, in the literal ſenſe of the words, with darkneſs that might be felt ¶. London, Paris, and all the great cities in the world, inſtead of being the ſeats of elegance, would degenerate into ſinks of corruption.

At ſea, the winds ſwell the mariner's ſails, and ſpeed his courſe along the watery way; ſpeed it far more effectually than a thouſand rowers, bending to their ſtrokes, and tugging at the oar.—By land, they perform the office of an immenſe ſeedman, and ſcatter abroad the reproductive principles of a multitude of plants; which, though the ſtaff of life to many animals, are too ſmall for the management, or too mean for the attention of man.—HE bringeth the winds out of his treaſuries +, is a very juſt obſervation, whether it relate to GOD's abſolute and uncontrollable dominion over his moſt potent meteor, or to its welcome and ſalutary influence +– on all the face of nature.

Here are lightnings ſtationed. Though dormant at preſent, they are in act to ſpring, and launch the livid flame; whenever their piercing flaſh is neceſſary to deſtroy the ſulphureous vapours; or diſlodge any other noxious matter, which might be prejudicial to the delicate temperature of the æther, and obſcure its more than cryſtalline tranſparency.

Above all is ſituate a radiant and majeſtic orb, which enlightens the tracts, cheers the inhabitants, and colours all the productions of this habitable globe. While the air, by a ſingular addreſs in managing the rays, amplifies their uſefulneſs; its reflecting power * augments that heat, which is the life of nature; its refracting power prolongs that ſplendor, which is the beauty of the creation.—Theſe emanations of light, though formed of inacture matter, yet (aſtoniſhing apparatus of almighty wiſdom!) are refined almoſt to the ſubtilty of ſpirit, and are ſcarce inferior even to thought in ſpeed. By which means, they ſpread themſelves, with a kind of inſtantaneous ſwiftneſs, through the circumference of a whole hemiſphere; and though they fill, where-ever they pervade, yet they ſtraighten no place, embarraſs no one, encumber nothing.

Theſe give the diamond its brilliancy, and the velvet its gloſs: to theſe the chearful eye is obliged for its lively ſparkle, and the modeſt cheek for its roſy bluſh. Theſe, attending the judicious touches of the pencil, bid the drapery flow, and the embodied figure ariſe; bid the countenance wear the calm ſerenity of thought, or be agitated with wild tranſports of paſſion.—Without this circumſtance of colour, we ſhould want all the entertainments of viſion, and be at a loſs to diſtinguiſh one thing from another. We ſhould heſitate to pronounce, and muſt take a little journey to determine, whether yonder incloſure contains a piece of paſturage, or a plot of arable land. We ſhould queſtion, and could not very expeditiouſly reſolve, whether the next perſon we meet, be a ſoldier in his regimentals, or a ſwain in his holiday-ſuit? a bride in her ornaments, or a widow in her weeds? But colour, like a particular livery, characterizes the claſs, to which every individual belongs. It is the label, which indicates, upon the firſt inſpection, its reſpective quality. It is the ticket, which guides our choice, and directs our hand †.

We have curſorily ſurveyed the upper rooms of our great habitation, and taken a turn along the ground-floor; if we deſcend into the ſubterraneous lodgment, the cellars of the ſtately ſtructure, we ſhall there alſo find the moſt exquiſite contrivance acting in concert with the moſt profuſe goodneſs.—Here are various minerals,

* Job xxxvii. 16. † Job xxvi. 8.

‡ The Hebrew words, which convey the idea of gentle rain, ſignify a portion of water, made ſmall as a hair, or divided into millions of parts, שאירם דקוקים Deut. xxxii. 2.

‖ Job xxxvi. 28. § Mark iv. 33.

¶ Exod. x. 21. + Pſal. cxxxv. 7.

+– Quam ſalutares autem dedit, quam tempeſtivos non modo hominum, ſed etiam pecudum generi, iis denique omnibus quæ oriuntur a terra, ventos? quorum flatu nimii temperantur calores, ab iiſdem etiam maritimi curſus celeres et certi diriguntur. De nat. Deor. lib. II.

* The air is a curious cover, which, without oppreſſing the inhabitants of the earth with any perceivable weight, confines, reflects, and thereby increaſes the vivifying heat of the ſun. The air increaſes this kindly heat, much in the ſame manner as our garments by day, or bed-cloaths by night, give additional warmth to our bodies —Whereas, when the aeriel veſtment grows thin, or, to ſpeak more philoſophically, when the air becomes leſs in quantity, and more attenuated in quality, the ſolar warmth is very ſenſibly diminiſhed. Travellers on the lofty mountains of America ſometimes experience, to their terrible coſt, the truth of this obſervation. Though the clime, at the foot of thoſe prodigious hills, is even hot and ſultry; yet, on their ſummits, the cold rages with ſuch exceſſive ſeverity, that it is no unuſual calamity, for the horſe and his rider to be frozen to death.—We have therefore great reaſon to bleſs the ſupreme DISPOSER of things, for placing us in the commodious concavity, or rather under the cheriſhing wings of an atmoſphere.

† This, I believe, ſuggeſts the true ſenſe of thoſe noble metaphors, uſed by the divine ſpeaker. It is turned as clay to the ſeal, and they ſtand as a garment: it, the earth, and all its productions, receive, from the riſing ſun, both colour and beauty. Juſt as the ſoft clay, and the melting wax, receive an elegant impreſſion from the ſeal.—They (the morning and the day ſpring, mentioned in a preceding verſe) ſtand as a garment; they act the part of a magnificent and univerſal clothing; give all viſible objects, their comely aſpect, and graceful diſtinctions. Job xxxviii. 14.

What bold and fine images are here!—The ſea had been deſcribed as an infant, changeable, froward, and impetuous, with thick darkneſs for its ſwadling band. The light is repreſented as an handmaid, attending to dreſs the creation; and executing the CREATOR's orders, with a punctuality that never fails, with a ſpeed that cannot be equalled.

of

of ſovereign efficacy in medicine; which rectify the vitiated blood, and quicken the languid ſpirits; which often rekindle the fading bloom in the virgin's complexion, and reinvigorate the infeebled arm of manhood.—Here are beds fraught with metals of the richeſt value. From hence come the golden treaſures, from hence the ſilver ſtores which are the very life of traffic; and circulate through the body politic as the vital fluid through the animal frame: which, in the refining hand of charity, are feet to the lame, and eyes to the blind, and make the widow's heart ſing for joy.—Here are mines, which yield a metal of meaner aſpect, but of a firmer coheſion, and of ſuperior uſefulneſs: A metal, that conſtitutes almoſt all the implements, with which art executes her various deſigns. Without the aſſiſtance of iron, trade would be reduced to the loweſt ebb; commerce would feel her wings clipped; and every ſpecies of mechanic ſkill, either utterly fail, or be miſerably baffled. Without the aſſiſtance of iron, it would be almoſt impoſſible to rear the ſteady maſt, to diſplay the daring canvaſs, or drop the faithful anchor. Deſtitute of this ever-needful commodity, we ſhould have no plough to furrow the ſoil, no ſhuttle to traverſe the loom, ſcarce any ornament for polite, or any utenſil for ordinary life.

Here is an inexhauſted fund of combuſtible materials *, which ſupply the whole nation with fewel. Theſe preſent their miniſtrations in the kitchen; and yielding themſelves as aliment to the flame, render our food both palatable and healthy.—Theſe offer their ſervice at the forge; and, with their piercing heat, mollify the moſt ſtubborn bars, till they become pliant to the ſtroke of the hammer.—The coals pour themſelves likewiſe into the glaſs-houſes. They rage, amidſt thoſe aſtoniſhing furnaces, with irreſiſtible but uſeful fierceneſs. They liquify even the obdurate flint, and make the moſt rigid ſubſtances far more ductile than the ſofteſt clay, or the melting wax; make them obſequious, not only to the lighteſt touch, but to the impreſſions of our very breath.

By this means, we are furniſhed, and from the coarſeſt ingredients, with the moſt curious, beautiful, and ſerviceable manufacture in the world: A manufacture, which tranſmits the light and warmth of the ſun into our houſes; yet excludes the annoyance of the rains, and the violence of the winds. Which gives new eyes to decrepit age, and vaſtly more enlarged views to philoſophy and ſcience; which leads up the aſtronomer's diſcernment, even to the ſatellites of Saturn: and carries down the naturaliſt's obſervation, as far as the animalcule race; bringing near what is immenſely remote, and making viſible what, to our unaſſiſted ſight, would be abſolutely imperceptible.

We have alſo, when the ſun withdraws his ſhining, an expedient to ſupply his place. We can create an artificial day in our rooms, and prolong our ſtudies, or purſue our buſineſs, under its chearing influence. With beaming tapers and ruddy fires, we chaſe the darkneſs, and mitigate † the cold; we cheriſh converſation, and cultivate the ſocial ſpirit. We render thoſe very intervals of time, ſome of the moſt delightful portions of our life, which otherwiſe would be a joyleſs and unimproving void.

Theſe obſcure caverns are the birth-place of the moſt ſparkling gems: which, when nicely poliſhed, and prodigal of their luſtre, ſtand candidates for a place on the royal crown, or a ſeat on the virtuous fair-one's breaſt: and, I will not with our men of gallantry ſay, emulate the living brilliancy of her eyes; but ſerve as a foil, to ſet off the lovelineſs and excellency of her accompliſhed mind, and amiable converſation; whoſe price, according to the unerring eſtimate of inſpiration, is ſuperior to ſapphires, is far above rubies *.

Here are quarries, ſtocked with ſtones, inferior in beauty to the jeweller's ware, but much more eminently beneficial: which, when properly ranged, and cemented with a tenacious mortar, from the convenient abodes of peace, and build the ſtrongeſt fortifications of war; defending us from the inclemencies of the weather, and the moreformidable aſſaults of our enemies. Theſe conſtitute the arches of the bridge, which convey the traveller, with perfect ſecurity, over the deep and rapid ſtream. Theſe ſtrengthen the arms, the ſtupendous arms, of the mole; which ſtretch themſelves far into the ocean, break the impetuoſity of the ſurge, and ſcreen the bark from tempeſtuous ſeas.—Theſe ſtony treaſures are comparatively ſoft, while they continue in the bowels of the earth; but acquire an increaſing hardneſs, when expoſed to the open air. Was this remarkable peculiarity reverſed, what difficulties would attend the labours of the maſon? His materials could not be extracted from their bed, nor faſhioned for his purpoſe, without infinite toil. Were his work completed, it could not long withſtand the fury of the elements; but inſenſibly mouldering, or inceſſantly decaying, would elude the expectations of the owner; perhaps, might prove an immature grave, inſtead of a durable dwelling.

Here are various aſſortments or vaſt layers of clay: which, however contemptible in its appearance, is abundantly more advantageous, than the rocks of diamond, or the veins of gold. This is moulded, with great expedition and eaſe, into veſſels of any ſhape, and of almoſt every ſize. Some ſo delicately fine, that they compoſe the moſt elegant and ornamental furniture, for the tea-table of a princeſs. Others ſo remarkably cheap, that they are ranged on the ſhelves, and miniſter at the meals, of the pooreſt peaſant. All ſo perfectly neat, that no liquid takes the leaſt taint, nor the niceſt palate any diſguſt, from their cleanly ſervices.

A multiplicity of other valuable ſtores, are locked up, by Providence, in thoſe ample vaults. The key of all is committed to the management of induſtry; with free permiſſion to produce each particular ſpecies, as neceſſity ſhall demand, or prudence direct.

Which ſhall we moſt admire, the beautiful heart, the liberal hand, or the all-diſcerning eye, of our great CREATOR? How obſervable and admirable is this precaution, in removing theſe uſeful but cumbrous wares from the ſuperficies; and ſtowing them, in proper repoſitories, beneath the ground!—Were they ſcattered over the ſurface of the ſoil, the earth would be embarraſſed with the enormous load. Our roads

* As for the earth, ſays Job, out of it cometh bread: corn, vegetables, and whatever is good for food, ſpring from its ſurface. While under it is turned up as it were fire: its lower parts תחתיה its deeper ſtrata, yield combuſtible materials; which are eaſily enkindled into fire, and adminiſter the moſt ſubſtantial fewel for the flame, Job xxviii. 5.

† I can hardly forbear tranſcribing the grateful and pious remark, which Socrates makes on this occaſion. Demonſtrating, from the advantageous and benign conſtitution of things, GOD's indulgent care for mankind, he aſks, Το δε ψυχει το πυρ πομισαι, ημιν, χειμωνι μεν ψυχρας, επιουσιον δε σκολιας, συνεργον δε προς πασαν τεχνην, και παντα οσα ωφελιμα εστιν ανθρωποις κατασκευαζεσθαι; Ως γαρ συνελοντι ειπειν, ουδεν ξυγκλειει ανευ πυρος ανθρωποις των προς βιον χρησιμων κατασκευαζεσθαι. To which his pupil very intelligently replies, Υπερβαλλει και τελος καλλιστα. Vid Socrat. Memor. lib. IV. A work, which may be ranked among the fineſt remains of antiquity. Equal, 'tis acknowledged, to any of the ancient compoſitions, in purity of ſtyle, and dignity of ſentiment. Superior, I think, to them all, for the artful, delicate, and happy manner of conveying inſtruction.

I wiſh, the author of the preceding dialogues had been better acquainted with the Socratic method; and I could wiſh, that young ſtudents for the miniſtry would adopt the ſkill of this Heathen philoſopher. Perhaps, no qualification of human growth, would more effectually contribute to render them, what St Paul ſtyles διδακτικους.—It ſeems to be the moſt inſinuating and ſucceſsful way to convince and inſtruct. Nay, it convinces the opponent out of his own mouth, and makes the pupil inſtruct himſelf. It is what the TEACHER ſent from GOD practiſed, in thoſe incomparable ſketches of obliging and maſterly addreſs, the parables of the two debtors, and of the good Samaritan. Luke vii. 41. Luke x. 30.

* Prov. xxxi. 16.

would

would be blocked up, and ſcarce any portion left free for the operations of huſbandry.——Were they buried extremely deep, or ſunk to the centre of the globe, it would coſt us immenſe pains to procure them; or rather, they would be quite inacceſſible.——Were they uniformly ſpread into a pavement for nature; the trees could not ſtrike their roots, nor the herbs ſhoot their blades, but univerſal ſterility muſt enſue.——Whereas, by their preſent diſpoſition, they furniſh us with a magazine of metallic, without cauſing any diminution of our vegetable treaſures. Foſſils of every ſplendid and ſerviceable kind enrich the bowels, while bloom and verdure embelliſh the face of the earth.

So judicious is the arrangement of this grand edifice! ſo beneficent the deſtination of its whole * furniture! in which, all is regulated with conſummate ſkill, and touched into the higheſt perfection. All moſt exactly adapted to the various intentions of Providence, and the manifold exigencies of mankind; to ſupply every want we can feel; and gratify every wiſh we can form.

Inſomuch that the whole ſyſtem affords a favourite and exalted topic of praiſe, even to thoſe diſtinguiſhed beings, who ſtand on the ſea of glaſs, and have the harps of GOD in their hands. They lift their voice and ſing, Great and marvellous are thy works, O LORD GOD almighty †! —And is there not reaſon, my Aſpaſio would ſay, infinite reaſon, for us to join this triumphant choir; and add gratitude to our wonder, love to our Hallelujahs? Since all theſe things are to us, not merely objects of contemplation, but ſources of accommodation; not only a majeſtic ſpectacle, bright with the diſplay of our CREATOR's wiſdom, but an ineſtimable gift, rich with the emanations of his goodneſs. The earth hath he ſet before the inhabitants of glory, but the earth hath he given to the children of men *.——Having given us ourſelves; given us a world; has he not a right, a moſt unqueſtionable and unrivalled right, to make that tender demand, My ſon, give me thy heart †?

Shall I add another paſſage, which, viewed with any but the laſt paragraph, will be like the head of gold, eminent and conſpicuous on feet of iron and clay? It is taken from the fineſt philoſophical oration that ever was made. I never read it, but with a glow of delight, and with impreſſions of awe. It is, in ſhort, inimitably ſpirited and ſublime.——You think, perhaps, I act an impolitic part, in being ſo laviſh of my praiſe; and that the quotation muſt ſuffer, by ſuch an aggrandizing introduction. But I am under no apprehenſions of this kind. Forbear to be delighted, if you can; ceaſe to admire, if you can, when you hear OMNISCIENCE itſelf declaring, that, on the ſight of this univerſal fabric, emerging out of nothing, THE MORNING-STARS SANG TOGETHER, AND ALL THE SONS OF GOD SHOUTED FOR JOY ‡.——The ſyſtem was ſo graceful, ſo magnificent, and, in all reſpects, ſo exquiſitely finiſhed, that the moſt exalted intelligencies were charmed, were tranſported. They knew not how to expreſs themſelves on the great occaſion, but in ſhouts of exultation, and ſongs of praiſe. Is it poſſible for imagination to conceive an encomium ſo juſt, ſo high, ſo beautifully noble?—I am ſure, after ſo much delicacy, and majeſty of ſentiment, any thing of mine muſt be intolerably flat; unleſs you will except this one profeſſion, that I am, with the moſt cordial ſincerity,

My dear Aſpaſio,

Inviolably yours,

THERON.

* No notice is taken of the ocean, in this little rent-roll of nature's wealth; becauſe a diſtinct ſketch is given of that grand receptacle and its principal ſervices, in LETTER IX.

† Rev. xv. 3. Great and marvellous are thy works, O LORD GOD almighty! juſt and true are thy ways, thou KING of ſaints! The firſt part ſeems to mean, what the inſpired writer calls, the ſong of Moſes. The ſecond contains, what he ſtyles, the ſong of the LAMB. The firſt, I ſhould imagine, relates to the ſtupendous works of creation. The ſecond alludes to the far more wonderful ſcheme of redemption. The former, deſcribing the ſyſtem of nature, is recorded by Moſes; the latter, comprehending the ſalvation of the ſaints, is accompliſhed by CHRIST.

* Pſal. cxv. 16. † Prov. xxiii. 26. ‡ Job xxxviii. 7.

LETTER VII.

ASPASIO to THERON.

My dear THERON,

IF you write with ſuch a view, and from ſuch a motive, as are mentioned in your laſt, expect no more free-will offerings from my pen. In this one inſtance, I ſhall think it my duty to be covetous. I ſhall act the miſer out of principle; and hardly perſuade myſelf to part with a ſingle line, till it is become an undeniable debt. I muſt turn your own artifice on yourſelf; and lay you under a neceſſity of obliging, entertaining, and edifying me by your correſpondence.

For give me leave to aſſure you, that I am always delighted, and always improved by your epiſtles. They ſhew me a multitude of beauties in the creation, which I ſhould not otherwiſe have diſcerned. They point out the infinite power, the unſearchable wiſdom, and the charmingly-rich goodneſs of the glorious MAKER. Such a philoſophy turns all nature into a ſchool of inſtruction, and is an excellent handmaid to true religion. It makes every object a ſtep, better than a golden ſtep, to raiſe both our knowledge and our affections to the adorable and immortal CAUSE of all.

While I am roving heedleſsly along, your remarks often interpoſe, like ſome intelligent faithful monitor, who claps his hand upon my breaſt, and ſays, Stand ſtill, and conſider the wonderous works of GOD *.—Willingly I obey the admonition: the Chriſtian may, with peculiar complacency, conſider this grand magazine of wonders, this copious ſtore-houſe of bleſſings; and, conſcious of an intereſt in JESUS, has a right to call them all his own †. He may look round upon preſent things; look forward unto future things; and, truſting in his SAVIOUR's merit, may confidently ſay,—"Not one only, but both "theſe worlds are mine. By virtue of my REDEEM- "ER's righteouſneſs, I poſſeſs the neceſſary accommo- "dations of this life; and, on the ſame unſhaken footing "I ſtand, entitled to the inconceivable felicity of a "better."

Surely then it will be as pleaſing an employ, and as important a ſearch, to examine the validity of our title to future things, as to eſtimate the value of our preſent poſſeſſions. You have executed the one, let me attempt the other.——You have ſurveyed material nature. It appears to be a fair and ſtately manſion; void of all defect; and, for the purpoſes which it is intended to anſwer, completely finiſhed. Is not our SAV-

* Job xxxvii. 14. † 1 Cor. iii. 2.

OUR

OUR's obedience, the provision made for indigent and guilty souls, equally rich and equally perfect?—Since this is everlasting and immutable; since the other is transient and perishable; doubtless we may argue with the judicious apostle; If that which is to be done away, which will soon be consigned over to dissolution, is glorious; much more that which remaineth, whose blessed effects continue to eternal ages, is glorious *.

We are every one as an unclean thing †. Our very nature is contaminated. Even sanctification, though it destroys the reigning, does not wholly supersede the polluting power of iniquity. So that whatever graces we exercise, whatever duties we perform, (like the rays of light transmitted through coloured glass) or like generous wine streaming from a defiled cask) they receive some improper tinge, or contract some debasing taint. But CHRIST was entirely free from this innate contagion. He hath no erroneous apprehensions in his mind, no corrupt bias upon his will, nor any irregular concupiscence in his affections.

Being thus perfectly undefiled, he had no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth ‡. All his thoughts were innocent; all his words were irreproachable, and every action blameless. The most accomplished among the children of men, when surprised in some unguarded moment, or assaulted on some weak side, have been betrayed into error, or hurried into sin. Even Moses spake unadvisedly with his lips; and Aaron, the saint of the LORD, warped to idolatrous practices. They were like some stagnating lake; in which, the dregs being subsided, the waters appear clean; but when stirred by temptation, or agitated by affliction, the sediment rises, and the pool is discoloured. Whereas, CHRIST may be compared to a fountain, that is all transparency, and pure to the very bottom, which, however shaken, however disturbed, is nothing but fluid crystal; permanently and invariably clear.

It was a small thing for the blessed JESUS, to have no depraved propensity; he was born in a state of consummate rectitude, and adorned with all the beauties of holiness. HOLINESS TO THE LORD was inscribed, not on the mitre, but on the heart of our great HIGH PRIEST. Therefore he is styled, by the angelic harbinger of his birth, THAT HOLY THING ‖.—In the prophecy of Zechariah, the dignity of our REDEEMER's nature, and the perfection of his obedience, are displayed by the similitude of a stone §, adorned with exquisite engraving: wrought, not by Bezaleel or Aholiab, though divinely-inspired artists, but by the finger of JEHOVAH himself; and more highly finished, than it is possible for human skill to equal, or human thought to conceive.

The whole tenor of our LORD's conduct, was a living exemplification of piety and morality, in their most extensive branches, and most amiable forms. Saints of the highest attainments, have fallen short of the glory of GOD; have been far from reaching the exalted standard of his precepts. But CHRIST failed in no point, came short in no degree.—We formerly observed the great sublimity, and vast extent of the divine law. From whence appears the extreme difficulty, nay the utter impossibility of our justification, on account of any duties performed by ourselves. How should we rejoice then to contemplate the vicarious righteousness of our condescending and adorable SURETY? As the mercy-seat was exactly commensurate to the dimensions of the ark; so did our LORD's obedience most fully quadrate with all and every demand of the divine law. It flowed from those best of principles, supreme love to GOD, and unfeigned affection to mankind.

From these two capital sources, let us trace our LORD's obedience, through some little part of its illustrious progress.—His delight in GOD was conspicuous, even from his early years. The sacred solemnities of the sanctuary, were more engaging to his youthful mind, than all the entertainments of a festival.—When he entered upon his ministry, whole nights were not too long for his copious devotions. The lonely retirements of the desert, as affording opportunity for undisturbed communion with GOD, were more desirable to CHRIST, than the applauses of an admiring world.

So ceaseless and transcendent was his love to GOD, that he never sought any separate pleasure of his own; but always did those things which were pleasing in his FATHER's sight. His own will was entirely absorpt in the will of the MOST HIGH; and it was his meat and drink, refreshing and delightful as the richest food, or as royal dainties, to finish the work that was given him to do *.

So entirely devoted to the honour of GOD, that a zeal for his house, and for the purity of his ordinances, is represented, by the evangelical historian, as eating him up †. Like a heavenly flame glowing in his breast, it sometimes fired him with a graceful indignation; sometimes melted him into godly sorrow; and, by exerting itself in a variety of vigorous efforts, consumed his vital spirits.

So active and unremitted was the obedience of the blessed JESUS, that the sun did not enter upon his race with a more constant assiduity, nor dispatch his business with greater expedition: and sure I am, that radiant luminary never dispensed beams, half so bright, or a thousandth part so beneficial.——Short was his span, but how grand and extensive were his services! So grand, that they bring more glory to GOD, than all the administrations of Providence, and all the phænomena of nature. So extensive, that they spread, in their gracious efficacy, to the ends of the earth, and to the closing period of time. Nay, they will diffuse their blessed influence even to the celestial world, and have no other limits of their duration than the ages of eternity.

Most affectionately concerned for the welfare of mankind, he spent his strength, not barely in relieving them, when his aid was implored; but in seeking the afflicted, and offering his assistance. With great fatigue ‡, he travelled to remote cities; and with no less condescension, he visited the meanest villages, that all might have the benefit and comfort of his presence. Though multitudes of miserable objects were brought to him from every quarter, yet he was pleased even to prevent the wishes of the distressed, and went about doing good.

* 2 Cor. iii. 11. † Is. lxiv. 6. ‡ 1 Pet. ii. 22.

‖ Luke i. 35.—Which is spoken, in contradistinction to the state of all other births; and implies the universal prevalence of original corruption, this one instance only excepted. For, if other infants were holy at their first formation, and made after the image of GOD, this remark had been trivial and impertinent, if not droll and burlesque; like saying with great solemnity, "The child shall have a mouth and a head; aye, and eyes in the one, and lips to the other."

§ Zech. iii. 9. Behold the stone that I have laid before Joshua: upon one stone shall be seven eyes; behold! I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the LORD of hosts, and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day.

* John iv. 34. † John ii. 17.

‡ JESUS being weary with his journey, ἐκαθέζετο οὕτως, John iv. 6.—οὕτως is thus explained by a Greek commentator, ἁπλῶς, ἢ ὡς ἔτυχε. Our LORD sat down, without ceremony and without complaint, even on the rough place: contented to use it, just as he found it; neither desiring a softer seat, nor wishing for any better accommodation.—I rather think, the adverb refers to the preceding adjective κεκοπιακώς, which signifies a state of very great fatigue; weakening a person to such a degree, that he can hardly walk with steady steps, or even sit in an upright attitude. The sacred historian seems to mean, that our LORD sat in such a posture, as spoke the lassitude of his body; declared

He gave ſight *, and all the agreeable ſcenes of nature, to the blind; health, and all the choice comforts of life, to the diſeaſed. He expelled malevolent raging dæmons; and reſtored, what is more precious than the light of the body, or the vigour of the conſtitution, the calm poſſeſſion of the intellectual faculties.——What greatly ſurpaſſed all the preceding bleſſings, he releaſed the wretched ſoul from the dominion of darkneſs, and from the tyranny of ſin. He made his followers partakers of a divine nature, and prepared them for a ſtate of never-ending bliſs.

Such priceleſs treaſures of wiſdom and beneficence flowed from his tongue, and were poured from his hand!—How different theſe triumphs of mercy, from the trophies erected, by wild ambition, in the bloody field! If Heathens celebrated thoſe mighty butchers, who made cities their ſlaughter-houſe; made half the globe their ſhambles; and meaſured their merit, by the devaſtations they ſpread; how ſhould Chriſtians admire this heavenly BENEFACTOR, who roſe upon a wretched world, with healing under his wings! who diſtributed, far and near, the unſpeakably-rich gifts of knowledge and holineſs, of temporal happineſs and eternal joy!

Nor were theſe righteous acts his ſtrange work, but his repeated, his hourly, his almoſt-inceſſant employ. Sometimes we hear him preaching in the temple, or publiſhing his glad tidings in the ſynagogues. Sometimes we ſee him teaching in private houſes, or bringing forth the good tidings of his goſpel on the deck of a ſhip. At other times, he takes a mountain for his pulpit; the heavens are his ſounding-board; and all that have ears to hear, are invited to be his audience.—Does he lay aſide this ſolemn office? It is only to carry on the ſame deſign, in a more condeſcending and familiar manner. If he meets with the Phariſees, he diſcovers their errors, and reproves their vices; he confutes their objections, and (in caſe they are not abſolutely inacceſſible to wiſe counſel) rectifies their miſtakes. If he vouchſafes to be preſent at a feaſt, he furniſhes the richeſt, incomparably the richeſt part of the treat. Honey and milk are under his tongue †. He inculcates lowlineſs of mind on the vain ‡; he recommends diſintereſted charity to the ſelfiſh ‖; and promiſes pardon to the weeping penitent §.——Is he retired from other company, and ſurrounded only by his choſen attendants? His converſation is a ſermon. Whether he ſit in the inner chamber, or travel on the public road, or walk through the corn-fields, he is ſtill proſecuting his great work; training up his diſciples for their ſacred function; and imparting to them, what they may communicate to others.—Is he retired from all company? Even then he does not diſcontinue his labours of love, but adds the fervent interceſſions of the night, to the charitable toils of the day. Yes, when all but himſelf lay ſunk in ſoft repoſe, this ADVOCATE for a guilty world was engaged in an exerciſe of benevolence; which, though ſecret and unobſerved as the falling dews, was far more beneficial to our beſt intereſts, than thoſe pearly drops to the languiſhing herbs.

Moſt charming and unparallelled benignity! He forgot his daily food, neglected his neceſſary reſt, to ſpend and be ſpent for the ſalvation of mankind. Neither the hardſhips of continual ſelf-denial, nor the calumnies of envenomed tongues, could divert him from purſuing this favourite buſineſs.—He ſought none of your honours, coveted none of your rewards, O ye children of men! What he ſought, what he coveted, was, to wear out his life in your ſervice, and lay it down for your ranſom. This was all his deſire, and this indeed he deſired earneſtly.——He longed (beneficent, bleſſed BEING!) he longed for the fatal hour. He ſeverely rebuked one of his diſciples, who would have diſſuaded him from going as a volunteer to the croſs. He was even ſtraitened *, under a kind of holy uneaſineſs, till the dreadful work was accompliſhed; till he was baptized with the baptiſm of his ſufferings, bathed in blood, and plunged in death.

By this moſt meritorious obedience and death, what did he not deſerve? what did he not procure? He procured thoſe ineſtimable bleſſings, the pardon of ſin, and reconciliation with GOD; procured them (O! love unmerited and unmeaſurable!) for prodigals, for traitors, for rebels.——To this it is owing, that we, who were enemies againſt GOD, may call the KING of heaven our Father; may have free acceſs to him in all our difficulties; and may hope to reign with him in everlaſting glory.

Was ever goodneſs like this goodneſs †? Were ever bleſſings comparable to theſe bleſſings; or purchaſed with ſuch a price?—Hide, hide, your diminiſhed heads, ye little tranſitory donations of ſilver and gold. The riches of a thouſand mines, beſtowed to feed the hungry and clothe the naked, are the moſt contemptible trifles, if mentioned with the charity of the teaching, the healing, the bleeding JESUS. Kingdoms given away in alms, if viewed with this infinitely noble beneficence, would make juſt the ſame figure, as a ſpark from the ſummer-hearth, under the potent and boundleſs blaze of noon.——This is indeed love that paſſeth knowledge. ‡.

Amidſt all theſe miracles of power and of love, (any one of which would have entitled him to univerſal admiration, and everlaſting honour) how humble was our SAVIOUR! O humility—virtue dear to the clared the failure of his ſpirits; and ſhewed him to be ſpent with the heat of the day, and the toil of travelling. Which circumſtance gives a moſt beautiful heightening to his charity and zeal, ſo generouſly and ſo ſucceſsfully exerted in the following conference.

* Εχαρισατο τα βλεμματα, is the delicate and noble expreſſion of the evangeliſt, Luke vii. 21. He made them a preſent of ſight. Silver and gold had he none; but theſe were his gifts, ſuch were his alms.

† Cant. iv. 11. ‡ Luke xiv. 8.

‖ Luke xiv. 12. § Luke vii. 48.

* Luke xii. 50. The original word συνεχομαι ſeems to expreſs the condition of a perſon wedged in, on every ſide, by a tumultuous throng of people. His hands are hampered, and his body is confined in a moving priſon; he is cruſhed, and hurried to and fro: he pants for breath, and is almoſt ſtifled in the croud.—How muſt ſuch a one long to be diſengaged from theſe very uneaſy circumſtances! With equal ardour did our moſt beneficent LORD deſire thoſe ſufferings, which were to overwhelm him with diſtreſs, but exalt us to happineſs; were to bathe his limbs in blood, but cleanſe our ſouls from ſin.—Οι οχλοι, ſays the ſame hiſtorian, συνεχουσι σε και αποθλιβουσι, Luke viii. 45.

† Codrus, it is true, devoted himſelf to death for the Athenians: and Curtius threw himſelf into the yawning gulf, for the preſervation of the Romans.—But theſe died, being mere creatures, and guilty creatures: whereas the dying JESUS was perfectly innocent and ſupremely glorious.—Theſe died only a little before their time: but CHRIST died, though he had life in himſelf, and none could have taken it from him, had he not voluntarily reſigned it.—Theſe died for their valuable friends, for their affectionate relations, for their native country: but CHRIST died for ſlaves, for enemies, for the ungodly.—They died an honourable death: but CHRIST ſubmitted to the moſt ignominious execution; CHRIST died under the imputation of horrid crimes, and in the form of an execrable malefactor.——In all theſe inſtances, as the heavens are higher than the earth, ſo is CHRIST's love greater than their love: his philanthropy than their patriotiſm.

‡ Eph. iii. 19. This expreſſion, as alſo the principal circumſtance of ſuperiority hinted in the preceding note, are founded on the divinity of our LORD. And indeed the expreſſion is ſcarce juſtifiable, the aſſertion is hardly true, upon any other ſuppoſition. A creature dying for a creature, is, though great, yet not incomprehenſible goodneſs. But, when we view the ſufferings of CHRIST, and the bleſſings of redemption ſurrounded with all the ſplendor of the DEITY; they dazzle our underſtanding, and fill us with holy aſtoniſhment. They appear to be the effects of a love, never to be ſpoke of but in the language of wonder, never to be thought of but with an ecſtaſy of delight.

moſt

moſt high GOD, and peculiarly amiable in men——never didſt thou appear in ſo charming a dreſs, or ſo ſtriking a light.

At his birth, not accommodated with a magnificent palace, but lodged in a ſtable, and laid in a manger.——As he advanced in years, not attended with a royal equipage, or ſupplied from a royal revenue; but labouring with his own hands, and earning his bread by the ſweat of his brow.——When he entered upon his miniſterial office, not the leaſt oſtentatious parade appeared in the performance of all his wonderful works. So far, ſo very far from affecting the acclamations of the populace, that he often impoſed ſilence on thoſe unſpeakably-indebted lips, which were ready to overflow with praiſe, and would fain have been the trumpets of his fame.

Though a voice from heaven proclaimed him the BELOVED of his almighty FATHER; he diſdained not to own the ignoble character of the carpenter's ſon *. Though PRINCE of the kings of the earth, he condeſcended to waſh the feet of mean fiſhermen, and vile ſinners †. Though PROPRIETOR and LORD of the whole world, he was content to be more deſtitute than the fowls of the air, or the foxes of the deſert ‡; more deſtitute (aſtoniſhing abaſement!) than the moſt inſignificant and moſt hated animals.

Grandeur, we find, is apt to beget expectations of ſuperior regard; conſequently, gives a keener edge to every affront, and renders the mind more tenderly ſenſible of every diſreſpect. But our LORD's meekneſs was as great as his dignity; and that, throughout a ſeries of ſuch unſufferable provocations, as were equalled by nothing, but the ſweetneſs of his forgiving grace.

When rudely affronted, he calmly bore, and kindly overlooked the inſult.——When contradicted by petulant and preſumptuous ſinners, he endured, with the utmoſt ſerenity of temper, their unreaſonable cavils, and their obſtinate perverſeneſs.——When his invitations, his moſt endearing invitations, were ungratefully and ſtubbornly rejected; inſtead of remitting, he renewed them; and, with ſtill warmer affection, importuned his hearers, not to forſake their own mercies, nor to forego their own felicity.——When all the winning arts of perſuaſion were ineffectual, he added his tears to his ſlighted entreaties; and lamented as a brother, when ſcornfully repulſed as a teacher.

Though his diſciples ſlept, ſtupidly ſlept, when his bitter cries pierced the clouds, and were enough to awaken the very ſtones into compaſſion; did their divine but ſlighted MASTER reſent the unkindneſs? Did he refuſe to admit an excuſe for their neglect? yea he made their excuſe; and that the moſt tender and gracious imaginable; The ſpirit is willing, but the fleſh is weak ‖.——When his enemies had nailed him to the croſs, as the baſeſt ſlave, and moſt flagitious malefactor; when they were glutting their malice with his torments and blood; and ſpared not to revile him, even in his laſt expiring agonies; far, very far from being exaſperated, this HERO of heaven repaid all their contempt and barbarity, with the moſt fervent and effectual ſupplications in their behalf. FATHER, forgive them, was his prayer: for they know not what they do §, was his plea.

Nor was his reſignation leſs exemplary than his meekneſs. He went out to meet afflictions, when they came in his FATHER's name, and commiſſioned from his FATHER's hand. He gave, without the leaſt reluctance, his back to the ſmiters, and hid not his face from ſhame and ſpitting. Though his ſoul, his very ſoul was penetrated with the keeneſt ſenſations of anguiſh; yet no impatient thought diſcompoſed his mind, no murmuring word forced its way from his lips. FATHER, not my will, but thine be done *, was his language, when the ſorrows of death compaſſed him, and pains, inexpreſſibly ſeverer than the pains of diſſolution, came upon him. When they gaped upon him with their mouth, and ſmote him upon the cheek reproachfully. When his face was foul with ſpitting, and on his eyelids was the ſhadow of death. When GOD delivered him to the ungodly, and turned him over into the hands of the wicked. Yea, when the ALMIGHTY ſet him for the mark of his arrows, and brake him with breach upon breach. When the weapons of his wrath cleft his very reins aſunder, and poured his gall upon the earth †. Amidſt all this exquiſite diſtreſs, he ſinned not by the leaſt irregular perturbation; but bowed his head, and dutifully kiſſed the divine rod, and cordially bleſſed his very murderers.

Thus did the whole choir of active and paſſive virtues abound and ſhine in our LORD; abound with the richeſt variety, and ſhine with the higheſt luſtre: infinitely ſurpaſſing that curious aſſemblage of coſtly gems, which ſtudded the Aaronic breaſt-plate ‡; and, as far as earthly things can repreſent heavenly, typified the ſplendor and perfection of our REDEEMER's righteouſneſs.

In all this, he acted and he ſuffered, as GOD's righteous ſervant, and as his people's righteous ſurety.——By all this, he fulfilled every jot and tittle of the divine law; nay, he more than fulfilled, he magnified it. He gave it (if I may apply the moſt beautiful alluſion that ever was uſed, to the moſt momentous ſubject that ever was diſcuſſed) good meaſure, preſſed down, and ſhaken together, and running over ‖.

He defied the moſt vigilant of his enemies to convince him of ſin.——A more malignant, a far more ſagacious adverſary than the ſcribes and Phariſees, could detect no blemiſh in our LORD JESUS. The prince of this world, that infernal tyrant, who had deceived and enſlaved all the nations of the earth, came and found nothing in him §; not the leaſt corruption in his nature, not the leaſt defect in his obedience.

He hath done all things well ¶, was the general acclamation of mankind; or, as the words may be rendered, he hath done all things finely and gracefully †; with every circumſtance that can conſtitute the propriety and dignity, the utility and beauty of action.

I have glorified thee on earth ††, was his own profeſſion before the moſt high GOD. I have glorified thee, in all that I acted, in all that I uttered, in all that I ſuffered. I have diſplayed the magnificence of thy majeſty, the riches of thy grace, and the honour of all thy attributes. Inſomuch, that whoſo ſeeth ME, ſeeth the FATHER ‡‡; whoever is properly acquainted with my perſon and my work of redemption, ſees the inviſible and knows the incomprehenſible DEITY; ſees his venerable, his amiable, his adorable perfections, in the cleareſt mirror, and in the brighteſt light ==.

* Matth. xiii. 55. † John xiii. 14. ‡ Matth. viii. 20.

‖ Matth. xxvi. 41. § Luke xxiii. 34.

* Luke xxii. 42.

† Theſe tragical images are borrowed from the book of Job, who was an eminent type of a ſuffering SAVIOUR; and, though they are the very eloquence of wo, they do not exaggerate, they cannot expreſs, that inconceivable anguiſh, which wrung a bloody ſweat from our bleſſed MASTER's body, and forced from his lips that melancholy exclamation,—My ſoul is ſorrowful,—exceeding ſorrowful,—ſorrowful even unto death. See Job xvi.

‡ Exod. xxviii. 17, 18, 19, 20.

‖ Luke vi. 38. § John xiv. 30. ¶ Mark vii. 37.

† Καλως. †† John xvii. 4. ‡‡ John xii. 45.

== Therefore CHRIST is ſaid to be απαυγασμα της δοξης, Heb. i. 3. In other objects, we have only ſome obſcure footſteps, or dim traces; here we have the whole glory of the GODHEAD. And not barely the glory, but the very brightneſs of the FATHER's glory; or, all the divine perfections beaming forth with adequate, that is, with ineffable and infinite ſplendor.

GOD

GOD also, who is the supreme standard and unerring judge of excellency, bore his testimony to our blessed MEDIATOR. He spoke it once; yea twice, and with a voice from heaven.——In the constitution of the material world, when it came forth from the CREATOR's hand, Omniscience itself could discern no flaw. Neither could Justice itself, upon the strictest inquiry, discover any failure in the obedience of our SURETY. As therefore it was said, concerning the works of creation, They are all very good *; so it was said, concerning our SAVIOUR, and by the same almighty MAJESTY, In him I am well pleased †.

You took notice, and very justly, how much the productions of nature exceed and eclipse the attempts of human skill. We are pleased with the performances of the painter: but do they equal the native blush of the rose, or the artless glow of a pea-blossom? We are charmed with a fine piece of enamelling; but is it fit to be compared with the natural polish of a thousand shells which are formed in the ocean, or a thousand seeds which spring from the earth? We admire the virtues of the ancient saints; men "that were honoured in "their generation, and the glory of their times ‡." We admire the meekness of Moses, and the magnanimity of Elijah, the exalted piety of Isaiah, and the enlarged wisdom of Daniel; the active spirit of Joshua, and the passive graces of Jeremiah. But what proportion, put them all together,—what proportion do they all bear to HIS obedience, who is gone into heaven, angels, and authorities, and powers being made subject unto him ‖? who is called the HOLY ONE and the JUST §; not only by way of emphasis, but by way of exclusion; because no person is worthy of the character, no duties deserve to be mentioned, when CHRIST and his merits are under consideration.

If then we talk of merit, what merit must there be in such immaculate sanctity of soul, and such exemplary holiness of conduct; such ardent zeal for GOD, and such compassionate good-will to man; such consummate worthiness, and extensive usefulness; such as were utterly unknown before; have been absolutely unequalled since; and never will, nor can be parallelled throughout all ages!—O my Theron! what is the drop of a bucket to the unfathomable waves of the ocean? What is a grain of sand to the unmeasurable dimensions of the universe? What is an hour or a moment to the endless revolutions of eternity? Such are all human endowments, and all human attainments, compared with HIS righteousness, who is fairer than the children of men ¶; the chiefest among ten thousand +; and who received not the SPIRIT by measure +.

Think not, that what I have written is the language of rant. It is a paraphrase, though, I must confess, but a scanty paraphrase, on David's practice and David's faith: My mouth shall shew forth thy righteousness and thy salvation all the day ++, for I know not the numbers thereof. The glorious righteousness of CHRIST, and the great salvation obtained thereby, he declares, shall be the chosen, the principal subject of his discourse. And not on a Sabbath only, but on every day of the week, of the year, of his life. And not barely at the stated returns of solemn devotion, but in every social interview, and all the day long.——Why will he thus dwell, perpetually and invariably dwell, on this darling theme? Because he knows no end thereof. It is impossible to measure the value, or exhaust the fulness of these blessings. The righteousness is unspeakable, the salvation is everlasting. To compute the duration of the one, numbers fail; to describe the excellency of the other, words are at a loss.

And is this righteousness designed for us? Is this to be our wedding-dress, this our beautiful array, when we enter the regions of eternity? Unspeakable privilege!—Is this what GOD has provided to supply, more than supply our loss in Adam! Boundless benignity!—Shall we be treated by the Judge of the world, as if we had performed all this unsinning and perfect obedience? Well might the prophet cry out, like one lost in astonishment, How great is his goodness!—Is not your heart enamoured, my dear Theron, with a view of this incomprehensibly-rich grace? What so excellent, what so comfortable, what so desirable, as this gift of a SAVIOUR's righteousness? Though delineated by this feeble pen, methinks, it has dignity and glory enough, to captivate our hearts and fire our affections; fire them with ardent and inextinguishable desires after a personal interest and propriety in it.——O! may the eternal SPIRIT reveal our REDEEMER's righteousness, in all its heavenly beauty and divine lustre! Then, I am sure, we shall esteem it above every thing; we shall regard it as the one thing needful; we shall count all things in comparison of it, worthless as the chaff, and empty as the wind.

To an immortal and fallen soul, every thing else is empty as the wind; but here sinners may suck and be satisfied with this breast of consolations: yea thousands and thousands of millions may milk out, and be delighted with the abundance of its glory *.——Here we shall find the doctrine of supererogation no longer a chimera, but a delightful reality. Here indeed is an immense surplusage, an inexhaustible fund of merit †, sufficient to enrich a whole world of indigent and miserable creatures; sufficient to make their cup run over with a superabundant fulness of peace and joy, so long as

* Gen. i. 31. † Matth. iii. 17. ‡ Ecclus xliv. 7.

‖ 1 Pet. iii. 22. § Acts iii. 14.

¶ Psal. xlv. 2. + Cantic. v. 10. +- John iii. 34.

++ Psal. lxxi. 15. I cannot but observe, that righteousness and salvation are frequently connected, by the author of the psalms, and by the prophet Isaiah: in order to intimate, that the one is founded on the other; the latter derives its origin from the former; there can be no salvation without a righteousness, a real, proper, law-fulfilling righteousness.—At the same time, I am sensible, that the word righteousness may signify GOD's goodness in making, and faithfulness in performing his promise unto David. Salvation may likewise denote the delivery of that afflicted hero from all his persecutors, and his establishment on the throne of Israel.

But if we should confine the sense to these narrow limits, how comfortless the favour even to David himself, considered as an immortal being! How much more insignificant to us and others, on whom the ends of the world are come! And how very unworthy of that infinite GOD, who is the Father of the spirits of all flesh; who sees, at one view, whatever is, or has been, or shall exist; who therefore, when he speaks, speaks to all his children, in every period of time, and in every nation under heaven. As much as a tutor, when delivering his lectures, addresses himself to all his pupils, whether they sit at his right hand or his left, before him or on every side.

Whereas, if righteousness signifies the meritorious obedience of CHRIST, and salvation implies the benefits of his redemption, the sense is no longer shrivelled, impoverished, and mean; but rich, august, and magnificent. It pours consolation among all people, kindreds, and tongues. It is worthy of that GOD, who seeth the things and regardeth the persons, which are not as though they were. It comports exactly with that revelation, in which CHRIST is the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, the sum total.

This note is already too long; otherwise I should take leave to gratify my inclination, and give a sanction to my sentiment, by transcribing Vitringa's exposition of Is. xlv. 8.

* Is. lxvi. 11.

† Yet here is no rich fund (as a learned writer asserts, no fund at all, for the Pope's treasury of meritorious supererogating actions: unless CHRIST and the Pope are to be placed upon the same footing; unless the ineffably-excellent obedience of a divine REDEEMER, and the miserably-defective duties of sinful men, are to be deemed equally valuable.—Since this will hardly be admitted by Protestants; I believe, Aspasio may safely call the obedience of CHRIST, the true supererogation; as Mr Ambrose has called the blood of CHRIST, the true purgatory.

time

time ſhall laſt, and when time ſhall be no more. For, to uſe the apoſtle's weighty argument, if by one man's offence, death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteouſneſs, ſhall reign in life by one, JESUS CHRIST *. If one offence, committed by one mere man, made all his poſterity chargeable with guilt, and liable to death; HOW MUCH MORE ſhall the manifold inſtances of our divine REDEEMER's obedience; of his long, uninterrupted, conſummate righteouſneſs;—how much more ſhall they abſolve all his people from condemnation and puniſhment, and entitle them to the honours and joys of immortality!

Which will appear in a clearer light, if, to the perfection of his obedience, we add the majeſty of his perſon. A proper ſubject this for ſome future letter.—In the mean time, let me deſire my friend, the friend of my boſom, to contemplate our LORD JESUS under that lovely and auguſt character, GLORIOUS IN HOLINESS †. And, for my part, I will not ceaſe to pray, that a ſenſe of this ſuper-eminently grand and precious righteouſneſs may be written on my Theron's heart.—On thoſe living tables, may it be like figures cut on a rock of ſolid marble, or inſcribed on the bark of a growing tree; be laſting in its duration as the former, and ſpreading in its influence as the latter.——It will then be a ſure proof, that his name is written in the book of life; and it ſhall then be a pleaſing pattern for the affection,

the gratitude,
and the friendſhip, of his ASPASIO.

P. S. You give a moſt aſtoniſhing account of the preſſure of the atmoſphere. Aſtoniſhing indeed! that we ſhould be continually ſurrounded, continually overwhelmed with ſuch a tremendous load; and not be cruſhed to death, no, nor be ſenſible of the leaſt weight. ——This, I think, may ſerve to repreſent the ſtate of a ſinner, unawakened from carnal ſecurity. Loads, more than mountainous loads of guilt, are upon his ſoul, and he perceives not the burden. For this reaſon, he is under no apprehenſions of the vengeance and fiery indignation, which he deſerves; he has no ſuperlative eſteem for the atonement and merits of the REDEEMER, which alone can deliver him from the wrath to come. But, if once his conſcience feels, what his lips, perhaps, have often repeated; "We do earneſtly repent us of theſe our miſ-"doings; the remembrance of them is grievous unto us, "the burden of them is intolerable;" then how will he prize ſuch a text: The LORD laid on CHRIST the iniquity of us all! How will he long for an intereſt in the LAMB of GOD, which taketh away the ſin of the world! Then that JESUS who has finiſhed the tranſgreſſion, and brought in everlaſting righteouſneſs, will be all his ſalvation, and all his deſire.

* Rom. v. 17. † Exod. xv. 11.

LETTER VIII.

ASPASIO to THERON.

My dear THERON,

I HAVE juſt been reading that exquiſitely-fine piece of ſacred hiſtory, the life of Joſeph. A hiſtory,—filled with ſurpriſing incidents, and unexpected revolutions;—adorned with the moſt heroic inſtances of triumphant virtue, both amidſt the allurements of temptation, and under the preſſures of affliction;—animated with ſuch tender and pathetic, ſuch melting and alarming touches of natural eloquence, as every reader muſt feel, and every true critic will admire.

When I came to that remarkable injunction, with which the generous viceroy diſmiſſed his brethren; Ye ſhall tell my father of all my glory in Egypt *;—I pauſed,—I pondered,—I was ſtruck. Certainly this was injoined not by way of oſtentation; but on account of the pleaſure, which, he knew, it would yield the good old patriarch.——Was it ſome kind prompting angel, or the voice of gratitude and devotion, that whiſpered in my ear? "Should not the children of men likewiſe tell one "another of all the glory †, which their REDEEMER "poſſeſſes in heaven and on earth? Will not this afford "them the ſublimeſt pleaſure here, and be a ſource of "the moſt refined ſatisfaction for ever and ever?"

Though I had almoſt determined to write no more, till you could make a demand upon the foot of value received; willingly I recede from my intended reſolution, and obey this pleaſing hint.—But who can declare the noble acts of the LORD JESUS CHRIST, or ſhew forth all his praiſe?—However, if I may but liſp out his adorable name, and preſent my friend with a glimpſe, or a broken view of his divine perfections, even this will be deſirable and delightful; far more deſirable and delightful, than to behold Rome in its magnificence, St Paul in the pulpit, or King Solomon on this throne *.

Let me take the lark for my pattern; which, as I was lately returning from an evening-ramble, attracted my obſervation.—Warbling her CREATOR's praiſe, ſhe mounted in the ſerene ſky. Still ſhe warbled, and ſtill ſhe mounted, as though ſhe meant to carry her tribute of harmony unto the very gates of heaven. Having reached, at laſt, her higheſt elevation, and perceiving herſelf at an immenſe diſtance from the ſtarry manſions, ſhe dropped on a ſudden to the earth; and diſcontinued, at once, both to ſing, and to ſoar. Now the morning appears, and is awakening the world, our little ſongſter returns her throat, and re-exerts her wings.—As I have endeavoured, very imperfectly endeavoured, to ſtrike out a ſhadowy draught of our LORD's complete obedience? I would, though unequal to the taſk, once more reſume my pen, and attempt—nothing like a diſplay, but only a faint ſketch of his eſſential dignity.

* Gen. xlv. 13.

* To ſee the glory of CHRIST, is the grand bleſſing, which our LORD ſolicits and demands for his diſciples, in his laſt ſolemn interceſſion, John xvii. 24. It is that which will complete the bleſſedneſs of heaven, and fill its inhabitants with joy unſpeakable and glorious.—Surely, then, we ſhould endeavour to anticipate, in ſome degree, that celeſtial bliſs; and habituate our ſouls to this ſacred exerciſe, which will be our buſineſs and our reward to endleſs ages.

Should the reader deſire aſſiſtance in this important work, I would refer him to a little treatiſe of Dr Owen's, entitled, Meditations on the glory of CHRIST.—'Tis little in ſize, not ſo in value. Was I to ſpeak of it, in the claſſical ſtyle, I ſhould call it, aureus, gemmeus, mellitus. But I would rather ſay, it is richly repleniſhed with that unction from the HOLY ONE, which tends to enlighten the eyes, and chear the heart; which ſweetens the enjoyments of life, ſoftens the horrors of death, and prepares for the fruitions of eternity.

* Theſe, if I remember right, are the three things, which St Auguſtine declared, would, of all others, moſt eminently gratify his curioſity.

First let me observe, that, for some time past, we have been visited with the most uncomfortable weather; dewless nights, and sultry days. The firmament was more like a glowing furnace, than the region of refreshing rain.—The earth lay parched with thirst, and chapped with heat. The meadows were drained of their humidity, and all the flowers hung their fading heads.—The streams, which used to flow parallel with the verdant margin, abandoned their banks; and sunk, diminished and discoloured, to the bottom of their oozy channels. ——Nature in general seemed to be resigning the "robe "of beauty, for the garment of heaviness." Drought was in all our borders; and famine, we feared, was not far behind.——Though clouds of dust obscured the air, tarnished the hedges, and almost smothered the traveller; yet not one cloud of fleecy white appeared, to variegate the blue expanse, or give us hopes of a reviving shower*.

It reminded me of that awful threatening, denounced by Moses on a wicked people: The heaven, that is over thy head, shall be brass; and the earth, that is under thee, shall be iron †.——It made me apprehensive of that terrible state, which the prophet so emphatically describes: The field is wasted, and the land mourneth. The seed is rotten under the clods, and the harvest perisheth. The garners are laid desolate, and the barns are broken down.—The new wine is dried up; the oil languisheth; and all the trees of the field are withered.—How do the beasts groan! the herds of cattle are perplexed. Yea, the flocks of sheep are made desolate. Because the rivers of waters are dried up, and the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness ‡.——But, blessed be the divine PROVIDENCE, our fears are vanished, and a most joyful change has taken place. The LORD hath sent a gracious rain upon his inheritance, and refreshed it, when it was weary ‖.

Yesterday in the afternoon, the wind shifting to the south, roused the dormant clouds, and brought some of those agreeable strangers on its wings.—At first, they came sailing in small, and thin, and scattered parties. Anon, the flying squadrons advanced in larger detachments, more closely wedged, and more deeply laden. Till, at last, the great rendezvous completed, they formed into a body of such depth, and extended their wings with such a sweep, as darkened the sun, and overspread the whole hemisphere.

Just at the close of day, the gales which escorted the spongy treasures, retired; and consigned their charge to the disposal of a profound calm. Not a breeze shook the most tremulous leaf. Not a curl ruffled the smooth expansive lake. All things were still, as in attentive expectation. The earth seemed to gasp after the hovering moisture. Nature, with her suppliant tribes, in expressive pleading silence, solicited the falling fruitfulness; nor pleaded long, nor solicited in vain.

The showers, gentle, soft, and balmy, descend. The vessels of heaven unload their precious freight, and enrich the penurious glebe. Through all the night, the liquid sweetness, incomparably more beneficial than trickling silver, distils; shedding herbs, and fruits, and flowers.——Now the sun, mild and refulgent, issues through the portals of the east. Pleased, as it were, to have emerged from the late aggravated darkness, he looks abroad, with peculiar gaiety, and the most engaging splendors. He looks through the disburdened air, and finds a gladdened world, that wants nothing but his all-cheering beams, to render its satisfaction complete.

The glory comes! Hail to thy rising ray,
Great lamp of light, and second source of day!
Who robe the world, each nipping gale remove,
Treat every sense, and beam creating love *.

At his auspicious approach, the freshened mountains lift their heads and smile. The garden opens its aromatic stores; and breathes, as from a fuming altar, balm to the smell, and incense to the skies. The little hills, crowned with springing plenty, clap their hands on every side. The moistened plains, and irriguous valleys, laugh and sing. While their waters, lately exhausted, again are made deep, and the rivers run like oil †.

The whole earth, saturated with the bounty of heaven, and flushed with humid life, wears a thousand marks of gratitude and complacency. Washed by the copious rain, how bright and vivid is the universal verdure! The green carpet below may almost vie with the blue canopy above.—The forest, and every tree, burnish their colours, and array themselves in their finest apparel: which, as on a day of general festivity, is delicately decked with gems; gems of unsullied lustre, and of genial moisture.——From every pasture, and from all the grove, the voice of pleasure and of melody resounds. While the officious zephyrs waft the floating harmony, blended with native perfumes; gently waft them to the senses, and touch the very soul with transport.

Could there be a more brilliant appearance, or more exuberant demonstrations of joy, even to celebrate the anniversary of nature's birth? With what admirable propriety has the psalmist compared yonder orient sun, in all his sparkling grandeur, to a young exulting bridegroom ‡; who comes forth, with every heightened ornament from his chamber, to shew himself in the most distinguished period of his life, and to receive the blessing which consummates his happiness!

This most charming and equally majestic-scene, recalls to my memory that fine description of the MESSIAH, extant in the last lovely strains of the Israelitish swan ‖ :—HE shall be welcome and salutary as the light of the morning; when the sun ariseth, to chase the malignant shades, and pour day through the reviving world. He shall be as the light of a morning, that is most serenely fair; without either storms to disturb, or clouds to obscure the glorious, the delightful dawn.——Yea, his appearance shall be more beautiful, and his influences more beneficial §, than the clear shining of that grand luminary, after a night of settled gloom, and

* At such a juncture, how pertinent is the question, proposed by the almighty MAJESTY? Job xxxviii. 37. 38. Who can number, muster or arrange, the clouds in wisdom? so as to have them ready at hand, on any emergency. And who can empty those bottles of heaven, in copious but seasonable effusions upon the earth? when, as in the case described above, the dust of the roads is attenuated into powder, נצקת לעפר and the clods of the valley are glued fast together, ידבקו.

† Deut. xxviii. 23. ‡ Joel i. 10. &c.

‖ Psal. lxviii. 9.

* These beautiful lines are borrowed from the SEA-PIECE, canto IV. A narratory, philosophical, and descriptive poem, written by my ingenious friend, Dr Kirkpatrick.

† Ezek. xxxii. 14. ‡ Psal. xix. 5.

‖ Israelitish swan—In allusion to those well-known lines of the poet,

Multa Dircæum levat aura cygnum.

And not without a reference to the popular notion, that the swan sings the most melodious notes in its last moments. Fuit hæc facundi senis quasi cygnea vox. TULLY.

§ More beautiful, more beneficial, than the clear shining, 2 Sam. xxiii. 4.—Thus we have ventured to translate, or rather to paraphrase, the words ממטר. That the prefix מ often occurs in the acceptation of comparative pre-eminence, is plain from a very remarkable passage in Psal. xix. 10. Where our inspired author, quite ravished with the love of the sacred oracles, declares, They are desirable beyond gold, even beyond the droppings of the honeycomb.

If this sense is admitted, we shall have a fine comparison, and a grand advance upon it; acknowledging the insufficiency even of the strongest and brightest images, to represent the glory of CHRIST's kingdom, and the benignity of his administration.—Perhaps, the translation may be too free and daring, and not improve itself to the exact critic. The sense, however, is unquestionably just; agreeable to the whole tenor of scripture; and can want no recommendation to the intelligent Christian.

showers

ſhowers of inceſſant rain. When his beams ſhed animating warmth, and vital luſtre, on the tender graſs impearled with dews, and on all the green treaſures of the teeming earth.

As we have already contemplated the bleſſed JESUS, under the amiable character of the JUST ONE; the foregoing paſſage of ſcripture repreſents him to our faith, in the more majeſtic quality of THE LORD OF GLORY; or rather, unites the two grand peculiarities, which render him unparallelled in his perſonal, and all-ſufficient in his mediatorial capacity.

Great, unſpeakably great and glorious would our SAVIOUR appear, if we had no other manifeſtations of his excellency, than thoſe which preceded his myſterious incarnation.—In the ancient ſcriptures, he ſtands characterized, as the ſupreme object of GOD's ineffable complacency; veſted with a glory, prior to the birth of time, or the exiſtence of things; even the glory, which he had with the FATHER, before the world was *—He is every where exhibited, as the ultimate deſire of all nations; the ſole hope of all the ends of the earth; the ſeed, of ineſtimable and univerſal importance, in whom all people, nations, and languages ſhould be bleſſed.—In thoſe royal, or rather divine acts and monuments, he is publicly recognized, as the RULER of GOD's people; whoſe dominion is an everlaſting dominion, and his kingdom from generation to generation. And how auguſt, how venerable, is this SOVEREIGN! ſince it was the higheſt honour of the moſt eminent ſaints, and renowned monarchs †, to act as his harbingers. The ſplendor of the temple, the richneſs of its ornaments, and the ſolemnity of its ſervices, were the enſigns of his grandeur; were his ſacred regalia, intended to uſher him into the world with becoming ſtate.

Every inſpired prophet was his herald; deputed to blazon his perfections, or foretell his coming. Let us hear one ſpeaking the ſentiments of all.——GOD the SAVIOUR came from Teman, and the HOLY ONE from mount Paran. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praiſe ‡. Thunders ſounded his trumpet, and lightnings waved his banners. Before him went the peſtilence, for the deſtruction of his enemies; but, for the deliverance of Iſrael, he rode upon his horſes and chariots of ſalvation. The mountains ſaw him, and they trembled; the everlaſting hills, and they bowed their heads. The abyſs uttered her voice, and acknowledged his ſovereignty through her deepeſt caverns; the towering ſurges ‖ lifted up their hands, and remained in a ſuſpended poſture, while his people paſſed through their opening lines.——Indeed, both depth, and height, and every creature, have paid him homage, and done him ſervice. And ſhall not we, my dear Theron, ſubmit to his righteouſneſs? Submit! ſhall we not embrace it; rely on it; and, with joyful hearts, with triumphant tongues, ſay, There is none, there is nothing, like it *!

Does not all mankind agree to eſtimate the merit of the practice, according to the dignity of the perſon? If a neighbour of inferior rank viſit ſome poor afflicted wretch, in a coarſe garret, and on a tattered bed; it is no very extraordinary favour. But if a lady of the firſt diſtinction, or a nobleman of the higheſt order, perform the ſame office; it is a much more remarkable, a much more admired inſtance of ſelf-denying charity. On the foot of this calculation, to what a ſupereminent height will the worthineſs of our LORD's obedience riſe! It will riſe, like ſome magnificent edifice, whoſe baſis reſts upon the centre, whoſe dimenſions fill the hemiſphere; and whoſe turrets glitter in the ſky. Or rather, it will extend itſelf to immenſity; where length, and breadth, and all dimenſions are loſt. Eſpecially, if we conſider—the names he bears, and the honours he receives;—the works he has done, and thoſe mightier works he is appointed to do.

The names he bears.——The title by which JESUS of Nazareth is diſtinguiſhed in the heavenly world; the name written on his veſture, and on his thigh, is KING of kings and LORD of lords †.——The deſcription, which the incomprehenſible JEHOVAH gives of the Surety for ſinful men, runs in this exalted ſtrain; The man that is MY FELLOW ‡. Which the apoſtle explains, in that memorable and majeſtic clauſe; He thought it no robbery to be equal with GOD ‖.

* John xvii. 5.

† Moſes, for inſtance, and Joſhua, David, and Solomon, were types, ſtrongly-marked types, of our great LAWGIVER and DELIVERER, of our divine RULER and PREACHER.

‡ See Hab. iii. The greateſt part of which ſublime ode refers to the wonderful works recorded by Moſes and Joſhua. It ſeems, eſpecially in the exordium, to be an imitation of that grand and majeſtic deſcription, with which the Jewiſh legiſlator introduces his laſt ſolemn benediction, Deut. xxxiii.—Theſe works are by Aſpaſio aſcribed to CHRIST. And, I think, it is demonſtrably certain, that JESUS CHRIST is the JEHOVAH celebrated in the books of Moſes, and in the writings of the prophets. It is CHRIST, who dwelt in the burning buſh, and walked in the burning fiery furnace. It is CHRIST, who wrought the miracles in Egypt, and the wonders in the field of Zoan. The temporal deliverer, and the eternal REDEEMER of Iſrael, are one and the ſame.—He is that Captain of the hoſts of the LORD, who gave the nations as duſt to their ſword, and as driven ſtubble to their bow, Joſh. v. 14.—He is that mighty One, who puniſhed the ſtout heart of the king of Aſſyria; who cut down the thickets of his foreſt, and lopped his bow with terror, If x. 34.—He gave Moſes his commiſſion; gave Moſes his law; and was both the LORD, and the end, of that ſacred, ſignificant, myſterious œconomy. Compare 1 Cor. x. 9. with Numb. xxi. 6, 7. See Dan. iii. 25. Heb. iii. 3, 4.

‖ חם which, I think, is put in oppoſition to חמור and forms a beautiful contraſt, ver. 10.

* 1 Sam. xxi. 9. † Rev. xix. 16.

‡ Zech. xlii. 7. עמיתי Contribulis vel coequalis: my fellow, or my equal.—The original expreſſion occurs no where, but in this verſe of Zechariah, and in the book of Leviticus. In one text it is explained by brother, or partaker of the ſame nature. In every other place, I believe, it will be found to ſignify, not barely a neighbour, but an equal; one who ſtands upon the ſame level, with regard to the claims of equity, and the common rights of life.—In either ſenſe, it militates ſtrongly for divinity of our LORD JESUS CHRIST.

‖ Phil. ii. 6. Some writers, I am aware, have endeavoured to interpret away this evidence of our LORD's divine nature; but I think with great injury to the context, and no leſs violence to the phraſe.

Αρπαγμον, as far as I can obſerve, denotes, not the prize or ſpoil, but the act of plundering or taking the ſpoil: ipſa rapiendi actio. Vid. STEPH. Theſaur. Græc. ling.—If ſo, the text moſt naturally implies, that CHRIST counted it no act of robbery; no invaſion of another's prerogative; but looked upon it as his unqueſtionable right, to be equal with GOD, and to receive divine honours.—— Nevertheleſs (αλλα, Rom. v. 14.) he was ſo far from tenaciouſly inſiſting upon, that he willingly relinquiſhed the claim. He was content to forego the magnificent diſtinctions of the CREATOR, and to appear in the form of a creature: nay, to be made in the likeneſs of the fallen creatures; and not only to ſhare the diſgrace, but to ſuffer the puniſhment, due to the meaneſt and vileſt among them all.—An example of humility, worthy to be diſplayed by the eloquence of an apoſtle, or the tongue of an archangel! worthy to be the everlaſting pattern, and the everlaſting praiſe of all believers.

But however αρπαγμος be tranſlated, the ſtreſs of the argument, I apprehend, lies upon the word ισα. If this ſignifies a real and proper equality, the proof ſeems, to me at leaſt, irrefragable.——How ſhall we determine the exact ſignificancy of this important word? by having recourſe to Homer's works, or to Heathen authors? This, in caſe the ſacred writers will decide the queſtion, is like going from Jeruſalem to Athens for the ſolution of a religious doubt, even while the college of apoſtles is ſitting at the former place.——The word occurs five or ſix times in their writings. They uſe it, it is true, in the adjective form; but the adjective is very ſufficient to ſettle the ſignification of the adverb. If I know the meaning of ισος, I ſhall be at no loſs to underſtand the import of ισα.—See Matth. xx. 12. Luke vi. 34. John v. 18. Acts xi. 17. Rev. xxi. 16. In all which places it expreſſes, not —The HOLY GHOST, ſpeaking by the prophet Iſaiah of the virgin's ſon, enumerates ſeveral grand diſtinctions, both of his perſon, and his office. He ſtyles the child that ſhould be born, the WONDERFUL COUNSELLOR, the EVERLASTING FATHER, the MIGHTY GOD, the PRINCE OF PEACE *.—The ſame inſpired writer, though eloquent above all orators, and more ſublime than the loftieſt poet, cries out in rapturous aſtoniſhment, Who can declare his generation †? What pencil can pourtray, what language can expreſs, his matchleſs excellencies? And may we not with equal propriety demand, Who can declare the meritorious perfection of his righteouſneſs? It is precious beyond compariſon; beyond imagination precious.

The honours which our LORD receives, are proportioned to the illuſtrious characters which he ſuſtains.—John the Baptiſt, than whom a greater prophet, or a better judge, was not born of woman, profeſſes himſelf unworthy, to ſtoop down and unlooſe the latchet of his ſhoes ‡; unworthy, though a burning and ſhining light in his generation, to perform the meaneſt ſervice to this PRINCE of heaven.——Stephen, who leads the van in the noble army of Chriſtian martyrs, beheld ſuch a repreſentation of his crucified MASTER's glory, as enabled him to exult with divine delight, even amidſt the furious aſſaults of his perſecutors, and under the violent blows of his murderers ‖. Aſſured, that JESUS has all power in heaven and earth, by an act of the moſt ſolemn worſhip, he commits his departing ſoul, that moſt important of all truſts, to his REDEEMER's hand §. Nor by the firſt martyr alone, but in all churches of the ſaints, and in every age of Chriſtianity, has the LORD JESUS been addreſſed, as the conſtant object of his people's adoration; and acknowledged, as the ever-faithful depoſitary of their eternal intereſts.

When Iſaiah beheld a viſionary manifeſtation of CHRIST ¶, the firſt-born ſons of light were waiting around him, in poſtures of dutiful ſubmiſſion. Theſe celeſtial beings, whoſe very feet are too bright for mortals to view, veil their faces before his infinitely ſuperior effulgence. The ſeraphs, who are all zeal and all love, celebrate his perfections, and cry one to another, The whole earth is full of his glory.——And is not heaven alſo filled with his glory? does not heaven likewiſe reſound with his praiſe? The beloved diſciple, in a viſion no leſs clear and far more magnificent, beholds the LAMB that was ſlain, ſtanding in the midſt of a reſplendent throne; moſt beautifully adorned with a circling rainbow, and terribly dignified by the blaze of lightnings, and the ſound of thunders. Before this auguſt throne, and at the diſpoſal of the once ſlaughtered SAVIOUR, are ſeven lamps of burning fire; expreſſive of the DIVINE SPIRIT, in all the variety of his miraculous gifts, and ſanctifying graces ⸸.—Four and twenty elders, clothed in white raiment, with crowns on their heads, and the harps of GOD in their hands, fall proſtrate in deepeſt homage before the LAMB. They ſtrike the golden ſtrings, and ſing that ſublime euchariſtic hymn: Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the ſeals thereof: for thou waſt ſlain, and haſt redeemed us to GOD by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and haſt made us, unto our GOD, kings and prieſts +.

Behold the hierarchies of angels: they are in number ten thouſand times ten thouſand.——Hark! they raiſe their voice, and awaken all the powers of harmony.—Who is the ſubject, and what is the burden of their ſong? Worthy is the LAMB that was ſlain, to receive power, and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and bleſſing.—Nor theſe alone, but every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and ſuch as are in the ſea, join the immenſe chorus. They cry, in loud reſponſive ſtrains of melody and devotion, Bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the LAMB for ever and ever *.

This, you obſerve, is the devout acknowledgment, not only of the cherubim, the ſeraphim, and the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, but of every creature.——The ſun, the moon, and the ſtars, which garniſh the heavens;—beaſts and creeping things, mountains and hills, fruitful trees and all cedars, which repleniſh the earth;—metals and minerals, gems and foſſils, the ſubterraneous riches of nature, or things which are under the earth;—even all thoſe objects, which my Theron lately contemplated, do, in their way, magnify the LORD JESUS. They bear witneſs to his power, as their CREATOR; they are ſubſervient to his intereſts, as our MEDIATOR; and, in this manner, they glorify his ſacred name.

Under ſuch views of the bleſſed REDEEMER, enlarged and elevated even to aſtoniſhment, is it poſſible to over-rate the worth of his mediatorial obedience? Is it poſſible to lay too much ſtreſs on his expiatory ſacrifice, or aſcribe too much efficacy to his vicarious righteouſneſs?

To the honours which he receives, let us add the works which he has done. By theſe, in the days of his fleſh, were diſplayed the greatneſs of his glory, and the might of his majeſty.

Behold! ſays the almighty FATHER; my ſervant, he who condeſcends to become my ſervant in the matchleſs work of redemption; ſhall deal prudently, ſhall conduct himſelf with all the dignity and all the ſanctity of wiſdom. In conſequence of which, he ſhall be exalted, be extolled, and be very high †.——The paraphraſe of the Jewiſh commentators on this beautiful climax is, though inadequate, not contemptible. "The MESSIAH," they ſay, "ſhall be higher than Abraham, more illuſtri-"ous than Moſes, and exalted above the angels of light, "even above the prime miniſters ‡ of heaven."——What follows, is an attempt to render this expoſition ſomewhat leſs defective.

Here, could you open my chamber-door, and peep upon your friend, you would find him in the ſame attitude, and under the ſame perplexity, which were formerly obſerved in Phocion. Sitting one day, amidſt an aſſembly of the people, and preparing to make a public oration, he appeared uncommonly thoughtful. Being aſked the reaſon, "I am conſidering," ſaid he, "how I "may ſhorten, what I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak."—The compaſs of my ſubject would demand many volumes; whereas the limits of my letter will allow but a few paragraphs.

Our LORD gave ſight to the blind. He poured day upon thoſe hopeleſs and benighted eyes, which had never been viſited with the leaſt dawning ray.——The dumb, at his command, found a ready tongue, and burſt into ſongs of praiſe. The deaf were all ear, and liſtened to the joyful ſound of ſalvation.——The lame, lame from their very birth, threw aſide their crutches, and full of tranſport and exultation, leaped like the bounding roe ‖.——He reſtored floridity and not a bare reſemblance or likeneſs only, but a real and proper equality.

* Iſ. ix. 6. † Iſ. liii. 8. ‡ Mark i. 7.
‖ Acts vii. 56. § Acts vii. 59.
¶ Iſ. vi. 1, 2. &c. compared with John xii. 41.
⸸ Rev. iv. 5. + Rev. v. 9. 10.

* Rev. v. 11, 12, 13. † Iſ. lii. 13.
‡ Prime miniſters, this is almoſt a literal tranſlation of their words, מלאכי השרת
‖ We have the fineſt repreſentation of this event, given us by the inſpired hiſtorian, Acts iii. 8. And he leaping up, ſtood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praiſing GOD.——The very language ſeems to exult, in a redundant flow of expreſſive phraſes; juſt as a poor cripple, who never knew either the comfort of bodily vigour, or the pleaſure of local motion, may be ſuppoſed to do, when ſuddenly beauty to the fleſh, emaciated by conſuming ſickneſs, or encruſted with a loathſome leproſy.—All manner of diſeaſes, though blended with the earlieſt ſeeds of life, and rivetted in the conſtitution by a long inveterate predominancy;—diſeaſes, that baffled the ſkill of the phyſician, and mocked the force of medicine;—theſe he cured, not by tedious applications, but in the twinkling of an eye; not by coſtly preſcriptions, or painful operations, but by a word from his mouth, or a touch from his hand; nay, by the fringe of his garment, or the bare act of his will.

Any one of theſe miracles had been enough to endear the character, and eternize the memory of another perſon. But they were common things, matters of daily occurrence, with our divine MASTER. The years of his public miniſtry were an unintermitted ſeries of ſuch healing wonders; or, if any intermiſſion took place, it was only to make way for more invaluable miracles of ſpiritual beneficence.

Behold him exerciſing his dominion over the vegetable creation. A fig-tree, adorned with the moſt promiſing ſpread of leaves, but unproductive of the expected fruit, withers away at his rebuke. It is not only ſtripped of its verdant honours, but dried up from the very roots *, and periſhes for ever. A fearful, yet ſignificant intimation of that final ruin, which will overtake the ſpecious hypocrite; who, while laviſh in outward profeſſion, is deſtitute of inward piety.

His eye pierced through the whole world of waters; diſcerning the fiſh that had juſt ſwallowed a piece of ſilver coin, and guided its courſe to Peter's hook †. 'Tis true, when the gatherers of the ſacred tax came, to collect his ſhare for the reparation of the temple, he had not a ſufficiency of money to ſatisfy ſo ſmall a demand ‡; yet he takes occaſion from this moſt abject poverty, to manifeſt the immenſity of his riches. He makes the great deep his revenue, and bids the ſcaly nations bring him their tribute. Never was ſuch indigence aſſociated with ſuch magnificence! And never, never let us forget, that the indigence was ours, the magnificence all his own!

The waters themſelves, it may be ſaid, are far more unmanageable than their inhabitants. Who can controul that outrageous element? which has deſtroyed ſo many gallant fleets, with the armies they bore; and which would laugh at the oppoſition of the united world.—The LORD JESUS walks upon its rolling ſurges ‖, and ſpeaks its moſt tempeſtuous agitations into a calm. The waves of the ſea are mighty, and rage horribly; but yet the LORD, who loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood, is mightier *.

The winds are yet more ungovernable than the madding ocean. When theſe are hurled † abroad, to ſhatter the foreſts, and ſhake the ſhores, who can curb their rage? what can withſtand their impetuoſity? Even the boiſterous winds hear the SAVIOUR's voice; and, as ſoon as they hear, obey. His voice, more powerful to reſtrain, than brazen dungeons to confine, chides the furious whirlwind. The furious whirlwind is awed into immediate ‡ ſilence. That which a moment ago heaved the billows to the clouds, and filled with outrage the howling firmament, now gently whiſpers among the ſhrouds, and ſcarcely curls the ſmooth expanſe.

Something there is, even within the narrow compaſs of our own breaſts, which affords room for more ſignal exertions of DEITY, than the turbulent billows, or the reſiſtleſs ſtorm. Agreeably to the ſuggeſtion of a prophet; For lo! he that formeth the mountains? and createth the wind; and, as a more pregnant proof of divine perfection, declareth unto man what is his thought, the GOD of hoſts is his name ‖; the poſſeſſor of ſuch ſurpaſſing power and wiſdom muſt unqueſtionably be the ſupreme LORD. And who is this, but JESUS CHRIST? He knew what was in man §. He diſcerned the ſecrets of the heart; diſcerned the latent purpoſe, before it diſcloſed itſelf in action; even before it was uttered in ſpeech; nay, while it lay yet an unformed embrio in the mind.

His glance pierced into futurity; eſpied events, in all their circumſtances ¶, and with the greateſt perſpicuity, before they came into being. The hidden things of darkneſs were open, and the contingencies of to-morrow were preſent, to his all-pervading eye. Nay, the unthought-of revolutions even of diſtant ages, the aſtoniſhing cataſtrophe of diſſolving nature, and the awful proceſs of everlaſting judgment, he clearly foreſaw, and particularly foretold.

ſuddenly and unexpectedly bleſſed with both. He would exert his new-acquired powers again and again; firſt in one attitude, then in another: ſometimes to try, whether he was really healed, and not under the pleaſing deluſion of a dream; ſometimes from a tranſport of conſcious delight, and to expreſs the ſallies of joy that ſprung up in his heart.

Though I acknowledge Mr Pope's deſcription to be extremely beautiful,

——The lame their crutch forego,
And leap exulting like the bounding roe;

yet I cannot perſuade myſelf, that it is to be compared with St Luke's draught, either in the variety of figures; in the richneſs of colouring; or in that exuberance of ſtyle, which, on this occaſion, is ſo happily ſignificant, and ſo perfectly pictureſque.

* Mark xi. 20.

† Matth. xvii. 27. How wonderful is this ſeemingly-little miracle! or rather, what a cluſter of wonders is comprized in this ſingle act!—That any fiſh, with money in its mouth, ſhould be catched,—with money juſt of ſuch a value,—and in the very firſt fiſh that offered itſelf!—What a pregnant diſplay of omniſcience to know, of omnipotence to over-rule, all theſe fortuitous incidents!

‡ About fourteen-pence.

‖ He treadeth upon the waves of the ſea, is one of the prerogatives aſcribed to the moſt high GOD, Job ix. 8. The original word גלים ſignifies a ſea, that rolls mountain-high; and ſuch, we have reaſon to ſuppoſe, were the waves on which our LORD walked; ſince the veſſel to which he bent his courſe, was βασανιζομενον, laſhed, battered, tormented, by their vehement concuſſions, Matth. xiv. 24.

* Pſal. xciii. 5.

† This is the literal tranſlation of that beautiful Hebrew phraſe, which occurs Jonah i. 4.—The ſacred writer, deſcribing the ſtormy meſſenger, which was diſpatched to arreſt a fugitive ſervant, ſays, החיל—The LORD hurled forth a great wind. The ſame expreſſion is applied to Saul, (1 Sam. xviii. 11.), when he darted his javelin at David, with a deſign to transfix and nail him to the wall.—What an elegant, and how awful an image! Storms and tempeſts, with all their irreſiſtible fury and dreadful ravages, are like miſſive weapons in the hand of JEHOVAH; which he launches with greater eaſe, and ſurer aim, than the moſt expert warrior emits the pointed ſteel.

‡ Immediate—This circumſtance, as very much aggrandizing the miracle, is, with great hiſtorical propriety, remarked by the evangeliſt. The ſea is known to have a prodigious ſwell, and very tremendous agitations, for a conſiderable time after the tempeſtuous wind ceaſes. On this occaſion, and in obedience to its MAKER's will, it departs from the eſtabliſhed laws of motion.——No ſooner is the word ſpoken, but there is a calm; not an advancing, but an inſtantaneous calm; not a partial, but a perfect calm, Matth. viii. 26. Mark iv. 39.

‖ Amos iv. 13.

§ John ii. 25. This all-diſcerning intelligence of the DEITY, is very emphatically expreſſed by the pſalmiſt, Pſal. cxxxix. 1. 2. &c. tho' the ſentiment in one clauſe ſeems to be ſomewhat weakened by our verſion. There is not a word in my tongue, would have a nobler turn, and more extenſive meaning, if rendered, BEFORE the word is on my tongue, thou, O LORD, knoweſt it altogether.

¶ In all their circumſtances.——See a very remarkable exemplification of this particular, Mark xiv. 13. There ſhall meet you,—not barely a perſon, but the ſex and age are both ſpecified;—not two, or ſeveral, but one man;—not within any given ſpace of time, but at the very inſtant of your arrival;—not empty-handed, but bearing a veſſel;—not of wood or metal, but an earthen pitcher;—filled, not with wine or milk, but with water;—carrying it into that very houſe, where the preparation was made, and the paſſover was to be celebrated.—What a multitude of contingencies! all minutely foretold by our LORD!

Nor does he only penetrate the receſſes, but over-rule the operations of the ſoul.——He ſo intimidated a multitude of ſacrilegious wretches, that they fled, not before his drawn ſword, or bent bow, but at the ſhaking of his ſingle ſcourge *.——He ſo awed, by one ſhort remonſtrance †, an aſſembly of conceited and oſtentatious Phariſees, that they could neither gainſay, nor endure the energy of his diſcourſe. Though not to endure, was a tacit acknowledgment of guilt, and muſt cover them with public confuſion.—With a word, the moſt mild and gentle ‡ imaginable, he flung ſuch terror into a band of armed men, as blaſted all their courage, and laid them ſtunned and proſtrate on the ground.

All hearts are in his hand. He turneth them, as the rivers of water, whitherſoever he will ‖; with as much eaſe, and with the ſame efficacious ſway, as the current of the rivers is turned by every inflection of the channel.——Follow me, was his call to James and John: Follow me §, was all he ſaid to Levi the publican. Though the firſt were engaged in all the ardour of buſineſs; though the laſt was ſitting at the very receipt of cuſtom; yet both he and they, without any demur, or the leaſt delay, left their employ, left their neareſt relations, and reſigned their earthly all, to attend a poor and deſpiſed MASTER.——Their acquaintance, no doubt, would remonſtrate a thouſand inconveniencies; their enemies would not fail to cenſure them, as raſh enthuſiaſts; but all theſe conſiderations were lighter than duſt, were leſs than nothing, when ſet in competition with two words only from JESUS of Nazareth. Impreſſed, deeply impreſſed by his powerful ſummons, ſuch loſs they counted gain, and ſuch obloquy glory.

He planted bowels of compaſſion in the unfeeling avaricious wretch; and elevated, beyond the height of the ſtars, deſires that lay grovelling even below the mire of the ſwine. The ſlaves of ſin he reſtored to the liberty of righteouſneſs; and unhappy creatures, who were degenerated into the likeneſs of the devil, he renewed after the image of the bleſſed GOD.—Theſe were the effects of his perſonal preaching; theſe are ſtill the conqueſts of his glorious goſpel; and do not theſe declare his dominion over the intellectual œconomy? that the world of minds, as well as of material nature, is open to his inſpection, and ſubject to his control?

The dead ſeem to be more remote from human cogniſance, than the ſecrets of the breaſt; leſs liable to any human juriſdiction, than the warring elements. What potentate can iſſue a writ of releaſe to the grave? or cite the diſlodged ſoul, to re-enter the breathleſs corpſe?—Yet this, even this, our mighty MEDIATOR executed. He opened the eyes, which were ſunk in their ſockets, and ſealed in the tomb. He bid the heart, that had forgot its vital motion, ſpring into renewed and vigorous life. The crimſon flood, long congealed by the icy hand of death; which had not only loſt its pulſe by ſtagnation, but likewiſe changed its very texture by putrefaction *; circulates, at his order, all florid and mantling with health, through the wondering veins.——The ſpirit, which had taken its flight into the inviſible ſtate, had taken its place in eternal habitations, returns, at our REDEEMER's ſignal, to the tenement of mouldering clay; and, by the amazing viſit, proclaims his ſovereignty over thoſe unknown realms, and their myſterious inhabitants.

As he recalls from, ſo he admits into, the abodes of future happineſs. In the very loweſt depths of his humiliation, he diſpoſed of the ſeats of bliſs, and the thrones of glory. His hands, when ſwollen with wounds, and nailed to the tree, evidently ſuſtained the keys of hell and of death †. Then, even then, he opened and he ſhut either the gates of the grave, or the portals of paradiſe. What he ſpeaks to the penitent thief, is the language of ſupreme authority; To-day ſhalt thou be with him in paradiſe ‡. 'Tis a royal mandamus, not an humble petition.

Does our LORD's ſuperiority extend to thoſe malignant beings, the devil and his angels?—Even theſe, in ſpite of all their formidable ſtrength ‖, and inextinguiſhable rage, he makes his footſtool. He brake the teeth of thoſe infernal lions; and reſcued the helpleſs prey, on which their bloody jaws were cloſing. At his command, they abandon their conqueſts; and relinquiſh, however indignant, however reluctant, their long-accuſtomed habitations. His ſingle command, more forcible than ten thouſand thunderbolts, diſpoſſeſſes a whole legion § of thoſe fierce and haughty ſpirits; drives them, all terrified and deprecating ſeverer vengeance, to ſeek reſt in ſolitary deſerts, are to herd with the moſt ſordid brutes.

As the bleſſed JESUS treads upon the necks of thoſe powers of darkneſs, he receives the willing ſervices of the angels of light. They that excel ¶ in ſtrength, and are active as flames of fire, even they fulfil his commandment, and hearken unto the voice of his words.——They graced the ſolemnity of his birth; they attended him, after his temptation in the

* John ii. 14. 15. &c. St Jerome looks upon this miracle, as one of the greateſt, which our SAVIOUR wrought. And indeed the circumſtances are very extraordinary.—That one man ſhould undertake ſo bold, and execute ſo hazardous a taſk;—one man, without a commiſſion from Cæſar; without any countenance from the Jewiſh rulers; without any arms, either to terrify the multitude or defend himſelf.—That he ſhould caſt out the whole tribe of mercenary traffickers; wreſt, from thoſe worſhippers of wealth, their darling idol; and trample under foot their great Diana—And all, without tumult or oppoſition; not one of the ſacrilegious rabble, daring to "move the hand, or open the "mouth, or peep."—Whoever reflects on the fierce and ungovernable nature of an incenſed populace; or conſiders the bitter and outrageous zeal of Demetrius and the craftſmen, on a leſs irritating occaſion; may poſſibly find himſelf almoſt, if not altogether, of the Latin father's opinion.

† John viii. 7. ‡ John xviii. 6. ‖ Prov. xxi. 1.

§ Mark ii. 14. He ſaid in the beginning, Let there be light: there was light: Let there be a firmament; 'twas ſpread abroad: Let there be a world: it aroſe of nothing.—In the days of his fleſh likewiſe, he ſpeaks, and it is done. His word is a work. He ſays to the diſciples, Follow me: they come:—to the leper, Be clean: he is cleanſed:—to the paralytic, Ariſe, take up thy bed, and walk: 'tis all performed, as ſoon as commanded.—Surely then we muſt confeſs, this is the voice of a GOD, not of a man! Τυφλω is our LORD's uſual word, when he grants a miraculous cure: which exactly correſponds with that admired and magnificent expreſſion of Gen. i. 3.

* John xi. 39. † Rev. i. 18. ‡ Luke xxiii. 43.

‖ Milton, deſcribing the power of the apoſtate angels, ſays,

——The leaſt of whom could wield
Theſe elements: and arm him with the force
Of all their regions. Book VI. 221.

§ Mark v. 9.

¶ Would any one ſee a ſketch of the glory and excellence of the angelic nature? Let him ſee it, in that inimitably fine ſtroke of the ſacred pencil: I ſaw another angel come down from heaven, having great power, and the earth was lightened with his glory, Rev. xviii. 1. The laſt clauſe is, I think, one of the moſt maſterly touches of deſcriptive painting, extant in hiſtory, poetry, or oratory. Milton gives us a ſtricture of the ſame kind, and on the ſame ſubject. But the poetic flight, though very ſublime, is abſolutely inferior to the apocalyptic viſion.

——On he led
His radiant files, dazzling the moon.

In this caſe, we have a whole brigade of celeſtial warriors; in the former, only a ſingle angelic being. Thoſe are repreſented, as irradiating the night, and outſhining the moon: this, as exceeding the brightneſs of the ſun; diffuſing additional ſplendors on the day; and illuminating, not a vaſt plain, not a vaſter kingdom, but the whole face of the globe.—If ſuch be the luſtre of the ſervant, what images can diſplay the majeſty of the LORD? who has thouſand thouſands of thoſe glorious attendants miniſtering unto him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtanding before him? Dan. vii. 10.

wilderneſs;

wilderneſs; they were the firſt joyful preachers of his triumphant reſurrection, and now he is ſeated on the right hand of the MAJESTY in the higheſt,

——They ſtand with wings outſpread,
Liſt'ning to catch their Maſter's leaſt command,
And fly through nature, 'ere the moment end.

Behold him, now, doing according to his will, in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth;---ſwaying the ſceptre over the legions of hell, and the powers of nature;----exerciſing dominion in the hearts of men, in the territories of the grave, and manſions of diſembodied ſpirits. Then let my Theron determine,---under ſuch views of our SAVIOUR's unequalled majeſty, and unbounded ſovereignty, let him determine,---whether it be ſafer to reſt our infinite and eternal intereſts on our own righteouſneſs, rather than on his.

We have ſelected ſome few manifeſtations of our REDEEMER's excellent greatneſs. Even the evangelical hiſtorians give us no larger a proportion of his aſtoniſhing deeds, than the firſt-fruits bear to a copious harveſt. Yet, were they all particularly enumerated, and circumſtantially diſplayed, they would appear inconſiderable, compared with thoſe far more diſtinguiſhed trophies of almighty power, which he has decreed, in ſome future period, to erect *.

He will gather to his ſacred fold, the people of his ancient church; though they are diſperſed into all lands, and moſt inveterately prejudiced againſt the truth of his goſpel.---How mighty was his hand, how illuſtriouſly outſtretched his arm, when he made a path through the ſurges of the ocean, drove the torrent of Jordan backwards, and fetched rivers of waters from the flinty rock! Far more mighty will be its operations, when he ſhall remove the ſeemingly-unſurmountable obſtructions to the general reſtoration of the Jews; ſhall throw all their religious apprehenſions into a new channel; and cauſe ſtreams of penitential ſorrow to ſtart from their ſtony eyes, confeſſions of unfeigned faith to iſſue from their blaſphemous lips.---Yet thus it will aſſuredly be. In the volume of the divine book it is written, They ſhall look on him, whom they have pierced, and mourn †. They ſhall adore as the MESSIAH, the once deſpiſed Galilean: and fix all their hopes of final felicity on that very PERSON, whom their fathers ſlew and hanged on a tree.

Amazing revolution in the religious world! Yet this, together with the deſtruction of Antichriſt, and the illumination of the benighted Gentiles, may paſs for ſmall incidents, compared with thoſe ſtupendous events, which will dignify, and ſignalize the cloſing ſcene of affairs.

Then ſhall the LORD JESUS be manifeſted in unſpeakable glory; and exert ſuch acts of omnipotence, as ſhall be the terror of hell, the joy of heaven, the wonder of eternity.---Then will he put an end to time, and bid the ſprings of nature ceaſe to operate. Then ſhall his tremendous trumpet rend the univerſal vault, and pierce the dormitories of the dead.---Then will he ſhake the earth out of its place *, and before his majeſtic preſence the heavens ſhall flee away †.---Then ſhall, not a nation only, but multitudes, multitudes of nations, be born in a day ‡; yea rather, in an hour, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.---All that are aſleep in the beds of death; even thoſe who, periſhing in tempeſts, are ſunk to the bottom of the ocean; or, ſwallowed up by earthquakes, are buried at the centre of the globe; all ſhall hear his voice; and hearing, ſhall awake; and awaking, ſhall come forth.---Every human body, though ages have revolved, ſince it gave up the ghoſt; though worms have devoured the fleſh, and diſſolution mouldered the bones; though its parts have been grinded by the teeth of beaſts, or conſumed by the rage of fire; diſſipated in viewleſs winds, or ſcattered over the boundleſs globe; loſt to our ſenſes, and loſt even to our imagination; yet will every human body then be reſtored; its limbs re-aſſembled, and not an atom wanting; its frame rebuilt, and never be demoliſhed more.

Then ſhall the unnumbered myriads of departed ſpirits return from their ſeparate abodes; and, commiſſioned by HIM who is the reſurrection and the life, reanimate each his organized ſyſtem.---Then ſhall Satan and his accomplices, thoſe execrable and horrid criminals, be dragged from their dungeons of darkneſs, and receive their doom at the REDEEMER's tribunal.---Then will miſery and happineſs, both conſummate, and both everlaſting, be awarded by the SAVIOUR's ſentence.---Then will he conſign over the

* Job ix. 6.

† How grand is the idea, when David prays! Bow thy heavens, O LORD, and come down; touch the mountains, and they ſhall ſmoke. —Much grander is the image, when he ſays, The ſprings of waters were ſeen, and the foundations of the world were diſcovered, at thy chiding, O LORD, at the blaſt of the breath of thy diſpleaſure.---Tranſcendently and inimitably grand is this deſcription, though given us by the moſt plain and artleſs writer in the world: I ſaw a great white throne, and HIM THAT SAT ON IT, from whoſe face the heavens and the earth fled away, and there was no place found for them, Rev. xx. 11.

In Virgil's admired repreſentation, Jupiter hurls his thunder, and a mountain falls at the ſtroke;

——Ille flagranti
Aut Atho, aut Rhodopen, aut alta Ceraunia telo
Dejicit. Georg. I. 331.

In Homer's more terror-ſtriking piece, Neptune ſhakes the wide-extended earth. The mountains tremble to their centre; the ocean heaves its billows; and cities reel on their foundations.

——Αὐταρ ἐπὶρδε Ποσειδαων ἐνοσιχθων
Γαιαν απειρεσιην, ὀρεων τ' αιπεινα καρηνα,
Πασαι δ' ἐσσεισθη πόδες πολυπιδακος Ἰδης
Και κορυφαι, Τρωων τε πολις, καὶ νηες Αχαιων.

Iliad. Υ. 57.

Here the SON of the eternal GOD appears only, and all nature is alarmed: nor heaven nor earth can keep their ſtanding; they flee away, like the frighted roe.—How grovelling are the loftieſt flights of the Grecian and Roman muſe, compared with this magnificence and elevation of the prophetic ſpirit!

Let us conſider the paſſage a little more attentively. Volet hæc ſub luce videri. Maſterly performances, the more cloſely they are examined, the more highly they charm.——It is not ſaid, a few herds of the foreſt, a few kings, or armies, or nations; but the whole ſyſtem of created things.—It is not ſaid, they were thrown into great commotions, but they fled entirely away; not, they ſtarted from their foundations, but they fell into diſſolution; not, they removed to a diſtant place, but there was found go place for them; they ceaſed to exiſt; they were no more.—And all this, not at the ſtrict command of the LORD JESUS; not at his awful menace, or before his fiery indignation; but at the bare preſence of his majeſty, ſitting with ſerene but adorable dignity on his throne.

If this is not the true ſublime, in its utmoſt ſcope, force, and beauty, I muſt confeſs, I never ſaw it, nor ever expect to ſee it.

‡ Iſ. lx. 8.

The dignity of our LORD, conſidered as the CREATOR PRESERVER of all things, is not mentioned here; becauſe ſomething of this kind is profeſſedly attempted, in the Deſcant upon Creation, ſubjoined to the firſt volume of Meditations among the Tombs, &c. To which I beg leave to refer my readers; and ſhall rather than make amends for the preſent omiſſion, by tranſcribing the paſſage from the Night-Thoughts: which preſents us with a magnificent diſplay of this great truth.

——THOU, by whom all worlds
Were made, and one redeem'd; whoſe regal power
On more than adamantine baſis fix'd;
O'er more, far more than diadems and thrones
Inviolably reigns; beneath whoſe foot,
And by the mandate of whoſe awful nod,
All regions, revolutions, fortunes, fates,
Of high, of low, of mind and matter, roll
Through the ſhort channels of expiring time,
Or ſhoreleſs ocean of eternity.

Night-Thoughts, No. IX.

† Zech. xii. 10.

ungodly

ungodly world, and the rebellious angels, to the flames of hell, and to agonies of deſpair. Then will he inveſt the righteous with the inheritance of heaven, and inſtate them in the fulneſs of joy. His word is fate; immutability ſeals, and eternity executes, whatever he decrees.

And has this JESUS, ſo glorious, ſo majeſtic, ſo adorable,—has HE vouchſafed to take our nature, and become our righteouſneſs? was HE made under the law? did HE fulfil all its demands? give perfect ſatisfaction to the penal, and yield perfect obedience to the preceptive? oh purpoſe, that the merit of all might be made over to us?——Aſtoniſhing condeſcenſion! ineffable grace! What thanks are due to ſuch infinitely rich goodneſs!—What a remedy is here, for the impotence and guilt of fallen man!—What a ſure foundation of hope, and what an abundant ſource of joy, to every one that believeth?

It is declared by the oracle of GOD, That ſuch an HIGH PRIEST became us, was abſolutely neceſſary for our obnoxious and ruined condition, who is holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparate from ſinners,—and made higher than the heavens *. It appears, I flatter myſelf, from the letter already in your hand, that CHRIST fully anſwered the former character; and from this epiſtle, I hope it will appear, that he is the very perſon deſcribed in the latter clauſe.

Eſtimate now, my dear friend, eſtimate if you can, the glory and excellency of this ſublime PERSON. Then may you learn how to ſtate the worth of his righteouſneſs, and the degree of affiance ſuited to his merits. Rather you will perceive, that his ſpotleſs birth, his perfectly-obedient life, his exquiſitely-bitter death, are a ſatisfaction of unknown dignity; precious †, far beyond all the graces of men, and all the duties of angels; able to ſave to the uttermoſt, all that rely on them, and come unto GOD through them.

Conſonant to this, are the ſentiments of that penetrating critic and profound ſcholar, Dr Lightfoot; who, treating of our SAVIOUR's obedience, ſays,—"Add to all "this the dignity of his perſon, who performed this obe- "dience; that he was GOD as well as man; and his "obedience is infinite; ſuch as in its validity ſubdued "Satan, and in its all-ſufficiency ſatisfied the juſtice of "GOD."——After which, our celebrated author makes this important and delightful improvement; "Think, "Chriſtian, what a ſtock of obedience and righteouſneſs "here is for thee, to anſwer and ſatisfy for thy diſobe- "dience and unrighteouſneſs, if thou become a child of "the covenant. Here is enough for every ſoul that "comes to him, be they never ſo many. Like the wi- "dow's oil in the book of Kings, there is enough and "enough again, as long as any veſſel is brought to re- "ceive it ‡."

We need not wonder, that Gentiles, who are ignorant of the REDEEMER; that Jews, who treat him with contemptuous ſcorn; that profeſſors of religion; who deny his eternal GODHEAD; place little, if any confidence in his righteouſneſs. But it is ſtrange, that Chriſtians, who know the SAVIOUR; who acknowledge his divinity; and believe him to be exalted above all bleſſing and praiſe;—it is exceedingly ſtrange, that they do not rejoice in him; make their boaſt of him; and ſay, with a becoming diſdain, of every other dependence, Get ye hence ‖!

Such an aſſemblage of divine perfections, muſt warrant, muſt demand, the moſt undivided, and the moſt unbounded confidence.——There never was, no, not in all ages, not in all worlds, any thing greater or richer, more dignified, or exalted, than the obedience of our LORD.——Nay, it is impoſſible to imagine, what could be ſo ſuited to our wants, ſo proper for our reliance, or ſo ſure to anſwer, more than anſwer all our expectations.

Remember what the apoſtle affirms, and you will not wonder at my aſſertion. In HIM dwelleth all the fulneſs of the GODHEAD bodily. How comprehenſive and exalted is this deſcription! It collects into a point all the rays of majeſty and honour. It expreſſes in a ſentence, I ſay not whatever this pen has written, but whatever of dignity and excellence the Bible itſelf contains,—the GODHEAD, the very nature and eſſence of the DEITY;—the fulneſs of the GODHEAD; unerring wiſdom, almighty power, and whatever the great JEHOVAH challenges as his own;—all the fulneſs; every adorable attribute, in the moſt ample meaſure, and in the higheſt degree;—all this dwells, not viſits occaſionally, but ſtatedly, invariably, eternally reſides;——dwells in CHRIST JESUS bodily, with an union inconceivably cloſe and intimate; inſomuch that the GODHEAD inhabiting, and the manhood inhabited, make but one and the ſame PERSON.

Therefore, adds the ſacred diſputant, Ye are complete in HIM *. Never was any concluſion more weighty in itſelf, or founded on more ſolid principles.——Ye are not only pardoned, but reconciled; and not only reconciled, but juſtified; nay, ye are,—and what can be ſaid or deſired more?—ye are COMPLETE. And not barely before men or angels, but before infinite purity and omniſcience itſelf. Ye are made (amazing and charming truth!) the righteouſneſs of GOD † in this wonderful SAVIOUR.——What a fountain is this, or rather what a ſea of fathomleſs depth, to obliterate all ſins, and ſupply all wants! What a mirrour of GOD's ſtupendous grace, and ever to be adored loving-kindneſs!

Here let our meditations fix, and here let all our expectations center. From this, not from any thing of our own, let us derive our peace, our joy, our ſupreme complacency.——Into this ſubject we can never dive too deeply. Of this ſubject we can never think too magnificently. The righteouſneſs of CHRIST is the master-pillar, on which our eternal welfare reſts. Nay, is the only ſupport, which preſerves us from ſinking into endleſs perdition.

There hangs all human hope; that nail ſupports
Our falling univerſe.

This renders his interceſſion prevalent. He is an advocate, a ſucceſsful advocate with the FATHER. Why? Becauſe he is JESUS CHRIST the righteous ‡.—From hence reſults his ability to juſtify. He ſhall juſtify many, ſaith the LORD JEHOVAH. On what conſideration? Becauſe he is my righteous ſervant ‖.—This, and no other, is the meritorious cauſe of our ſalvation. Judah ſhall be ſaved; ſhall eſcape damnation, and inherit glory. On what account? On account of the righteous BRANCH raiſed up unto David §.—Since then our acceptance, juſtification, and ſalvation; ſince our comfort in time, and our happineſs to eternity, all depend upon the righteouſneſs of CHRIST; how ſhould we delight in contemplating its faultleſs, its matchleſs, its tranſcendent excellence!——Grand! all-ſufficient! in every reſpect perfect!——Nothing equal to it, on earth, in heaven, throughout

* Heb. vii. 26.

† This is expreſſed by the ſacred hiſtorian, with an energy which no tranſlation can equal; τον τιμιον τε τετιμημενε ον ετιμησαντο απο υιων Ισραηλ. Matth. xxvii. 9.

‡ Lightfoot's works, vol. 2. p. 1258.

‖ Iſ. xxx. 22.

* Col. ii. 9, 10.

† 2 Cor. v. 21.

‡ 1 John ii. 1.

‖ Iſ. liii. 11.

§ Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. I believe, it will be needleſs to obſerve, that the ſalvation, mentioned in this and other paſſages of like import, is not limited to a temporal deliverance, but extends to a far more ſpiritual and eternal happineſs. The temporal is only a ſubordinate bleſſing; a kind of appendage to the other: ſomewhat like the halo round the globe of the moon, or that faint and ſecondary rainbow of colours, which frequently attends the glowing rainbow.

out the universe!—surpassing the enormity of our guilt! surpassing the reach of our imagination! surpassing all that we can express or conceive! being truly, properly, absolutely DIVINE!

And is this righteousness mine? is this righteousness yours, Theron? is this righteousness free for every sinner? Pleasing, captivating, rapturous thought!—Who can forbear exulting and triumphing, in this boundless, this infinite blessing? On such an occasion, methinks, some sallies of enthusiasm, or even some starts of tautology, are the language of sensibility, of proptiety, of nature. Sing, O ye heavens; for the LORD, the LORD himself, hath done it. Our justifying righteousness is finished; finished by JEHOVAH, sojourning in human clay. Shout ye lower parts of the earth: break forth into singing, ye mountains; O forest, and every tree therein. For the LORD hath most marvellously redeemed Jacob, and no less illustriously glorified himself in the recovery of Israel *.——O for the tongue of a seraph!—But even this would be defective; such ardour cold, and such energy languid.

I have done; I add no more; I leave it—to some future letter? to some more labour'd essay? No; but to the hymns of heaven, and the adorations of eternity, to supply the deficiency of my acknowledgments.——In the mean time, let me entreat my Theron to contemplate our LORD JESUS CHRIST, under that most illustrious character, described by the prophet, A PRIEST upon his THRONE †; dignifying the sacerdotal censer by the regal diadem; adding all the honours of his eternal divinity, to the sacrifice of his bleeding humanity.——Then, I promise myself, you will find it almost impossible, not to adopt the emphatical and ardent protestation of the apostle; GOD forbid, that I should glory, that I should confide, save only in the obedience and the cross of CHRIST JESUS my LORD!

* Is. xliv. 23. † Zech. iv. 13.

When you made the tour of France and Italy; and, crossing the Alps, gained the summit of some commanding ridge;—when you looked round, with astonishment and delight, on the ample plains, which, crouded with cities, and adorned with palaces, stretch their beauteous tracts below; when you surveyed the famous rivers, that roll in silent but shining dignity; stating the boundaries of kingdoms, and wafting plenty through the gladdened nations; when you shot your transported view to the ocean; whose unmeasurable flood meets the arch of heaven, and terminates the landscape with inconceivable grandeur;—did you, then, chuse to forego the pleasure resulting from such a prospect, in order to gaze upon the naked crag of some adjacent rock? or, could you turn your eyes from those magnificent objects, and fasten them with pleased attention upon a shallow puddle, that lay stagnating at your feet?

You, who have beheld the scene, can accommodate the simile, with peculiar advantage. For which reason, I shall wave the application; and only beg leave to transcribe a wish, that is now warm on my heart, and is often breathed in supplication from my lips:—May the FATHER of our spirits, and the Fountain of wisdom, give us an enlightened understanding, to KNOW him that is true; grant us the inestimable blessing, that we may BE IN him that is true, even in his SON JESUS CHRIST. For this SAVIOUR is the true GOD, and that privilege is life eternal *.

My Theron needs no argument to convince him, that such a prayer is an act of rational and real friendship; is the most genuine and substantial proof, that I am

His truly affectionate,

ASPASIO.

* 1 John v. 20.

LETTER IX.

THERON to ASPASIO.

Dear ASPASIO,

YOUR two letters have reached my hand; and I hope they have not missed my heart. I might inform you, what pleasure they gave me, and how highly I esteem them. But you desire no such compliments: you desire to see me impressed with the sentiments, and living under their influence. This would be the most acceptable acknowledgment to my Aspasio, because it would be the most happy effect to his Theron. May every day, therefore, bring a fresh accession of such gratitude to me, and of such satisfaction to you.

To watch for my soul, and pray for my salvation, I am thoroughly convinced, is the truest instance of rational and exalted friendship. Every claim to that amiable character is defective and vain, if it does not extend to our spiritual interests, and our everlasting welfare. For which reason, I need not entreat you to continue and perpetuate this best expression of social kindness. Or if I do, it is rather to testify how much I prize the favour, than to prompt your affectionate and ready mind.

Your last found me at a friend's house, which lies pretty near the western ocean.—Yesterday waked by the lark, and rising with the dawn *, I strolled into the fragrant air, and dewy fields; while, as Shakespear, with his usual sprightliness, expresses himself,

——————Jocund day
Stood tip-toe on the misty mountain's top.

Sweet was the breath of morn, and sweet the exhalations of the freshened flowers;—grateful were the soft-salutes of the cooling zephyrs, attended with the charm of earliest birds;—delightful the sun, painting with his orient beams the chambers of the firmament, and unveiling the face of universal nature.

My mind, but little affected with these inferior entertainments, was engaged in contemplating an object of infinitely-superior dignity; in contemplating that adorable BEING, who raised—from nothing raised this stupendous system of things; and supports—with his word supports the magnificent frame; who, (to speak in the language of his own SPIRIT) openeth the eyelids of the morning, and commandeth the day-spring to know its place *; commandeth the light, by its punctual and pleasing ministrations, to draw aside the curtain of darkness, and discover the skies shining with glories, and disclose the earth, blooming with beauties.

* Evandrum ex humili tecto lux suscitat alma,
Et matutini volucrum sub culmine cantus. VIRG.

Lux alma——A lovely expression! describing the mildness, the beauty, and the chearing efficacy of the rising sun. It is, I think, incapable of an equal translation; but reminds me of a very fine comparison in our sacred eclogues, which represents the charming appearance, and the benign influence of the gospel-church, at its first opening on the Gentile world,—Who is this that looketh forth as the morning? Cant. vi. 10.

* Job xxxviii. 12.

FATHER of light and life, ſaid my tranſported mind,

——Thou GOOD SUPREME!
O teach me what is good! teach me THYSELF.
Save me from folly, vanity, and vice,
From every low purſuit! and feed my ſoul
With faith, with conſcious peace, and virtue pure,
Sacred, ſubſtantial, never-fading bliſs *.

Wrapt in wonder, and loſt in thought, I rambled careleſsly along, till I was inſenſibly brought to the ſhore: which, in theſe parts, is prodigiouſly high and ſtrong; perfectly well fitted, to ſtand as an everlaſting barrier †, againſt the impetuous ſtroke of conflicting winds, and the ponderous ſweep of daſhing ſurges.——Not that the omnipotent ENGINEER has any need of theſe impregnable ramparts. Here, it is true, they intervene; and not only repaſs the rolling invader, but ſpeak the amazing majeſty of their MAKER. In other places, all ſuch laboured methods of fortification are laid aſide. The CREATOR ſhews the aſtoniſhed world, that he is confined to no expedients; but orders all things according to the pleaſure of his own will. He bids a low bank of deſpicable ſand, receive and repel the moſt furious ſhocks of aſſaulting ſeas: and, though the waves thereof toſs themſelves with incredible fierceneſs, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, and ſeem to menace univerſal deſtruction, yet can they not paſs over ‡ this ſlighteſt of mounds.

A winding paſſage broke the declivity of the deſcent; and led me, by a gradual ſlope, to the bottom.—The moon being in her laſt quarter, and the tide at its greateſt receſs, I walked for a while, where briny waves were wont to flow.—The ebbing waters had left a vacant ſpace, ſeveral furlongs broad; equal in length, to a very extended viſta; ſmooth on its ſurface, as the moſt level bowling green; and almoſt as firm, as the beſt compacted cauſey. Inſomuch, that the tread of a horſe ſcarce impreſſes it, and the waters of the ſea never penetrate it. Excluſive of this wiſe contrivance, the ſearching waves would inſinuate themſelves into the heart of the earth; the earth itſelf would be hollow as an honeycomb, or bibulous as a ſponge; and the ſea, ſoaking by degrees through all its cavities, would, in proceſs of time, forſake its bed, and mingle with the plains and mountains. But this cloſely-cemented or glutinous kind of pavement, is like claying the bottom of the univerſal canal. So that the returning tides conſolidate, rather than perforate its ſubſtance, and prevent the ſun from cleaving it with chinks.——Such, I hope, will be the caſe with this ſoul of mine, and the temptations that beſet me. Beſet me they do, they will. But may they never win upon my affections, nor gain admittance into my heart! Let them make me humble, and keep me vigilant; teach me to walk cloſely with my GOD, and urge me to an inceſſant dependance on CHRIST. Then, inſtead of being ruinous, they may become advantageous; and inſtead of ſhattering, will only cleanſe the rock, on which they daſh.

The mighty waters, reſtleſs, even in their utmoſt tranquillity, with a ſolemn ‖ but placid murmur, ſtruck my ear. The billows, ſometimes advancing to kiſs the ſand, ſometimes drawing back their curly heads into the deep, whitened, at their extremities, into an agreeable foam; which, with the reflexive repreſentation of the azure canopy, formed the appearance of a moſt ſpacious floating mantle, tinged with a beautiful blue, and edged with fringes of ſilver.—Dignity and elegance, I find, are the inſeparable characteriſtics of the CREATOR's workmanſhip. As comfort and happineſs, I ſometimes perceive, are the very ſpirit of his goſpel, and the genuine produce of his commands.

On one ſide, the Atlantic main rolled its ſurges from world to world.——Immenſe, immenſe diffuſion of waters! What a ſpectacle of magnificence and terror! What an irreſiſtible incitement to reverence and awe! How it fills the mind, and amazes the imagination! 'Tis the grandeſt and moſt auguſt object under the whole heavens.—It reminds me of that apocalyptic viſion, which John, the enraptured ſeer, beheld! As it were a great mountain burning with fire, was caſt into the ſea, and the third part of the ſea became blood; and the third part of the creatures which were in the ſea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ſhips were deſtroyed *. I have not penetration enough to diſcover the ſpiritual meaning of this paſſage; but I diſcern a moſt dreadful grandeur in its plain and literal ſenſe. If we conſider the wonderful compaſs, and the terrible force of ſuch an enormous maſs of fire; if we conſider its horrible and deſtructive effects, on ſuch a vaſt body of waters, as the third part of the ocean; how tremendous and aſtoniſhing is the idea! Surely, nothing but divine inſpiration could ſuggeſt theſe images; as none but an almighty BEING can execute this vengeance. Who would not fear an eternal KING, that has ſuch weapons, and ſuch artillery, reſerved againſt the day of battle and war †?

Spacious as the ſea is, GOD has provided a garment to cover it. Profound as the ſea is, GOD has prepared ſwaddling-bands to inwrap it. Ungovernable as it may ſeem to us, he over-rules it with as much eaſe, as the nurſe manages a new-born infant ‡. An infant it is before almighty power; and to an infant it is compared by JEHOVAH himſelf; though, to our apprehenſion, it raves like a ſtupendous madman.——But if he command, it opens a peaceful bottom, and receives his people. It ſmooths the way for their paſſage, and ſtands as a bulwark for their defence. They march through the midſt of the ſea upon dry ground, and the waters are a wall unto them on their right hand and on their left ‖. If he reverſes his mandate, they drive down, with an irreſiſtable ſweep, upon the hoſts of Pharaoh, and overwhelm the chariots and horſes of Egypt. They pour confuſion upon Arrogance §, and diſappoint the deſigns of Perſecution and Cruelty.——If he ſays, Be ſtill; the bellowing ſurges are huſhed, and the gentleſt lamb is not ſo quiet. If he ſays, Deſtroy; even the quieſcent waters kindle into rage; they riſe in their MAKER's cauſe; and ten thouſand lions,

* THOMSON's Winter.

† Theſe doubtleſs, are "the doors and the bars," which the ALMIGHTY mentions in the courſe of his awful interrogatories to Job; the maſſy doors, which can never be forced; the ſolid bars, which can never be broke; and I may add, the conſpicuous columns on which his Providence has inſcribed that ſovereign mandate, Ne plus ultra. Or, as the prohibition runs in his own majeſtic words, Hitherto ſhalt thou go, but no farther, Job xxxviii. 10.

‡ Jer. v. 22.

‖ This is deſcribed with inimitable propriety by HOMER;

Βη δ' αυτων παρα νηας πολυφλοισβοιο θαλασσης.

And only not quite ſo beautifully by MILTON;

——He ſaid; and as the ſound of waters deep
Hoarſe murmur echo'd to his words applauſe.

* Rev. viii. 8. 9. † Job xxxviii. 23.

‡ Job xxxviii. 8. 9. ‖ Exod. xiv. 22.

§ Arrogance—This is deſcribed with exquiſite delicacy, in the Επινικιον or triumphant ſong of Moſes. The enemy ſaid, I will purſue; I will overtake; I will divide the ſpoil; my luſt ſhall be ſatisfied upon them; I will draw my ſword, mine hand ſhall deſtroy them.——What ſwelling words of vanity are here! The very ſpirit of a Thraſo breathes in every ſyllable of this beautiful proſopopœia. Never was the language of Bluſter, Ferocity, and Rhodomontade, ſo finely mimicked.——How noble is the turn, and how exalted the ſentiment, which follows! THOU didſt blow with thy wind; the ſea covered them; they ſank as lead in the mighty waters. The GOD of Iſrael need not ſummon all his power, or level the right-aiming thunderbolts; he only blows with his wind, and the great mountain breaks like a bubble. All this inſolent and formidable parade is quaſhed; ſinks into nothing; expires in ſhame and ruin. Exod. xv. 9. 10.

ſtung

ſting with hunger, and ruſhing upon their prey, are not ſo fierce. When he bids them execute any other commiſſion, the horſe broke to the bit, the ſpaniel diſciplined to the ſignal, are not half ſo dutiful and obſequious.——And ſhall our paſſions be more wild than the winds, more turbulent than the billows? Forbid it, almighty LORD! Thou that ruleſt the raging of the ſea; and the noiſe of his waves, reſtrain, ſubdue, and calm the madneſs of the people.

The eye travels hard. It wanders over a vaſt, vaſt length of fluctuating plains *. It reaches the limits of the hemiſphere, where ſkies and waves ſeem to mingle. Yet it has ſcarce made an entry upon the world of waters. What I here diſcern, is no more than the ſkirts of the great and wide ſea. Tracts incomparably broader are ſtill behind; and tracts of unbounded extent are behind even thoſe.——Great then, O my ſoul, inconceivably great, is that adored and glorious SOVEREIGN, who ſitteth upon this flood as upon a throne †; nay, who holds it, diffuſed as it is from pole to pole, in the hollow of his hand; and before whom, in all its prodigious dimenſions, it is but as the drop of a bucket.—— How ſhall reptiles of the ground ſink low enough in their own apprehenſions! What humiliation can be ſufficiently deep for ſinful mortals, before this "high and "holy ONE!" Yet how may they riſe on the wings of hope! how may they ſoar on the pinions of faith! when, in the language of his prophet, and in his own SON's name, they thus addreſs the everlaſting GOD. Awake! awake! put on ſtrength, O arm of the LORD! awake, for our ſuccour and ſecurity, as in the ancient days, in the generations of old. Art thou not it, that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the dragon? Art thou not it, which hath dried the ſea, the waters of the great deep? that hath made the depths of the ſea, a way for the ranſomed to paſs over ‡?

How grand, ſurpriſingly grand and majeſtic, are the works, as well as the attributes of an omnipotent BEING! What are all the canals in all the countries of the earth, compared with this immenſe reſervatory! What are all the ſuperb edifices, erected by royal munificence, compared with yonder concave of the ſkies! And what are the moſt pompous illuminations of theatres and triumphant cities, compared with the reſplendent ſource of day! They are a ſpark, an atom, a drop.——Nay, in every ſpark, and atom, and drop, which proceeds from the hand of the ALMIGHTY, there is the manifeſtation of a wiſdom and a power abſolutely incomprehenſible.

Let us examine a ſingle drop of water, the very leaſt quantity that the eye can diſcern; only ſo much, as will juſt adhere to the point of a needle. In this almoſt imperceptible ſpeck, a famous philoſopher computes no leſs than thirteen thouſand globules. Amazing to conceive! impoſſible to explicate!——If then in ſo ſmall a ſpeck abundantly more than ten thouſand globules exiſt, what myriads of myriads muſt float in the unmeaſured extent of the ocean!—Let the ableſt arithmetician try to comprehend in his mind, not the internal conſtitution, but only the number of theſe fluid particles. As well may he graſp the winds in his fiſt, or mete out the univerſe with his ſpan, as execute the taſk.—If then we are utterly unable to number (which is the moſt ſuperficial of all reſearches) even the moſt common works of the great JEHOVAH; how can we pretend to lay open the ſecrets, and penetrate the receſſes of his infinite mind! How can we pretend to inveſtigate the whole proceſs, and ſolve all the difficulties, of that higheſt and deepeſt of the divine ſchemes, REDEMPTION!

I have ſometimes been offended, I muſt confeſs, when you have enlarged upon the myſterious truths of Chriſtianity. But I perceive, the beam was in my own eye, when I fancied the mote was in my friend's. Is there, in every ray of light, and in every particle of matter, a depth of contrivance unfathomable by the line of any human underſtanding? And ſhall there be nothing abſtruſe or profound, nothing but what is level to our ſcanty apprehenſions, in the great * things of GOD's law, and the glorious † things of his goſpel? To expect this, is juſt as wiſe in itſelf, and juſt as congruous to nature, as to expect—a ſea, whoſe cavities might have been digged by our ſpade;—a ſky, whoſe arches are meaſurable by our compaſs;—a ſun, whoſe orb may be included in in our lanterns.

When therefore I read of ONE uncreated and eternal BEING, ſubſiſting in THREE divine PERSONS; when I hear of an infinitely pure and perfect GOD, made fleſh for the redemption of ſinful men; when I meditate on the righteous and univerſal JUDGE, reconciling the world unto himſelf, by the death of his own SON;—when a thouſand curious and inquiſitive thoughts are ready to ariſe on the occaſion; I will bid them firſt ſound the depths of a ſingle drop, and then apply their plummet to the boundleſs ocean. This, I am very ſure, is not weak credulity, nor wild enthuſiaſm; but the matureſt dictate of reaſon, and the very preciſion of truth.—Let then the great CREATOR make that ſublime declaration; As the heavens are higher than the earth, ſo are my ways than your ways; and my thoughts than your thoughts ‡. Let every human creature add that humble acknowledgment; O the depths of the riches, both of the wiſdom and knowledge of GOD! How unſearchable are his judgments, and his ways paſt finding out ‖! and not devotion only, but reaſon and truth, will ſay Amen to both.

You ſee, Aſpaſio, how I am trying to adopt your ſpirit. You will obſerve the willing ſcholar, though not the great proficient.——But ſtay! Is this right? to divert from ſuch commanding ſubjects, and take notice of mere punctilios?——My friend may ſpare his frowns. I am ſurpriſed and angry at myſelf. Away with the little arts of ſelf-recommendation. Self ſhould be forgot, ſhould be ſwallowed up and loſt in devout aſtoniſhment, when we are viewing the magnificence, and meditating on the wonders of creation.

Behind me, and far off to the north, Cambria's duſky coaſts juſt, and but juſt, emerged. Loſt were all her woods and mountains. Inſtead of ornamented towns, and cultivated plains, a confuſed miſt, or a low-hung cloud, ſeemed to hover on the ocean's remoteſt brim.—— Behind me! Remembrance is rouſed at the expreſſion, and conſcience ſharpens her ſting. Ah! how often and how long, have I treated in this very manner, the nobleſt ſcenes, and the ſublimeſt joys! have turned my back—ungrateful and beſotted creature!—upon the heavenly country, and wandered from the regions of infinite delight! Therefore now they appear dim. I have ſcarcely a glimpſe of their tranſcendent excellencies. Or if I ſee them by faith, it is with frequent interminſions, and much obſcurity.—Turn me, O thou GOD of my ſalvation, turn me from purſuing phantoms, and attach me to thy bleſſed ſelf. Let me henceforth ſteer an invariable courſe to EMMANUEL's kingdom. May its treaſures, as I advance, open to my view, and its glories brighten in my eye. O! may ſome odours, better, far better, than Sabæan ſpicy odours §, exhale from the delectable hills, and the celeſtial ſhores!——But

* ——Campoſque natantes. LUCRET.

† Pſal. xxix. 10. ‡ Iſ. li. 9, 10.

* הרי ורותי Hoſ. viii. 12.

† Τα μεγαλεια τε Θεε Acts ii. 11.

‡ Iſ. lv. 9. ‖ Rom. xi. 33.

§ Alluding to thoſe lines in MILTON.

——As when to them who ſail
Beyond the Cape of Hope, and now are paſt
Moſambic, off at ſea north-eaſt winds blow
Sabæan odour, from the ſpicy ſhore chiefly,

chiefly, thou eternal SPIRIT, breathe upon my ſoul, both by thy convincing and comforting influences! nor ever ceaſe to ſwell my ſails, and ſpeed my progreſs, till I arrive at the land, that is very far off; and ſee the KING, the KING of grace and of glory, in all his ineffable beauty.*

On my left hand, a range of mountainous cliffs roſe in a perpendicular direction. The huge pile extended, as far as the ſight could diſcern, its black boundaries. Here bending inwards to the land; there bellying out into the deep; every where projecting a ſhade, ſeveral leagues acroſs the ocean.

The height of theſe cliffs ſo prodigious, that every human creature who comes near the ſummit, ſtarts back terrified and aghaſt. Only a few ſtraggling goats venture to graze on the top: and theſe, to a perſon walking below, appear but as ſpecks of moving white. While the ſea-mews, that winnow the air about the middle ſteep, look like winged animalcules, purſuing their little ſports in a different region.—The aſpect of theſe cliffs ſo wild and horrid, it is impoſſible to behold them without a ſhivering dread. The ſpectator is apt to imagine, that nature had formerly ſuffered ſome violent convulſions, or been ſhattered by the flaming bolts, and that theſe are the diſmembered remains of the dreadful ſtroke; the ruins, not of Perſepolis or Palmyra, but of the world!

Amazing! What adventurous daring creature is yonder, gathering ſampbire from the cavities of the rocks! He has let himſelf down ſeveral fathoms beneath the black and dizzy ſummit.—He gleans a poor livelihood, from the edges of danger, ſhall I ſay? rather, from the jaws of death. I cannot diſcern the rope to which he clings. He ſeems to be ſuſpended over the tremendous precipice, by a thread, by a hair, by nothing.—I'll look no longer. The very ſight chills my veins. While I view his perilous elevation, I can think of nothing but a headlong downfall, and fractured bones; of brains left to reek on the pointed crags, and blood ſtreaming on the diſcoloured beach.

Suppoſe (if the mind can bear ſo ſhocking a ſuppoſition) ſome poor wretch, expoſed on the brow of this ſtupendous promontory; without any ſupport for his feet; and clinging only to a weak ſlender ſhrub, which but juſt adheres to the interſtices of the rock. What tumultuous throbbings ſeize his breaſt? what a dying paleneſs invades his cheeks? and what agonies of fear rend his heart? as he hangs, projecting over the ragged precipice; and ſurveys the ocean deep, wondrous deep below!——The bough gives way. His only hope fails. It yields more and more to his weight. Good heavens! he ſinks! he ſinks! O! for ſome friendly hand, to ſnatch him from periſhing! Millions, millions of gold, were the cheap purchaſe of ſuch a mercy.——There was a time, my ſoul, when thou waſt in a ſituation, equally ſhall I ſay? infinitely more dangerous; tottering, not only on the verge of life, but on the very brink of hell. Remember that compaſſionate arm, which was ſtretched out, in the very article of need, to reſcue thee from imminent and everlaſting perdition. Never forget that gracious voice, which ſaid,—in accents ſweeter than the muſic of the ſeraphic choir,—"Deliver him from going "down into the pit. Let his health be reſtored, and his "day of grace be prolonged."

In ſome places, the hideous ruins not only tower to the ſkies, but lean over the ſtrand. Prominent and frightfully pendulous, they nod horror, and threaten deſtruction on all below. A perſon congratulates himſelf, when he has got clear of the bending precipice; and can hardly forbear thinking, that the enormous load is withheld by ſome unſeen hand, till the execrable wretch, doomed to a moſt aſtoniſhing vengeance, is come within reach of the blow. And truly, if he had the ſtrength of the elephant, or the firmneſs of the behemoth, this muſt grind him to powder, or even cruſh him into atoms.

How awful to conſider, that there is a day coming, when wicked potentates, and haughty monarchs, will beg of yonder ſeas, to yawn compaſſionately deep, and hide them in their darkeſt abyſſes; hide them from the piercing eye, and avenging ſword, of inflexible juſtice!——That there is a day coming, when the ſoft voluptuary, the wanton beauty, and all the ungodly of the earth, will beſeech thoſe tremendous ridges, with all their unſupportable burden of craggy rocks, to ruſh down upon their guilty heads*; if, by this means, they may be ſcreened from the infinitely more dreaded weight of divine indignation.

Vain are their cries; and vainer ſtill would be their refuge, ſhould their paſſionate requeſts be granted. Can floods conceal the impious wretches, when the caverns of the ocean ſhall be laid bare, and the foundations of the world be diſcovered? Can rocks ſecrete an obnoxious rebel, when rocks, with all their marble quarries, and adamantine entrails, ſhall diſſolve like melting wax? when hills, that plunge their roots to the centre, and loſe their towering heads in air, ſhall ſtart from their affrighted baſe †, and flee away, like a withered leaf!——Good GOD ‡! what racking anguiſh muſt they feel! what inexpreſſibly-ſeverer torment muſt they fear! who can implore, ardently implore as a moſt deſirable favour, what imagination itſelf ſhudders to conceive.

In ſome places, theſe mountainous declivities lift their brow aloft; plant their baſis deep; and, inſtead of portending a fall, defy the fury of the moſt impetuous elements. Firmly conſolidated, and ſtedfaſtly

Of Araby the Bleſs'd, and many a league
Chear'd with the grateful ſmell old ocean ſmiles.

Book IV. 159.

* Iſ. xxxiii. 17.

* Rev. iv. 15, 16.

† This brings to our remembrance a moſt ſublime deſcription of the divine POWER, which ariſes in a beautiful climax, and terminates in this grand idea. The voice of the LORD is mighty in operation, the voice of the LORD is a glorious voice. The voice of the LORD breaketh the cedars; yea the LORD breaketh the cedars of Lebanon. He maketh them alſo to ſkip like a calf; Lebanon and Sirion like a young unicorn. Pſal. xxix. 4, 5, 6.

The voice of the LORD is mighty in operation. This is the general propoſition; which, in the following ſentences, we ſee moſt magnificently illuſtrated.—The voice of the LORD breaketh the cedars: when he ſpeaks in thunder, and bids the lightning execute his orders, the trees, the cedar-trees, thoſe ſturdieſt productions of the earth, are ſhivered to pieces.—Yea, the LORD breaketh the cedars of Lebanon; which, for ſtateline's and ſtrength, ſurpaſs the oaks of the foreſt, ſurpaſs every tree of the field, almoſt as much as the oak exceeds a ſhrub.—It is a ſmall thing with JEHOVAH, to rend the trunks, to tear up the roots, and make thoſe maſſy bodies ſkip like a calf; even Lebanon and Sirion, the mountains on which they grow, tremble before their GOD. They are thrown into ſtrange commotions; they are ready to ſpring from their foundations; and, with all their load of woods and rocks, appear like ſome affrighted or ſome ſportive animal, that ſtarts with horror, or leaps with exultation.

‡ Good GOD!—This exclamation is introduced on a very ſerious occaſion, and uſed with an apparent air of reverence. Under which circumſtances, perhaps, it may be ſometimes allowable, and not diſhonourable to the divine MAJESTY. But, when it is admitted into ordinary converſation, on trifling occurrences, and with a levity of temper; it is itſelf a very great offence, and diſcovers a very irreligious ſpirit.—It is ſo great an offence, that the GOD of heaven and earth declares himſelf the avenger of all ſuch tranſgreſſors. He will not hold them guiltleſs, or he will aſſuredly puniſh them. And if GOD condemn, who ſhall acquit? If HE will puniſh, who can deliver from his hand?—It diſcovers a very irreligious ſpirit; is a moſt dangerous ſymptom; ſomewhat like a plague-ſpot on the converſation. It ſhews, that there is no ſaving health, no life of GOD in the ſoul. Was there any ſenſibility in the conſcience, any grace in the heart, it would be impoſſible to treat ſo wantonly and ſo preſumptuouſly, that glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD, Deut. xxviii. 58.

eſtabliſh-

eſtabliſhed, they have withſtood the united, the repeated aſſaults of winds and waves, through a long ſeries of revolving ages.—The ſacred writers, I obſerve, ſelect almoſt all the ſtriking images which the whole creation affords; in order to communicate their heavenly ideas, with the greateſt advantage. Iſaiah, deſcribing the ſecurity of the righteous, takes his compariſon from the grand ſpectacle before my eye: He ſhall dwell on high; his place of defence ſhall be the munitions of rocks *; inacceſſible as thoſe lofty ridges, immoveable as their everlaſting foundations.

Should it be aſked, what theſe munitions of rocks may ſignify?——I find two places of refuge and ſafeguard pointed out in ſcripture; to either of which, I believe, the metaphor is applicable. He had horns, ſays one of the divine Pindarics, coming out of his hand; there was the hiding of his power †. Uncontrollable and omnipotent power was lodged in the great JEHOVAH's hand; and this was the ſure defence, this the impregnable garriſon, for all his people.——The church of CHRIST is ſaid to be in the clefts of the Rock ‡: that ſpiritual Rock, of which the Iſraelites drank in the wilderneſs; whoſe ſacred clefts were opened, when the bloody ſpear tore up the REDEEMER's ſide, and cut a wide and deadly paſſage to his heart. Surely, the inhabitants of this Rock have reaſon to ſing ‖. What ſhould diſquiet them! Who can deſtroy them? Why ſhould not the voice of joy be in your dwellings, and that hymn of holy triumph in their mouths? We have a ſtrong city. Salvation hath GOD appointed, ſalvation itſelf, for walls and bulwarks §.——Happy ſhould I think myſelf, if I was intereſted in this SAVIOUR, and eſtabliſhed on this Rock.

Yonder, on the ſummit of the moſt conſpicuous cliff, is erected a grand and ſtately pile. At the top, my glaſs diſcovers a ſuperb lantern; at the foot, are the huts of fiſhermen, ſurrounded with various ſorts of nets.——It is, I ſuppoſe, a light-houſe: intended to appriſe the ſailor of devouring gulfs, and deſtructive ſhoals; or elſe to conduct him into a ſafe road, and ſecure harbour.

Both the ſituation and deſign of the building read me a leſſon; the one of awful admonition, the other of comfortable inſtruction.——Comfortable inſtruction. How maſſy and ponderous is the edifice! yet there is not the leaſt reaſon to be apprehenſive of a failure in the foundation. Was the ſtructure ten thouſand times larger, the ſolid rock would ſupport it, with the utmoſt eaſe and the utmoſt ſteadineſs. Such is CHRIST, ſuch are his merits, ſuch his glorious righteouſneſs, to thoſe wiſe and bleſſed ſouls, who reſt all the weight of their everlaſting intereſts on him alone. Such, did I ſay? Much ſurer. For the mountains may depart, and the hills may be removed *; but this divine baſis can never ſink, can never be ſhaken.—Awful admonition. For it recalls to my memory that alarming yet welcome text †, which you ſtyled the ſpiritual light-houſe: which has been as ſerviceable to my diſtreſſed mind and bewildered thoughts, as ſuch an illuminated watch-tower to the wandering and benighted mariner. May I often view it! ever attend to its faithful direction; and be led, by its influences, into the haven, the deſired haven of peace and ſalvation!

Let me once again ſurvey thoſe vaſt but noble deformities; thoſe rude but majeſtic elevations of ſtone.——Fortifications, reared by an almighty hand, to protect us at once from warring elements, and invading enemies. ——Ramparts, which overlook and command the ocean; which, viewed by diſtant mariners, ſeem to touch and prop the ſky; which have ſurrounded our iſle ever ſince the univerſal deluge, and will be her never-failing defence even to the general conflagration.——If ſome opinionated engineer ſhould take it into his head, to ſuſpect the ſtability of theſe unſhaken and everlaſting bulwarks; if he ſhould make propoſals for ſtrengthening them with buttreſſes, or girding them round with cramping-irons! how would his project be received? with approbation and applauſe? or with contempt and indignation? "Fool that he is! to think of enlarging, corroborating, "or improving the finiſhed and magnificent works of na"ture, by the puny piddlings of art!"—Such, ſo fooliſh and prepoſterous was my once favourite conceit, of adding my own performances, in order to increaſe the juſtifying efficacy of CHRIST's obedience. What a diſparagement was this to the great, the divine foundation! which, for the ſupport and ſecurity of burdened and endangered ſinners, is ſufficient,—is ſelf-ſufficient,—is all-ſufficient.

How changeable is the face of this liquid element! Not long ago, there was nothing, from this ſtony boundary, to the horizon's utmoſt verge, but the wildeſt tumult and moſt horrible confuſion. Now the ſtormy flood has ſmoothed its rugged brow, and the watery uproar is lulled into a profound tranquillity. Where rolling mountains ruſhed and raged, threatening to daſh the clouds, and deluge the earth; there the gentleſt undulations play, and only juſt wrinkle the ſurface of the mighty baſon. Where the dreadful abyſs opened its wide and unfathomable jaws, to ſwallow up the trembling ſailor, and his ſhattered veſſel; there a calm and clear expanſe diffuſes its ample boſom, alluring the fiſh to baſk in the ſun, and inviting the ſea-fowl to watch for their prey.

In this fair floating mirror, I ſee the picture of every cloud, which paſſes through the regions of the ſky. But in its uncertain and treacherous temperature, I ſee more plainly the inconſtant and ever-variable condition of human affairs.——I durſt not be ſurety to the mariner, for peaceful ſeas and ſoothing gales. I could not aſcertain the continuance of this halcyon weather, ſo much as a ſingle day, or even to the next hour. And let me not fondly promiſe myſelf an uninterrupted tenor of ſerenity in my mind, or of proſperity in my circumſtances.——Sometimes, indeed, my heart exults under the ſmile of heaven, and the favour of GOD.

* Iſ. xxxiii. 16.

† Hab. iii. 4. Horns were an emblem of ſtrength. A horn of ſalvation is put for a mighty and effectual ſalvation, Luke ii. 69. Thou haſt heard me from among the horns of the unicorns: thou haſt reſcued me from the moſt potent and formidable enemies, Pſal. xxii. 21. Here the word ſeems to denote that power of JEHOVAH, to which nothing is impoſſible; and more than ſeems, if we conſult the next clauſe.—There was the hiding of his power; or, as it may be rendered, his powerful hiding, a moſt ſecure refuge, a ſanctuary abſolutely inviolable. I have accommodated this paſſage to a different ſenſe, Meditat. above p. 43. But the true ſignification, moſt ſuitable to the context, and moſt ſubſervient to the prophet's deſign, is, I apprehend, given by Theron. It is ſomewhat like an exalted ſentiment in the Night Thoughts; which, with a ſmall alteration, may ſerve as a paraphraſe on the text:

And nature's ſhield the hollow of his hand.
A Chriſtian's ſhield the hollow of his hand.

‡ Cant. ii. 14. Should the reader have an inclination to ſee this ſacred, but myſterious book explained, I would refer him to Dr GILL's Expoſition of the Canticles: which has ſuch a copious vein of ſanctified invention running through it, and is interſperſed with ſuch a variety of delicate and brilliant images, as cannot but highly entertain a curious mind: which preſents us with ſuch rich and charming diſplays of the glory of CHRIST's perſon, the freeneſs of his grace to ſinners, and the tenderneſs of his love to the church, as cannot but adminiſter the moſt exquiſite delight to the believing ſoul.——Conſidered in both theſe reſpects, I think, the work reſembles the paradiſiacal garden, deſcribed by MILTON; in which

Bloſſoms and fruits at once of golden hue
Appear'd, with gay enamell'd colours mix'd.

‖ Ii. xlii. 11. § Iſ. xxvi. 1.

* Iſ. liv. 10.

† See Rom. ix. 30. 31. 32. and above, Letter V.

But ſoon; ah! too ſoon I am clouded with fear, and oppreſſed with corruption. I ſigh out that paſſionate acknowledgment, Wretched man that I am! and add that wiſhfull inquiry, Who ſhall deliver me?—For this diſordered ſtate of things, the afflicted patriarch's complaint, is the moſt appoſite motto, and the moſt wholeſome memento; Changes and war are around me *.——But there is a world, where diſaſtrous revolutions will be known no more; where our enjoyments will no longer fluctuate like the ocean, but be more ſtedfaſt than the rocks, and more immoveable than the ſhores.

Here I ſee an immenſe collection of waters, in a ſtate of deep repoſe. Could I extend my view to ſome remoter tracts, I ſhould behold every thing ſmoother and calmer ſtill. Not a furrow ſinks, nor a ridge ſwells the ſurface of the ocean. 'Tis all like a glaſſy plain. The waves are aſleep. Echo is huſhed. Not a gale ſtirs. The ſea ſtagnates; the mariner is becalmed; and the veſſel ſcarcely creeps.—— Whereas, could I ſurvey the the ſtraits of Magellan, or the gut of Gibraltar, I ſhould find a very ſtriking difference. There the waters preſs in with vehemence, and ruſh forwards with impetuoſity. All is there in ſtrong agitation, and rapid progreſs. The ſhip is whirled through the narrow paſſage; and rides, as it were, on the wheels of the ſurge, or on the wings of the wind.——This, my dear Aſpaſio, is a true image of what I have been, and of what I am. Some months ago, when I was inſenſible of guilt, all my prayers were liſtleſs, and all my religion was a ſpiritual lethargy. I felt not in my heart, what I uttered with my tongue. Hoſannahs were but an empty ceremony, and confeſſions froze on my formal lips.——But, ſince the SPIRIT of GOD has awakened me from my dream, and convinced me of my ſinfulneſs, I can no longer be ſatisfied with indolent and yawning devotions. Trials and temptations put ſtrong cries into my mouth. My ſoul mourns before the LORD; my deſires plead with the bleſſed GOD; and I am ready to ſay, as the patriarch of old, "I cannot, "I muſt not, I will not let thee go, unleſs thou bleſs me †."

I ſee no flocks of ſheep, with ſober aſſiduity, nibbling the graſſy plains. No ſportive lambs, with innocent gaiety, friſking along the ſunny banks. Here are no ſtables for the generous ſteed, nor paſtures for the luſty heifer. Nevertheleſs, theſe watery regions are ſtocked with colonies of proper and peculiar inhabitants:—who are clothed and accoutred in exact conformity to the clime: not in ſwelling wool, or buoyant feathers; not in a flowing robe, or a full-trimmed ſuit; but with as much compactneſs, and with as little ſuperfluity, as poſſible. They are clad, or rather ſheathed in ſcales, which adhere cloſely to their bodies, and are always laid in a kind of natural oil. Than which apparel nothing can be more light, and at the ſame time nothing more ſolid. It hinders the fluid from penetrating their fleſh; it prevents the cold from coagulating their blood; and enables them to make their way through the waters, with the utmoſt facility. ——They have each a curious inſtrument ‡, by which they increaſe or diminiſh their ſpecific gravity; ſink like lead, or float like a cork; riſe to what height, or deſcend to what depth, they pleaſe.

This is the abode of leviathan, hugeſt of living creatures. Before whom the broad-limbed elephant, and the tall-necked camel, are mere ſhrimps. A ſtretched-out promontory, when he ſleeps; a moving iſland, when he ſwims; "making the ſea to boil like a pot," when unweildily wallowing, he takes his prodigious paſtime. ——Here the voracious ſhark, that tyrant of the fluid kingdoms, and aſſaſſin of the finny nations, roams and commits his ravages; embrues his horrid fangs, and marks his rapid path, with blood.——Here dwelt that great, and greatly-ſurpriſing fiſh, whoſe fierceneſs and avidity the almighty SOVEREIGN employed as his purſuivant, to arreſt a fugitive prophet: whoſe ample jaws, or capacious entrails, were the dungeon to confine a rebellious ſubject, and the cabin to lodge a penitent offender: whoſe bulk, and ſtrength, and ſpeed were a kind of veſſel, tranſporting this convict to the bottom of the mountains, and the bars of the earth *. After the criminal was ſufficiently chaſtiſed, and properly humbled, they ſerved as a galley with oars, to convey him ſafe to land.

In the ſame element reſides (at leaſt takes up part of his reſidence) that formidable monſter, who is made without fear, and has not his like upon earth. He eſteemeth the appointed iron as ſtraw, and ponderous braſs as rotten wood. His heart is as hard as a piece of the nether milſtone, and his ſcales are a coat of impenetrable mail. Strength not to be reſiſted, much leſs to be ſubdued, lies entrenched in his ſinewy neck. His eyes are like the eye-lids of the opening day; and when he rolls thoſe glaring orbs, there ſeems to be another morn riſen on midnoon. His teeth are terrible, jagged for rapine, and edged with death. His throat is as a burning furnace; clouds of ſmoke are poured from his noſtrils, and flakes of fire iſſue from his mouth. None, no not the moſt reſolute, dares provoke him to the combat, or even ſtir him up from his ſlumbers. He laugheth at the ſhaking of the ſpear, and ſorrow marcheth in triumph before him †. Whenever he raiſeth himſelf, the mighty are afraid; where-ever he advanceth, ruin is there.—— If a mere creature is capable of ſpreading ſuch alarm and dread, how greatly is the creator himſelf to be feared? who can turn the moſt harmleſs inhabitant of the ocean into a ravenous alligator, or a horrid crocodile! who can arm every reptile of the ground with all the force and rage of a lion!

'Tis impoſſible to enter on the muſter-roll, thoſe ſcaly herds, and that minuter fry, which graze the ſea-weed, or ſtray through the coral groves. They are innumerable, as the ſands which lie under them; countleſs, as the waves which cover them.——Here are uncouth animals, of monſtrous ſhapes ‡, and amazing qualities ‖. Some that have been diſcovered by the † Job xli. 22. לפניו תדון דאבה Mœror, ſays Bochart, præcidit tanquam metator et comes, tumidique anteambulo regis. Terror and anguiſh are a kind of advanced guard to this monarch among the reptiles: or, they go before the monſter, as the man bearing a ſhield went before the Philiſtine giant.——The original word occurs in no other part of the divine book. I cannot recollect any expreſſion, which ſo fully repreſents its meaning, as Homer's κοθεων, or Xenophon's γαυριασθαι; both which are intended to deſcribe the ardour and action of a high-mettled prancing ſteed.—The whole paragraph is a ſketch of the crocodile's picture. It exhibits a few circumſtances, culled from that inimitable deſcription, extant in the book of Job; which are given, either in the ſacred writer's own words, or elſe in a paraphraſtic explanation of their ſenſe.

* Jonah ii. 6.

‡ Monſtrous ſhapes:—Such as the ſword-fiſh; whoſe upper jaw is lengthened into a ſtrong and ſharp ſword: with which he ſometimes ventures to attack the ſhips, though armed with thunder; and is capable of piercing their ſides, though ribbed with oak. This may be called the champion of the waters; who, though never exceeding ſixteen feet in length, yet, confiding in a weapon at once ſo truſty and ſo tremendous, ſcruples not to give battle even to the whale himſelf.——The ſun-fiſh has no tail; ſeems to be all head; and was it not for two fins, which act the part of oars, would be one entire round maſs of fleſh.——The polypus, remarkable for its numerous feet, and as many claws; by which it has the appearance of a mere inſect, and ſeems fitted only to crawl. At the ſame time, an excreſcence, ariſing on the back, enables it to ſteer and purſue a ſteady courſe in the waves. So that it may paſs under the two-fold character of a ſailor and a reptile.—Horace intimates, that the Britiſh ocean is famous for producing ſea-monſters;

Te belluoſus qui remotis
Obſtrepit oceanus Britannis.

‖ Amazing qualities.——Among theſe may be reckoned the torpedo, which benumbs on a ſudden, and renders impotent, whatever fiſh it aſſaults; and, which is a more extraordinary property, ſtrikes even the fiſherman's arm, when he offers to lay

* Job x. 17. † Gen. xxxii. 26.

‡ The air-bladder.

inquisitive eye of mast; and many more, that remain among the secrets of the hoary deep.—Here are sholes and sholes, of various characters, and of the most diversified sizes; from the cumbrous whale, whose flouncings tempest the ocean, to the evanescent anchovy, whose substance dissolves in the smallest fricassee.——Some, lodged in their pearly shells, and fattening on their rocky beds, seem attentive to no higher employ, than that of imbibing moist nutriment. These, but a small remove from vegetable life, are almost rooted to the rocks, on which they lie reposed. While others, active as the winged creation, and swift as an arrow from the Indian bow, shoot along the yielding flood, and range at large the spacious regions of the deep.

Here is the tortoise, who never moves but under her own portable pent-house. The lobster, which, whether he sleeps or wakes, is still in a state of defence, and clad in jointed armour. The oyster, a sort of living jelly, ingarrisoned in the bulwark of native stone. With many other kinds of sea-reptiles, or, as the psalmist speaks, things creeping innumerable *.—I am surprised at the variety of their figure, and charmed with the splendor of their colours. Unsearchable is the wisdom, and endless the contrivance, of the all-creating GOD!—Some are rugged in their form, and little better than hideous in their aspect. Their shells seem to be the rude production of a disorderly jumble, rather than the regular effects of skill and design. Yet we shall find, even in these seeming irregularities, the nicest dispositions. These abodes, uncouth as they may appear, are adapted to the genius of their respective tenants, and exactly suited to their particular exigencies. Neither the Ionic delicacy, nor the Corinthian richness, nor any other order of architecture, would have served their purposes half so well, as this coarse and homely fabric.

Some, on the other hand, are extremely neat. Their structure is all symmetry and elegance. No enamel in the world is comparable to their polish. There's not a room of state, in all the palaces of Europe, so brilliantly adorned, as the dining-room and the bed-chamber of the little fish, that dwells in mother of pearl. Such a lovely mixture of red, and blue, and green, so delightfully staining the most clear and glittering ground, is no where else to be seen. The royal power may covet it, and human art may mimic it; but neither the one nor the other, nor both united, will ever be able to equal it.

But what I admire more than all their streaks, their spots, and their embroidery, is, the extraordinary provision made for their safety.——Nothing is more relishing and palatable than their flesh. Nothing more heavy and sluggish than their motions. As they have no speed to escape, neither have they any dexterity to elude the foe. Were they naked or unguarded, they must be an easy prey to every free-booter that roams the ocean.——To prevent this fatal consequence, what is only cloathing to other animals, is to them a cloathing, a house, and a castle. They have a fortification, that grows with their growth, and is a part of themselves. By this means, they live secure amidst millions and millions of ravenous jaws: by this means, they are imparked, as it were, in their own shell; and, screened from every other assault, are reserved for the use and pleasure of mankind.

This is the birth-place of cod, the standing repast of Lent. This is the nursery of turbot, for its exquisite relish justly styled, the pheasant of the waters. Hence comes the sturgeon, delicious even in pickle, and a regale for royal luxury; hence the flounders, dappled with reddish spots, and a supply for vulgar wants.—Here dwell the mackarel, decked, when haled from their native element, richly decked with the most glossy dies; the herring, whose back is mottled with azure, and his belly sleek with silver: the salmon, in plainer habit, but of larger substance, and higher esteem, than either or both the preceding.——These, when shotten and lean, wander wildly up and down the vast abyss. When plump and delicate, they throng our creeks, and swarm in our bays; they repair to the shallows, or haunt the running streams. ——Who bids these creatures evacuate the shores, and disperse themselves into all quarters, when they become worthless and unfit for our service? Who rallies and recalls the undisciplined vagrants, as soon as they are improved into desirable food? Who appoints the very scene of our ambushes, to be the place of their rendezvous? so that they come like voluntiers to our nets?—— Surely, the furlow is signed, the summons issued, and the point of reunion settled, by a providence ever indulgent to mankind; ever studious to treat us with dainties, and load us with benefits *.

We have wondered at † our SAVIOUR's penetration and power;—his penetration, which, though the sea was at a distance, and walls intervened, discerned the fish, that had just swallowed a piece of money;——his power, which, without any delay, brought the lawless rambler, charged with the silver spoil, to Peter's hook. But is it not equally wonderful, to observe such innumerable multitudes of finny visitants, annually approaching our shores, and crouding our banks? which furnish our tables with a wholesome and delicate repast; at the same time that they yield to our nation a revenue ‡, more certain, and no less considerable, than the mines of Peru.

These approach, while those of enormous size and tremendous appearance abandon the shores. The latter might endanger the fisherman's safety, and would certainly scare away the valuable fish from our coasts. They are therefore restrained by an invisible hand, and abscond in the abysses of the ocean. Just as the wild beasts of the earth, impelled by the same over-ruling power, hide themselves in the recesses of the forest.——A ship, infected with a pestilential distemper, is obliged to keep off at sea; and not permitted to enter the port, till she has performed her quarantine. In like manner, these monsters of the deep, whose very business is destruction, are laid under a providential interdict: only with this very desirable difference, that, as their presence would always be pernicious, they are never suffered to come near; their quarantine is perpetual.

Ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee; and the fowls of the air, and they shall tell thee: or speak to the earth, and it shall teach thee ‖; and the fishes of the lay hold on it, with a temporary deadness. By this means, it possesses the double advantage, of arresting its prey, and securing itself. —The cuttle-fish, furnished with a liquid magazine, of a colour and consistence like ink: which, when pursued by an enemy, the creature emits, and blackens the water. By this artifice, the foe is bewildered in the chace; and while the one vainly gropes in the dark, the other seizes the opportunity, and makes his escape.—The nautilus, whose shell forms a natural boat. The dextrous inhabitant unfurls a membrane to the wind, which serves him instead of a sail. He extends also a couple of arms, with which, as with two slender oars, he rows himself along. When he is disposed to dive, he strikes sail; and, without any apprehension of being drowned, sinks to the bottom. When the weather is calm, and he has an inclination to see the world, or take his pleasure, he mounts to the surface; and, self-taught in the art of navigation, performs his voyage without either chart or compass; is himself the vessel, the rigging, and the pilot.—For a more copious illustration of this amusing and wonderful subject, see Nat. Displ. vol. III.

* Psal. civ. 25.

* Psal. lxviii. 19. † See Letter VIII. p. 177.

‡ We are told by the afore-mentioned author, that the banks of Newfoundland alone, bring in to the proprietors of that fishery, a revenue of several millions every year.—And they will, in all probability, be an unimpaired resource of treasure, when the richest mines now wrought in the world, are choked up or exhausted.

‖ Job xii. 7, 8. The earth is represented, as bearing witness to the immense benignity of the blessed GOD. Some minutes, or a short abstract, of her testimony on this occasion, may be seen in Letter VI.

sea

ſea ſhall declare unto thee;—that the LORD is gracious;—that his tender mercies are over all his works; that to us he is ſuperabundantly and profuſely good: having ordered all things in the ſurges of the ocean, as well as on the ſurface of the ground, for our rich accommodation, and for our greateſt advantage.

One circumſtance relating to the natives of the deep, is very peculiar, and no leſs aſtoniſhing. As they neither ſow, nor reap; have neither the produce of the hedges, nor the gleanings of the field; they are obliged to plunder and devour one another, for neceſſary ſubſiſtence. They are a kind of authoriſed banditti, that make violence and murder * their profeſſed trade.——By this means, prodigious devaſtations enſue; and, without proper, without very extraordinary recruits, the whole race muſt continually dwindle, and at length be totally extinct.—Were they to bring forth, like the moſt prolific of our terreſtrial animals, a dozen only, or a ſcore at each birth; the increaſe would be unſpeakably too ſmall for the conſumption. The weaker ſpecies would be deſtroyed by the ſtronger; and, in time, the ſtronger muſt periſh, even by their ſucceſsful endeavours to maintain themſelves.——Therefore to ſupply millions of aſſaſſins with their prey, and millions of tables with their food, yet not to depopulate the watery realms; the iſſue produced by every breeder is almoſt incredible. They ſpawn, not by ſcores or hundreds, but by thouſands and by millions †. A ſingle mother is pregnant with a nation. By which amazing, but moſt needful expedient, a periodical reparation is made, proportionable to the immenſe havock.

As the ſea is peopled with animated inhabitants, it is alſo variegated with vegetable productions. Some ſoft as wool; others hard as ſtone. Some riſe, like a leaf-leſs ſhrub; ſome are expanded, in the form of a net; ſome grow with their heads downward, and ſeem rather hanging on, than ſpringing from, the juttings of the rocks. Theſe may, with much greater propriety, than the famous plantations of Semiramis, be called penſile gardens.——But, as my walk reached no farther than the purlieus of the ocean; as neither you nor I have ever taken a ſingle turn among thoſe ſubmarine groves; as Moſes, Joſhua, and Jonah, the only writers that ever made the wonderful tour, intent upon more important themes, have left us no memoirs relating to this curious point; I ſhall not venture to advance any thing particular on the ſubject. Only one remark I would offer in general——

The herbs and trees, which flouriſh on the dry land, are maintained by the juices, that permeate the ſoil, and fluctuate in the air. For this purpoſe, they are furniſhed with leaves, to collect the one; and with roots to attract the other. Whereas, the ſea-plants, finding ſufficient nouriſhment in the circumambient waters, have no occaſion to detach a party of roots into the ground, and forage the earth for ſuſtenance. Inſtead therefore of penetrating, they are but juſt tacked to the bottom; and adhere to ſome ſolid ſubſtance, only with ſuch a degree of tenacity, as may ſecure them from being toſſed to and fro, by the random agitation of the waves.

We ſee from this, and numberleſs other inſtances, what a diverſity there is in the operations of the great CREATOR's hand. Yet every alteration is an improvement, and each new pattern has a peculiar fitneſs of its own.——The ſame œconomy takes place, ſuch a difference of adminiſtration I mean, in his government of the rational world. In "chuſing an heritage for his people," and aſſigning a condition to each of his ſervants, there is a great variety with reſpect to individuals; yet a perfect uniformity, and complete harmony, with reſpect to the whole.——Some he calls out to a courſe of diſtinguiſhed labours. They make an illuſtrious figure in life, and appear as a city ſet on an hill *! Others he conſigns over to obſcurity. They are like the prophets, whom good Obadiah hid in a cave, and are ſtyled his ſecret ones †. Thoſe, the cedars, which ſtand conſpicuous on the top of Lebanon; theſe, the violets, which lie concealed at the foot of a brier.

St Paul was eminently qualified for buſy ſcenes, and the moſt extenſive ſervices. He is introduced, therefore, into places of concourſe. His miniſtry lies amidſt the moſt renowned and populous cities. Even his impriſonment at Rome ſeems to have been a providential expedient for fixing him, as it were, on the ſtage of public obſervation, and in the very centre of univerſal intelligence. Where his preaching was like plunging a ſtone into the midſt of a ſmooth canal; which affects not only the neighbouring parts of the ſurface, but ſpreads the floating circles over all the wide expanſe.——Whereas, the beloved John, being leſs fitted to buſtle among a croud, is ſent into the unfrequented ſolitary iſland; there to indulge the flights of heavenly contemplation; and receive, with uninterrupted attention, the myſterious viſions of GOD.——Job ſhall have thorns in his path; have the dung-hill for his ſeat; and be expoſed, as a mark, to all the arrows of tribulation. Solomon ſhall dip his foot in oil; ſhall be elevated on the throne of royalty; and ſurrounded with the moſt laviſh careſſes of heaven.

In all this ſeeming, this more than ſeeming contrariety, there is a diſplay, not only of ſovereign authority, but of conſummate propriety.——The great HEAD of the church, acts like a judicious general; and appoints ſuch a ſtation to each of his ſoldiers, as correſponds with the ability he gives. He acts like the moſt ſkilful phyſician; and preſcribes ſuch a remedy for all his patients, as is moſt nicely ſuited to their reſpective caſes. He knows the preciſe point of time, the particular place of abode, the peculiar circumſtances of condition, which are moſt proper for each and every of his children; and like a tender as well as unerring father; what he knows to be beſt, that he conſtantly allots.——I ſaid, like a general, like a phyſician, like a father. But the compariſon is low; the language is inexpreſſive; CHRIST is all that is implied in theſe relations, and unſpeakably more.——O! that we may rejoice in the ſuperintendency of ſuch a SAVIOUR; and not only reſign ourſelves to his will, but thank him for managing the helm; thank him for ſteering our courſe, through the changes of time, and the uncertainties of futurity. Since, whatever our froward and petulant paſſions may ſuggeſt, the LORD's ways are ſo far from being unequal, that they have all poſſible fitneſs and propriety; they are ordered "in number, "weight, and meaſure."

All is ſo very different from the proſpects, which lately preſented themſelves, that I can hardly forbear aſking, Whether I am not tranſlated into a new world? ——Where are the waving hillocks, covered with the CREATOR's bounty? where are the fruitful val-

* To this, I believe, the prophet alludes, in that remarkable expreſſion, Thou makeſt men as the fiſhes of the ſea. Thou ſuffereſt men to commit, without reſtraint or control, all manner of outrages. What ſhould be a civil community, is a ſcene of oppreſſion. The weakeſt are a prey to the ſtrongeſt, and every one ſeeks the deſtruction of his neighbour. Hab. i. 14.

† Mr Petit found 342,144 eggs in the hard roe of a carp, ſixteen inches long. Mr Lewenhoeck counted, in a cod of an ordinary ſize, 9,384,000 eggs.——A fecundity perfectly amazing! but admirably adapted to the preſſing exigencies of the watery world; admirably contrived for the benefit and delight of mankind!—If we advert to this peculiarity, it will give the utmoſt emphaſis to the patriarch's metaphorical expreſſion, and an inimitable beauty to his prophetic wiſh, וידגו לרב Let theſe my grandſons grow into a multitude; or, which is more exactly anſwerable to the original, let them multiply abundantly, even like the fiſhes of the ocean, Gen. xlviii. 16.

* Matth. v. 14. † Pſal. lxxxiii. 3.

leys,

eyes, unable vocal with his praise? No cultured field, no opening bloſſom, not ſo much as a green leaf appears. None of my late entertainments remain, but only the cooling zephyrs. Which are no longer perfumed with the breath of flowers, but impregnated with the freſhneſs of the ocean.——Yet, though all thoſe lovely landſcapes are withdrawn; though the gurling fountain is ſilenced, and the blooming garden loſt, I am not far from the origin, both of the odours which exhale from the one, and of the cryſtal which flows from the other. I am now upon the margin of that grand reſervoir, which ſupplies the country with its fertility, and the parterre with its beauty.——The ſea is the inexhauſtible ciſtern of the univerſe. The air and ſun conſtitute the mighty engine, which works, with intermiſſion, to raiſe the liquid treaſure. While the clouds ſerve as ſo many aqueducts, to convey the genial ſtores along the atmoſphere; and diſtribute them at ſeaſonable periods, and in regular proportions, through all the regions of the globe.

I queſtion, whether the united application of mankind could, with their utmoſt ſkill, and with all poſſible percolations, fetch a ſingle drop of perfectly-ſweet water * from this unmeaſurable pit of brine. Yet the action of the ſolar heat draws off, every hour, every minute, millions and millions of tons, in vaporous exhalations; which, being ſkilfully parcelled out, and ſecurely lodged in the bottles of heaven †, are ſent abroad, ſweetened, and refined, without any brackiſh tincture, or the leaſt bituminous ſediment;—ſent abroad upon the wings of the wind, to diſtil in dews, or pour themſelves in rain; to ooze from the orifices of fountains ‡; to trickle along the veins of rivulets; to riſe in the cavities of wells; to roll, in many a headlong torrent, from the ſides of mountains; to flow, in copious ſtreams, amidſt the boſom of burning deſerts, and through the heart of populous kingdoms; in order to refreſh and fertilize, to beautify and enrich, every ſoil, in every clime.

How amiable is the goodneſs, and how amazing is the power, of the world's adorable MAKER!——How amiable his goodneſs! in diſtributing ſo largely, what is ſo abſolutely neceſſary, and ſo extenſively beneficial! That water, without which we can ſcarce perform any buſineſs, or enjoy any comfort, ſhould be every one's property; ſhould ſpring up from the ſoil; ſhould drop down from the clouds; ſhould ſtream by our houſes; ſhould take a journey, from the ends of the earth, and the extremities of the ocean, on purpoſe to ſerve us.—How amazing his power! that this boundleſs maſs of fluid ſalt, ſo intolerably nauſeous to the human taſte, ſhould be the original ſpring, which deals out every palatable draught to mankind, and quenches the thirſt of every animal! Doubtleſs, the power by which this is effected, can extract comfort from our afflictions, advantage from our calamities, and make all things work together for our good *.

Vaſt and various are the advantages †, which we receive from the liquid element; vaſt, as its unbounded extent; various, as its ever-mutable ſurface.—The ſweet waters glide along the earth, in ſpacious currents; which not only exhilerate the adjacent country, by their humid train, and exhaling moiſture; but, by giving a briſk impulſe to the air, prevent the unwholeſome ſtagnation of their own vapours.——They paſs by opulent cities, and receiving all their filth, rid them of a thouſand nuiſances; which, when once committed to theſe fluid ſcavengers, are as effectually ſecreted, as if they were buried ever ſo deep in the earth.——Yet, though they condeſcend to ſo mean an employ, they are fitted for more honourable ſervices. They enter the gardens of a prince, and compoſe ſome of the moſt delightful ornaments of the place. They glitter upon the eye, as they float in the ample canal. They amuſe the imagination, as they aſcend in curious jet d'eaus. They yield a nobler entertainment, as, forming themſelves into ſheets of ſloping ſilver, they fall in graceful or in grand caſcades.—If, inſtead of beautifiers, we think proper to make uſe of them as drudges, they ply at our mills; they toil inceſſantly at the wheel; and, by working the hugeſt engines, take upon themſelves an unknown ſhare of our fatigue, and ſave us a proportionable degree of expence.

So forcibly they act, when collected; and moſt ſurpriſingly they inſinuate, when detached. They throw themſelves into the body of a plant; they penetrate the minuteſt of its organized tubes; and a paſſage through meanders, too ſmall for the eye to diſcern, too numerous and intricate even for imagination to follow.—How difficultly does a labourer that ſerves the maſon, puſh his way up the rounds of a ladder, bending under the burden of mortar on his head! while theſe ſervants in the employ of nature, carry their load to a much greater height; and climb with the utmoſt eaſe, even without the aſſiſtance of ſteps or of ſtairs. They convey the nutrimental ſtores of vegetation, from the loweſt fibres that are plunged into the ſoil, to the very topmoſt twigs that wave amidſt the clouds. They are the caterers for the vegetable world; or (if I may be allowed the expreſſion) the butlers, which attend the whole boſt of plants, to furniſh them with ſeaſonable refreſhment, and neceſſary proviſion. By means of which, the trees of the LORD are full of ſap, even the cedars of Lebanon which HE hath planted ‡. And, notwithſtanding their vaſt elevation, and prodigious diffuſion; though they are abandoned by man, and deprived of all cultivation; yet not a ſingle branch is deſtitute of leaves, nor a ſingle leaf of moiſture.

Beſides the ſalutary, cleanly, and ſerviceable circulation of the rivers; the ſea has a libration, no leſs advantageous, and much more remarkable.——Every day, this immenſe collection of waters, for the ſpace of five or ſix hours, flows towards the land; and, after a ſhort pauſe, retires again to its inmoſt caverns; taking up nearly the ſame time in its retreat, as it required for its acceſs.—How great is the power, which ſets the whole fluid world in motion! which protrudes to the ſhores ſuch an inconceivable weight of waters, without any concurrence from the winds, frequently in direct oppoſition to all their force! How gracious alſo is the Providence, which bids the mighty element perform its tumbling revolutions, with the moſt exact punctuality! Was it ſuffered to advance with a lawleſs

* I have not forgotten, what was lately affirmed in our public papers, that a certain ingenious gentleman, I think in the city of Durham, had found out the art of ſweetening ſea-water.—What he produced, might probably approve itſelf to the taſte, and not be without its uſefulneſs. Yet I cannot but query, whether it will be found to have all thoſe fine, balmy, ſalutiferous qualities which diſtinguiſh and recommend the rain-water: which has been exhaled by the kindly warmth of the ſun; has been filtrated by paſſing and repaſſing through the regions of the air; has been clarified in the higheſt and pureſt tracts of the atmoſphere; has been further refined and perfected by the ſearching agency of the winds.—I ſhould very much wonder, if the puny alembec could equal this grand apparatus of nature.

† So the clouds are elegantly ſtyled in ſacred writ, Job xxxviii. 37.

‡ We are obliged to Clemens Romanus, for the moſt juſt and elegant repreſentation of fountains and their uſefulneſs, that perhaps any where exiſts. Αντλοι το πηγαι προς απολαυσιν ημων δημιουργηθεισαι, διχα ολιγωριας παρεχουσι τας προς ζωην ανθρωποις μαζας. 1 epiſt. ad Corinth. He calls fountains, the breaſts or teats of the earth. The compariſon, I believe, is his own; and nothing can exceed it, as to propriety and beauty.

* Rom. viii. 28.

† The high value which mankind ſet upon this element, and the many benefits they receive from its miniſtration, both theſe particulars are very ſtrongly expreſſed by the Hebrews: who call a pool or reſervoir of water בְּרֵכָה which denotes, in its primary ſignification, a bleſſing, Cant. viii. 7. Iſai. vii. 3.

‡ Pſal. civ. 16.

and unlimited ſwell, it might ſweep over kingdoms, and deluge whole continents. Was it irregular and uncertain in its approaches, navigation would be at a ſtand, and trade become precarious.—But, being conſtant at its ſtated periods, and never exceeding its appointed bounds, it creates no alarm to the country, and affords very conſiderable aids to traffic.

The tide, at its flow, ruſhing up our large rivers, clears and deepens the paſſage; in many places ſpreads a copious flood, where a dry and empty waſte lay before.—Is the ſailor returned from his voyage, and waiting at the mouth of the channel? The flux is ready to convey his veſſel to the very doors of the owner; and without any hazard of ſtriking on the rocks, or being faſtened in the ſands.——Has the merchant freighted his ſhip? would he have it tranſferred to the ocean? The reflux tenders its ſervice; and bears away the load, with the utmoſt expedition, and with equal ſafety.—Behold, O man! how greatly thou art beloved, how highly favoured by thy MAKER! In what part of his works has he forgotten or overlooked thy welfare? Shew me a creature, point out a ſpot, in the formation or diſpoſition of which, he has not been mindful of thy intereſts? He has made thee to have dominion over the works of his hands, and has put all things in ſubjection under thy feet. All ſheep and oxen; the fowls of the air, and the fiſhes; yea, and the ſurges of the ſea *, are ſubſervient to thy benefit. Even theſe, wild and impetuous as they are, yield their willing back, to receive thy load; and, like an indefatigable beaſt of burden, carry it to the place which thou ſhalt nominate.

What preſerves this vaſt flood in a ſtate of perpetual purity? It is the univerſal ſewers, into which are diſcharged, the refuſe and filth of the whole world. That which would defile the land, and pollute the air, is tranſmitted to the ocean, and neither miſchief nor inconvenience enſue.—Thoſe ſwarms of locuſts,—which, while living, were a plague to Pharaoh, by their loathed intruſion; and when dead, might have cauſed a more dreadful plague, by their noiſome ſtench;—ſwept into the ſea, were neither peſtilential, nor offenſive. How then is this receptacle of every nuiſance kept clean? Why does it not contract a noxious taint, and diffuſe a deſtructive contagion? ſuch as would render it a grave to the aquatic, and bane to the terreſtrial animals?—'Tis owing, partly to its inceſſant motion, partly to its ſaline quality. By the one, it is ſecured from any internal principle of corruption; by the other, it works itſelf clear from every adventitious defilement.

A directory this, and a pattern for me!—Thus may divine grace, like the penetrating power of ſalt, cure the depravity of my heart, and rectify the diſorders of my temper! ſeaſon my words, and make all my converſation ſavoury!—Thus may a continual courſe of activity, in my ſecular and my ſacred vocation, prevent the pernicious effects of indolence! Let me daily exerciſe, or be attempting to exerciſe, the graces of Chriſtianity, leſt faith become feeble; leſt hope contract dimneſs; and charity wax cold.

Now the tide begins to flow. Wave riſes upon wave, and billow rolls over billow. Nothing can divert, nothing retard its progreſs; no, not for a moment. Tho' Canutus be in the way †; though his royal authority, and ſtrict prohibition, nay, though all the forces of his kingdom oppoſe; it will never diſcontinue the advancing ſwell, till it has reached the deſtined point.—So, may I always abound in communion with GOD, or in beneficence to men; reſigning one religious or charitable employ, only to enter upon another; and be thus preſſing forward, ſtill preſſing forward to the prize of my high calling in CHRIST JESUS;—differing from thoſe regular viciſſitudes of the ocean, only in one particular; that my endeavours never ebb, my ſoul never draws back. Since this would be, if temporary, to my grievous loſs; if final, to my aggravated perdition.

Conſider the ſea in another capacity, and it connects the remoteſt realms of the univerſe, by facilitating an intercourſe between their reſpective inhabitants.——What ſhort-ſighted beings are mankind! how extremely ſuperficial their views! how unavoidable therefore their frequent miſtakes! The ancients looked upon this bottomleſs deep, as an unpaſſable * gulf. If our forefathers were ſo egregiouſly miſtaken in this inſtance; let us not too peremptorily pronounce upon any difficult or myſterious point; leſt ſucceeding generations, or a more enlightened ſtate, ſhould cover us with a double confuſion of childiſh ignorance, and fooliſh conceit.

We have clearly demonſtrated, and happily experienced, the very reverſe of that grey-headed ſurmiſe to be true. The ocean, inſtead of being a bar of ſeparation, is the great bond of union. For this purpoſe, it is never exhauſted, though it ſupplies the whole firmament with clouds, and the whole earth with rains; nor ever overflows, though all the rivers in the univerſe are perpetually augmenting its ſtores, and pouring in their tributary floods.—By means of this element, we travel farther, than birds of the ſtrongeſt pinion fly; and diſcover tracts, which the vulture's eye has never ſeen †. We make a viſit to nations, that lie drowned in their midnight ſlumbers, when every induſtrious perſon on this part of the globe is beſtirring himſelf in all the hurry of buſineſs. We cultivate an acquaintance with the ſun-burnt Negro, and the ſhivering Icelander. We croſs the flaming line, we penetrate the frozen pole, and wing our way even round the world.

This is the great vehicle of commerce.—Not to mention the floating caſtles, which contain whole armies; which bear the thunder, the fiery tempeſts, and all the dreadful artillery of war; what a multitude of ſhips, of the largeſt dimenſions, and moſt prodigious burden, are continually paſſing and repaſſing this univerſal thoroughfare! ſhips, that are freighted, not with ſacks, but with harveſts of corn; that carry not pipes, but vintages of wine; that are laden, not with bars of iron, blocks of marble, or wedges of gold, but with whole quarries of maſſy ſtone, and whole mines of ponderous metal. All which, lodged in

* Pſal. viii. 6. 7. 8.

† Alluding to a memorable and inſtructive ſtory, recorded of King Canutus: who, probably without having read, had nevertheleſs thoroughly learned, that excellent leſſon of Horace;

Regum timendorum in proprios greges,
Reges in ipſos imperium eſt Jovis.

Some of his abject and deſigning flatterers had the impious aſſurance to tell him, "his power was more than human."——To convince them of their folly, and rebuke them for their falſehood, he ordered his chair of ſtate to be placed on the extremity of the ſhore, juſt as the tide began to flow. Hither he took his ſeat, in the preſence of the parafites, and many other attendants. Then, with all that dignity of air, and ſeverity of accent, which ſovereign authority knows how to aſſume, he ſaid,—"Thou ſea, the land on "which I ſit is mine; nor has any one dared to invade my rights, "or diſobey my commands, without ſuffering the deſerved puniſh"ment. I charge thee, therefore, on pain of my higheſt diſplea"ſure, not to enter theſe territories, nor touch the feet of king "land's monarch."

When the rude waves made bold to enter on the forbidden ground; nay, when thoſe uncourtly things preſumed to ruſh upon the royal ſeat, and even to daſh his Majeſty's perſon; he ſtarted from his throne, and bid every beholder obſerve the impotence of earthly kings; bid them remember, that HE alone is worthy of the name, whom winds, and waves, and univerſal nature obey.

* ——— Deus abſcidit
Prudens oceano diſſociabili
Terras. HOR.

† Job xxviii. 7.

these volatile storehouses, and actuated by the breath of heaven, are wafted to the very ends of the earth; wafted, enormous and unwieldy as they are, more expeditiously than the light berlin bowls along the roads; almost as speedily, as the nimble-footed roe bounds over the hills *.

Astonishing ordination of eternal wisdom! yet most graciously contrived for the benefit of mankind! I can hardly satisfy my view, in beholding this rolling chaos; I can never cease my admiration, in contemplating its amazing properties:—That an element, so unstable and fugitive, should bear up such an immense weight, as would bend the firmest floors, or burst the strongest beams!—That the thin and yielding air should drive on, with so much facility and speed, bodies of such excessive bulk, as the strength of a legion would be unable to move!—That the air and the water, acting in conjunction, should carry to the distance of many thousand miles, what the united force of men and machines could scarcely draw a single yard.——Puny and despicable are our attempts; but great and marvellous are thy works, O LORD GOD almighty! If thou wilt work, says the prophet, who or what shall let it †? Neither the meanness of the instrument, nor the greatness of the event. A sling and a stone shall lay the gigantic bravo in the dust ‡. An ox-goad shall do more execution than a battery of cannon ‖. Even a worm shall thresh the mountains, and beat them small, and make the hills as chaff §.—— GOD ALL-SUFFICIENT is his name, and out of weakness he maketh his strength perfect.—O! that we, my dear Aspasio,—that I especially,—may be strong in the LORD, and in the power of his might! Then, as the light air is made to act, with a more forcible impulse, than the most vigorous engines; as the fluid water is made to sustain more ponderous loads, than the most substantial works of masonry; so we, who in ourselves are nothing but impotence, shall be enabled to triumph over the legions of hell, and tread down all the temptations of the world.

How are the mariners conducted through this fluid common, than which nothing is more wide, and nothing more wild? Here is no tract to be followed; no posts of direction to be consulted; nor any shepherd's hut, where the wandering traveller may ask his way.—Are they guided by a pillar of fire in the night, or a moveable cloud in the day? as the sons of Jacob and Joseph were escorted through the eastern deserts. No; but by a mean, contemptible, and otherwise worthless scrip!—The apostle James mentions it, as a very observable fact, that the ships, which are so great, and driven of fierce winds, yet are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth ¶. Is it not equally wonderful, that they should be led through such a pathless and unmeasurable waste, by so small an expedient, as the intervention of the loadstone †? Till this surprising mineral was discovered, and its properties were improved, navigation lay in its cradle; was, at best, a mere infant, that crept timorously along the coasts; was obliged to keep within sight of the shores; and, if driven out beyond the narrow sphere of her land-marks, could neither ascertain her situation, nor pursue her voyage. But this guide,—when every beacon on the top of the hill is vanished from the acutest ken; where nothing but skies are seen above, and seas along appear below;—this guide points out the proper passage. This communicates an intelligence, which shines clear in the thickest darkness, and remains steady in the most tempestuous agitations.—— This has given, not indeed birth, but maturity to navigation; and turned her swaddling bands into wings. This has emboldened her to launch into the heart of the ocean, and enabled her to range from pole to pole.

Thus does GOD, both in the operations of nature, and the administrations of providence, accomplish the most important ends by the most inconsiderable means.—When the formidable Sisera is to be cut off, the blow shall be given, not by some puissant champion, but by the hand of a woman *. When Jericho is to be demolished, those impregnable fortifications shall fall, not beneath the stroke of battering engines, but before the sound of rams horns †.——When a hundred thousand Midianites are to be routed, the LORD of hosts will gain his signal victory, not by numerous completely armed, but by a handful of Israelites, accoutred only with trumpets, lamps, and pitchers ‡.—Who would have thought, that from the root of Jesse, a root out of a dry ground, should arise that great tree, which stretches her boughs unto the sea, and her height unto the heavens, and her branches unto the ends of the earth? That the despised Galilean and the carpenter's son shall be the SAVIOUR of the world, and the HEIR of all things? Nay, that a person humbled like the meanest of slaves, and executed like the vilest of malefactors; nailed to a cross, and laid prostrate among the dead; that HE should restore life and immortality to ruined sinners; should open the gates of grace and glory on lost mankind? That a few illiterate creatures taken from the barge, the oar, and the net, should confute philosophers, and convert kings; should overthrow the strong-holds of idolatry, and plant Christianity on its ruins!——This is a circumstance, which, though a stumbling-block to some people, has considerably strengthened my faith. It is perfectly agreeable to the ALMIGHTY's manner. It is (if I may so speak) the distinguishing turn of his hand, and the peculiar style of his works. Whence does he raise the charmingly-beauteous flower? whence the magnificent myriads of the forest-oaks? whence the boundless and inestimable stores of the harvest? From principles which bear not the least proportion to their effects.—Besides, this most emphatically speaks THE GOD. It shews the lighting down of his glorious arm ‖; and absolutely precludes all the pretensions of human arrogance, or finite power. It appropriates the honour to that supreme AGENT, before whom the easy and the arduous are both alike. All men that see it must confess, THIS HATH GOD DONE.

Through this channel, are imported to our island the choice productions, and the peculiar treasures, of every nation under heaven. So that we can breakfast upon a dissolution of the American kernel §; and see the rich nutrimental liquor froth in our cups, without ever tempting the foaming brine. We can steep the delicately-flavoured Chinese leaf, in the waters of our own well; or spend the afternoon in our own parlour, and be regaled with an infusion of the finely-scented Arabian berry. We can season the friendly bowl with the juices of the orange, or refresh our clammy palate with the pulp of the tamarind; without feeling that fervent heat, which imparts such a poignant relish to the former; without suffering those

* A ship, under a brisk and steady gale, will sail at the rate of 216 miles in 24 hours; persevering, if the wind continues favourable, in the same rapid career, for several days together: A course, which, considering both its swiftness and duration, cannot be equalled by the ablest horse, perhaps not by the nimblest creature that treads the ground.

† Is. xliii. 13. ‡ 1 Sam. xvii. 50. ‖ Judg. iii. 31.

§ Is. xli. 14, 15. ¶ Jam. iii. 4.

† I am aware, that other expedients are used for shaping a proper course on the ocean; such as making observations from the sun by mathematical instruments. But these, I believe, are only subordinate aids to the needle. The grand regulator is the magnet. I have heard an experienced sailor declare, he would rather be without his quadrant, than without his compass.

* Judg. iv. 9. † Josh. vi. 3.

‡ Judg. vii. 19. ‖ II. xxv. 30.

§ Called the cocoa, which affords the principal ingredient of chocolate, and grows on a small tree in America.

scorch-

corching beams, which gave a fever-cooling virtue to the latter. We can pile upon our salvers a pyramid of Italian figs; fill the interstices with the sky-dried raisins of Malaga; and form a summit for the inviting structure, with the pistacia nut of Aleppo.—By this means, the eastern spices exhale their odours on our tables; and the western canes transfuse their sweetness into our viands. We clothe our bodies with the vegetable fleeces * of the south, and line our apparel with warm furry spoils from the north. We can wear the pearl polished in the abysses of the Persian gulf; and walk on the carpets, manufactured in the dominions of the Great Mogul: yet neither expose ourselves to the rage of boisterous seas, nor the more dreaded treachery of barbarous people.—In short, by this grand and beneficial expedient of navigation, every tide conveys into our ports the wealth of the remotest climes, and brings the abundance of the universe to be unladen on our quays. London becomes a mart of nations; and almost every private house in the kingdom, is embellished or accommodated from the four quarters of the globe.

Almost every private house—Is not this more like rhetorical flourish, than real truth? Are not all the advantages I have mentioned, the peculiar portion of the rich? Is not the sea, like high life and the gay world, somewhat capricious and partial? bestowing lavishly her favours on the wealthy, at the same time that she neglects the needy?—Quite the reverse. Like her most exalted yet most condescending CREATOR, she is no respecter of persons. She deals out her liberalities to all; to the wealthy, such as are suitable to their circumstances; to the indigent, such as are best adapted to their condition. If she ornaments the abodes of the first, she employs the hands of the last; furnishes these with useful labour, those with elegant accommodations. What a multitude of industrious people acquire a livelihood, by preparing the commodities intended for exportation! and what a multitude of dextrous artificers maintain their families, by manufacturing the wares imported from abroad!

It is reckoned a valuable species of beneficence to provide proper work for the poor.——This withdraws them from many temptations and preserves them from much wickedness. It hinders them from being a burden to themselves, and a nuisance to the public. They might otherwise be idle, and as vermin on the body politic; or even mutinous, and as vipers in the bowels of the nation. Whereas, by exerting themselves in a due subordination, and with becoming diligence, they are the very sinews of the community; or like the grand wheel in the machine of state, whose incessant activity distributes plenty, and pours innumerable conveniencies through the whole.——What a master then, or rather what a mistress, is the sea! how extensive her correspondence, and how large her demand for workmen! Into what branch of trade does she not enter? What kind of ingenious science, or useful toil, does she not befriend? How many millions of honest but needy persons are engaged in her service? And how amply are they repaid for their pains!—They that go down to the sea in ships, and occupy their business in great waters, these men see the works of the LORD, and his wonders in the deep.—— They also that dwell among their own people, and abide in the villages, even they enjoy the bounty, and share the advantages of the ocean. For, though it is false philosophy, to suppose the waters themselves strained through subterranean passages, into the in-land countries; yet it is an undeniable truth, that their beneficial effects are transfused into every town, every hamlet, and every cottage.

Surely, the inhabitants of our isle have reason to turn the prediction of Moses, concerning the tribe of Joseph, into a devout and grateful acknowledgment.—Blessed of the LORD is * our land. Blessed with the precious things of heaven, with the dew, and with the deep that coucheth beneath. With the precious things brought forth by the sun, and with the precious things thrust forth by the moon. With the chief things of the ancient mountains, and with the precious things of the everlasting hills: and with the precious things of the earth, and the fulness thereof. †——May we also enjoy the good-will of HIM, who dwelt in the bush ‡, and the grace of HIM, who hung on the tree! May the eternal GOD be our refuge, and his everlasting arms underneath both us and our interests!—Happy then wilt thou be, thrice happy, O England! Thy temporal advantages, and thy spiritual privileges considered, it may truly be said, Who, or what nation, is like unto thee?

This for my country; now let me wish for myself;

GOD of all worlds! source and supreme of things!
From whom all life, from whom duration springs!
Intense O! let me for thy glory burn,
Nor fruitless view my days and months return.
Give me with wonder at thy works to glow,
To grasp thy vision, and thy truths to know:
O'er time's tempestuous sea to reach thy shore,
And live, and sing, where time shall be no more.

You see, Aspasio, I have been studying the volume of nature; endeavouring to read its capital characters, and learn some of its instructive lessons. The sea has been the page; but how superficial is my perusal, and no less scanty my knowledge. Little, very little have I seen or conceived, relating to those works of wonder, which the vast unfathomable deep contains ‖;—the plants it produces, and the creatures it nourishes;

* Cotton, which is a sort of wool, encompassing the seed of a tree.—Its fruit is of an oval form, about the size of a nut. As it ripens, it grows black on the outside; and, by the heat of the sun, opens in several places, discovering the cotton through the clefts, which is of an admirable whiteness. See CHAMB. Dict.

* Is, (so I would translate the original,) not be; in the predictive, not precatory form. This implies a fulness of faith, and distinguishes prophecy from prayer; best suits the extraordinary illumination of Moses; and does most honour to the omniscient SPIRIT.

† Deut. xxxiii. 13, 14, 15, 16. Here seems be an exact summary, and a poetical description of the riches of nature.—The precious things of heaven; or rain, which descends from the upper; and dew, which is formed in the lower, regions of the firmament.——The deep that coucheth beneath; seas, rivers, fountains, wells, which lie in the bosom of the soil; and are sources of fertility and plenty.—The precious things brought forth by the sun, must certainly denote the herbs, plants, trees, and all manner of vegetables, with their respective fruits.—The precious things thrust forth by the moon, may probably refer to the mineral kingdoms; in the formation of which, that ruler of the night may have a considerable influence. The moon is confessedly the parent of tides; and may put in motion those bituminous and saline fluids, which, circulating through the pores of the earth, and fixing in beds of homogeneous matter, are supposed to commence minerals.—As our sacred philosopher has already specified the vegetable tribes, and (if I mistake not) the beds of fossils, the principal things of the mountains, and hills, should signify the sheep, goats, and other valuable animals, which feed upon those vast declivities. Then, the precious things of the earth, may express those herds of larger cattle, which have their pasturage in the plains, valleys, and lower grounds. A sense, which recommends itself from this consideration, that the wealth of the ancients consisted chiefly in cattle.—The fulness thereof, may be a kind of recapitulation; a comprehensive term, including the whole produce of the terraqueous globe; the magnificent liberality of JEHOVAH to his people.

‡ Deut. xxxiii. 16.

‖ Should the reader desire to see this subject more largely opened, and more fully improved, I would refer him to Contemplations on the ocean, lately published by my ingenious and pious friend Mr Pearsall. In which, a refined fancy and a delicate philosophy, compose a chaplet for evangelical divinity: uniting some of their beautiful and fragrant flowers, to adorn the gospel of GOD our SAVIOUR,—to quicken and refresh the spirits of his people,—to invite and win the hearts of the disobedient.

—its

its ſtupendous rocks, and ſubterranean caves;—the heaps of pearl, which are its native growth; and the loads of gold, which it has gained by ſhipwreck.——So ſuperficial are my views of CHRIST; ſo ſcanty is my acquaintance with the goſpel.

You, I preſume, are ſitting at the feet of that ſublime TEACHER; and attending to the dictates of HIS mouth, in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge *. Let me promiſe myſelf a communication of your thoughts, as I have freely tranſmitted a ſpecimen of mine. And I will make no ſcruple to acknowledge the ſuperiority of the exchange; that I receive Χρυσια χαλκειων, παλιγκοι τιμαβουν.

Or, as the eloquent Iſaiah ſpeaks; For braſs you will bring gold, and for iron you will bring ſilver †; rendering me, by this intercourſe, your more obliged, though it is ſcarce poſſible for me to be more than I already am,

Your affectionate,

THERON.

P. S. Monſieur Paſchal, who was remarkably fond of brevity, makes an odd excuſe for tranſgreſſing, on a particular occaſion, his favourite rule. He entreats his friend to pardon the unuſual length of his epiſtle, by aſſuring him, that he had not time to make it ſhorter.——I cannot, it muſt be confeſſed, adopt this philoſopher's apology. For I have purpoſely lengthened my letter, with a view of ſetting, in this one circumſtance, a pattern for my Aſpaſio.

* Col. ii. 3.

† Iſ. lx. 17.

LETTER X.

ASPASIO to THERON.

Dear THERON,

I Thank you for you letter, becauſe it entertains and improves me: I thank you for your poſtſcript, becauſe it is my encouragement and my apology.——I am ſet down to write, with a copious ſtock of materials. It will be far more difficult to contract, than to enlarge. I muſt therefore acknowledge myſelf obliged to your candour, for aſſigning me the eaſier taſk.—That prolixity, which, in others, might be ungenteel and faulty, is, in me, an act of complaiſance, and matter of duty.

Though abſent from you, I went with you in your late ramble. Your deſcriptive pen has made me partaker of the ideal delight: may divine grace enable me to ſhare in the ſpiritual improvement!—When you diſplayed the beauties of the morn, breaking forth from the obſcurity of night; when you adopted that noble aſpiration from our philoſophic poet, I could not forbear adding,—— "Thus may the gracious GOD, who commands the "light to ſhine out of the midnight-darkneſs, ſhine into "our hearts; and give that incomparably-glorious know-"ledge, the knowledge of his bleſſed SELF! which, tho' "diſcernable through all the tracts of creation, and de-"rivable from every work of his almighty hand; yet no "where beams forth with ſuch complete and ſuch amiable "luſtre, as in the perſon of JESUS CHRIST *."—Here we behold all the ſublime perfections of the DEITY, not only manifeſted with inimitable ſplendor, but operating for our own advantage. We behold them, as Job ſpeaks, for ourſelves †; and cannot but receive inexpreſſible refreſhment and joy from the view.

When you walked beneath the ſhade of thoſe huge, horrid, and enormous cliffs; both amuſed and alarmed at their ſtupendous magnitude, and frightful irregularity; when you caſt your eye upon the wide-expanded ſurface of the ocean;—when you ſurveyed the far more unmeaſurable arches of the ſky;—and meditated, in that awful ſolicitude, on the wildeſt and moſt magnificent appearances of nature;—I felt the ſame kind of devout aſtoniſhment with yourſelf. While the ſoul was wrapt in penſive ſtillneſs, and pleaſing dread ‡, methought I heard a voice, or ſomething like a voice, from the ſilent ſpheres, as well as from the ſounding ſeas. It ſeemed to echo back, what the mighty angel, whom John ſaw flying in the midſt of heaven, once proclaimed; "Worſhip HIM, who made heaven and earth, and the "ſea, and the fountains of water *. Worſhip him, who "ſtretched out that azure pavilion with ſuch amazing "grandeur; who meaſured yonder world of waters, in "the hollow of his hand; and before whom, this im-"menſe range of mountainous cliffs, is but as duſt upon "the ſcale."

When you deſcribed the diſmal ſituation of a wretch, expoſed on the edges of the tremendous precipice; hanging over the ragged rocks, and the unfathomable gulf; and cleaving only to a ſlender, treacherous, breaking bough: how heartily did I join in your adoring acknowledgments to that kind, interpoſing, bleſſed hand, which reſcued us both from an infinitely more threatening and dreadful danger! reſcued us, as ſlaves, from the dominion of the devil; ſnatched us, as brands, from the inextinguiſhable burnings; and bid us (O marvellous, ſuperabundant goodneſs!) bid us poſſeſs the liberty of righteouſneſs; bid us inherit the kingdom of heaven.

When you mention the paſt indolence, and the preſent fervour of your prayers, I could not forbear re-iterating my praiſes to GOD on your behalf. This is a proof, my dear Theron, that you are going in the way everlaſting; for it is written, They ſhall come with weeping, and with ſupplications will I lead them †. This is the work of the HOLY GHOST, dwelling in your heart; for what ſaith the ſcripture? I will pour out upon them the ſpirit of grace and of ſupplication ‡. And our LORD himſelf mentions this, as the indication of a true converſion; Behold he prayeth ‖.—Had not Saul prayed before? Yes; and made long prayers too. But he never, till that inſtant, was ſenſible of his undone and damnable condition; never cried to GOD from the depths of his diſtreſs, or from the depths of his heart; nor ever ſolicited the throne of grace, in the all-prevailing name of JESUS CHRIST.—His prayers, till then, were ſomewhat like the motes, which fluctuate to and fro in the air, without any vigorous impulſe, or any certain aim. But, in that hour, they were like the arrow, which ſprings from the ſtrained bow, and, quick as lightning, flies to the mark.

I was pleaſed to find you, in the proceſs of your letter, inſenſibly forgetting the narrative; and ſo en-

* 2 Cor. iv. 6. † Job xix. 27.

‡ It ſeems to have been ſuch a kind, not of anxious but of pleaſing dread, which ſeized the diſciples on the mount of transfiguration; ησαν γαρ εκφοβοι, for they were ſtruck with a profound, but delightful awe. Delightful, otherwiſe it is not eaſy to conceive, why Peter ſhould propoſe to build tabernacles there, or how he could wiſh to continue in thoſe circumſtances, Mark ix. 6.

* Rev. xiv. 7. † Jer. xxxi. 9.

‡ Zech. xii. 10. ‖ Acts ix. 11.

gaged by the ſubject, that you ſpoke not as the relator, but as the beholder. —— Thus may we always be affected, when we ſtudy the oracles of truth; ſtudy them, not as cold unconcerned critics, who are only to judge of their meaning, but as perſons deeply intereſted in all they contain; who are particularly addreſſed in every exhortation, and directed by every precept; whoſe are the promiſes, and to whom belong the precious privileges. ——When we enabled thus to realize and appropriate the contents of that invaluable book; then we ſhall taſte the ſweetneſs, and feel the power of the ſcriptures. Then we ſhall know, by happy experience, that our divine MASTER's words, are not barely ſounds and ſyllables, but they are ſpirit, and they are life *.

I was ſtill more agreeably entertained with your picture of commerce, and of the advantages we receive from navigation. One advantage, however, I can ſpecify, which is greater than any, greater than all, you have celebrated; an advantage, which will endear and ennoble navigation, ſo long as the ſun and moon endure. The goſpel, my dear friend, the glorious goſpel came to our iſland through this channel. The volume that comprizes it, and the preacher that publiſhed it, both were imported by ſhipping. And may we not ſay, with the enraptured Iſaiah? How beautiful are the feet of them that bring good tidings; that publiſh peace; that bring good tidings of good; that publiſh ſalvation; that ſay unto Zion, Thy GOD reigneth †! It is pleaſant to hear their voice; pleaſant to contemplate their meſſage; and pleaſant even to behold the ground on which they trod, or the very waves over which they ſailed.——This made the holy prophet rejoice in ſpirit, when he foreſaw the extenſive ſpread of his MASTER's glory, and the certain commencement of our happineſs. This put into his mouth that affectionate and congratulatory addreſs; which, in a very particular manner, is directed to us and our countrymen: Sing unto the LORD a new ſong, and his praiſe from the ends of the earth: ye that go down to the ſea, and all that is therein; ye iſles, and the inhabitants thereof. Let the wilderneſs and the cities thereof lift up their voice; let the inhabitants of the rock ſing, let them ſhout from the top of the mountains. Let them give glory unto the LORD; and declare his praiſe in the iſlands ‡.

We read, in Ezekiel, of the moſt magnificent fleet that ever ploughed the ſeas. The maſts were of cedar ‖, and the benches of ivory. Fine linen, beautified with embroidery, floated to the winds, and formed the ſails. Blue and purple rigged the veſſel, and clothed the meaneſt mariner.——Let us ſuppoſe, that the freight of this ſplendid navy was proportioned, in value, to its ſumptuous tackling. Yet how poor, how deſpicable were either, were both if eſtimated with the treaſures of the goſpel; thoſe divine treaſures, which ſpring from the imputation of our REDEEMER's righteouſneſs! and which have much the ſame kindly influence on religious practice, as navigation, with all her improvements, has upon traffic!—Give me leave to confirm this aſſertion, by ſelecting a few inſtances, and applying them in a few interrogatories.

One of the benefits proceeding from the imputation of CHRIST's righteouſneſs, is pardon; pardon, not partial, but complete; a pardon of each ſin, be it ever ſo heinous; a pardon of all ſins, be they ever ſo numerous. For thus ſaid GOD the LORD, who ſent both his prophets and apoſtles, preaching peace by JESUS CHRIST, I will pardon ALL their iniquities, whereby they have ſinned, and whereby they have tranſgreſſed againſt me *.—To learn the deſirable nature of this bleſſing, let us ſtep back into the annals of hiſtory, and attend a traiterous unhappy nobleman to his vindictive exit. His body is demanded by the miniſters of juſtice. Reluctant and trembling he is conducted to the ſcaffold. There the alarmed criminal ſees the mourning block; ſees the glittering axe; ſees the coffin prepared for his corpſe; ſees thouſands of anxious ſpectators, waiting, with eager looks and throbbing hearts, the fearful cataſtrophe. In a word, he ſees death advancing, with all the ſolemnities of horror and woe.——Time elapſes. The preparatory ceremonies are diſpatched. The fatal moment is arrived. No longer reſpite can be allowed. He muſt ſubmit to immediate execution. Accordingly he proſtrates himſelf to receive the ſtroke. But—ſeized with new terrors, at the poiſed axe, and approaching blow, he ſtarts from the dangerous poſture.——Again he bends, and again ſnatches his neck from the impending edge. A third time he lifts his pale countenance, to the pitying crouds, and departing light.—Once more he bows to the block, and once more raiſes his head, in wiſhful expectation of the royal clemency.—Had a meſſenger appeared, at the critical inſtant, with a ſhout of joy upon his tongue, and a ſealed pardon in his hand; O! how tranſporting the news! inexpreſſibly welcome the favour!—What was denied to his paſſionate deſires, denied to the importunate ſolicitations of his friends, is freely offered to us in the goſpel of CHRIST: a pardon of infinitely higher conſequence, which obliterates millions and millions of rebellious acts; which extends its bleſſed effects, not merely through the little ſpan of life, but beyond the gates of the grave,—beyond the boundaries of time,—through all the ages of eternity.

How unfathomable is that immenſe flood, on which my Theron lately exerciſed his contemplation! The plumbing plummets, with all their length of cordage, are unable to find a bottom. Were the hugeſt millſtones, or the higheſt towers, or the moſt ſpacious cities, caſt into that prodigious gulf, they would be totally overwhelmed, and irrecoverably loſt. Therefore the inſpired prophet, to ſhew the boundleſs extent of the divine mercies in JESUS CHRIST, and to denote the fulneſs of their pardon who are cleanſed in the REDEEMER's blood, hath illuſtrated both by this grand ſimilitude: Thou wilt caſt all their ſins into the depths of the ſea †;—not one, or a few, but all their ſins;——not barely behind thy back, but into the ſea;—and not into the ſhallow parts, but in the very depths of the ocean;—ſo that they ſhall never riſe up in judgment; never be taken notice of; no, nor ever be remembered any more.

With an act of total indemnity, let us join a thorough reſtoration to favour.——If the wrath of an earthly king be as the roaring of a lion ‡; how much more tremendous is his indignation, who is able to caſt both body and ſoul into hell! If the favour of an earthly ſovereign be as dew upon the graſs; how much more deſirable and delightful HIS loving-kindneſs, whom all things in heaven and earth obey!——By the righteouſneſs of JESUS CHRIST, we are freed from all foreboding apprehenſions of the former, and eſta-

* John vi. 63.

† Iſ. lii. 7. Never did language beſpeak an enraptured ſoul, more ſignificantly than this ſacred exclamation. The prophet is all wonder and all joy. He is ſo enamoured with his ſubject, and ſo captivated with the glory of the goſpel, that he can never ſay enough of its excellencies.——Good tidings; the very beſt, that earth could receive, or heaven proclaim. Good tidings of good; a moſt comprehenſive good; a collection of every bleſſing; or all good things in one. Publiſh peace; peace with GOD, the everlaſting King; and that ſweet peace of conſcience, which the whole world cannot give. Publiſh ſalvation; or that gift of righteouſneſs which is the meritorious cauſe, together with that ſpirit of liberty and ſpirit of adoption, which are the rich and grand conſtituents of ſalvation. That ſay unto Zion, Thy GOD reigneth; not ſin and Satan, not luſt and appetite, oppreſſive tyrants and worſe than Egyptian taſk-maſters; but the all-wiſe and infinitely gracious JEHOVAH; he, even he ſetteth up his pure, his peaceful, his ſpiritual kingdom, in the believer's heart, in the Gentile nations, and in all lands.

‡ Iſ. xliii. 10. 11. 12. ‖ Ezek. xxvii. 5. &c.

* Jer. xxxiii. 8. † Mic. vii. 19. ‡ Prov. xix. 12.

bliſhed

blished in the comfortable poſſeſſion of the latter. The goſpel renews and ratifies that joyful proclamation of the angelic hoſt, Peace on earth, and good-will to men *. GOD is not only pacified towards believers, but well pleaſed with them in his dear SON. They are the objects of his complacential delight, and he rejoices over them to do them good.

Nay, they are made children, ſons and daughters of the LORD almighty †; and if ſons, then heirs of GOD, and joint heirs with CHRIST ‡.—The chief captain mentioned in the Acts, purchaſed his freedom of the imperial city Rome, with a great ſum of money ‖. If ſuch a little tranſient immunity was ſo valuable in his eſteem, who can expreſs the worth, who can conceive the dignity, of this divine adoption? Yet it belongs to tho e who receive the goſpel, and are intereſted in CHRIST.—— They have acceſs to the omnipotent BEING; ſuch free and welcome acceſs, as a beloved child to an indulgent father. To him they may fly for aid, in every difficulty; and from him obtain a ſupply, in all their wants.—GOD, as the ſacred charter runs, IS THEIR GOD. All his lovely, all his adorable perfections, are their glorious inheritance, and exceeding great reward. That eternal power, to which nothing is impoſſible, exerts itſelf as their guard; and that unerring wiſdom, from which nothing is concealed, acts as their guide. His very juſtice is no longer an incenſed adverſary, demanding vengeance or meditating deſtruction; but a faithful guarantee, to provide for the punctual execution of the REDEEMER's treaty, and their complete enjoyment of its various bleſſings.—What a privilege is this! Rather what a cluſter of privileges is here! Weigh the kingdoms of the world; caſt all the glories of them into the ſcale; and they will be found, when compared with theſe divine prerogatives, emptier than the bubble that burſts, lighter than the ſpark that expires.

In the goſpel are given exceeding great and precious promiſes. Of ſuch value, that they were procured by the blood of CHRIST; of ſuch certainty, that they are ratified by the oath § of JEHOVAH. So durable, that, though all fleſh is graſs, and all the goodlineſs thereof as the flower of the graſs, this word of our GOD abideth for ever ¶; ſo efficacious, that there are no ſuch cordials to revive our fainting, and no ſuch bulwarks to ſecure our endangered ſouls. With theſe the Bible is as richly repleniſhed, as the clear midnight-ſky is beſpangled with ſtars. They are all yea and amen, conſigned over as a ſure unalienable portion, to them that are in JESUS CHRIST †.

Another benefit, given in conſequence of the REDEEMER's righteouſneſs, is the ſanctifying SPIRIT. A moſt comprehenſive bleſſing this! Our SAVIOUR intimates, that it includes every heavenly gift, is an aſſemblage of all good things +.—How ſingular a comfort muſt it be to blind Bartimeus, to have his eyes opened, and behold the all-chearing light of the ſun ++! So, and far more comfortable, are the enlightening influences of the bleſſed SPIRIT, when they ſhine upon the wretched creature, who ſits in darkneſs and the ſhadow of death. How peculiar a mercy for the impure and abhorred leper, to be healed of his inveterate diſeaſe! to feel the ſoothing ſenſations of eaſe, where ſores rankled and pain raged! Inſtead of enfeebling languors and loathſome deformity, vigour braces his limbs, and comelineſs blooms in his countenance =. Equally benign and equally ſalubrious, is the agency of the divine SPIRIT, on our depraved, polluted, ſenſual minds.—— How ſignal was the recovery, and how welcome the change! when that unhappy creature, ſo wildly agitated by a miſchievous damon, was reinſtated in the peaceful poſſeſſion of himſelf and his faculties! when, inſtead of unnaturally cutting his own fleſh, or committing barbarous outrages on innocent travellers, he ſat compoſed and attentive at the feet of JESUS *! receiving heavenly inſtruction from his lips, and learning the meekneſs of wiſdom from his example. So ſalutary and beneficial is the tranſforming power of the HOLY GHOST the Comforter; ſoftening the rugged, ſweetening the moroſe, and calming the paſſionate temper.—It is undoubtedly the utmoſt improvement, and the higheſt happineſs of our nature, to have the image of the bleſſed GOD reinſtamped on our hearts. This is an earneſt, and an anticipation alſo, of endleſs felicity: a bud which will open in heaven, and ſpread into immortal glory: a dawn which will ſhine more and more, till the Sun of Righteouſneſs ariſes, and brightens it into everlaſting day. This bud the ſanctifying SPIRIT ingrafts, the dawn the grace of our LORD JESUS CHRIST diffuſes, in the barren and benighted ſoul.

In a word, receive this righteouſneſs, and you have a title to all bleſſings, whether they be preſent or future, bodily or ſpiritual, temporal or eternal. From the neceſſary conveniencies of bread to eat, and raiment to put on; even to the crowns of glory, and the fulneſs of joy; all, all, are owing to our REDEEMER's righteouſneſs.—You ſee now, Theron, that our ſcheme has no tendency to impoveriſh your ſpiritual condition, or diminiſh your true riches; any more than thoſe tracts of water, which ſurround our iſland, are detrimental to the wealth of its inhabitants. Detrimental! No; they are an inexhauſtible ſource of treaſure. They convey to our uſe the choiceſt accommodations, and the moſt elegant delights; ſuch as would in vain be expected, if the whole ocean was converted into the fineſt meads, and moſt fertile paſtures. So—but to apply this compariſon, would foreſtal your principal queſtion.

"Do not theſe favours, though unſpeakably precious "in themſelves, tend to the introduction or ſupport of "ungodlineſs?"—Quite the reverſe. Have we redemption through our SAVIOUR's blood, even the forgiveneſs of our ſins? We are redeemed, not that we may ſink in ſupineneſs, or launch into licentiouſneſs, but that we may be a peculiar people, zealous of good works ‡.—Are we made the children of GOD? Then let our light ſo ſhine before men, that others, ſeeing our good works, may glorify our FATHER which is in heaven ‡. This is the genuine conſequence of ſuch a doctrine, and the proper effect of ſuch a benefit.—Are we veſted with ſacred privileges! Theſe admoniſh us, theſe urge us, to walk worthy of HIM, who hath called us to his kingdom and glory ‖. Shall the citizens of heaven be animated with no higher views, than the ſlaves of appetite, and drudges of the world?—Are we conſtituted heirs of the promiſes? The grace which they aſcertain, is intended to make us partakers of a divine nature §; and the encouragement which they adminiſter, incites us to cleanſe ourſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, incites us to perfect holineſs in the fear of GOD ¶.—Such high immunities are a moſt endearing perſuaſive, not to diſgrace, but magnify, not to provoke, but pleaſe, their unſpeakably-beneficent AUTHOR.

I might farther obſerve, that holineſs is one of the moſt diſtinguiſhed bleſſings in our ſyſtem; nay, is the very central bleſſing, to which all the others verge; in which they all terminate.——Were we choſen from eternity?——It was for this purpoſe, that we may be holy and unblameable in love †.——Are we called in time? It is to this intent, that we may ſhew forth the praiſes of him, who hath called us out of darkneſs into his marvellous light +.——Are we created again in CHRIST

* Luke ii. 14. † 2 Cor. vi. 18. ‡ Rom. viii. 17.
‖ Acts xxii. 28. § Heb. vi. 17. ¶ 1 Pet. i. 23.
† 2 Cor. i. 20.
+ Compare Matth. vii. 11. with Luke xi. 13.
++ Mark x. 52. = Matth. viii. 3.

* Mark. v. 15. † Tit. ii. 14.
‡ Matth. v. 16. ‖ 1 Theſſ. iii. 12. § 2 Pet. i. 4.
¶ 2 Cor. vii. 1. † Eph. i. 4. + 1 Pet. ii. 9.

CHRIST JESUS? It is, to capacitate us for acceptable service, and to furnish us unto every good work *. I will put my spirit within you, saith the LORD. For what end? That ye may walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them †. Here comes in my Theron's favourite endowment, sincere obedience. Far, very far from discarding sincere obedience, we should only introduce it, under its due character, and in its proper order. Under its due character; as the fruit, not the cause, of our interest in CHRIST's righteousness. In its due order; as following, not preceding, the gift of justification.

These privileges, my dear friend, are salutary, as the pool of Bethesda ‡. They are restorative, as the waters of Siloam ‖: or like that sacred stream flowing from the sanctuary: which healed the rivers, healed the sea, and made even the desert flourish §.—If justification by the righteousness of CHRIST had a tendency to subvert the foundation of holiness, to confirm the hypocritical professor in his neglect of moral duties, or discourage the sincere convert from the pursuit of real virtue; it would, doubtless, be unworthy of any acceptation, or rather worthy of universal abhorrence. But I dare appeal, not only to the nature of the doctrine, and the reason of things, but to the experience of all;—yes, of all who have tasted, that the LORD is gracious ¶. "Speak, ye "who are enabled to believe, that GOD is reconciled; "has received the all-satisfying atonement; and placed "his SON's righteousness to your account! that he re"gards you as his children, and will receive you to his "glory!—Have you not, under such convictions, felt "your hearts exulting with conscious joy; and every "power of your souls springing forward, to glorify your "heavenly FATHER,—glorify him by every instance "of obedience, fidelity, and zeal?"

Can such invaluable benefits have a prejudicial influence on our practice, if, to the consideration of their superlative worth, we add that unequalled price, by which they were purchased?——HE who is high above all height, humbled himself, to be made of a woman, and born in a stable; that we might be admitted into the family of GOD, and exalted to the mansions of heaven. And will this great humiliation, which is the basis of our happiness, prompt us to look down with contempt on others, or entertain arrogant thoughts of ourselves?

The HOLY BEGOTTEN and the supreme delight of the FATHER, was numbered with transgressors, and ranked with felons; that we might be joined to the innumerable company of angels, and associated with saints in glory everlasting. And will any one make this a precedent or a plea, for walking in the counsel of the ungodly; for standing in the way of sinners; or sitting in the seat of the scornful †?

All manner of evil was spoken of the faultless JESUS; his blessed name was vilified by blaspheming tongues, and his unblameable conduct blackened with the foulest aspersions; on purpose that we may be applauded, when we are judged; and each hear those transporting words, WELL DONE THOU GOOD AND FAITHFUL SERVANT ÷! Will this embolden us to dishonour our LORD, and stain our holy profession? Shall we from hence be induced to open the mouths of his enemies, and furnish them with occasion to speak reproachfully?

HE went, galled with the lashes of the scourge, and penetrated with the pungent thorns; he went, loaded with the execrable cross, and marking the way with his precious blood; thus he went to his ignominious and tormenting exit; that we may enter into Zion with songs of triumph on our lips, and with everlasting joy on our heads. Does this invite us to go, crowned with roseBuds, to the house of riot; or go, muffled in disguise, to the midnight-revel? Will it not rather incline us, to sit down at his pierced feet, and bathe them with our tears, and take delight * in mourning for our crucified LORD?

Behold! he hangs on the cursed tree! There, there he hangs; rent with wounds, and racked with pain.—He pours his groans, and spills his blood. He bows his head, his patient princely head, and dies—astonishing, ravishing consideration! he dies for you and me. And will this harden our hearts, or arm our hands, to crucify him afresh by any allowed iniquity? Does not reason suggest, and Christianity dictate, and all that is ingenuous enforce, the apostle's important inference? If one died for all, then they which live, should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them †.

He thought upon us, long before the foundations of the world were laid; he remembers us, now he is exalted to the right hand of the MAJESTY in the heavens; and will never, never forget us, through all the revolutions of eternity. And is this a motive to forget his name; to disregard his word; or to imitate the shameful neutrality and indifference of Gallio? Impressed with a sense of this invariable and everlasting kindness, surely we shall declare ourselves, as those captives in Babylon, concerning their dear native city Jerusalem; If I forget thee, O blessed JESUS, let my right hand forget her cunning; if I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth ‡.

Remember thee!
Ay, my dear LORD, while memory holds a seat
In this devoted breast—Remember thee?
Yes, from the table of my memory
I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
Which youth and observation copied there,
And thy remembrance all alone shall live
Within the book and volume of my brain ‖.

Is it possible, Theron, for the contemplation of such goodness, to weaken the motives, or relax the springs of obedience? As soon may lenient balms kill, and rankest poisons cure.——Is such a belief calculated to discourage duty, and patronize licentiousness? Just as much as vernal showers are fitted to cleave the earth with chinks, or summer suns to glaze the waters with ice.——When Anthony made an oration to the soldiers, on occasion of Cæsar's death; when he shewed them their honoured master's robe, transfixed with so many daggers; when he reminded them of the victories they had won, under their assassinated commander; when he farther informed them, that their murdered general had remembered them in his will,—had bequeathed all his fine gardens, and beautiful walks to their use and delight;—heavens! how they took fire! Revenge sparkled in their eyes; Revenge flamed in their bosoms; Revenge was all their cry. They flew to the houses of the conspirators; laid them even with the ground; and had they met the owners, would have tore them limb from limb.—Some such resentment against sin, will a sense of our adored REDEEMER's sufferings excite; especially when set home by his blessed SPIRIT, and considered in connection with those detestable iniquities which caused them, and with those invaluable blessings which were procured by them.—Nothing, nothing is so effectual, to beget the

* The sorrow, arising from such tender and grateful views of the crucified JESUS, is that evangelical godly sorrow, which worketh repentance unto salvation not to be repented of, 2 Cor. vii. 10. And is there not reason,—when we consider the pains he felt, the curse he bore, and the blood he shed,—is there not abundant reason to say, with Homer's afflicted hero?

Τλαπρηϋτατόν γε νοεῖτε.
Iliad. Χ.

* Eph. ii. 10. † Ezek. xxxvi. 27. ‡ John v. 4.
‖ John ix. 7. § Ezek. xlvii. 8, 9. ¶ 1 Pet. ii. 3.
† Psal. i. 1. ÷ Matth. xxv. 21.
† 2 Cor. v. 15, 16.
‡ Psal. cxxxvii. 5, 6. ‖ SHAKESPEAR.

most

most irreconcileable abhorrence of all ungodliness, to make the remembrance of it bitter as wormwood, the temptations to it horrible as hell.

Let me remind you of an incident, related by your favourite historian Xenophon.——Cyrus had taken captive the young prince of Armenia, together with his beautiful and blooming princess; whom he had lately married, and of whom he was passionately fond. When both were brought to the tribunal, Cyrus asked the prince, what he would give to be reinstated in his kingdom!—He answered, with an air of indifference, "That, as "for his crown, and his own liberty, he valued them at a "very low rate. But if Cyrus would restore his beloved "princess to her native dignity and hereditary possessions, he should infinitely rejoice; and would pay (this "he uttered with tenderness and ardor) would willingly "pay his life for the purchase."——Could such a declaration, so highly endearing, alienate the affections of the princess, or induce her to violate her fidelity? Let her own conduct answer the query. When all the prisoners were dismissed with freedom, it is impossible to express how they were charmed with their royal benefactor. Some celebrated his martial accomplishments. Some applauded his social virtues. All were prodigal of their praises, and lavish in grateful acknowledgments. And you, said the prince, (addressing himself to his bride) what think you of Cyrus?—I did not observe him, replied the princess.—Not observe him! Upon what then was your attention fixed?—Upon that dear and generous man, who declared, "he would purchase my liberty at "the expence of his very life *."——Was her heart impressed, were all her thoughts engrossed, by that benevolent offer? And shall ours be less affected with the incomparably more tender and endearing love of CHRIST?——He was not only willing, but actually laid down his life, for us; a life immensely precious, and of higher dignity than all heavens. He laid down his life, not for amiable persons, or worthy creatures, but for vile earth, and miserable sinners;——purchasing thereby for us and our children, privileges of inestimable worth, and of everlasting duration.

Will not such beneficence, so unmerited, so unequalled, win † the most reluctant, and melt the most obdurate heart? The heart, which is not wrought upon by this miracle of divine compassion, must be steel, must be adamant; quite impenetrable, and absolutely incorrigible.——"O thou ever blessed, thou all-gracious RE-"DEEMER, thy love to us is wonderful; passing, I will "not say, the love of women ‡, but the power of language, "and the reach of thought! Who can hold out against "such charming attractives? who can resist such hea-"venly goodness?——Only let a sense of thy love be al-"ways warm, always operative on our minds. This "shall be instead of a thousand arguments to engage, in-"stead of ten thousand motives to quicken our obedience."—Other motives may produce some external services, or hypocritical performances. Terrors may extort the drudgery of the hand. Bribes may purchase the adulation of the tongue. But this conciliates the will; this proselytes the affections; this captivates the very soul; and makes all its powers like the chariots of Amminadab *, ready, expedite, and active in duty.

Hear the holy apostle, giving an account of himself and his spiritual state. He speaks in language somewhat similar, though greatly superior, to the profession of the Armenian princess.—"So great is the glory, so rich "is the grace, so superabundant are the merits of my "REDEEMER, that I am determined to know nothing but "CHRIST JESUS and him crucified †."—Ask the same zealous apostle, What prompted him to such indefatigable diligence, and animated him with such invincible fortitude? Why did he decline no toil, and dread no danger; rejoice in tribulation, and glory in reproach ‡; welcome persecution, and defy death? This is his reply; "The "love of CHRIST constraineth ‖ me; beareth me on, with "much the same strong, steady, prevailing influence, "which winds and tide exert, when they waft the vessel "to its destined harbour."

Shall we hear what another disciple, one of the most advanced proficients in divine love, says upon the subject? one, who learned his knowledge, not in the school of philosophy, but on his SAVIOUR's bosom? This is the love of GOD, that we walk after his commandments §. This is the natural fruit, this the certain evidence, of love to that glorious, transcendent, and adorable BEING. What? Not that we supinely neglect, much less that we profanely violate, his sacred precepts; but that, with assiduity and delight, we make them the rule of our conduct.—Charity edifieth ¶: this divine love, far from razing the foundations, far from demolishing the structure, buildeth up † the fair fabric of universal godliness.

Let me borrow an illustration from your own letter. When a pebble is cast into the smooth canal, it moves the centre, and forms a circle. The first creates a second; the second breaks into a third; they continue to multiply and expand themselves, till the whole surface is covered with circular undulations. Thus, the love of an all-gracious REDEEMER +, when

* Εἰ μὴ καὶ τῆς ψυχῆς πριάμην ὥστε μηπόλε λαβεῖνσαι ταύτην. XENOPH. de Cyri Instit. lib. III.

† Beneficia, says one of the ancients, qui invenit, compedes invenit. Which fine sentiment may almost serve as a comment on the beautiful and tender declaration of GOD by his prophet Hosea; I drew them to obedience with cords of a man, with bands of love, chap. xi. 4. HE who made, and intimately knows our frame, knew that these motives would be most powerful in operation: most powerful on creatures capable of love, and susceptible of gratitude. Therefore he calls them, the cords of a man.—And if a deliverance from temporal bondage, if the settlement of Israel in all the plenty of Canaan, constituted so sweet an incitement to duty; doubtless, the everlasting benefits mentioned by Aspasio, together with all the endearing circumstances of their procurement, must be abundantly more engaging.—May the SPIRIT from on high rend the veil of ignorance and insensibility! let into our hearts the knowledge and faith of these great evangelical truths! We shall then want no farther demonstration, either of the propriety of the remark, or the efficacy of the principles.

‡ 2 Sam. i. 26.

* Cant. vi. 12. † 1 Cor. ii. 2.

‡ That supreme affection to the blessed JESUS, which reigned in the hearts of his primitive disciples, could never have been so emphatically displayed by any strokes of eloquence, as by their own chearful and heroic manner of expressing themselves, with relation to their sufferings.—Far from regretting, I take pleasure, (says the apostle) in afflictions; and embrace them, when occurring in my divine MASTER's service, with a real complacency, εὐδοκῶ. 2 Cor. xii. 10.—To you, adds the same apostle, and speaks in a congratulatory strain, it is given (ἐχαρίσθη) as a desirable privilege, to suffer for the adorable JESUS, Philip. i. 29.——St Luke, recording the abusive and cruel outrages, committed on two disciples, for preaching boldly in the name of CHRIST, uses a phrase remarkably gallant and spirited; They departed from the council rejoicing, ὅτι κατηξιώθησαν ἀτιμασθῆναι, that they were counted worthy to suffer shame; had the honour of being vilified and reproached, in so venerable and glorious a cause.—This passage is a fine exemplification of the figure, which rhetoricians style Oxymorum. And Horace's—Dulce periculum—Splendide mendax—Quo beatus vulnere—seem flat and jejune upon the comparison, Acts v. 41.

‖ Could you station a coward in the midst of a numerous army advancing to the battle; or rather, could you place a boat on the impetuous cataracts of the Nile; you would see what is meant by the significant word, συνέχει. 2 Cor. v. 14.

§ 2 John ver. 6. ¶ 1 Cor. viii. 1. † Οἰκοδομεῖ.

+ I cannot but think, the reasoning is much more just, and the principle much more efficacious, in Aspasio's manner of stating the affair, than in the following famous lines:

Self-love but serves the virtuous mind to wake,
As the small pebble stirs the peaceful lake:

shed abroad in the soul by the HOLY GHOST *, will diffuse itself through every intellectual faculty, and extend to every species of duty. Till the whole heart is filled with the image, and the whole behaviour regulated by the law of the blessed GOD.—So that I am persuaded, there is a great deal of truth and solidity, as every one must acknowledge, there is a peculiar spirit and beauty, in the apostrophe of our poet;

Talk they of morals? O thou bleeding love!
Thou Maker of new morals to mankind,
The grand morality is love of THEE. †.

You mentioned the loadstone, as most signally and most extensively serviceable in the seafaring business. Such is faith, so efficacious, in practical Christianity.—This, perhaps, you think a scanty and defective principle. The property of shewing the northern part of the world, may seem equally mean and inconsiderable. But as the one is the very soul of navigation, the other is the very life of holiness.—It is somewhat like the stone, which the Babylonian monarch saw in his dream, cut from the rock without hands ‡: which, though despicable to human appearance, was mighty in operation; destroyed the superb statue; became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. Thus will faith exert and diffuse its kindly yet triumphant energy, to every corruption, that it may be subdued; to every virtue, that it may be cherished.

Faith is a real persuasion, that the blessed JESUS has shed his blood for me, and fulfilled all righteousness in my stead; that, through this great atonement and meritorious obedience, he has purchased, even for my sinful soul, reconciliation with GOD, sanctifying grace, and every spiritual blessing ‖.

When the ALMIGHTY sunk the cavities of the ocean, and replenished them with the liquid element, he provided an inexhaustible source of moisture, for the refreshment of every animal, and the nutriment of every vegetable. In like manner, where-ever he works this true faith, he plants the seed of universal holiness, and provides for the propagation of every virtue. This persuasion of the divine good-will overcomes our natural reluctance, and excites a fervent desire to please our most merciful FATHER. This experience of the abundant grace of CHRIST, attracts and assimilates the soul; turning it into his amiable likeness, "as the the wax is turned

The centre mov'd, a circle strait succeeds,
Another still, and still another spreads.
Friend, parent, neighbour, first it will embrace,
His country next, and next all human race:
Wide and more wide th' o'erflowings of the mind
Take every creature in of every kind.

Self-love too often acts on the affections, as the blast on the leaves, shrivels and contracts them. But the love of CHRIST, like a vernal sun on the tender buds, opens and expands them; till they become wide, as the extent of his gracious redemption; wide, as the compass of his rational creation.—By self-love I am almost necessarily determined to malign the persons, who cross my inclinations, and obstruct my interests. From the love of CHRIST, I have a cogent reason, and a most prevailing inducement to love my very enemies.——How does St Peter analyze this subject? not in Mr Pope's, not in Lord Bolingbroke's method. Godliness, or a a supreme love to the gracious GOD, he represents as the root or trunk: then brotherly kindness, or an affectionate regard to relations, friends, neighbours, as some of the grand and master branches; after this charity, or a diffusive good-will to all mankind, as the spread of boughs, which complete and adorn the tree, 2 Pet. i. 7.

* Rom. v. 5.

† Night-Thoughts, No. IV. ‡ Dan. ii. 34.

‖ This definition of faith may possibly, at the first view, dissatisfy and alarm even some pious people; including, as they apprehend, too great a degree of assurance. But if they please to take it in connection with the explanation and adjustment, delivered in the sixteenth Dialogue, I hope, all cause of disapprobation or surprise will vanish. I flatter myself, that the sentiment will be found, not only comfortable for the sinner, but agreeable to scripture; and truly unexceptionable, as well as highly desirable.

"to the imprinted seal."—What will be the language of such a person?

"Did my exalted MASTER empty himself and become poor, that his most unworthy servant might be "filled with all the fulness of GOD *? And shall not I "chearfully deny myself the expensive pleasures of the "world, that I may have somewhat to bestow on his "needy children?—Has the death of CHRIST, as a punishment, satisfied the most rigorous justice for my sins; "as a price, has it redeemed me from every evil; and, "as a sacrifice, made my peace with GOD most high? "And shall I not, by these mercies of my dying LORD, "be induced to present all the members of my body, "and all the faculties of my soul, as a living sacrifice † to "his honour; to be employed in his service, and resigned to his will?—Do I believe, that my SAVIOUR "has not only rescued me from hell, but established my "title to all the blessings included in the promises, and all "the felicity laid up in heaven? And can I neglect to "seek those invaluable blessings, or forbear to aspire after "this immense felicity? Can I be so ungrateful as to affront, so insensible as to forget, the infinitely-beneficent "AUTHOR of both? Am I persuaded, that the PRINCE "of peace is entered into glory as my forerunner ‡, and "has prepared mansions of bliss for my final reception? "And shall I not follow him thither in my hopes and "my affections? be as a pilgrim below, and have my "conversation above?—Is not this a most sweet and effectual method of gaining my heart, and if my heart, "then all my powers, to his blessed self?"

Such, my dear Theron, will be the effects of faith. Therefore it is not in vain, much less to the discouragement of real virtue, that the scripture lays such a stress upon faith; so frequently urges the importance and necessity of faith; represents faith, as the principal work of the divine SPIRIT, and the great instrument of receiving salvation: Because it is a sure, a sovereign means of purifying the heart ‖, and never fails to work by love §. ——Was faith, as some people are apt to imagine, like a candle put under a bushel, or like the lamps which burn in sepulchres; it would then be an insignificant labour to inculcate it, and no better than an empty flourish of words to celebrate it. But nothing is more certain, than that faith is a vital, an operative, a victorious principle.

CHRIST is a store-house of all good. Whatever is necessary to remove our guilt, whatever is expedient, for renewing our nature, whatever is proper to fit us for the eternal fruition of GOD, all this is laid up in CHRIST. And all this is received by faith, for application, use, and enjoyment.——Accordingly, when Zaccheus BELIEVED, he commenced a new man; his bowels yearned with compassion; the rapacious publican became a friend to the needy, and a father to the poor ¶. When the Macedonians BELIEVED, how eminently was their spirit ennobled, and their practice improved! Though pressed with afflictions, their souls overflowed with joy; and even in the deepest poverty, they signalized themselves by the abundance of their liberality †.——When the first converts BELIEVED, the change in their behaviour was so remarkable, the holiness of their lives so exemplary, that they won the favour, and commanded the respect, of all the people ††.—In short, it is as impossible for the sun

* Eph. iii. 19. † Rom. xii. 1. ‡ Heb. vi. 20.

‖ Acts xv. 9. § Gal. v. 6. ¶ Luke xix. 8.

† 2 Cor. viii. 2. Here is, especially in the original, as fine an antithesis, perhaps, as ever was penned. Since my last notes were so copious, I shall forego the pleasure of particularizing the beauties of this clause. I leave it to the lover of sacred literature, to admire the apostle's expression, to be charmed with the spirit of the Macedonian believers, and to derive edification from both.

†† Acts. ii. 47.

ſun to be in his meridian ſphere, and not to diſſipate darkneſs, or diffuſe light; as for faith to exiſt in the ſoul, and not exalt the temper, and meliorate the conduct.—That my dear Theron may be eſtabliſhed in faith, may increaſe in faith, may abound in faith, is the moſt affectionate wiſh that thought can ſuggeſt, or friendſhip adopt. May his faith therefore be eſtabliſhed like the mountain-oaks, increaſe like the progreſſive ſtream, till it ſpreads and abounds like the overflowing flood *!

* Theſe images we may venture to ſtyle beautiful, becauſe they are borrowed from the apoſtle; βεβαιωμενοι εν τη πιστει. Col. ii. 7. ηνωκεν της πιστεως. Phil. i. 25. υπαυξανει η πιστις. 2 Theſſ. i. 3.

I intended to have cloſed my letter, and confirmed my point, by a very memorable ſtory. But however your patience may perſevere, my time fails, and my hand is weary. The next poſt, if nothing unexpected intervenes, ſhall bring you the ſequel. May it, when brought to my friend, be as a nail faſtened in a ſure place, and give the rivet of conviction to all theſe important truths! —In the mean time, or rather at all times, I remain

Cordially and invariably yours,

ASPASIO.

LETTER XI.

ASPASIO to THERON.

Dear THERON,

FAITH in the imputed righteouſneſs of JESUS CHRIST is a fundamental principle, in that invaluable ſyſtem of ſacred and divine philoſophy,—THE GOSPEL: by which the heavenly TEACHER is continually training up millions of rational and immortal creatures, for the true perfection of their nature; for the final fruition of their GOD; or, in other words, for a ſtate of conſummate happineſs and everlaſting exaltation. —In this ſchool, may you and I be humble ſtudents, and daily proficients! While others are ambitious of glittering diſtinctions, and ſounding titles, may it be our higheſt aim, our greateſt glory, to anſwer the character —of BELIEVERS! By this character, the ſupreme LORD diſtinguiſhes his choſen people, and denominates their heirs of ſalvation.——This character ſtands faireſt in the book of life, and brighteſt in the annals of eternity.——This character however neglected or diſeſteemed among men, will be remembered and had in honour, when the pompous names of ſtateſman and generaliſſimo are known no more.

As faith is of ſuch ſingular and extenſive efficacy in genuine Chriſtianity, methinks, I would have all our meditations terminate on its glorious object, and be calculated to invigorate ſo beneficial a principle.——When we reflect on that ſtupendous act, the creation of the world out of nothing; let us remember, it was HIS act, who obtained eternal redemption for us. When we contemplate that immenſe theatre of wonders, the heavens and their ſhining hoſts; let us not forget, that they are all HIS works, who brought in everlaſting righteouſneſs for us.—— Do we turn our thoughts to the ocean, that ſpacious and magnificent canal, which covers more than half the globe? It was formed by HIS word, and is obedient to HIS will, who loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood. Do we take a view of the earth, that grand and inexhauſtible magazine, which furniſhes ſuch a multiplicity of conveniencies for ſo many millions of creatures? It is all HIS property, and wholly at HIS diſpoſal, who emptied * himſelf for our ſake, and had not where to lay his head.——For thus ſaith the inſpired philoſopher, thus ſaith the oracle of revelation, All things were made BY him, and FOR him †.

The great CREATOR has enriched this habitable globe with a profuſion of good. He has adorned it with a variety, an order, and a beauty, which are perfectly charming. He has ennobled it with a dignity, a ſublimity, and a grandeur, which are at once delightful and aſtoniſhing. In all this, reaſon cannot but diſcern a clear manifeſtation of power, a bright diſplay of wiſdom, and a rich demonſtration of benignity.——But will the CREATOR himſelf vouchſafe to be made fleſh, on purpoſe that he may obey and die for his guilty creatures? This is what neither the utmoſt penetration of men, nor the very ſuperior intelligence of angels, could ever have demonſtrated, diſcovered, or conceived. This exceeds whatever the elements have produced, whatever the ſun has beheld, as much as the extent and magnificence of the planetary ſyſtem exceed the dimenſions and the furniture of a ſhepherd's hut.——To reveal this, is the bleſſed peculiarity of the goſpel. To know and believe this, is the diſtinguiſhing prerogative of a Chriſtian. To apply this, to dwell upon this, to connect this with all our obſervations of the univerſe, ſhould be our favourite and habitual employ. This will improve wonder into devotion, and raiſe the entertainments of ſcience into the joy of ſalvation. This will render every philoſophical ſpeculation a ſtrengthener of our faith; and make the various ſcenes of nature, a guide to grace, and a ſtep to glory.——When this is done, then all things attain their proper end; and as they are by CHRIST, ſo they are for CHRIST.

But I forget myſelf, my buſineſs, and my promiſe. I am to eſtabliſh the point by inconteſtable fact, not to embelliſh it by looſe harangue. With pleaſure I addreſs myſelf to diſcharge the obligation; and exemplify, in a very memorable inſtance, the power of faith on religious practice.——From whence ſhall I fetch my exemplification? From the memoirs of the indefatigable apoſtle of the Gentiles? Here I find one, moſt conciſely, and at the ſame time moſt forcibly diſplayed.

After theſe things were ended, ſays the ſacred hiſtorian, Paul purpoſed in the ſpirit, when he had paſſed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jeruſalem, ſaying, After I have been there, I muſt alſo ſee Rome *.——Who can obſerve, and not admire, this plain unambitious manner of relating a ſeries of labours, the moſt ſignally ſucceſsful, and moſt extenſively uſeful? Nothing in human conduct ever ſurpaſſed the greatneſs of the one, and perhaps nothing in hiſtorical compoſition ever equalled the ſimplicity of the other.

St Paul had already reduced Epheſus and Aſia to the obedience of CHRIST. He had already brought Macedonia and Achaia into ſubjection to the goſpel. He had long ago erected the ſtandard, and ſpread the triumphs of Chriſtianity, in the regions of Arabia. Yet, as if he had hitherto achieved nothing, he bends his forces towards Jeruſalem. Then he marks out Rome for the ſeat of his ſpiritual warfare. After this he forms the ſame beneficent deſign upon Spain: including, in his comprehenſive plan, the metropolis and the boundaries † of the known world.——The uni-

* Εκτυωσιν ταυτην. Phil. ii. 7. † Col i. 16.

* Acts xix. 21.

† Spain was then ſuppoſed to be the boundary of the weſtern, as the Ganges was reckoned the extremity of the eaſtern world.

verſe

verſe is but juſt large enough, to be the ſcene of his action; he never diſcontinues the charitable campaign, but with the laſt breath of his life; and he ſpeaks of this unintermitted courſe of arduous and dangerous ſervices, as if he was only going to make ſome friendly viſit, or join in a party of innocent pleaſure; After I have been at Jeruſalem, I muſt alſo ſee Rome *.

Which of your Alexanders, which of your Cæſars, which of all the heroes renowned in Grecian or Roman ſtory, can vie with the zeal and magnanimity of this poor, deſpiſed tent-maker? ſo poor, that he was conſtrained to work with his own hands, for a morſel of bread; ſo deſpiſed, that he was frequently treated as the offſcouring of all things. Notwithſtanding all theſe diſcouragements, what did he not attempt, what did he not accompliſh, for the honour of his MASTER, and the good of his fellow-creatures?—He embarks in a ſhallop; he has neither ſhield nor ſpear; yet he purpoſes to command the ocean, and conquer the globe. What greatneſs of ſoul was here! he expects † nothing but poverty, contempt, and death; yet his heart is big with the hope of enriching, ennobling, and ſaving ages and generations. What benevolence of temper was this!—Should you inquire concerning this illuſtrious champion of the croſs, Who were his potent auxiliaries? None but the divine SPIRIT.——What were his mighty weapons? Nothing but the word of truth and grace.——Whence proceeded his intrepid, his enterprizing, his all-conquering reſolution? Only from faith, a lively faith in JESUS CHRIST.

This, I think, is a ſufficient confirmation of my doctrine.——Nevertheleſs I have another inſtance to produce; one that was exhibited in an age, when the glorious object of our faith ſhone with dim luſtre and with diſtant beams; yet it may juſtly be admired, and will hardly be eclipſed, by the moſt enlightened among the Chriſtian ſaints.—To keep you no longer in ſuſpenſe, the caſe, I mean, is that which Moſes records, and the apoſtle celebrates. BY FAITH Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Iſaac; and he that had received the promiſes, offered up his only begotten ſon ‡.—

As this is ſo ſingular an example of the efficacious and triumphant operation of faith; unequalled in any nation of the world, or under any diſpenſation of religion; you will give me leave to dwell a little on ſome of its marvellous circumſtances.

Abraham was an eminent and diſtinguiſhed ſervant of the moſt high GOD; favoured with peculiar manifeſtations of the divine will, and dignified with the honourable title of his MAKER's friend *. Yet even this man is haraſſed with a long ſucceſſion of troubles; and, which was reckoned in thoſe ages the moſt deplorable calamity, goes childleſs †.

Long he waits, worſhipping GOD with the moſt patient reſignation. At length, an oracle from the LORD gives him hope, gives him aſſurance of a ſon. Joyfully he receives the promiſe, and reſts in humble expectation of its accompliſhment.—Several years run their rounds, but no pleaſing infant prattles in his arms, or is dandled upon his knees. At laſt the handmaid becomes pregnant. But what a diſappointment was here! This is the ſon of the bond-woman, not of the free.

How afflicting the caſe of this excellent perſon! His kinsfolk and acquaintance ſee their olive-branches flouriſhing round about their tables. Even his ungodly neighbours have children at their deſire, and leave the reſidue of their ſubſtance for their babes. But Abraham, the worſhipper of the ALMIGHTY, the favourite of heaven;—this Abraham is deſtitute of an heir, to ſupport his name, to propagate his family, and inherit the bleſſing.—O the ſtraits! to which the believer is ſometimes reduced! How does a ſovereign Providence try his faith, as it were in a furnace of fire! not that it may be conſumed, but refined, and come forth with augmented luſtre, to the praiſe of ever-faithful, all-ſufficient grace.

GOD is pleaſed to renew the grant, and aſſure him more explicitly, that Sarah ſhall have a ſon. But this notice comes at a very late period in life; when Sarah is advanced in years, and too old, according to the courſe of nature, to conceive. However, the pious patriarch ſtaggers not through unbelief; but hopes even againſt hope ‖.—Is it improbable? is it difficult? nay, is it to all human appearance impoſſible? So much the fitter for the exertion, and ſo much the more proper for the diſplay of almighty power.

At laſt the gift ſo earneſtly deſired, is vouchſafed. Sarah has a child,—a ſon,—an Iſaac; one who ſhould be a ſource of conſolation and delight to his parents; ſhould fill their mouth with laughter §, and their tongue with joy.—With tender care, doubtleſs, this pleaſant plant is reared. Many prayers are put up for his long life, and great happineſs. The fond parents watch over him, as over the apple of their own eye. Their life is bound up in the life of the lad §.——He grows in grace, as he grows in ſtature. So amiable is his temper, and ſo engaging his behaviour, as could not fail of endearing him even to a ſtranger; how much more to ſuch indulgent parents, after ſo long a ſtate of barrenneſs, and ſo many expectations ſo frequently fruſtrated.

Now, methinks, we are ready to congratulate the happy ſire; and flatter ourſelves, that his tribulations

Omnibus in terris quæ ſunt a Gadibus uſque
Auroram et Gangen. Juv. Sat. X.

* I am quite charmed, I muſt confeſs, with this very ſimple, but incomparably-gallant manner of the apoſtle's ſpeaking. Far beyond all the pomp of panegyric, it diſplays the hero.

When a handful of Spartans undertook to defend the paſs of Thermopyla againſt the whole army of Perſia; ſo prodigious, it was reported, were the multitudes of the Perſians, that the very flight of their arrows would intercept the ſhining of the ſun. Then, ſaid Dieneces one of the Spartan leaders, we ſhall have the advantage of fighting in the ſhade.—Juſt before the battle of Agincourt, news was brought to King Henry's camp, that the French were exceedingly numerous, and would take the field with more than ſix times the number of the Engliſh troops. To which the brave Captain Gam immediately replied, Is it ſo? Then there are enough to be cut in pieces, enough to be taken priſoners, and enough to run away.——A commanding officer, I think, among the royaliſts, being beſieged by the parliamentary forces, was ſummoned to ſurrender the caſtle. The ſummons he rejected, and treated with contempt. Upon this, the enemy threatened, that, if he perſiſted in his reſolution, the walls ſhould, without farther delay, be battered to the ground. What if they are? was his anſwer. I am not obliged to rebuild them.

Such calm and undaunted ſentiments, amidſt circumſtances of the moſt imminent danger, argue an uncommon fortitude and ſuperiority of mind. But, if we conſider the nature of the apoſtle's enterprize; that it was nothing leſs than an open attack on the empire of Satan; a declared war againſt the whole idolatrous world; all which was to be attended with perſecution and impriſonment, was to end in martyrdom and death;—if we conſider this, I believe, nothing will appear, at once ſo humble and ſo exalted, ſo modeſt yet ſo magnanimous, as the turn and air of his expreſſion; After I have been at Jeruſalem, I muſt alſo ſee Rome.

* 2 Chron. xx. 7. Iſ. xli. 8.

† There was ſo much gall in this calamity, that it embittered every other ſpecies of happineſs. Viſited by this affliction, the patriarch could taſte no joy in his late ſignal victory; all his worldly proſperity was inſipid; and he ſeems to have been incapable of reliſhing any other comfort; What wilt thou give me, ſeeing I go childleſs? Gen. xv. 2.—I would entreat the reader to take particular notice of this circumſtance. It will have the ſame effect upon the repreſentation of Abraham's obedience, and the whole ſeries of his difficulties, as a magnifying glaſs has upon the objects to which it is applied.

† Acts xx. 23. ‡ Heb. xi. 17. ‡ Rom. iv. 18, 20.

‖ Pſal. cxxvi. 2. This is the import of the Hebrew name Iſaac.

§ Gen. xliv. 30.

have

have an end: that the ſtorms which ruffled the noon of life, are blown over; and the evening of his age is becoming calm and ſerene.—But let not him that girdeth on his harneſs, boaſt himſelf, as he that putteth it off *. Our warfare on the earth is never accompliſhed, till we bow our head, and give up the ghoſt. The ſharpeſt, the ſevereſt trial is ſtill behind. GOD, the ſupreme and uncontrollable GOD, demands the child. 'Tis the will of heaven, that he make his exit, juſt as he arrives at manhood. "Where now, Abraham, are all thy plea-"ſing proſpects? How often didſt thou ſay, in thy fond "delighted heart, This ſame ſhall comfort us concerning our "trouble †? Many have been my ſorrows; but this "child ſhall dry up my tears, and bring me to my grave "in peace——Alas! this lovely flower is to be cut "down, in its faireſt, fulleſt bloom. All thy ſhining "hopes are overcaſt in a moment."

Abraham ‡, ſays GOD,—Abraham knows the voice. It is the voice of condeſcending goodneſs. He had often heard it with a rapture of delight.—Inſtantly he replies, "Here I am. Speak, LORD; for thy ſervant is "all attention:" hoping, no doubt, to receive ſome freſh manifeſtation of the divine good-will to himſelf and his family; or ſome new diſcovery of the method, in which the divine wiſdom would accompliſh the promiſes, I will multiply thy ſeed; I will make thy ſeed as the duſt of the earth; and in thy ſeed ſhall all the families of the earth be bleſſed.

Take thy ſon; adds GOD. And might not Abraham reaſonably expect, that, ſince his ſon was advanced to years of maturity, he ſhould be directed how to ſettle him in the world with honour and advantage, where to find a virtuous and fruitful partner of his bed?—He is commanded, not barely to take his ſon, but his only ſon; his ſon Iſaac; whom he loved. How muſt therefore affecting images awaken all that ſoft complacency, and all that tender triumph, which are known only to the fondly-feeling heart of a parent! Muſt not ſuch an introduction, ſo remarkably endearing, heighten his expectation of ſome ſignal mercy, to be conferred on the beloved youth; and would it not render the bleſſing peculiarly acceptable, more than doubly welcome?

Was he not then ſtartled? was he not horribly amazed, when, inſtead of ſome renewed expreſſion of the divine favour, he received the following orders? Take now thy ſon,—thy only ſon,—Iſaac,—whom thou loveſt;—and get thee into the land of Moriah, and offer him there for a burnt-offering, upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of ‖.—

Was ever meſſage ſo alarming? each word more piercing to parental ears, than the keeneſt dagger to the heart. Every clauſe brings an additional load of miſery; till the whole command ſwells into the moſt accumulated and aggravated wo.

Abraham, take thy ſon.—Who but Abraham could have forbore remonſtrating and pleading, on ſuch an occaſion?—Ananias, being charged with a commiſſion to Saul the perſecutor, takes upon him to argue the caſe with his almighty SOVEREIGN: LORD, I have heard by many concerning this man, how much evil he hath done to thy ſaints at Jeruſalem; and here he hath authority from the chief prieſts, to bind all that call upon thy name *. Sure, it can never be ſafe or expedient to preſent myſelf voluntarily before him, who came hither breathing out threatenings and ſlaughter againſt me. What is this but to court danger; and run with open eyes into ruin?—Thus Ananias: and with how much greater appearance of reaſon might Abraham have replied?

"LORD, ſhall I loſe my child? loſe him, almoſt as "ſoon as I have received him? Didſt thou give him, "only to tantalize thy ſervant? Remember, gracious "GOD, the name he bears. How ſhall he anſwer its "chearing import; how ſhall he be a ſource of ſatisfac-"tion to his parents, or the father of many nations, if "thou takeſt him away in his unmarried ſtate, and the "very prime of his years?

"If ſin lies at the door, let me expiate the guilt. Let "thouſands of rams, let every bullock in my ſtalls, bleed "at thy altar. My wealth, bleſſed LORD, and all my "goods, are nothing in compariſon of my Iſaac. Com-"mand me to be ſtript of my poſſeſſions; command me "to roam, as a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and "I will magnify thy holy name. Only let my child, my "dear child be ſpared.

"Or, if nothing will appeaſe thy indignation but hu-"man blood, let my death be the ſacrifice. Upon me be "the vengeance. I am old and gray-headed. The beſt "of my days are paſt, and the beſt of my ſervices done. "If this tottering wall tumbles, there will be little or no "cauſe for regret. But, if the pillar of my houſe, and "the foundation of my hopes,—if he be ſnatched from "me, what good will my life do me? O my ſon! my ſon! "would GOD I might die for thee †!

"If it muſt be a blooming youth, in the flower of his "days, be pleaſed, moſt merciful GOD, to ſelect the "victim from ſome fruitful family. There are thoſe "who abound in children. Children are multiplied un-"to them; and though many were removed, yet would "their table be full. There are thoſe who have flocks "and herds; whereas I have only this one little lamb ‡, "the very ſolace of my ſoul, and the ſtay of my declin-"ing years; and ſhall this be taken away, while all thoſe "are left?"

Yes, Abraham; it is thy ſon, and not another's, that is marked for the victim.—What diſtreſs, had he not been ſupported by faith, what exquiſite diſtreſs muſt have overwhelmed this affectionate parent! How could he refrain from crying out, and with a flood of tears?—"If the decree cannot be reverſed, if it muſt be the fruit "of my own body, O! that Iſhmael, the ſon of the "handmaid.—How ſhall I ſpeak it? my heart bleeds at "the thought; at the thought even of his expiring ago-"nies, and untimely death. But as for Iſaac, the ſon "of my beloved ſpouſe, the ſon of my old age, the "crown of all my labours;—how? how ſhall I ſurvive "ſuch a loſs? The blow that goes to his heart, muſt "be fatal to us both.

"Yet, if he muſt die, and there is no remedy; may "he not at leaſt expire by a natural diſſolution? May not "ſome common diſtemper unlooſe the cords of life, and "lay him down gently in the tomb? May not his fond "mother and myſelf ſeal his cloſing eyes, and ſoften his "dying pangs by our tender offices?"

No, Abraham. Thy ſon muſt be ſlaughtered on the altar. He ſhall have no other bed of death, than the pile of hewn wood; no other winding-ſheet, than his own clotted gore. The ſacrificing knife, and not any common diſeaſe, ſhall bring him to his end.——And think not to ſatisfy thy ſorrowing for duels, by paying him the laſt honours of a decent interment. It is the LORD's will, that he be cut in pieces, conſumed

* 1 Kings xx. 11. † Gen. v. 29.

‡ The ſentence, with which the inſpired hiſtorian introduces this affecting narrative, is unhappily tranſlated in our Bibles, נסה את אברהם GOD did tempt Abraham.—This expreſſion ſeems, more than ſeems to clath with the doctrine of St James, chap. i. ver. 13. and cannot but ſound harſh to thoſe ears, which have been accuſtomed to underſtand by tempter and tempting, perſons utterly odious, and practices extremely pernicious.—Whereas, the true and natural ſignification of the original is, he tried or explored. GOD ſounded the depth, and meaſured the height of his ſervant's faith, in order to erect an everlaſting monument of the victorious efficacy of this ſacred principle, and exhibit an illuſtrious pattern to all them who ſhould hereafter believe.

‖ Gen. xxii. 2.

* Acts ix. 13, 14.

† 2 Sam. xviii. 33. ‡ 2 Sam. xii. 3.

to aſhes, and made a burnt-offering: ſo that nothing ſhall remain, to be preſerved, or embalmed. It ſhall not be in thy power to ſooth thy grief, by reſorting to his grave, and weeping at his ſepulchre, and ſaying, Here lies Iſaac.

"But if all muſt be executed, GOD grant theſe eyes "may never behold the diſmal tragedy! If my Iſaac "muſt be bound hand and foot for the ſlaughter, if he "muſt receive the ſteel into his boſom, and welter in his "own innocent blood, heaven forbid, that I ſhould be- "hold ſo killing a ſpectacle!"

Even this mitigation cannot be granted. Thou muſt not only be an eye-witneſs of his agony, but be the executioner of thy Iſaac. Thy hands muſt lift the deadly weapon; thy hands muſt point it to the beloved breaſts; thy own hands muſt urge its way, through the guſhing veins, and ſhivering fleſh, till it be plunged in the throbbing heart. GOD will not permit the work to be done by another. The father, the father muſt be the butcher.

Is not the wretched father ſtunned and thunderſtruck? does he not ſtand fixed in horror, and ſpeechleſs with grief? What words can be mournful enough to expreſs his ſorrows?—Unheard-of, ſhocking affair! Nature recoils at the very thought! How then can the beſt of fathers perform the deed?—How ſhall he anſwer it to the wife of his boſom, the mother of the lovely youth?—How can he juſtify it to the world? They will never be perſuaded, that the GOD of goodneſs can delight in cruelty, or authoriſe ſo horrid an action.—Will they not take up a taunting proverb, and ſay at every turn? "There goes the man, the monſter rather, that has im- "bued his hands in his own ſon's blood! This is he "that pretends to piety, and yet could be ſo ſavage, as "to aſſaſſinate, coolly and deliberately aſſaſſinate an only "child!"—Might not thouſands of ſuch reflections croud into his thoughts, and rack his very ſoul?

But GOD is unchangeable. Poſitive is his word, and muſt be obeyed; obeyed immediately too. Take now thy ſon. The LORD's command requireth ſpeed. No time is to be loſt, in bidding adieu to his relations, or in fruitleſs ſupplications for revoking the doom.——Nay, chearfully as well as inſtantly muſt this command be fulfilled. The great JEHOVAH expects alacrity in his ſervice.——Prodigious trial indeed! Yet not too great for a faith, which the divine SPIRIT infuſes, and the divine SPIRIT ſuſtains.

The patriarch knew full well, that obedience is no obedience, unleſs it be willing and chearful. Therefore he conſults not with fleſh and blood. He is deaf to the arguings of carnal reaſon, and regards not the yearnings of paternal affection. Without a murmuring word, without a moment's delay *, he ſets forward on his journey; not ſo much as betraying the leaſt uneaſineſs, to alarm his wife; nor heaving the leaſt ſigh, to ſurpriſe his attendants.——And canſt thou, Abraham, canſt thou perſiſt in thy purpoſe? can thy heart firmly reſolve, can thy hand ſteadily execute, this inexpreſſibly ſevere taſk? Moſt triumphant faith indeed! Deſervedly art thou ſtyled, the father of the faithful †. Thy faith is ſtronger than all the ties of affection; ſtronger than all the pleas of nature, or all the terrors of death,—even of a death far more dreadful than thy own.

And now muſt he travel, during three tedious, and, one would think, moſt melancholy days; with his Iſaac conſtantly before his eyes; with the bloody ſcene continually in his apprehenſions; and nothing to divert his mind from dwelling on every bitter circumſtance, and all the grievous conſequences.—On the third day, Abraham lifted up his eyes, and beheld afar off the appointed place. His ſervants are ordered to keep their diſtance; while himſelf, with the fire and the knife in his hands; and his ſon, with the burden of wood on his ſhoulders, went both of them together.—Who does not pity the ſweet youth, toiling under that load, which muſt ſoon reek with his blood, and ſoon reduce him to aſhes?—Meanwhile the intended victim, wondering to ſee all theſe preparations made, and no proper animal near, aſks this pertinent queſtion; My father, behold the fire and the wood! but where is the lamb for a burnt-offering?—Sure, this endearing ſpeech, which diſcovered ſuch a knowledge of religion, and ſuch a concern for its duties, muſt rouſe the father's anguiſh, and ſhake his determination. How can he be the death of ſo much innocence, and ſo much piety?

Faith overcomes all difficulties. Unmoved and inflexible, the patriarch replies, GOD will provide himſelf a lamb for a burnt-offering, my ſon *. After this, he diſcloſes the ſtrange, the ſtartling ſecret: "Thou thyſelf, "my dear child, art deſtined to this purpoſe. The "GOD who beſtowed thee on my longing deſires, is "pleaſed to require thee again at my hand. The LORD "gave, and the LORD taketh away, let us both adore "the name of the LORD. Let us confide in his pro- "miſed goodneſs, and unanimouſly profeſs, Though he "ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him."——It does not appear that the amiable youth reſiſted or gainſaid. He had ſtrength enough to oppoſe, and ſpeed enough to eſcape, the attempts of an aged father. Either or both of which, the law of ſelf-preſervation might ſeem to dictate, and the light of reaſon to juſtify. But Iſaac knew, that his father was a prophet. In this prophetical character, he ſees and acknowledges the warrant of heaven. And ſince his CREATOR calls, he is content to go.——Excellent Iſaac! who does not admire thy courage? who is not charmed with thy reſignation? and muſt we, in a few minutes, muſt we ſee thee a pale, a bloody, a breathleſs corpſe?

Methinks, I ſhudder as we draw near the direful cataſtrophe. The altar is built; the wood laid in order; all things are ready for the ſolemn ſervice; and Iſaac offers his willing throat to the knife.—Nevertheleſs, that the work of deſtiny may be ſure, and no one particular relating to a ſacrifice omitted, Abraham binds his ſon. I have known a ſtubborn malefactor, quite unalarmed, when ſentenced to the ignominious tree; not at all impreſſed with the moſt awful repreſentations of eternal judgment: yet, when a perſon came to meaſure him for his coffin, the hardened wretch was hard no longer. He ſtarted, turned pale, and trembled in every joint.—Even ſuch a circumſtance makes no impreſſion on Abraham; neither alters his purpoſe, nor changes his countenance. He meaſures his Iſaac; meaſures thoſe limbs, which he had ſo frequently and ſo tenderly careſſed; and if not for the coffin, yet for immediate ſlaughter.

Having bound him,—ſurpriſing reſolution!—bound him

* For it is written, He aroſe early in the morning, ver. 3.

† Rom. iv. 18.

* Abraham in this anſwer, like many of the other prophets in their predictions, ſeems not to have thoroughly underſtood the import of his own words. What he himſelf meant, I apprehend, is repreſented in the paraphraſe of his ſpeech. Yet GOD ſo overruled his tongue, that it more fully expreſſed the divine decree, than the parental idea.

GOD will provide himſelf a lamb for a burnt-offering, my ſon. Thus the words are placed in the Hebrew. My ſon comes laſt, and cloſes the reply; that the tender accents may be left to vibrate on the father's ear, and the dear diſtreſſing image continue playing before his mind.——This, I think, is a delicacy not to be overlooked; and increaſes the pathos of the narrative.

† According to Joſephus, Iſaac was, when he ſubmitted himſelf to the ſlaughter, about twenty-five years old. Others think, his age was thirty-three; which makes him more exactly reſemble his ſuffering LORD. Then his father muſt be above a hundred and thirty years old. Either account will juſtify Aſpaſio's ſuppoſition.

him for the ſword and for the flame, he lays him upon the altar on the wood. There, now, lies Iſaac; the dear, the dutiful, the religious Iſaac! Abraham's joy; Sarah's delight; the heir of the promiſes! there he lies, all meek and reſigned; expecting, every moment, the ſtroke of death to fall.—O parents! parents! do not your bowels yearn? is not humanity itſelf diſtreſſed at the ſcene? Say, thou who art a father, what thinkeſt thou of Abraham's obedience; couldſt thou, to ſuch a ſon, have acted ſuch part?

See! the father, reſolute to the very laſt, unſheathes the murdering blade; makes bare the innocent boſom; and marks the place, where life may find the ſpeedieſt exit. His heart is fixed! he ſtretches his arm; and now, even now is aiming the mortal blow;—when,—rejoice O ye worſhippers of a gracious GOD! break forth into ſinging, ye that are in pain for the tried parent! the LORD Almighty interpoſes, in this article of extreme need *.—The ANGEL of the covenant ſpeaks from heaven, and with-holds the lifted hand, in the very act to ſtrike. GOD, who only intended to manifeſt his faith, and make it honourable, bids him deſiſt. GOD applauds his obedience; ſubſtitutes another ſacrifice in Iſaac's ſtead; renews his covenant with the father; and not only reprieves the life of the ſon, but promiſes him a numerous and illuſtrious iſſue; promiſes to make him the progenitor of the MESSIAH, and thereby a public bleſſing to all the nations of the earth!

Tell me now, Theron, was there ever ſuch an aſtoniſhing effort of obedience? ſuch a perfect prodigy of reſignation? YET THIS HATH FAITH DONE †.—If you ſhould aſk, How was it poſſible for Abraham to perform all this, in the manner deſcribed? The anſwer is obvious: Becauſe Abraham BELIEVED; or, in other words, was fully perſuaded, that the GOD, who had given him this ſon from the barren womb, was able to raiſe him again from the ſmoking ‡ aſhes.—As the ſame GOD, who required this ſacrifice, had expreſsly declared, In Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called; the patriarch doubted not, but the promiſe would, in a way known to infinite wiſdom, be punctually accompliſhed. Hence he made no diſpute, and felt no reluctance. His faith baniſhed every uneaſy apprehenſion, and neither fear nor ſorrow had place in his breaſt. By faith he was enabled, ſpeedily and chearfully, without ſo much as a parting tear *, to obey this unparallelled precept.

And if all this, which would otherwiſe have been utterly impracticable, was wrought by faith; you need not ſuſpect, of weakneſs and inſufficiency, ſo approved a principle. Far from enervating, it will invigorate every good diſpoſition; and inſtead of damping, will give life to every religious duty.——Cheriſh faith, and you will of courſe cultivate obedience. Water this root, and the branches of univerſal godlineſs will aſſuredly partake the beneficial effects; will ſpread their honours, and bring forth their fruits.—Through the power of faith, the ſaints have wrought righteouſneſs, in all its magnanimous and heroic acts.—The doctrine of faith is called by St Paul, a doctrine according to godlineſs †; exquiſitely contrived to anſwer all the ends, and ſecure every intereſt of real piety.——The grace of faith St Jude ſtyles, our moſt holy faith ‡; intimating, that it is not only productive of holineſs, but that the moſt refined and exalted holineſs ariſes from this ſtock.

Let us then be diligent to exerciſe, and careful to increaſe, faith in JESUS CHRIST. Let us maintain the ſame zealous ſolicitude for this leading capital grace, as the renowned Epaminondas expreſſed for his ſhield.—When that gallant general was, in an engagement with the enemy, ſtruck to the ground; his ſoldiers carried him off, breathleſs and fainting, to his tent. The very moment he opened his eyes, and recovered the uſe of ſpeech, he aſked—not whether his wound was mortal? not whether his troops were routed? but whether his ſhield was ſafe?—May we be enabled, my dear friend, to keep our ſhield ſafe! May we be ſtrong, be ſteady, be lively in faith! Then, I doubt not, we ſhall give glory to GOD, receive comfort to ourſelves, and abound in the works of the LORD.

* Upon this moſt ſeaſonable interpoſition, the inſpired hiſtorian makes a very judicious and edifying remark; which ſeems to be greatly obſcured, if not entirely ſpoiled, by our tranſlation; In the mount of the LORD it ſhall be ſeen. I muſt confeſs, I have always been puzzled to find, not only a pertinent ſenſe, but any ſenſe at all, in theſe words. Whereas the original is as clear in its ſignification, as it is appoſite to the purpoſe.—בהר יהוה יראה In the mount the LORD will be ſeen: or In the mount the LORD will provide. q. d. "This memorable event gave riſe to, at leaſt is an eminent "exemplification of, that proverbial expreſſion, which is commonly "uſed at this day. In the mount of difficulty, or in the very criſis "of need, when matters ſeem to be irretrievable and deſperate, "then the LORD appears as a preſent help. Man's extremity in "GOD's opportunity." See Gen. xxii. 14.

† Heb. xi. 17. By faith, Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Iſaac.——The faith, of which ſuch glorious things are ſpoken, to which ſuch admirable achievements are aſcribed, throughout this whole chapter, was a faith in "the ſeed of the woman," the promiſed MESSIAH.—Or, could it be demonſtrated, (which, I will venture to conclude, is impoſſible) that, in all theſe heroic inſtances of obedience, there was no believing regard to CHRIST; no apprehenſion of his unſpeakable love; no application of his tranſcendent merits; our argument would not loſe its force, but ſtrike with redoubled energy. For, if a belief in very inferior manifeſtations of the divine goodneſs, faithfulneſs, and power, wrought ſo efficaciouſly on thoſe ancient worthies; how much more victoriouſly muſt the ſame principle act, under far brighter diſplays of all the ſupreme perfections, in the perſon of JESUS CHRIST!—I would only add, that ſo long as this chapter remains in the Bible, it will furniſh an unanſwerable confutation of thoſe objections, which ſuppoſe the doctrine of faith to have an unkindly influence on religious or virtuous practice.—Againſt all ſuch cavils, it will ſtand faſt for evermore as the moon, and as the faithful witneſs in heaven.

‡ He ſeems to have expected not only the certain, but the immediate reſtoration of his ſlain ſon; that he ſhould be revived on the very ſpot, before he left the place, ſo as to accompany his return. For he ſays to his ſervants, Not I, but we will go, and worſhip, and return. נשובה ver. 5.

* This account is ſo very extraordinary, that I ſhall not be ſurpriſed, if the reader finds ſome difficulty in giving his aſſent to it; eſpecially, as he may have accuſtomed himſelf to form very different conceptions of this remarkable affair; and may poſſibly be confirmed in a different train of ideas, by ſeeing a repreſentation of the ſtory in a celebrated print: where the father appears, claſping his ſon in a tender embrace; be-dewing him with his tears; and ſuffering as much through grief, as the devoted youth is going to ſuffer by the knife.—But the engraver, I apprehend, had not ſo attentively examined the circumſtances of the ſacred narrative, nor ſo carefully compared them with other paſſages of ſcripture, as a judicious and worthy friend of mine; from whom I learned to conſider this wonderful tranſaction in the above-repreſented view. And I muſt confeſs, the more I revolve it in my mind, the more I am convinced of its propriety.

I flatter myſelf, the reader will be of the ſame opinion, if he pleaſes to conſult the tenth chapter of Leviticus; where Nadab and Abihu, the ſons of Aaron, are devoured by fire from before the LORD. Yet Aaron is not allowed to mourn, even at ſuch a terrible and afflictive viſitation. And when, through the frailty of human nature, he could not wholly refrain, he durſt not preſume to eat of the ſin-offering. Such things, ſays he, have befallen me, if I had eaten of the ſin-offering, ſhould it have been accepted in the ſight of the LORD?—Let me add, that we find not the leaſt indication of ſuch agonizing ſorrow, nor indeed of any ſorrow at all, in the hiſtory as related by Moſes. Neither could Abraham have been a proper type of the eternal FATHER, making his only begotten SON a ſacrifice for ſin, if he had not willingly offered up Iſaac. Indeed to offer willingly, ſeems to have been abſolutely neceſſary, in every acceptable oblation, and every religious ſervice. See 2 Cor. ix. 7. 1 Chron. xxviii. 9.

† 1 Tim. vi. 3. ‡ Jude 20.

Nothing

Nothing can be more pertinent to my purpoſe, than the apoſtle's prayer; That we may know what is the hope of our calling in CHRIST JESUS, and what is the exceeding greatneſs of his power to themward who believe. And nothing can be more expreſſive of the very ſoul of

Your affectionate,

ASPASIO.

LETTER XII.

ASPASIO to THERON.

IT is very probable, whilſt I am reading yours, you are peruſing mine. But how unlike is my friend to the repreſentation he receives! How unlike the ſatisfied, unſuſpecting, chearful Abraham! Why this dejected air in your temper? why thoſe penſive ſtrokes in your letter?—Let me anticipate your reply, and make anſwer to myſelf.——This gloom, I truſt, is a ſign of approaching day. Juſt before the morning dawn, the nocturnal darkneſs is blackeſt. And juſt before the appearance of the SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS, the penitent's diſtreſs is frequently the deepeſt. I promiſe myſelf, the hour is at hand, which will put off your ſackcloth, and gird you with gladneſs.

Another favourable preſage is, that you take the direct and certain way to obtain ſubſtantial comfort. The righteouſneſs of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, after which you inquire, about which you are ſolicitous, is a never-failing ſpring of conſolation: becauſe it acquits from all ſin; ſecures from all condemnation; and renders the believer unblameable and unreprovable in the ſight of GOD. Therefore ſays the HOLY GHOST, His name is as ointment poured forth *: even that divinely-precious name,—by which he has been celebrated in the preceding epiſtles; by which he is diſtinguiſhed in the ſcriptures of truth; by which, I hope, he will be more and more revealed in my Theron's mind,—THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. The diſcovery of him under this moſt amiable and glorious capacity, will indeed be like breaking open a vial of the richeſt unguents: which not only fill the room, and regale the ſenſe, with their delightful fragrance; but refreſh the ſpirits, and rejoice the very heart.——Might my writing, or my diſcourſe, be as the alabaſter-box to contain, to convey, and preſent theſe reviving odours; how highly ſhould I think myſelf honoured, and how ſignally my endeavours bleſſed!

You aſk, "How this righteouſneſs of the divine RE-"DEEMER becomes ours?"—It is a queſtion which I receive with the utmoſt pleaſure; and, with equal pleaſure, ſhall attempt an anſwer. Or rather, as the SPIRIT of our GOD prompted the firſt, may the ſame unerring GUIDE ſuggeſt the laſt!——This he has abundantly done by his prophets and apoſtles; ſo that I need only have recourſe to their writings, and collect ſome of the hints, which lie treaſured up in thoſe ſtorehouſes of wiſdom.

There we are often told of union with CHRIST, believers are ſaid to be in CHRIST †, and to be one with CHRIST ‡.—What is ſtill higher, and implies a greater degree of nearneſs, they are members of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones ‖.——And, which denotes the moſt intimate connection imaginable, They that are joined to the LORD JESUS, are one ſpirit § with him!—As theſe expreſſions appear dark, and their ſenſe lies deep, it has pleaſed our all-condeſcending INSTRUCTOR to illuſtrate them, by a variety of ſignificant types, and lively ſimilitudes. This remark very opportunely reminds me of an engagement, which, ſome time ago, I undertook to execute, but have hitherto omitted;—to make it evident, that the bleſſed doctrine, for which we have been pleading, is deducible from ſeveral ſcripture-images *. A ſhort deſcant upon ſome of the principal will, I hope, at once diſcharge my former obligation, and ſatisfy your preſent inquiry.

This was ſhadowed forth by the coſtly, odoriferous, flowing unguent, poured upon Aaron's head; which ran down upon his beard, and deſcended to the ſkirts † of his cloathing. So, the merits of our great HIGH PRIEST are derived down to all the faithful; even thoſe of the meaneſt ſtation in life, and the loweſt attainments in religion.

Was it not typified by that inſtructive viſion which the prophet Zechariah ſaw? I have looked, and behold! a candleſtick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his ſeven lamps thereon, and ſeven pipes to the ſeven lamps, which were upon the top thereof: and two olive-trees by it, one upon the right ſide of the bowl, and the other upon the left ſide thereof; which, through two golden pipes, empty the golden oil out of themſelves ‡. The bowl and the lamps were a proper emblem of believers: who are, by nature, dry veſſels, and deſtitute of all good: yet ſhould ſhine as lights in the midſt of a crooked and perverſe generation.—The olive-trees, arrayed in verdure, and abounding with ſap; always emptying themſelves, yet ever full; are a very juſt repreſentation of CHRIST, of his unchangeable love, and his inexhauſtible grace.——The golden pipes, through which the oil-branches tranſmit their oil, ſeem to be figurative of faith, in its various and repeated actings. By theſe channels of conveyance, the unſpeakable benefits of a REDEEMER are communicated to our ſouls, and repleniſh thoſe empty baſons.

Another type the apoſtle mentions: The firſt Adam, he ſays, was a figure of him that was to come ‖: So eminent a figure, and correſponding in ſo many inſtances, that he ſtyles our LORD JESUS the laſt Adam §. And why? Becauſe, like the firſt, he was a covenant-head to his people, and tranſacted in their ſtead. Inſomuch that what he did, and what he ſuffered, both are placed to their account. Is Adam's ſin imputed to all his natural offſpring? So is CHRIST's righteouſneſs to all his ſpiritual ſeed.—The conſequences of both render the doctrine more intelligible, and the truth more undeniable. All men are judged, condemned, dead ¶; doomed inevitably to the death of the body, and juſtly liable to the death of the ſoul, on the ſcore of Adam's tranſgreſſion. All believers are acquitted, juſtified, ſaved †; ſaved from the firſt death, and made heirs of the reſurrection; ſaved from the ſecond death, and entitled to life eternal, by virtue of CHRIST's obedience.

* Cant. i. 3. † Col. i. 2. ‡ Heb. ii. 11.
‖ Eph. v. 30. § 1 Cor. vi. 17.

* See above, p. 256.

† Pſal. cxxxiii. 2. What we render ſkirts, is, in the original, מדותיו the mouth, or, as the word is tranſlated (Job xxx. 18.) the collar of his garments. It is hardly ſuppoſable, that the conſecrating oil flowed down to the very bottom of the ſacerdotal veſtments. But it might probably reach the upper hem, or the opening round the neck; what the Greeks call περιστοχιλιον.—This ſenſe will ſufficiently preſerve the gradation; the head; the beard; the cloaths: which ſeem to denote CHRIST; his more advanced ſaints, and believers of a lower claſs.

‡ Zech. iv. 2, 3, 12. ‖ Rom. v. 14.
§ 1 Cor. xv. 45. ¶ Rom. v. 15, 16. † Rom. v. 19, 21.

This

This union with CHRIST, was not only prefigured by types, but is displayed by a variety of similitudes, taken from the most familiar occurrences of life: by which it appears to be our divine MASTER's will, that we should live under the habitual belief of this momentous truth, and in the constant enjoyment of this distinguished privilege.——You cannot visit a friend, or view your children; you cannot enter your garden, discourse with your spouse, or contemplate your own body, without a representation and a remembrancer of this precious blessing.

CHRIST says to his disciples, Henceforth I call you not servants, but friends *. Friends are a second self †. St Paul speaking of Onesimus, uses this remarkable phrase, Receive him, as myself; and, which is still more emphatical, Receive him, that is mine own bowels ‡. Is not CHRIST's friendship of the most tender and exalted kind? Doubtless it must be equal, doubtless it must be superior, infinitely superior to Jonathan's.—Jonathan loved David as his own soul. But CHRIST loved sinners with a love stronger than death. They were dearer to him than his own inestimable life.—Jonathan exposed himself to imminent danger, in vindicating David's conduct. JESUS surrendered himself to certain death, in making reconciliation for our offences.—Jonathan interceded once and again with his father in David's behalf. CHRIST ever liveth, to plead his blood, and make intercession for transgressors.—Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garment, even to his sword, and his bow, and his girdle ‖. Our REDEEMER, without stripping himself, has clothed us (such is the prerogative of a divine person!) with the robe of his righteousness, and with the garment of his salvation. He has consigned over to us all the merit of his holy life and propitiatory death.

CHRIST stands related to his people, not as a friend only, but as a parent. He is called by a prophet, THE EVERLASTING FATHER §; and we are said by an apostle, to be his children ¶.—Children look upon themselves, as interested in the wealth of their parents. They expect, and not without reasonable ground, to reap benefit from it, while the parents live; and to become possessors of it, when they die. Accordingly the father says in the gospel, Son, all that I have is thine ⊥.—Since the high and holy EMMANUEL vouchsafes to be our FATHER, can we suppose him less generous than an earthly parent? or can we imagine that his children shall have less to hope, than the heirs of an earthly progenitor? May we not, ought we not to regard all this communicable goods, all the benefits resulting from his meritorious sufferings and perfect obedience, as our portion?—Especially, since he is the testator +- also; has bequeathed them to us by will, and, having submitted to death, they become legally ours.

I am the VINE, says our LORD, ye are the branches ++. They who believe, are ingrafted into CHRIST. Take notice of a cyon. What are the consequences of its ingrafture? It is embodied with the substance of the tree, and partakes of its fatness. The sap, imbibed by the root, circulates into it; gives it vegetable life; fills it with buds, decks it with blossoms, and loads it with fruit. ——If then we are one with CHRIST, as much as the branch is one with the stock, it must follow, even upon the principles of common experience, that his wisdom is ours, to enlighten us; his righteousness is ours, to justify us; his Spirit is ours, to sanctify us; his redemption is ours, to make us completely and eternally happy.

CHRIST is united to his people by a tie closer and dearer than the parental. They are not only his children, but his spouse. He is often called their bridegroom, and is not ashamed to avow the tender engagement: I will betroth thee to me for ever. Yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving-kindness, and in mercies. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness *. The condescending GOD multiplies, diversifies, accumulates his words: and this, with admirable propriety, as well as surpassing goodness. The honour is so high, and the favour so great, we should hardly know how to believe it, and hardly venture to apply it. Lest therefore, by a single expression, it should not be sufficiently established, it stands ratified by repeated asseverations, and with all the energy of language: so that, be the grace ever so astonishing, we are assured, the fact is equally certain; he that is our MAKER, is also our HUSBAND †.

Let us consider what follows upon such an union. We may take for an example, the case of Boaz and Ruth. Soon as their nuptials were solemnized, she that was poor, became rich; from a gleaner in the field, she commenced mistress of the harvest; and from abiding by the maidens, had a seat at the master's table.——And if we are united to CHRIST by a marriage contract, the same effects will take place. We that were poor, are rich in him; we who had nothing, possess all things in CHRIST; we that dwell in dust, are made to sit together with our divine HUSBAND in heavenly places ‡.

If you chuse some modern exemplification, what can be more pertinent than the remarkable instance of your neighbour Arietta? She was lately left a widow, by the dissolute and extravagant Bellario; her circumstances miserably embarrassed, and the little estate deeply mortgaged; her friends looked shy, and her creditors became clamorous; scarce a day passed, but made some new discovery of debts contracted by the deceased: so that the affairs of the survivor appeared with a more melancholy aspect, and in a less retrievable condition.—— But, having won, first the compassion, then the affection, of the wealthy and illustrious Philander; how happily is the face of things altered! All her debts devolve upon him, and all his dignity is derived to her ‖. He stands responsible for whatever she owes; and she is a sharer in whatever he possesses. Though little less than ruined by her late husband, she is more than restored by her present; and has reason to rejoice in his affluence, and to glory in his honours.—Have not we also reason to rejoice in our heavenly BRIDEGROOM? since a far more glorious exchange subsists between him and his mystical spouse. He has bore the curse, that we may inherit the blessing. Sin was charged on him, that righteousness might be imputed to us. In a word, he has sustained all our miseries, that he might impart to us all his benefits.——Has the law any demand §? It must go to him for satisfaction. Have we any wants? We may look to him for a supply; to HIM, Theron, in whom it has pleased the FATHER, that all fulness should dwell ¶.

If any thing can express an union more intimate and inseparable than the conjugal, it is that of the members with the head. And this image is used by the HOLY GHOST, to shadow forth the connection between CHRIST and the faithful. He is the head over all things, with respect to rule and supremacy; but a head of union and influence, with respect

* John xv. 15.

† Horace calls Virgil, animæ dimidium meæ.

‡ Philem. 12. 17. ‖ 1 Sam. xviii. 4.

§ Is. vi. 9. ¶ Heb. ii. 13. ⊥ Luke xv. 31.

+- Heb. ix. 17. ++ John xv. 5.

* Hos. ii. 19. 20. † Is. liv. 5. ‡ Eph. iii. 6.

‖ Ubi tu Caius, ibi ego Caia, was the Roman maxim. Agreeably to this rule, which has obtained among all civilized nations, the scripture calls the church by the name of her divine husband. Compare Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. with Jer. xxxiii. 15. 16.

§ The demands of the law are—perfect obedience; Thou shalt love the LORD thy GOD with all thy heart.——To which, in case of disobedience, is superadded condign punishment; Cursed is he that continueth not in all things.

¶ Col. i. 19.

to the church *.——The head and the members conſtitute one natural body; CHRIST and his church compoſe one myſtical body. What kindneſs is done, what injury is offered to the members, the head regards them as done to himſelf. Accordingly, CHRIST ſays to the outrageous Saul, who made havock of the church, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou ME †? He declares, concerning thoſe indigent Chriſtians, to whoſe neceſſities we adminiſter relief? Inaſmuch as ye have done it unto them, ye have done it unto ME ‡.——The animal ſpirits formed in the head, are formed for the benefit of the whole body, and deſigned for the uſe of all the members. So the righteouſneſs wrought by JESUS CHRIST, is wrought out for his whole myſtical body, and intended for the advantage of all his people, to be the cauſe of their juſtification, and the purchaſe of their ſalvation.

Being then ſo nearly related, ſo cloſely united to the bleſſed JESUS, it is no wonder that believers are now loved with the ſame fatherly love, and will hereafter be partakers of the ſame heavenly glory.——What might we not expect from the divine REDEEMER, if he vouchſafed to acknowledge but one of theſe endearing names? Since he has engaged himſelf to us by all the ties of affinity and affection; may we not promiſe ourſelves, and with the aſſurance of hope, every good thing; even all the fulneſs of GOD ‖ our Saviour?—Does not each of theſe tender relations, ſubſiſting between CHRIST and his ſaints, imply an entire property in one another, and a mutual participation of all that belongs to either? —My beloved is mine, and I am his,—I dare not ſay, is the poſey of the myſtical ring,—but it is the undoubted effect of this divine union.

How pleaſing, yet how amazing the thought! Shall we, who ſay to corruption, Thou art my father; and to the worm, Thou art my mother and my ſiſter §; ſhall we be permitted to ſay, concerning the HEAD of all principality and power, We are the members of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones ¶?—What a mercy might we eſteem it, not to be confounded before a MAJESTY ſo exalted and ſublime! What a favour, to obtain the leaſt propitious regard from the KING immortal and inviſible! What an honour, to be admitted into his family, and numbered among the meaneſt of his ſervants!—But to be his adopted children; to be his eſpouſed bride; to be the members of his ſacred body;—to have HIM for our everlaſting Father, HIM for the bridegroom of our ſouls, HIM for our heavenly head; who is the MAKER of all worlds, and the SOVEREIGN of all creatures! What words can duly celebrate, what heart can ſufficiently admire, the condeſcenſion and the love of our adorable JESUS? or who can juſtly queſtion the fruits of ſuch a fellowſhip, and the conſequence of ſuch an union? Queſtion them! No, the fruits are infallibly ſure, as the privilege is inexpreſſibly great.

Let me once again introduce a great and venerable witneſs of both theſe truths. "Laban ſpake high, when "he ſaid, Theſe children are mine, and all theſe things thou "ſeeſt are mine. But how high and glorious is that "which may be ſaid of a juſtified perſon! All thou hear-"eſt of CHRIST is thine; his life is thine, his death is "thine, his obedience, merit, ſpirit, all thine †."——

* Eph. i. 22. † Acts ix. 4. ‡ Matth. xxv. 40.
‖ Eph. iii. 19. § Job xvii. 14. ¶ Eph. v. 30.
† See Dr LIGHTFOOT's works, vol. II. p. 1077.

Rich and important words! Than which nothing can give us a juſter or fuller explanation of the apoſtle's aſſertion, We are partakers of CHRIST *.

When ſome foreign ladies, of the firſt quality, paid a viſit to Leonidas's queen; the talk turned upon their rich cloaths, their coſtly jewels, and ſplendid equipage. After they had ſeverally diſplayed each her own grandeur, they inquired after her Majeſty's finery; what ſhe had to diſtinguiſh her from the vulgar?—She replied, My illuſtrious huſband †. What elſe? My illuſtrious huſband.—And as often as they repeated the ſame queſtion, ſhe returned the ſame anſwer.—Could this queen ſpeak in ſuch admiring, rejoicing, ſelf-gratulating terms of her royal conſort? And ſhall not vile ſinners look upon their REDEEMER,—that all-glorious, yet all-condeſcending bridegroom; who is full of grace and truth, full of merit and righteouſneſs;—ſhall not they much more look upon HIM as their honour and their joy; the object of their dependance, and the cauſe of their boaſting?

I ſhould find it difficult to refrain from the farther proſecution of ſo engaging a topic, did I not propoſe to wait upon my Theron very ſpeedily. Then I ſhall have an opportunity of pouring into his boſom all the fulneſs of my heart, with regard to this delightful ſubject.—— In the mean time, let me exhort my dear friend to be of good comfort. Heavineſs may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning ‡. This ſorrow of which you complain, may be the ſeed of ſpiritual and eternal conſolation.

While I am writing, there appears full in my view, one of the fineſt rainbows I ever beheld. It compaſſeth the heavens with a glorious circle; ſo glorious, that it is no diſparagement of the almighty CREATOR, to ſay, the hands of the MOST HIGH have bended it ‖.—On what foundation, would I aſk, is that ſtately and beautiful arch raiſed? from what ſource do all its radiant and lovely colours ſpring? It is raiſed on a gloomy aſſemblage of vapours; and all its rich tinctures ſpring from a louring cloud.—Thus does the bleſſed GOD, on a conviction of guilt and a ſenſe of ruin, ſpread faith, paint holineſs, and diffuſe gladneſs. May all theſe, ere long, ariſe in my Theron's breaſt! and each be—bright, as that reſplendent bow,—laſting, as the ſun that creates it!

In the mean time, it is the ardent wiſh of my ſoul, and ſhall be my frequent prayer to GOD, That both our hearts may be comforted, being knit together in love, unto all riches of the full aſſurance of underſtanding §, in this great myſtery of godlineſs.—What vigour of expreſſion, what exuberance of ideas, and, above all, what diſtinguiſhed privileges are here!—aſſurance,—full aſſurance, —riches of the full aſſurance,—all riches of the full aſſurance of underſtanding,—in reference to our union with CHRIST, and its unutterably-precious effects!—Can the orator expreſs more? can the ſinner deſire more? can the ſaint, I had almoſt ſaid, can the archangel enjoy more?—May this be the portion of my dear Theron, and of

His ever faithful
ASPASIO.

* Heb. iii. 14.

† The amiable and heroic Panthea expreſſes herſelf in much the ſame manner, concerning her gallant huſband Abradates; Συ γαρ εμοιγε μεγιϛος κοσμος εση. XENOPH. Cyropæd. lib. VI.
‡ Pſal. xxx. 5. ‖ Eccluſ xliii. 12. § Col. ii. 1.

DIALOGUE XV.

ASPASIO had taken leave of his friend Camillus, and was come to reviſit Theron; whoſe thoughts ſeemed to be in a ſtate of much fluctuation, and no ſmall anxiety; hoping, that ſome proper converſation on the grace and privileges of the everlaſting goſpel, might compoſe and comfort his mind; might, while his heart was ſoftened by humbling convictions, fix the ſtamp of genuine Chriſtianity anity; and deliver his whole ſoul into the mould * of evangelical religion.

When ſorrow wounds the breaſt, as ploughs the glebe,
And hearts obdurate feel her ſoft ning ſhow'r,
Her ſeed celeſtial then glad Wiſdom ſows;
Her golden harveſts triumph in the ſoil †.

He arrived pretty late in the evening; and, being ſomewhat weary with the journey, ſoon withdrew to his repoſe.——The next morning, as Theron walked abroad, to taſte the cool delights of the dawn; he was agreeably ſurpriſed, by meeting Aſpaſio.

Ther. So ſoon awake, my worthy friend! and after ſo much fatigue on the preceding day!—I had not the leaſt expectation of your company, till breakfaſt. Then indeed I promiſed myſelf a double regale;—the refreſhments exhibited on the table; and thoſe wholeſome words of our LORD JESUS CHRIST ‡, which, more precious than manna, drop—

Aſp. How, Theron!—Have you alſo learned thoſe ſoothing arts, which poliſh the ſpeech, to deprave our ſentiments? Could I have ſuſpected the inchanting wiles of flattery, from my ſincere, my tried, my boſom friend?

Ther. Your friend is ſtill ſincere, and his words are very remote from flattery.——How welcome to the wind-bound mariner, weary with expectation, and ſick with diſappointments, is the viſit of a propitious gale! How welcome to the fields, parched with drought, and gaſping for moiſture, are copious ſhowers of rain! How acceptable to the Iſraelites, travelling through the inhoſpitable deſert, and pining away for the want of the fruits of the earth, was the miraculous ſupply of heavenly bread!——Yet neither propitious gales to the wind-bound mariner, nor copious ſhowers to the thirſty ſoil, nor heavenly bread to the famiſhed Iſraelites, could be more welcome, than your late converſation, and later correſpondence, to my anxious ſoul.

Aſp. Why, I thought you looked upon my notions as chimerical. Is Theron alſo become credulous? Like one of us weak-headed believers!—has he quitted the ſtrong-holds of reaſon? is he vanquiſhed by the ſling-ſtone of faith? or can he ſubmit to this ſtrange method of ſalvation by embracing the righteouſneſs, and relying on the obedience of another?

Ther. I find, my reaſon was a feeble guide, or I myſelf not faithful to its genuine dictates. I was blinded with prejudice; I was intoxicated with pride; a vain conceit of my moral powers betrayed me, as I fear it has betrayed many, into a contempt of the evangelical righteouſneſs.——I held what I thought an honour to human nature. I now retract my opinion. I now perceive, that, as my natural light could not diſcover the way, neither can my perſonal obedience put me in poſſeſſion of life and ſalvation. My true glory, and real happineſs I would henceforth derive from the bleſſed JESUS.——No more banter, Aſpaſio:—have done:—I am ſerious, and very much in earneſt; ſo much in earneſt, that if all my acquaintance of the Phariſaical turn, or if all my brothers of the ſmile, ſhould rally me on the ſubject, I would frankly acknowledge my error, and as freely ſign my recantation.

Aſp. My dear Theron, I applaud your reſolution. You have no more cauſe to be aſhamed of ſuch a practice, than Philip had to be aſhamed of the imperfection in his limbs; when, being obſerved to go lame, with a wound received in battle, he had this conſolation ſuggeſted by one of his courtiers: "Never bluſh, my Royal "Sir, for a defect which puts you in mind of your va- "lour, every ſtep you take."——To ſacrifice our prejudices in the ſearch of truth, is no leſs honourable than to be marked with a ſcar in the defence of our country.

I beg pardon for my pleaſantry. Since you are ſo very ſerious, a gay air was quite unſeaſonable.——You cannot often complain, that I am guilty of this fault. Nor can you eaſily imagine the ſatisfaction I ſhall enjoy, if either my letters or my diſcourſe, have adminiſtered any advantage to my friend. I ſhall note it down among the diſtinguiſhed bleſſings of my life; and have an additional obligation to love the beneficent AUTHOR of all good.

But as I cannot be a furtherer of your happineſs without the greateſt delight, ſo I cannot be a witneſs of your ſolicitude without a painful regret. You muſt therefore permit me to aſk the cauſe of that unuſual vehemence which I obſerve in your ſpeech, and of that deep concern which I read in your countenance.

Ther. I have been conſidering very attentively, what is the preſent ſtate, and what is likely to be the final condition of my ſoul.

——My hopes and fears
Start up alarm'd; and o'er life's narrow verge
Look down—on what? A fathomleſs abyſs,
A vaſt eternity!

My ſins, at the ſame time, like an armed hoſt, are ſet in dreadful array, and ſurround me on every ſide.——Juſtice, like an injured and incenſed foe, unſheaths the ſword, and makes a loud demand for vengeance.——No righteouſneſs of my own preſents itſelf, to which I may fly for refuge.——The method of ſalvation, in which I formerly confided, is a bridge broken down; and leaves me, without any poſſibility of eſcape, abandoned to the approaching enemy.

To a perſon in ſuch deplorable circumſtances, how reviving, how delightful, is the very thought of being intereſted in the great REDEEMER's righteouſneſs! I don't wonder now at a ſaying of Luther's, which I have ſometimes exploded, as ſtrangely extravagant: "That, "upon the diſcovery of this glorious righteouſneſs, the "gates of Paradiſe ſeemed to fly open before him, and "the dawn of heaven was all in view."

Talking in this manner, they came to an elevated terrace: which, about an hour before, had been ſhaved by the ſcythe, and emitted all the freſhneſs of new-mown herbage.——On one ſide, a fine champaign country ſtretched its wide dimenſions.——On the other, a flower-garden exhibited the laſt ornaments of the year.——Here you might ſtill ſee the tufted vermilion, and the full-blown ivory, glittering through ſpangles of liquid cryſtal.——There you might trace the foot-ſteps of the early cattle, by many a recent print on the dewy lawn.——On the walls and eſpaliers, autumn had ſpread her ſtores; and was beginning to beautify their rinds with many a ruddy ſtreak, or to breathe over their gloſſy ſkins her delicate and inimitable bloom.

Aſp. See, ſaid Aſpaſio, the wiſdom and benignity, which, in amiable and inſeparable conjunction, diſplay themſelves through the whole œconomy of the univerſe: GOD has made every thing beautiful in his time *; every thing ſerviceable in its place. A little while ago, the flowery meads delighted our eyes, and the melodious birds charmed our ears; now the taſteful fruits are preparing their dainties; and preſenting us with a collation, to regale our palate.——The whole earth, and all the ſeaſons, are rich with our CREATOR's goodneſs. Yea, the whole earth, and all that repleniſhes it, all that ſurrounds it, are full of his preſence. HE it is, who

Warms in the ſun, refreſhes in the breeze,
Glows in the ſtars, and bloſſoms in the trees;

* Deliver into the mould—This is the literal tranſlation, and exact ſenſe of St Paul's phraſe, Εις ον παρεδοθητε τυπον διδαχης. Rom. vi. 17.—Which, as it contains a beautiful alluſion, conveys alſo a very inſtructive admonition; intimating, that our minds, all pliant and ductile, ſhould be conformed to the refined precepts of the goſpel, as liquid metals take the figure of ſome elegant mould, into which they are caſt.

† Night-Thoughts. ‡ 1 Tim. vi. 3.

* Eccl. iii. 11.

Lives

Lives through all life, extends through all extent, Spreads undivided, operates unſpent *.

An habitual belief of this truth, gives nature her lovelieſt aſpect, and lends her the moſt conſummate power to pleaſe. The breath of violets, and the bluſh of roſes; the muſic of the woods, and the meanders of the ſtream; the aſpiring hill, the extended plain, and all the decorations of the landſcape; then appear in their higheſt attractives; then touch the ſoul with the moſt refined ſatisfaction; when GOD is ſeen,—when GOD is heard,—and GOD enjoyed in all.——Is Theron loſt in thought, and deprived of ſpeech? Is HE alone ſilent, while all things ſpeak their MAKER's praiſe?—Does faith throw a ſhade over the works of creation? Does it not heighten their beauties, and enliven their graces?—The religious is the only true philoſopher; and the pleaſures of imagination never acquire their proper reliſh, till they are ripened by the exerciſe of devotion.——With this view then, ſince my friend forbears, let me attempt to ſpeak; not to increaſe his knowledge, but to cheriſh faith, and cultivate devotion in us both.

The ſpacious canopy † over our heads, is painted with blue; and the ample carpet under our feet, is tinged with green. Theſe colours, by their ſoft and chearing qualities, yield a perpetual refreſhment to the eye ‡. Whereas, had the face of nature gliſtered with white, or glowed with ſcarlet; ſuch ardent and dazzling hues would, inſtead of exhilarating, have fatigued the ſight. ——Beſides, as the ſeveral brighter colours are interſperſed, and form the pictures in this magnificent piece; the green and the blue conſtitute an admirable ground, which ſhews them all, in their higheſt luſtre, and to the utmoſt advantage ‖.

Had the air been conſiderably groſſer, it would have dimmed the rays of the ſun, and darkened the chearful day; our lungs had been clogged in their vital functions; men had been ſuffocated, without the ſtrangling nooſe; or drowned, without the overwhelming flood.—Was it ſeveral degrees more ſubtile, birds would not be able to wing their way through the firmament; nor could the clouds be ſuſtained in ſo attenuated an atmoſphere. It would elude the organs of reſpiration; we ſhould gaſp for breath, with as much difficulty, and with as little ſucceſs, as fiſhes out of their native element.

The ground alſo is wrought into the moſt proper temperature. Was it of a firmer conſiſtence, it would be impenetrable to the plough, and unmanageable by the ſpade.——Was it of a laxer compoſition, it would be incapable of ſupporting its own furniture. The light mould would be ſwept away by whirling winds; or the oozy glebe ſoaked into ſloughs by the deſcending rains. ——Becauſe every ſituation ſuits not every plant; but that which is a nurſe to one, often proves a ſtepmother to others; therefore the qualities of the earth are ſo abundantly diverſified, as properly to accommodate every ſpecies of vegetation. We have a variety of intermediate ſoils, from the looſe disjointed ſand, to the ſtiff cohеſive clay; from the rough projections of the craggy cliff, to the ſoftly-ſwelling bed of the ſmooth parterre.

The ſea carries equal evidences of a moſt wiſe and gracious ordination.——Was it larger, we ſhould want land for the purpoſes of paſturage, and the operations of huſbandry. We ſhould be deſtitute of ſufficient room for mines and foreſts; our ſubterranean warehouſes, and our aereal timber-yards.——Was it ſmaller, it would not be capable of recruiting the ſky with a proper quantity of vaporous exhalations, nor of ſupplying the earth with the neceſſary quota of fructifying ſhowers.

Do we not diſcern very apparent ſtrokes of ſkill, and the moſt pregnant proofs of goodneſs, in each individual object? in the various tenants of the globe, and the ſeveral appurtenances of this great dwelling?—It is needleſs to expatiate upon the more eminent and conſpicuous beauties; all that ſhines in the heavens, and all that ſmiles on the earth. Theſe ſpeak to every ear, theſe ſhew to every eye, the adorable munificence of their MAKER. ——It is needleſs to launch into the praiſes of the valleys, delicately clothed with herbage; or of the fields, richly repleniſhed with corn. Even the ragged rocks, which frown over the flood; the caverned quarries, which yawn amidſt the land; together with the mountains, thoſe ſhapeleſs and enormous protuberances, which ſeem to load the ground, and encumber the ſkies; even theſe contribute their ſhare, to increaſe the general pleaſure, and augment the general uſefulneſs. They variegate the proſpect; raiſe an agreeable horror in the beholder; and inſpire his breaſt with a religious awe. They add new charms to the wide level of our plains; and ſhelter, like a ſcreen, the warm lap of our vales.

We are delighted with the ſolemn gloom, and magnificent aſpect, of the foreſt. One who ſaw the cedars of Lebanon, was tranſported with admiration at their ample trunks, and towering heads, their diffuſive ſpread, and verdant grandeur. Compared with which, the ſtately elm is but a reed; and the branching oak a mere ſhrub.——Was our ſight qualified for the ſearch, we ſhould diſcover a ſymmetry and a dignity, altogether as perfect, and far more wonderful, in thoſe groves of moſs * which adhere to the rude ſtone. We ſhould contemplate, with greater ſurpriſe, if not with greater rapture, thoſe diminutive plantations, which ſtrike their haſty roots in the mouldy confection, or wave their curious umbrage over the periſhed pickle †.

Who is not charmed with the vine, and its generous warming juices? with the melon, and its delicious cooling pulp? Yet, were all our trees to produce fruits of ſuch exalted qualities, or of ſuch an agreeable reliſh, what would become of the birds! How ſmall a

* POPE's Eth. epiſt.

† What Aſpaſio calls the canopy, Iſaiah deſcribes by רקיע. Which we tranſlate as a curtain; but the exact ſignification is, Sicut tenue, vel tenuiſſimum quid; Like ſome finely-attenuated expanſe. Not like the curtains or the coverings of the tabernacle, which were goats hair and badgers ſkins, ſhaggy and coarſe; but like ſome very fine membrane, ſmooth and elegant, nicely poliſhed and inimitably delicate. Than which compariſon nothing can more perfectly correſpond with the aſpect of the ſky, Iſ. xl. 22.

‡ ——————————Gay green,
Thou ſmiling nature's univerſal robe!
United light and ſhade! where the ſight dwells,
With growing ſtrength, and ever-new delight.

THOMSON's Spring.

‖ If the reader has patience to go through the following eſſay, he will find it in the iſſue, not altogether foreign to the main ſubject.—If he pleaſes to conſider it, as a kind of practical comment, on that lovely celebration of providential goodneſs, His tender mercies are over all his works;—this may poſſibly alleviate the toil of peruſing, and reconcile him to the length of the deſcant.

* See, for a proof of this remark, the explanation of the tenth plate, in that very curious, very entertaining, and no leſs inſtructive piece, entitled, Micrographia Reſtaurata —Where our author compares the ſize of this little vegetable, with the dimenſions of thoſe vaſt trees, which grow in the vigorous climates of Guinea and Brazil. The trunks of which are, according to the report of travellers, twenty feet in diameter. Whereas, the body of this minute plant, meaſures no more than the ſixtieth part of an inch. So that, upon a calculation, the thickneſs of the former exceeds that of the latter, 2,985,984 millions of times.—So prodigiouſly various are the works of the CREATOR.

† That whitiſh kind of down, which ſhags the putrefying pickle, which incruſts the ſurface of ſome corrupted liquors, and conſtitutes what we call mouldineſs, is really a cluſter of little plants. Each has a root and a ſtalk: each ſpreads its branches, and produces ſeed in abundance.

Radiceſque ſuas habet, exilemque coronam,
Frondeſque, fructumque gerit, velut ardua quercus.

ſcant-

ſcantling of ſuch choice delicacies would voracious man reſign to their enjoyment?—That proviſion may be made for the meaneſt vagrant of the air, as well as for the moſt renowned ſovereign of a nation; there is, in all places, a large growth of ſhrubs, covered annually with a harveſt of coarſe and hardy berries: ſo coarſe in their taſte, that they are unworthy of the acceptance of man; ſo hardy in their make, that they endure the extremeſt ſeverities of the weather, and furniſh the feathered tribe with a ſtanding repaſt, amidſt all the deſolations of winter.

The fir, with her ſilver bark, and ſhapely cone; the beech *, with her quivering leaves and embowering ſhade; are ſtately decorations of our rural ſeats. But, if there were no entangling thickets, no prickly thorns, where would the farmer procure fences ſo cloſely wattled, or ſo ſtrongly armed †? How could he guard the ſcene of his labours, or ſecure his vegetable wealth, from the flocks and the herds; thoſe roving plunderers, which accede to no treaty, but that of forcible reſtraint; ſubmit to no laws, but thoſe of the coercive kind?

Moſt people are fond of the purſlane's fleſhy leaves, and the ramified fatneſs of the brocoli; the potatoe's mealy orbs, and the lentile's ſucculent pods. We ſpare no toil, we grudge no expence, to have them flouriſh in our gardens, and ſerved up at our tables.—But there are innumerable herbs, which paſs under the contemptible character of weeds; and yet are altogether as deſirable to many claſſes of creatures, as theſe culinary gifts to mankind. Who ſhall be at the pains to plant, to water, to cultivate, ſuch deſpicable productions? Man would rather extirpate, than propagate, theſe incumbrances of his acres. Therefore Providence vouchſafes to be their gardener. Providence has wrought off their ſeeds into ſuch a lightneſs of ſubſtance, that they are carried abroad with the undulations of the air: or, if too heavy to be wafted by the breeze, they are faſtened to wings of down, which facilitate their flight; or elſe, are incloſed in a ſpringy caſe, which, forcibly burſting, ſhoots and ſpreads them on every ſide.—By ſome ſuch means, the reproducing principle is diſſeminated, the univerſal granary is filled, and the univerſal board furniſhed. The buzzing inſect, and the creeping worm, have each his bill of fare. Each enjoys a never-failing treat, equivalent to our fineſt veniſon, or to the "fat of kidneys of "wheat ‡."

As the ſeeds of ſome plants are moſt artfully ſcattered abroad, when ripe; the ſeeds of others are moſt carefully guarded, till they come to maturity; and, by both contrivances, every ſpecies is not barely preſerved, but in a manner eternized.—Some are lodged in the centre of a large pulp; which is, at once, their defence and their nouriſhment. This we find exemplified in the taſteful apple, and the juicy pear.—Some, beſides the ſurrounding pulp, are incloſed in a thick ſhell, hard and impenetrable as ſtone. We cannot pluck and eat one of thoſe downy peaches, or incrimſoned nectarines, which ſo beautifully emboſs the wall, without finding a proof of this precaution.—Caſt your eye upon the walnuts, which ſtud the branches of that ſpreading tree. Before theſe are gathered, the increaſe of the cold, and the emptineſs of the gardens, will ſharpen the appetite of the birds. To ſecure the fine kernel, from the depredations of their buſy aſſailing bills, it is fortified with a ſtrong incloſure of wood, and with the addition of a diſguſtful bitter rind.

If graſs was as ſcarce as the Guernſey-lily, or as difficultly raiſed as the delicate tuberoſe, how certainly, and how ſpeedily, muſt many millions of quadrupeds periſh with famine! Since all the cattle owe their chief ſubſiſtence to this vegetable, by a ſingular beneficence in the divine œconomy, it waiteth not, like the corn-field and the garden-bed, for the annual labours of man *. When once ſown, though ever ſo frequently cropped, it revives with the returning ſeaſon, and flouriſhes in a kind of perennial verdure. It covers our meadows, diffuſes itſelf over the plains, ſprings up in every glade of the foreſt, and ſpreads a ſide-board in the moſt ſequeſtered nook.

Since the nutriment of vegetables themſelves lies hid under the ſoil, or floats up and down in the air; beneath, they plunge their roots †† into the ground, and diſperſe every way their fibrous ſuckers, to explore the latent, and attract the proper nouriſhment; above, they expand a multitude of leaves †, which, like ſo many open mouths, catch the rains as they fall; imbibe the dews as they diſtil; and tranſmit them, through their nice orifices, to the heart of the plant, or the lobes of the fruit.

I have touched upon the inſenſible creation; and pointed out the care of a condeſcending Providence, exerciſed over theſe loweſt formations of nature.—The animal world, Theron, falls to your ſhare. It is yours to deſcant upon thoſe higher orders of exiſtence; and ſhew us the goodneſs of GOD, extending its indulgent regards to them and their intereſts, as tenderly, as officiouſly, as a hen ſpreadeth her wings ‡ over her infant brood.

Ther. The ſubject is in good hands. Let part the ſecond be of the ſame ſtrain with part the firſt, and there will be no occaſion to wiſh for a new ſpeaker. As to myſelf, I have very little inclination to talk. But I have an ear open and attentive to your diſcourſe.

Aſp. You put me in mind of the philoſopher, who preſumed to read a lecture on the art of war, in the preſence of Hannibal. But his impertinence was voluntary, mine is conſtrained.——Since you enjoin me this office, let us paſs from the vegetable, to the animal world. Here we ſhall find no tribe, no individual neglected. The ſuperior claſſes want no demonſtration of their excellent accompliſhments. At the firſt glimpſe, they challenge our approbation, they command our applauſe. Even the more ignoble forms of

* The fir, the beech, and ſuch like trees, are called in Hebrew, ברוש ותאשור If. vii. 19. Which word is rendered, but I think very improperly, buſhes. It rather ſignifies the grand and moſt admired plants. It is intended as a contraſt to the coarſe and deſpicable thorns, mentioned in the preceding clauſe. And both taken together expreſs all ſorts of trees, from the towering cedar to the grovelling ſhrub.

† Something to this purpoſe is hinted in the prophecy of Iſaiah, by יראת שמיר ושיח terriculamentum ſentium et veprium; the terror of thorns and briers: meaning thoſe ſharp and ragged mounds, with which vineyards, corn-fields, and other cultivated ſpots, were uſually incloſed; which deterred the moſt adventurous cattle from forcing, or attempting to force, a paſſage.—The words are ſomewhat obſcure, and have been greatly miſunderſtood. But, thus interpreted, they afford an eaſy ſenſe, and perfectly coincide with the context: implying, "that places, formerly fenced about with "abundance of care, ſhould lie open, and expoſed to every wan-"dering foot: that tillage ſhould be diſcontinued; and the whole "country degenerate into a confuſed, diſorderly waſte, without "either the diſtributions of property, or the improvements of in-"duſtry." If. vii. 25. Vid. VITRING. in loc.

‡ The fat of kidneys of wheat, Deut. xxxii. 14. A ſentence rich with elegance! ſuch as would have ſhone in Pindar, or been admired by Longinus. Yet, I believe, its principal beauty conſiſts in an alluſion to a remarkable Jewiſh rite. In every ſacrifice, the fat of the kidneys was, as the moſt delicious part of the victim, ſet apart for GOD, and conſumed on his altar. Here even the common people were treated like the DEITY. They lay under no reſtraint, either from the divine prohibition, or the ſcarcity of the grain; but were copiouſly ſupplied, and freely regaled themſelves with the choiceſt, fineſt part of this firſt and beſt of vegetables.

* Mic. v. 7.

†† Job moſt beautifully alludes to theſe two ſources of vegetable fertility; My root was ſpread out by the waters, and the dew lay all night upon my branch. Job xxix. 19.

‡ This ſeems to be the image uſed by the pſalmiſt, Pſal. cxlv. 9. And a moſt amiable image, as well as a moſt picturesque repreſentation, it is.

animated exiſtence are moſt wiſely circumſtanced, and moſt liberally accommodated.

They all generate in that particular ſeaſon, which is ſure to ſupply them with a ſtock of proviſion, ſufficient both for themſelves, and their increaſing families.—— The ſheep yean, when there is a profuſion of nutrimental herbage on the ſoil, to fill their udders, and create milk for their lambs.—— The birds lay their eggs, and hatch their young, when myriads of new-born, tender inſects ſwarm on every ſide: ſo that the caterer, whether it be the male or female parent, needs only to alight on the ground, or make a little excurſion into the air; and they find a feaſt ready dreſſed, and all at free coſt, for the clamant mouths at home.

Their love to their offspring, while they continue in a helpleſs ſtate, is invincibly ſtrong. Whereas, the very moment they are able to ſhift for themſelves; when the parental affection would be attended with much ſolicitude, and productive of no advantage; it vaniſhes, as though it had never been.—— The hen which marches at the head of her little brood, would fly in the eyes of a maſtiff, or even encounter a lion in their defence. Yet, within a few weeks, ſhe abandons her chickens to the wide world, and not ſo much as knows them any more.

If the GOD of Iſrael inſpired Bezaleel and Aholiab with wiſdom, and underſtanding, and knowledge in all manner of workmanſhip *; the GOD of nature has inſtructed the wild and warbling inhabitants of the bough.—The ſkill, with which they erect their houſes, and adjuſt their apartments, is inimitable. The caution, with which they ſecrete their abodes from the ſearching eye, or intruding foot, is admirable. No general, though fruitful in expedients, could plan a more artful concealment. No architect, with his rule and line, could build ſo commodious a lodgment.—Give the moſt celebrated artificer the ſame materials, which theſe weak and unexperienced creatures uſe; let a Jones, or a De Moivre, have only ſome rude ſtraws or ugly ſticks; a few bits of dirt, or ſcraps of hair; a ſorry lock of wool, or a coarſe ſprig of moſs; and what works, fair with delicacy, or fit for ſervice, could they produce?

We extol the commander, who knows how to take advantage of the ground; who can make the ſun and wind fight for him, as well as his troops; and, by every circumſtance, embarraſſes the forces of the enemy, but expedites the action, and advances the ſucceſs of his own. Does not this praiſe belong to our feathery leaders? who pitch their tent, or (if you pleaſe) fix their penſile camp, on the dangerous branches that wave aloft in the air, or dance over the eddies of the ſtream. By which judicious diſpoſition, the vernal gales rock their cradle, and the murmuring waters lull their young; while both concur to terrify the ſhepherd, and keep the ſchoolboy at a trembling diſtance.—— Some hide their little houſehold from view, amidſt the ſhelter of entangled furze. Others remove it from reach, in the centre of a thorny thicket. And, by one ſtratagem or another, they are generally as ſecure and unmoleſted in their feeble habitations, as the foxes, which entrench themſelves deep in the earth, or as the conies, which retire to the rock for their † citadel.

If the ſwan has large ſweeping wings, and a copious ſtock of feathers, to ſpread over her callow brood; the wren makes up by contrivance, what is deficient in her bulk.—— Small as ſhe is, ſhe intends ‡ to bring forth, and will be obliged to nurſe up, a very numerous iſſue. Therefore, with the correcteſt judgment ſhe deſigns, and with indefatigable aſſiduity finiſhes, a neſt proper for her purpoſe. It is a neat rotund, lengthened into an oval, bottomed and vaulted with a regular concave. To preſerve it from rain, it has ſeveral coatings of moſs; to defend it from cold, it has but one window, and only a ſingle door; to render it both elegant and comfortable, it has carpets and hangings of the ſofteſt, fineſt down. By the help of this curious manſion, our little lady becomes the mother of multitudes. The vivifying heat of her body is, during the time of incubation, exceedingly augmented. Her houſe is like an oven, and greatly aſſiſts in hatching her young. Which no ſooner burſt the ſhell, than they find themſelves ſcreened from the annoyance of the weather; and moſt agreeably repoſed, amidſt the ornaments of a palace, and the warmth of a bagnio.

Perhaps, we have been accuſtomed to look upon the inſects, as ſo many rude ſcraps of creation, and to rank them amongſt the refuſe of things. Whereas, if we examine them without prejudice, and with a little attention, they will appear ſome of the moſt poliſhed pieces of divine workmanſhip.—Many of them are decked with a profuſion of finery. Their eyes are an aſſemblage * of microſcopes; whoſe mechaniſm is inconceivably nice, and finiſhed in the higheſt perfection. Their dreſs has all the variety and luſtre of colours: it is ſet with an arrangement of the moſt brilliant gems, and bordered with fringes richer far than the moſt coſtly ſilks. Their wings are the fineſt expanſions imaginable, cambric is mere canvaſs, and lawn is coarſe as ſackcloth, compared with thoſe inimitable webs. The caſes which incloſe their wings, glitter with the moſt gloſſy varniſh; are ſcooped into ornamental flutings; are ſtudded with radiant ſpots; or pinked with elegant holes.—Not any among them, but are equipped with weapons, or endued with dexterity, which qualify them to ſeize their prey, or eſcape their foe; to diſpatch the buſineſs of their reſpective ſtation, and enjoy the pleaſures of their particular condition.

Now I am in a talking humour, give me leave to celebrate the endowments, and aſſert the honours of my puny clients; yet not ſo much to ſupport their credit, as to magnify their all-gracious CREATOR.—What if the elephant is diſtinguiſhed by a huge proboſcis? His meaneſt relations of the reptile line are furniſhed with curious antennæ; remarkable, if not for their enormous magnitude, yet for their ready flexibility, and acute ſenſation: by which they explore their way, even in the darkeſt road; they diſcover and avoid whatever might defile their neat apparel, or endanger their tender lives.

Every one admires that majeſtic creature the horſe; his graceful head, and ample cheſt; his arching neck, and flowing mane; his cleanly-turned limbs, and finely-adjuſted motions. With extraordinary agility, he ‡ Aſpaſio has ventured to ſay, She intends;—and one is almoſt tempted to think, from the preparation which the little creature makes, that ſhe had really ſat down, and counted the coſt, and concerted her ſcheme. As though ſhe had deliberated with herſelf:—"I ſhall lay, not a couple of eggs, but near a ſcore. From "theſe I am to produce a houſe full of young. But how ſhall I "have warmth (unleſs art ſupply what nature has denied) ſuffi-"cient to hatch the embrios, or cheriſh the infants?"—The truth I believe is, that in all her ſeeming foreſight, and circumſpect behaviour, ſhe acts ſhe knows not what. Only ſhe acts what eternal wiſdom knows to be neceſſary, and what all-condeſcending goodneſs prompts her to perform.

* Exod. xxxi. 3. † Prov. xxx. 26.

* The common fly, for inſtance: who is ſurrounded with a multitude of dangers, and has neither ſtrength to reſiſt her enemies, nor a place of retreat to ſecure herſelf. For which reaſon, ſhe had need to be very vigilant, and always upon her guard. Yet her head is ſo fixed, that it is incapable of turning, in order to obſerve what paſſes, either behind or around her.—— Providence therefore, ſurpriſingly wiſe in its contrivances, and equally bountiful in its gifts, has furniſhed her, not barely with a retinue, but with more than a legion of eyes. Inſomuch, that a ſingle fly is ſuppoſed to be miſtreſs of no leſs than eight thouſand: every one of which is lined with a diſtinct optic nerve.—— By means of this coſtly and amazing apparatus, the little creature ſees on every ſide, with the utmoſt eaſe and with inſtantaneous ſpeed; even without any motion of the eye, or any flection of the neck.

ſlings himſelf over the ditch; and, with a rapid career, pours himſelf * through the plain. With unwearied application, he carries his rider from one end of the country to another; and, with undaunted bravery, ruſhes into the fierceſt rage, and amidſt the thickeſt havock of the battle.—Yet the graſshopper ſprings with a bound altogether as briſk, if not more impetuous.—The ant, in proportion to its ſize, is equally nimble; equally ſtrong; and will climb precipices, which the moſt courageous courſer dares not attempt to ſcale.—If the ſnail is ſlow in her motions, ſhe is under no neceſſity of treading back the ground which ſhe has paſſed; becauſe her houſe is a part of her travelling-equipage; and whenever ſhe departs, ſhe is ſtill under her own roof; where-ever ſhe removes, is always at home.

The eagle, 'tis true, is privileged with pinions that outſtrip the wind. Elevated on which, ſhe looks down on all that ſoars; and ſees flying clouds, and ſtraining wings far below: her optic nerve ſo ſtrong, that it meets and ſuſtains the dazzling beams of noon; her wide-ſurveying glance ſo keen, that, from thoſe towering heights, it diſcerns the ſmalleſt fiſh, which ſculks at the bottom of the river.—Yet neither is that poor outcaſt, the grovelling and gloomy mole, diſregarded by divine providence. Becauſe ſhe is to dig a cell in the earth, and dwell, as it were, in a perpetual dungeon, her paws ſerve her for a pickaxe and ſpade. Her eye, or rather her viſual ſpeck, is ſunk deep into a ſocket, that it may ſuffer no injury from her rugged ſituation: it requires but a very ſcanty communication of light, that ſhe may have no reaſon to complain of her darkling abode. I called her ſubterranean habitation a dungeon; and ſome people, perhaps, may think it a grave. But I revoke the expreſſion. It yields her all the ſafety of a fortified caſtle, and all the delight of a decorated grot.

Even the ſpider, though abhorred by mankind, is evidently the care of all-ſuſtaining heaven. She is to live upon plunder; to ſupport herſelf, by trepanning the idle, inſignificant, ſauntering fly. Suitably to ſuch an occupation, ſhe poſſeſſes a bag of glutinous moiſture. From this ſhe ſpins a clammy thread, and weaves it into a tenacious net. Expert as any practiſed ſportſman, ſhe always ſpreads it in the moſt opportune places. Senſible that her appearance would create horror, and deter the prey from approaching the ſnare, when watching for ſport, ſhe retires from ſight; but conſtantly keeps within diſtance, ſo as to receive the very firſt intelligence of what paſſes in the toils; and be ready to launch, without a moment's delay, upon the ſtruggling captive. And what is very obſervable, when winter chills the world, and no more inſects ramble amidſt the air, foreſeeing that her labour would be vain, ſhe diſcontinues her work, and abandons her ſtand.

I muſt by no means forget the little monarchy, which inhabits the hive. The bees are to ſubſiſt, not as a lawleſs banditti, but as a regular community. 'Tis theirs to earn a decent livelihood by honeſt induſtry; not to glut themſelves with carnage, or enrich themſelves by rapine. For which reaſon, they are actuated by an invariable inclination to ſociety. They poſſeſs the trueſt notions of domeſtic œconomy, and have enacted the wiſeſt laws for political government.—Their indulgent CREATOR has made them a preſent of all neceſſary implements, both for conſtructing their combs, and for compoſing their honey. They have each a portable veſſel with which they bring home their collected ſweets; and they have all the moſt commodious ſtorehouſes, in which they depoſit their delicious wares.—Though made for peace, they know how to uſe the ſword. They can take up arms with the utmoſt reſolution and intrepidity, when arms are requiſite to guard their wealth, or repel their foes.—Without going through a courſe of botany, they can readily diſtinguiſh every plant, which is moſt likely to yield the materials proper for their buſineſs. Without ſerving an apprenticeſhip in the laboratory, they are complete practitioners in the art of ſeparation and refinement. They are aware, without borrowing their information from an almanac, that the vernal gleams, and ſummer ſuns, continue but for a ſeaſon. Mindful of this admonition *, they improve to the utmoſt every ſhining hour; and lay up a ſtock of balmy treaſures, ſufficient to ſupply the whole ſtate, till the bloſſoms open afreſh, and their flowery harveſt returns.

Let the peacock boaſt, if he pleaſes, his elegant topknot and lofty mien; his neck adored with varying dies, and his train beſpangled with a round of ſtars.—Yet let him know, that the deſpiſed butterfly, and even the loathed caterpillar, diſplay an attire no leſs ſumptuous; and wear ornaments, altogether as genteel, if not quite magnificent.—Does beauty ſit in ſtate on that lordly bird? She ſhines in miniature on the vulgar inſect. Is the maſter of this lower creation ennobled with the powers of reaſon? The meaneſt claſſes of ſenſitive exiſtence are endued with the faculty of inſtinct: which gives them a ſagacity, that is neither derived from obſervation, nor waits for the finiſhings of experience: which, without a tutor, teaches them all neceſſary ſkill; and enables them, without a pattern, to perform every needful operation: and, what is far more ſurpriſing, never miſleads them, either into erroneous principles, or pernicious practices; never fails them, in the niceſt or moſt arduous of their undertakings.

Can you have patience to follow me, if I ſtep into a different element, and juſt viſit the watery world?—Not one among the innumerable myriads, which ſwim the boundleſs ocean, but is watched over by that exalted eye, whoſe ſmiles irradiate the heaven of heavens. Not one, but is ſupported by that almighty hand, which crowns angels and archangels with glory.——The condeſcending GOD has not only created, but beautified them. He has given the moſt exact proportion to their ſhape, the gayeſt colours to their ſkin, and a poliſhed ſmoothneſs to their ſcales. The eyes of ſome are ſurrounded with a ſcarlet circle; the back of others is diverſified with crimſon ſtains. View them, when they glance along the ſtream, or while they are freſh from their native brine; and the burniſhed ſilver is not more bright, the radiant rainbow is ſcarce more glowing, than their vivid, gliſtering, gloſſy hues.

Yet, notwithſtanding the finery of their apparel, we are under painful apprehenſions for their welfare.—How can the poor creatures live, amidſt the ſuffocating waters?—As they have neither hands nor feet, how can they help themſelves, or how eſcape their enemies?—We are ſoon freed from our fears by obſerving, that they all poſſeſs the beneficial, as well as ornamental furniture of fins. Theſe when expanded, like maſts above, and ballaſt below, poiſe their floating bodies, and keep them ſteadily upright.—We cannot forbear congratulating them on the flexible play, and vigorous activity of their tails; with which they ſhoot themſelves through the paths of the ſea, more ſwiftly than ſails and oars can waft the royal yacht.—But we are loſt in wonder, at the exquiſite contrivance, and delicate formation of their gills: by which they are accommodated, even in that denſe medium, with the power of breathing, and the benefits of reſpiration.

* Pours himſelf—This is Jeremiah's beautiful and expreſſive phraſe, כסום שטף chap. viii. 6. Which Virgil has been ambitious to imitate;

——————Ruuntque effuſi carcere,

* Venturæque hyemis memores, æſtate laborem
Experiuntur, et in medium quæſita reponunt. VIRG.

A piece of mechaniſm this, indulged to the meaneſt of the fry; yet ſurpaſſing, infinitely ſurpaſſing, in the fineneſs of its ſtructure, and the felicity of its operation, whatever is curious in the works of art, or commodious in the palaces of princes.

Ther. Some perſons, Aſpaſio, have the art of giving dignity to trivial, and ſpirit to jejune topics. I cannot but liſten, with a pleaſed attention, to your diſcourſe, though it deſcends to the loweſt ſcenes, and meaneſt productions of nature.——To make ſuch philoſophical remarks, was uſually my province; to add the religious improvement, yours. But my thoughts, at preſent, are wholly taken up with the conſideration of my SAVIOUR's righteouſneſs. I can hardly turn my views, or divert my ſpeech, to any other ſubject. All thoſe amiable appearances of the external creation, which I was wont to contemplate with rapture, afford but a languid entertainment to my mind.——Till my intereſt in this divine REDEEMER is aſcertained, the ſpring may bloom; the ſummer ſhine; and autumn ſwell with fruits: but it will be winter, chearleſs, gloomy, deſolate winter in my ſoul.

Aſp. You ſay, Theron, you attended to my curſory hints. Then you own ſuperior diſcernment could not but perceive, how every part of the exterior world is adjuſted, in the moſt excellent and gracious manner.—Not the coarſeſt piece of inactive matter, but bears the impreſs of its MAKER's faſhioning ſkill.——Not a ſingle creature, however inſignificant, but exhibits evident demonſtrations of his providential care.——His hand is liberal, profuſely liberal, to all that breathes, and all that has a being.

Let me only aſk;—and to introduce this queſtion with the greater propriety, to give it a more forcible energy on our minds, was the principal deſign of the preceding remarks;—let me aſk, Does GOD take care for oxen!* Is he a generous benefactor to the meaneſt animals, to the loweſt reptiles? Are his munificent regards extended farther ſtill, and vouchſafed even to the moſt worthleſs vegetables? And ſhall they be with-held from you, my dear friend, and from me?—Not one among all the numberleſs productions, which tread the ground, or ſtand rooted to the ſoil, wants any convenience, that is proper for its reſpective ſtate. And will his heavenly FATHER deny Theron, what is ſo neceſſary to his preſent comfort, and his final happineſs? Impoſſible †!

Ther. I wiſh for, but I can hardly hope to partake of, that piritual bleſſing; which always included my whole happineſs, and now ingroſſes my whole concern.

Aſp. Not hope to partake of!—What foundation, what ſhadow of pretence, has this deſponding temper, either in reaſon, or in ſcripture? Is it not evident from the whole book of revelation; is it not apparent, through the whole compaſs of nature, that the almighty LORD, "who governeth the world with the palm of his "hand ‡," is remote, infinitely remote from a niggardly diſpoſition? He not only provideth for the wants, but even ſatisfieth the deſire of every living thing †.

Conſider thoſe ſtately poppies, which are now the principal ornament of the garden. They have no tongue to requeſt the leaſt favour. Yet the ever-gracious MAKER clothes them from his own wardrobe, and decks them with exquiſite beauty.——Obſerve the young ravens, which ſit careleſsly croaking on yonder boughs. Do they cry ‡ for food? It is in hoarſe inarticulate accents. Yet the all-ſupporting GOD overlooks their ignorance; hears meaning in their noiſe; and ſupplies their every need from his own ſpontaneous bounty.—If he accommodates the former, tho' incapable of aſking; if he attends to the latter, though inſenſible of their benefactor; can he diſregard our preſſing wants? will he reject our earneſt petitions? eſpecially, when we ſeek ſuch pure and exalted gifts, as it is both his delight and his honour to beſtow?

O! my friend, look abroad into univerſal nature, and look away every diſquieting thought.

Ther. Did you inquire what pretence I have for this deſponding temper? Alas! I have more than a pretence. I have a reaſon; a reaſon too obvious; my great unworthineſs!

Aſp. Pray, where was the worthineſs of the ſtiff-necked Iſraelites? Yet the LORD bare them, and carried them, all the days of old ‖.—Where was the worthineſs of Saul the blaſphemer? Yet the bleſſed JESUS made him a choſen veſſel, and ſet him as a ſignet on his right hand.——You deſerve nothing at the hand of GOD our SAVIOUR. Neither did Joſeph's brethren deſerve any kindneſs from the viceroy of Egypt. Yet he delivered them from famine, who ſold him to ſlavery. He ſettled them in the choiceſt territories, who caſt him into the horrible pit. He ſhewed himſelf a friend and a father to thoſe unnatural relations, who were his actual betrayers, and his intentional murderers.——And can you perſuade yourſelf, will you harbour a ſuſpicion, that CHRIST is leſs compaſſionate than Joſeph? Shall a frail mortal outvie EMMANUEL in beneficence?

Ther. Is not ſome righteouſneſs of our own indiſpenſably required, in order to our participation of the righteouſneſs of CHRIST?

Aſp. Yes, ſuch a righteouſneſs as the Samaritan woman §, and Zaccheus the publican poſſeſſed; or ſuch as the Philippian jailor, and the profligate Corinthians might boaſt ¶.——Zaccheus was a man of infamous character, and chief among the extortioners. The jailor was a barbarous perſecutor, and in purpoſe a ſelf-murderer. Yet our LORD ſays of the former, This day, without injoining any courſe of previous preparation, is ſalvation come to thine houſe ‡. St Paul directs the latter, without inſiſting upon any antecedent righteouſneſs, to believe on the LORD JESUS CHRIST; and aſſures the poor alarmed ſinner, that, in ſo doing, he ſhould be ſaved +.

So that nothing is required, in order to our participation of CHRIST and his benefits, but a conviction of our need, a ſenſe of their worth, and a willingneſs to receive them in the appointed way; receive them, as the freeſt of gifts, or as matter of mere grace. Come, and take freely ++, is our MASTER's language; without ſtaying to acquire any graceful qualities, is his meaning.

Ther. Surely, to come without any holineſs, without any decent preparative, muſt be a groſs indignity to the divine JESUS. Whoever preſents a petition to any earthly ſovereign, will think it abſolutely neceſſary, not to appear in a ſlovenly deſhabille, much

* 1 Cor. ix. 9.

† I know not how to forbear tranſcribing a paragraph, from one of our periodical papers; which contains a propoſal for adapting natural philoſophy to the capacity of children: wiſhing, at the ſame time, that the ingenious author would enlarge his ſketch into a treatiſe; and execute the plan, which he has ſo judiciouſly projected, and of which he has given us ſo delicate a ſpecimen.

After ſome remarks on the ſagacity of birds, their induſtry, and other ſurpriſing properties, he adds; "—Is it for birds, O LORD, "that thou haſt joined together ſo many miracles, which they have "no knowledge of? Is it for men who give no attention to them? "Is it for the curious, who are ſatisfied with admiring, without "raiſing their thoughts to thee? Or is it not rather viſible, that "thy deſign has been to call us to thyſelf, by ſuch a ſpectacle; to "make us ſenſible of thy providence and infinite wiſdom; and to "fill us with confidence in thy bounty, who watcheſt, with ſo much "care and tenderneſs, over birds, though two of them are ſold but "for a farthing?"

* Eccles xviii. 3. † Pſal. cxlv. 16. ‡ Pſal. cxlvii. 9.

‖ Iſ. lxii 9. § John iv. 18. ¶ 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10.

‡ Luke xix. 9. + Acts xvi. 31. ++ Rev. xxii. 17.

leſs

less in filthy raiment. Does not our LORD himself, in the parable of the wedding-garment, inculcate this very point, and caution us against a presumptuous approach?

Asp. In the parable you mention, CHRIST is both the bridegroom, the feast, and the wedding-garment *. And who are united to an union with this Bridegroom? to be guests at this feast? to be arrayed with this wedding-garment?—The messengers are sent, not to the mansion-houses of the rich, or the palaces of the mighty; but to the highways and hedges: where misery mourns; and poverty pines; and baseness hides her head.——To whom is their message addressed? To the poor, the maimed, the halt, the blind †: persons who have no amiable or recommending endowments, but every loathsome and disgustful property. Yet these (mark the passage, my dear friend; mark well the encouraging circumstance) these are not only not forbidden, but entreated,—importuned,—and by all the arts of persuasion, by every weighty or winning motive, compelled to come in.—And after all this, surely, it cannot be an act of presumption to accept, but must be a breach of duty to refuse the invitation.

Ther. You take no notice of the man, who was found without a wedding-garment: which is by far the most alarming incident, and that which gives me no small uneasiness.

Asp. And does my Theron take proper notice of the divine declaration? I have prepared my dinner, says the KING eternal. All things are ready ‡. "Whatever is "necessary for the justification, the holiness, the com"plete salvation of sinners, is provided in the merit and "the grace of my SON. Let them come therefore, as "to a nuptial banquet; and freely enjoy my muni"ficence; and feast their souls with the royal pro"vision."

The man without a wedding-garment, denotes the specious superficial professor; who is called by CHRIST's name, but has never put on CHRIST JESUS by faith.—Shall I tell you more plainly whom this character represents? You yourself, my dear Theron, was, some months ago, in the state of this unhappy creature, when you trusted in yourself, and thought highly of your own, thought meanly of your SAVIOUR's righteousness.

I congratulate my friend, on his happy deliverance from so dangerous a condition. You and I are now like the returning prodigal. Let us remember, that he came with no recommendation, either of dress, of person, or of character. None but his nakedness, his misery, and an acknowledgment of vileness, which had every aggravating, not one extenuating circumstance. Yet he was received,—received with inexpressible indulgence; and clothed with that first, that best, that divinest robe ‖, the righteousness of JESUS CHRIST.

Let us accustom ourselves to consider this incomparable robe, under its evangelical character. It is not a matter of bargain, nor the subject of sale, but a deed of gift. The gift of righteousness, says the apostle. And gifts, we all know, are not to be purchased, but received.

Ther. Is nothing then, nothing to be done on our part?—no heavenly-mindedness to be exercised? no victory over our lusts gained? no fruits of sanctification produced?

Asp. These legal apprehensions! how closely they cleave to my Theron's mind! But, I hope, the word of GOD, which pierceth to the dividing asunder the soul and spirit, will give the severing blow.——And what says that sacred word? It describes the gospel, as a will or testament *; and all its glorious blessings, as legacies bequeathed by the dying JESUS.——When your old acquaintance Charicles left you a handsome legacy; what did you do to establish your title, and make it your own?

Ther. My title was pre-established by my friend's donation. I had nothing to do, but to claim, to accept; and to possess.

Asp. Do the very same in the present case. They who believe, are heirs, undoubted heirs of the righteousness which is by faith †.——Sure you cannot suppose, that CHRIST's kindness is less sincere, or that CHRIST's donations are less valid, than those of an earthly testator.

Ther. This illustration hardly reaches the point. I speak not of doing any thing, by way of merit, but by way of qualification.

Asp. If there be any qualification, I think it is our extreme indigence. This indeed it will be proper to have; and this, I presume, you are not without. Other qualification, neither reason prescribes, nor scripture requires.

Reason prescribes no other.—The gifts of the great eternal SOVEREIGN are intended, not to recognize our imaginary worth, but to aggrandize our views of his mercy and grace. To answer such a design, the unworthy and the sinners are duly qualified; nay, are the only qualified persons.

Scripture requires no other.——The ever-merciful SAVIOUR says not, They are unqualified for my merits; they have no valuable or noble acquirements. But this is his tender complaint; They will not come to me, just as they are; with all their sins about them; with all their guilt upon them; that they may have life ‡.——Pray, take notice of this text; and you will see things placed in a new light, ranged in a new order. Sanctification, heavenly-mindedness, and a victory over our lusts, are not so much the qualities which he requires, as the blessings which he will confer.

Ther. "The unworthy and sinners, the only qualified!" of this expression I cannot but take particular notice.—Then Judas should stand in the first rank of qualified persons; and the devout centurion, whose prayers and alms had come up as a memorial before GOD, was thereby unqualified for the favour of heaven.

Asp. If you observed my expression, I spoke in the hypothetical manner; made a supposition, rather than advanced an assertion. If there be any qualification, this is the only one. But, strictly speaking, there is no such thing. The impulsive or inclining cause of all GOD's favour shewn, of all GOD's goodness exercised, is—from the creature? No; but from himself, himself alone. He has mercy, not because this or that person is amiable, is meet, or qualified, but because he will have mercy.—— And as for our need of mercy and reconciliation, arising from our sinfulness, this can no more constitute a real qualification for the blessings, than an act of rebellion can qualify for the first honours of the state.

But this we must allow, that such need, such misery,

* Matth. xxii. 11. Hæc vestis est justitia CHRISTI. BENGEL. in loc.

† Luke xiv. 21. ‡ Matth. xxii. 4.

‖ Luke xv. 22. Την στολην την πρωτην.

* Heb. ix. 16, 17. This notion not only runs through the scriptures, but stands conspicuous even in their title-page.—What are they called? THE OLD and THE NEW TESTAMENT.—What is a testament? An authentic deed, in which estates are transmitted, and legacies bequeathed. In other testaments, some earthly possession; in this, the heavenly patrimony, even all the riches of grace, and the everlasting inheritance of glory.—Did we consider the scriptures in this light, it would be a most engaging invitation, to search them with assiduity and pleasure. What child is willing to continue ignorant of a deceased parent's last will and testament? Who does not covet to know, what honours, hereditaments, and wealth devolve to his enjoyment, by such an interesting and venerable conveyance.

† Heb. xi. 7. ‡ John v. 40.

ry, ſuch ſinfulneſs, illuſtrate the freeneſs, and manifeſt the riches of grace. And this we ſhould never forget, that GOD's firſt and leading purpoſe, in all his favourable diſpenſations to fallen man, is, to demonſtrate the ſovereignty, and advance the glory of his grace.—The LORD, promiſing a very extraordinary deliverance to Iſrael, ſays, *Not for your ſakes, be it known unto you, do I this ſignal act of kindneſs.—What then is the inducement? We find it in the following declaration; I, even I am HE, that blotteth out your tranſgreſſions for my own ſake †, and according to the good pleaſure of my will.—What is the end of all? It is FOR THE PRAISE OF THE GLORY OF HIS GRACE ‡. A proper motto this, for all the diſplays of divine goodneſs to ſinful men. It has been inſcribed by the hand of truth and inſpiration. Time and eternity, inſtead of eraſing the lines, will only ſtamp them deeper, and open them wider.

Ther. This is ſuch a gift!—To be intereſted in all the merits of CHRIST! To have his immaculate righteouſneſs imputed to my ſoul!—So that from henceforth there ſhall be no fear of condemnation, but a comfortable enjoyment of freeſt love, and a delightful expectation of completeſt glory!

Aſp. If this rich donation ſurpaſs your very thoughts, and fill you with grateful aſtoniſhment; it is ſo much the better adapted to diſplay, what the ſcripture very emphatically ſtyles, the abundant, the ſuper-abundant, the exceeding abundant ‖ grace of our GOD.——GOD hath pleaſure in the proſperity of his ſervants. He is a boundleſs ocean of love; ever flowing, yet abſolutely inexhauſtible. See! what an innumerable variety of benefits are tranſmitted from yonder ſun, to gladden all the regions of nature! Yet the ſun is but a ſpark; its higheſt ſplendor, no more than a ſhade; its uninterrupted and moſt profuſe communications of light, a poor diminutive ſcantling; compared with the riches of divine benignity.

The ſervant in the parable, who owed ten thouſand talents, craved only ſome merciful forbearance. Whereas his generous lord remitted the whole ſum, and gave him an acquittance in full; I forgave thee all that debt §.—You wonder, and very deſervedly, at ſuch vaſt generoſity. But what had been your admiration to ſee the noble maſter admitting this obnoxious ſlave to a ſhare in his dignity? what if he had made ſo worthleſs a wretch, the chief of his family, and the heir of his eſtate? This perhaps, you would ſay, exceeds the bounds of credibility. Yet GOD almighty's ſtupendous beneficence exceeds all this. He not only ſpares guilty creatures, but makes them his children; makes them inheritors of his kingdom; and as an introduction to all, or rather as the crown of all, makes them partakers ¶ of his SON.

Ther. The gift is ineſtimable; of more value than all worlds. It will render me bleſſed and happy, now and for ever. And may ſo unworthy a creature look for a bleſſing, thus ſuperlatively excellent?

Aſp. Unworthy?—my dear friend, dwell no longer upon that obſolete topic. The greateſt unworthineſs is no objection in CHRIST's account, when the ſoul is convinced of ſin, and the heart deſirous of a SAVIOUR. And as for worthineſs, this is as much diſavowed by the goſpel, as equivocal generation † is exploded by the diſcoveries of our improved philoſopher.——Nay farther, this notion is diametrically contrary to the goſpel, and totally ſubverſive of the covenant of grace.

Ther. In what reſpect?

Aſp. Becauſe it would make our own duty and obedience the terms. Whereas the terms were CHRIST's ſuffering, and CHRIST's obedience. Theſe are the hinge on which that great tranſaction turns, and on which the hope of the world hangs.

Ther. Be more particular, Aſpaſio.

Aſp. The firſt covenant was made with Adam, for himſelf and us. Breaking it, he loſt his original righteouſneſs, and became ſubject to death; was, at once, a bankrupt and a rebel.——Now you cannot ſuppoſe, that the almighty MAJESTY would enter into a freſh covenant with an inſolvent and attainted creature. It pleaſed therefore, the SECOND PERSON of the adorable TRINITY, to undertake our cauſe, to become our ſurety, and put himſelf in our ſtead. With him the ſecond covenant was made. He was charged with the performance of the conditions; thereby to obtain pardon and righteouſneſs, grace and glory, for all his people. I have made a covenant with my CHOSEN * ONE, is the language of the MOST HIGH. And the terms were (you will permit me to repeat the momentous truth) not your worthineſs or mine, but the incarnation, the obedience, the death of GOD's ever-bleſſed SON.

Ther. Has man then no office aſſigned, no part to act, in the covenant of grace?

Aſp. He has: but it is a part which my friend ſeems very loath to diſcharge. His part is to accept the bleſſings, fully purchaſed by the SAVIOUR, and freely preſented to the ſinner. His part is, not to diſhonour the REDEEMER's gracious interpoſition, and infinitely-ſufficient performance, by hankering after any merit of his own. His part (why will you conſtrain me to reiterate in this manner?) is, not to bring money in his hand, with the ten brethren; but, with an empty hand, and like an impoveriſhed Lazarus, to take hold of GOD's covenant †.

Ther. If this be the nature of the new covenant, I muſt confeſs, I have hitherto been ignorant of the goſpel.

Aſp. And from hence ariſes your preſent diſtreſs; from hence your averſeneſs to receive comfort. You are a philoſopher, Theron; and have been accuſtomed to examine nicely the proportion of objects, rather than to weigh them in the balance of the ſanctuary. Here you find all proportion ſwallowed up and loſt. This quite overthrows all your concluſions, drawn from the fitneſs of things. Here man is nothing, leſs than nothing, while grace is all in all.——And ſhould we not, however unworthy in ourſelves, magnify the grace of our GOD?

Ther. Moſt certainly.

Aſp. How can this be done, but by expecting great

* Ezek. xxxvi. 32.

† If. xliii. 25. למעני For my own ſake. Which teaches us, that GOD, and nothing in the creature, is the original, entire, ſole cauſe of all grace and every gracious vouchſafement. It is not only by him, and through him, but to him; for the honour of his benign perfections, that we are pardoned, accepted, ſaved.

‡ Eph. i. 6.

‖ Υπερβαλλουσα χαρις. 2 Cor. ix. 14.—Υπερεπερισσευσεν η χαρις. Rom. v. 20.—Υπερεπλεονασεν η χαρις. 2 Tim. i. 14.

§ Matth. xviii. 32. ¶ Heb. iii. 14.

† The ancients imagined, that many vegetables and inſects were produced by, I know not what, plaſtic power in the ſun, and other elements. This is called equivocal generation. Whereas the modern philoſophers maintain, that every individual of this kind derives its being from ſome parent-vegetable or parent-animal. This is ſtyled univocal generation.

* Pſal. lxxxix. 3. It is generally allowed, that this pſalm, in its ſublimeſt ſenſe, is referable to CHRIST; and, in its full extent, is referable only unto CHRIST. If ſo, I think, it would be more ſignificant and emphatical, to render בחירי my CHOSEN ONE.—This will furniſh out a very clear and cogent argument to prove, that the covenant of grace was made with our LORD JESUS. Juſt ſuch an argument as the apoſtle uſes, to convince the Galatians, that the promiſes of the covenant were made to the ſame divine PERSON, Gal. iii. 16.——From both which premiſes this important concluſion follows, That juſtification and every ſpiritual bleſſing are the purchaſe of CHRIST's obedience; are lodged in him as the great proprietary; are communicated to ſinners only thro' the exerciſe of faith, or in a way of believing. See Zech. ix. 11.

† If. lvi. 4.

and

and ſuperlatively-gracious bleſſings from his hand?——Alexander, you know, had a famous, but indigent philoſopher, in his court. Our adept in ſcience was once particularly ſtraitened in his circumſtances. To whom ſhould he apply, but to his patron, the conqueror of the world? His requeſt was no ſooner made than granted. Alexander gives him a commiſſion, to receive of his treaſurer whatever he wanted. He immediately demands, in his ſovereign's name, a hundred talents *.—— The treaſurer, ſurpriſed at ſo large a demand, refuſes to comply; but waits upon the king, and repreſents the affair; adding withal, how unreaſonable he thought the petition, and how exorbitant the ſum.—Alexander hears him with patience: but, as ſoon as he had ended his remonſtrance, replies; "Let the money be inſtantly paid. "I am delighted with this philoſopher's way of think- "ing. He has done me a ſingular honour; and ſhew- "ed, by the largeneſs of his requeſt, what a high idea "he has conceived, both of my ſuperior wealth, and my "royal munificence."

Thus, my dear Theron, let us honour, what the inſpired penman ſtyles, the marvellous loving-kindneſs of JEHOVAH. From the King, whoſe name is the LORD of hoſts, let us expect,—not barely what correſponds with our low models of generoſity, much leſs what we ſuppoſe proportioned to our fancied deſerts,—but what is ſuitable to the unknown magnificence of his name, and the unbounded benevolence of his heart. Then we ſhall chearfully and aſſuredly truſt, that CHRIST JESUS will be made of GOD to us wiſdom, and righteouſneſs, and ſanctification, and redemption: that HE, who hath given himſelf for us †, will give us of his SPIRIT ‡, and will give unto us eternal life ‖.

Ther. Yes, upon condition, that we fight the good fight, and finiſh our courſe of duty. Henceforth, ſays the apoſtle, after this is done, there is laid up for me, and for other victorious ſoldiers, for other faithful labourers, a crown of righteouſneſs.

Aſp. To ſuch perſons the crown will aſſuredly be vouchſafed. But is it vouchſafed on account of their ſucceſsful warfare, or perſerving obedience? If ſo, Iſrael may vaunt themſelves, and ſay, Mine own hand, not the REDEEMER's interpoſition, hath ſaved me §.

Not to repeat what has already been alledged, in oppoſition to this opinion;—not to produce what might farther be urged, from a variety of ſcriptural teſtimonies;—I ſhall only deſire you to obſerve, what the apoſtle himſelf adds in this very place. There is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs: but is this the pay, proportionate and due to his own ſervices? Is it what he claims and demands, on the foot of duty performed?—The very title of the reward implies the contrary. It is a crown of righteouſneſs, becauſe purchaſed by the meritorious and conſummate righteouſneſs of CHRIST. The action of the Judge declares the contrary: which the LORD, the righteous Judge, ſhall give me at that day. It is, you ſee, an act of favour; the iſſue of unmerited bounty; what neither ſaint, nor martyr, nor apoſtle enjoys, but only by way of gracious donation ¶.

I would fain have my Theron form more honourable apprehenſions concerning the mercy and the bounty of our LORD JESUS CHRIST. He will beſtow what you ſuppoſe he exacts. He is really a benefactor, where you would repreſent him as a taſkmaſter. The LORD will give grace, as well as glory. He knows, you have neither ſtrength nor merit, therefore he will ſupply your want of both, from his own unfathomable fulneſs.

Ther. Ah! my Aſpaſio! you don't know my ſtate. I have not only no merit, but great guilt *; was, by nature, a child of wrath; have been, by practice, a ſlave of ſin; and, what is worſe, am ſtill corrupt; have ſtill a carnal heart.——And has not ſuch a wretch forfeited all title to the divine favour? Nay, does he not deſerve the vengeance of eternal fire?

Aſp. That we all deſerve this miſery, is beyond diſpute. I am truly glad, that we are ſenſible of our demerit. Here our recovery begins. Now we are to believe, that the LORD JESUS has ſatisfied divine juſtice; has paid a glorious price, on purpoſe to obtain for ſuch ill-deſerving, ſuch hell-deſerving creatures, all pardon, all holineſs, and everlaſting happineſs. According to the import of that charming ſcripture, When we are enemies (and what is there in an enemy, to beſpeak favour, or deſerve benefits?) we were reconciled to GOD by the death of his SON †.

You have great guilt. But is this a reaſon why you ſhould be excluded from the bleſſings of the covenant? Contemplate the ſtate of that forlorn and wretched outcaſt, deſcribed in the ſixteenth of Ezekiel. An infant in its blood: this repreſents a ſinner, who has nothing to excite love, but all that may provoke abhorrence. Yet what ſays the HOLY ONE of Iſrael? When I ſaw thee, not waſhed, and purified, and made meet for my acceptance, but polluted in thy blood ‡; loathſome with defilement, and laden with iniquity; then, even then I ſaid unto thee, Live: I ſpread my ſkirt over thee; and thou becameſt mine. This is the manner of his proceeding, not barely to one nation, but to all his people; not in one period of time only, but through all generations.

You are ſtill corrupt; one that is ſenſible of his corruption, and acknowledges his ſinfulneſs! Then you are the very perſon, for whom the SAVIOUR's righteouſneſs is intended; to whom it is promiſed.——You are a governor of the county-hoſpital, Theron. You have been induſtrious in promoting, and are active in ſupporting, that excellent inſtitution; where Medicine with her healing ſtores, and Religion with her heavenly hopes, act as joint handmaids to Charity. What are the circumſtances which render any perſons the proper objects for an admiſſion into your infirmary?

Ther. Their poverty, and their diſtemper. Without poverty, they would not need; and free from diſtemper, they would not prize, the benefit of our modern Bethesda.

Aſp. Apply this to the caſe under conſideration. The whole world is in a ſtate of ſpiritual diſorder. CHRIST is ſtyled, by the inſpired writer, the LORD

---

* About ten thouſand pounds.

† Eph. v. 2. ‡ John iv. 13.

‖ John x. 28. § Judg. vii. 8.

¶ 2 Tim. iv. 8. The word αποδωσει, as it ſtands in the preſent connection, is, I think, very properly explained by a late pious profeſſor of divinity at Glaſgow: Profitetur fiduciam ſuam de gratuita mercede, quam DEUS gratis promiſit omnibus fidelibus, et ut juſtus judex, juſte ſimul et ex gratia rependet, non ex merito ullo noſtro, ſed priora dona ſua gratuita poſterioribus gratuito cumulando. DICKSONI Expoſ. Analyt.

* I believe, no one experienced in the ſpiritual life will ſuſpect, that Theron ſpeaks out of character.—Conſcience, when once alarmed, is a ſtubborn and unceremonious thing. It pays no deference to wealth; it never ſtands in awe of grandeur; neither can it be ſoothed by the refinements of education, or the attainments of learning. And we generally find, that a moſt unaccountable propenſity to ſelf-worthineſs, ſtrongly poſſeſſes the new-awakened convert. He is perpetually raiſing objections, founded on the want of perſonal merit; notwithſtanding all our remonſtrances, to quiet his fears, and remove his jealouſies. It is truly a hard taſk, for a mind, naturally leavened with legal pride, to come naked and miſerable to CHRIST;—to come, diveſted of every recommendation but that of extreme wretchedneſs; and receive, from the hand of unmerited benignity, the free riches of evangelical grace.

† Rom. v. 10.

‡ The words are peculiarly emphatical; not only doubled, but redoubled; to denote, at once, the ſtrangeneſs of the fact, yet the certainty of the favour. When I paſſed by thee, and ſaw thee polluted in thine own blood, I ſaid unto thee when thou waſt in thy blood, Live: yea, I ſaid unto thee when thou waſt in thy blood, Live. Ezek. xvi. 6.

our healer *. The gift of his righteouſneſs, the balm of his blood, and the influences of his SPIRIT, are the ſovereign reſtorative. And ſure it cannot be a fanciful perſuaſion of our health, but a feeling conviction of our diſeaſe, which renders us proper objects of his recovering grace,——He came not to call the righteous, the righteous in their own eyes, but ſinners †, ſelf-condemned and ruined ſinners, to give them repentance, and pardon, and newneſs of life.

Ther. But if any fooliſh and refractory patients have abuſed our beneficence, it is a ſtanding unalterable rule of the houſe, never to admit them a ſecond time, however preſſing their exigencies, or however powerful their recommender. I have, not once only, but through the whole courſe of my life, abuſed the marvellous loving-kindneſs of the LORD.

Aſp. And is not the LORD ſuperior to all his creatures, in acts of pardon, as well as of power? Yes, as thoſe heavens are higher than this proſtrate earth, ſo much more enlarged and extenſive is the divine clemency,—than the wideſt ſphere of human kindneſs, ſhall I ſay? rather than the boldeſt flights of human imagination. Your ſtatutes are inexorable, in caſe of one notorious irregularity committed. But the free gift of a REDEEMER's righteouſneſs is vouchſafed, notwithſtanding many offences, unto juſtification ‡.——It is the glory of our almighty RULER, and redounds to the honour of his crucified SON, to paſs over ‖ not a ſingle tranſgreſſion only, but a multitude of provocations; to be altogether as unequalled in mercy, as HE is abſolutely ſupreme in majeſty.

As it is the groſſeſt pride, to entertain high notions of our own accompliſhments, or to expect eternal life on the ſcore of our own obedience; ſo it will be the greateſt affront to the grandeur of CHRIST's merits, and the freeneſs of his grace, if we ſuppoſe our crimes too heinous to be forgiven, or our perſons too vile to be accepted.

Theron pauſed.—Theſe conſiderations ſeemed to operate; this anodyne to take effect.——Deſirous to improve the favourable juncture, and impart the needed conſolation, Aſpaſio added:

How often did the inhabitants of Jeruſalem diſregard the warnings, and reject the counſels of our bleſſed LORD! How juſtly might HE have ſworn in his wrath, "They ſhall never hear the joyful ſound of my "goſpel more. The bleſſings which they have ſo wan-"tonly deſpiſed, and ſo wickedly abuſed, ſhall be irrevo-"cably withdrawn."——Inſtead of paſſing ſuch a ſentence, this is the charge, which, after his reſurrection, he gives to his apoſtles: Let repentance and remiſſion of ſins be preached in my name to all nations, BEGINNING AT JERUSALEM §.——"At Jeruſalem, LORD! Have not the "men of that ungrateful and barbarous city been deaf to "thy tendereſt importunities? Did they not perſecute "thee unto condemnation and death? Are not their "weapons ſtill reeking, as it were, with thy blood; and "their tongues ſtill ſhooting out arrows, even bitter "words? by which they would murder thy character, "as they have already crucified thy perſon."——Yet theſe wretches (and could any be more inhuman? could any be more unworthy?) are not only not abhorred, but unto them is the meſſage of grace, and the word of ſalvation ſent. Nay, to ſhew the unparallelled freeneſs of our REDEEMER's grace, theſe are firſt upon the heavenly liſt. The glad tidings of pardon and life, which are to be publiſhed through the world, muſt begin (amazing mercy!) MUST BEGIN at Jeruſalem.

Ther. Thus much I may venture to profeſs in my own behalf: That I long for this bleſſing;—I pray for this bleſſing;—but I cannot ſee my title to this comprehenſive and ineſtimable bleſſing, clear.

Aſp. I behold it perfectly clear.——Some days ago, a worthy clergyman, who lately came to ſettle in the neighbourhood, did himſelf the honour of making one at your table. After dinner you ſhewed him your library; we took a walk in your garden; and made the agreeable tour of the fiſh-ponds. Then,—with that amiable frankneſs of mein and accent, which is ſo peculiar to my friend, and exceedingly endears all his favours,—you told him, "That he was as welcome to any book "in your ſtudy, as if the whole collection was his own: "that if on a viſit from ſome acquaintance of ſuperior "rank, he ſhould wiſh to be accommodated with a more "delicate entertainment than uſual, the productions of "your waters, and of your hot-beds, were entirely at his "ſervice: and that his acceptance of your offers, with-"out the leaſt ſhineſs or reſerve, would be the moſt plea-"ſing compliment he could pay you on the occaſion."

What ſays the great PROPRIETOR of all good? If any man, however unworthy his perſon, or obnoxious his character, thirſt; thirſt for the bleſſings of my evangelical kingdom; let him come unto ME, the fountain of theſe living waters, and drink his fill *.——You yourſelf acknowledge, that you long for the ſacred privileges of the goſpel. Your heart is awakened into habitual and lively deſires after the ſalvation of CHRIST. What is this but, in the ſpiritual ſenſe, to thirſt? To you therefore the promiſe is made; to you the riches of this benign diſpenſation belong.

That clergyman has not the leaſt ſuſpicion of being diſappointed, in caſe he ſhould ſend for a brace of carp, from your canal, or a fine melon from your garden.——Why is he ſo confident? Becauſe he has done you any ſignal ſervice? No; but becauſe you have paſſed your word, and made the generous offer.—And why ſhould you harbour the leaſt doubt concerning the divine veracity? Why ſhould you call in queſtion your right to theſe heavenly treaſures? ſince it is founded on a grant altogether as free, altogether as clear, as your own indulgent conceſſion; and infinitely more firm than any human engagement; founded on the fidelity of that ſublime BEING, who "remembers his covenant and pro-"miſe to a thouſand generations."

Ther. It is impoſſible to confute, yet difficult to believe, what you urge.

Aſp. What I urge, is not the voice of a few dubious paſſages, nicely culled from the book of GOD, or forcibly wreſted by the interpretation of man. The whole tenor of inſpiration runs, with the greateſt perſpicuity, and the greateſt uniformity, in this delightful ſtrain.——Let me, out of a multitude, produce another expreſs from the court of heaven. Ho! every one that thirſteth, come ye to the waters, even he that hath no money. Come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk, without money and without price †.——Wine and milk undoubtedly ſignify the pardon of our ſins, and the juſtification of our perſons; the communications of ſanctifying grace, and the hope of eternal glory. Theſe are nouriſhing and refreſhing to the ſoul, as milk the richeſt of foods, and as wine the beſt of cordials, are to the body.——Theſe, you ſee, are to be obtained, without money, and without price; without any merit of our own; without any plea deduced from ourſelves; by poor, undone, periſhing bankrupts.——They are to be enjoyed by every one, who unfeignedly eſteems them, and humbly ſeeks them. No exception is made; no excluſive clauſe added. It is not ſaid, Any one that is worthy, but every one that thirſteth.—To leave no room for any miſgiving apprehenſions, the kind invitation is repeated, Buy and eat; buy wine and milk. The invaluable yet free tender is

* Exod. xv. 26. † Matth. ix. 13.
‡ Acts v. 31. ‡ Rom. v. 16.
‖ Prov. xix. 11. § Luke xxiv. 47.

* John vii. 37. † Iſ. lv. 1.

con-

confirmed again and again; He that hath no money; without money; without price. And both are preſſed upon us with a very remarkable, with the moſt affectionate vehemence; Come ye; come ye; yea come.

Had our heavenly BENEFACTOR permitted us to draw up this inſtrument of conveyance, and word it according to our own wiſh; what language could we have contrived, to render either the grant more free, or our claim more ſecure?

Ther. Theſe are chearing truths. They amount to little leſs than a demonſtration. And I am ready to declare, in the language of Agrippa, Almoſt thou perſuadeſt me to commence a believer.

Aſp. And why, my dear friend, why not altogether? Can you diſtruſt the ſincerity of the divine overtures? If the overtures are real, your title is unqueſtionable.—Nay, there is more than an overture. You have an actual gift from the almighty MAJESTY. To us, ſays the prophet,—including all that wait for the redemption of CHRIST, and the conſolation of Iſrael,—a child is born *. To us,—he repeats the precious truth; to declare his exuberant joy †, and denote the abſolute certainty ‡ of the thing,—a ſon is given; even GOD's own SON, the ever-bleſſed JESUS, to be our PROPITIATION, our SURETY, our complete REDEEMER.

Juſt caſt a look upon yonder neat lodge. Though placed in the centre of a ſpacious field, it ſeems to be contiguous with the extremity of the viſta. The eye, travelling over ſuch a length of ground, has almoſt loſt the windows, and the decent ornaments of the front. But I ſhall not ſoon loſe the idea of that amiable munificence; which, as I was rambling one pleaſant morning, and accidentally called at the houſe, I learned from its preſent owner.—He was, I find, one of your ſervants; had ſpent ſeveral years in your family; when he ſettled in the world, you beſtowed upon him that commodious box, and a pretty adjacent farm; to poſſeſs, without moleſtation or control, during his life.—Does he not reckon the little eſtate, by virtue of your donation, to be his own? as much his own, for the time preſcribed, as if he had paid an equivalent in money?—Since the LORD JEHOVAH has given us his SON, and all his unutterable merits; why ſhould we not, with an aſſurance of faith, receive the incomparable gift? Why ſhould we not confide in it, as firmer than the firmeſt deed; and far more inviolable than any royal patent?—Eſpecially ſince it has been ſealed to us in every ſacramental ordinance, and witneſſed by every good motion of the HOLY SPIRIT in our hearts.

Ther. My ſervant never affronted my authority. If he had vilified my character, or inſulted my perſon, ſhould I then have been inclined to make the ſame advantageous ſettlement?

Aſp. Herein appears the infinite ſuperiority of the divine bounty. GOD is rich in mercy, not only to the obedient and grateful, but to the unthankful and unworthy. To the LORD our GOD, ſays the prophet, belong mercies and forgiveneſſes; in meaſure ſuperabundant, and in continuance unwearied; and this, notwithſtanding we have offended him, by our manifold failures in duty; nay, have rebelled ‖ againſt him, by flagrant violations of his law.

In ſweet concert with this prophetical leſſon, ſings the tranſported pſalmiſt: Thou LORD, in thy ſacred humanity, haſt aſcended up on high; aſcended, from the low caverns of the tomb, to the higheſt throne in the higheſt heavens.——Thou haſt led captivity captive: haſt aboliſhed death, that univerſal tyrant; and ſubdued thoſe powers of darkneſs, which had enſlaved the whole world.——Like a glorious and triumphant conqueror, thou haſt alſo received gifts; not merely for thy own fruition, but to confer on others, by way of honorary and enriching largeneſs.——What are thoſe gifts, Theron?

Ther. The gifts of the goſpel, I ſuppoſe; pardon of ſin, the influences of the HOLY SPIRIT, and thoſe other privileges of Chriſtianity, which conſtitute the preſent happineſs of mankind, and prepare them for future bliſs.

Aſp. You rightly judge.—And for whom were thoſe royal, thoſe heavenly donatives received? If you have an inclination to beſtow a ſword ſet with diamonds, a finely-wrought piece of plate, or an exquiſitely-finiſhed picture; what names preſent themſelves to your thoughts? What perſons are the objects of your choice? The approved friend, or diſtinguiſhed favourite, I make no queſtion.——But for whom (let me aſk again, ſince it is a point of the laſt importance) were thoſe heavenly donatives received?

Ther. Let me recollect:—Thou receiveds gifts,—not for fallen angels, but for men;—and not for thy friends, but for thy enemies;—yea, for the rebellious alſo *.——Merciful heaven! What a word is this! and does it come from the GOD of truth?—Gifts! divine gifts! gifts of unſpeakable value, and eternal duration! and theſe to be conferred on enemies, on the rebellious! wretches, who are deſtitute of all gracious qualifications; who deſerve not the leaſt favour; but have reaſon to expect the frowns of indignation, and the ſword of vengeance!

Aſp. Thus it is written, in thoſe ſacred conſtitutions, which are far more ſtedfaſt and unalterable, than the law of the Medes and Perſians.——Thus it is ſpoken, by the mouth of that almighty BEING, with whom there is no variableneſs, nor the leaſt ſhadow of turning.——Let us not, my dear friend, by unreaſonable unbelief, fruſtrate all theſe promiſes, and reject our own mercies. Let us not, by an evil heart of unbelief, make GOD a liar; and make ourſelves, of all creatures, the moſt miſerable.

But ſee!—The clouds, which hung their agreeable ſables, to damp the ardour, and abate the glare of day, are departing. The ſun has been colouring their fleecy ſkirts, and ſpreading over the floating ſcreen a variety of interchangeable hues. Now he begins to edge them with gold, and ſhine them into ſilver. A ſure indication, that (like the glittering, but tranſitory toys, which they repreſent) they will ſoon be ſwept from the horizon, and ſeen no more.——The bright orb, while we are ſpeaking, burſts the veil; and,

* Iſ. ix. 6.

† Virgil has copied the prophet's fine manner. He repreſents joy, uttering her ſentiments, in the ſame ſpirited ſtrain, with the ſame reiterated earneſtneſs:

——Humilemque videmus
Italiam. Italiam primus conclamat Achates.
Italiam læto ſocii clamore ſalutant.

‡ See Gen. xli. 32.

‖ Dan. ix. 9. The original is מרדו than which no expreſſion, in the Hebrew language, bears a more obnoxious ſignification. It denotes the moſt audacious and the moſt flagitious impiety. It denotes that rebellion, which is as the ſin of witchcraft; and that ſtubborneſs, which is as the iniquity of idolatry. Yet, all virulent and execrable as it is, it does not ſuppreſs the yearnings of divine pity, nor ſuperſede the exerciſe of divine forgiveneſs.—With a word derived from the ſame root, Saul, when exaſperated almoſt to madneſs, upbraids Jonathan. And we know, perſons ſo extremely incenſed, never ſpeak in the ſofteſt terms; never touch the ſubject with a feather, but make their tongue like a ſharp ſword.

May I venture to add, that our tranſlators ſeem to miſtake the proper application of the aforementioned paſſage? They repreſent Saul's invective, flying as wide of the mark, as it is overcharged with malice.—Son of the perverſe rebellious woman! This might be aſſerted, without the leaſt impeachment of Jonathan's perſonal loyalty.—Beſides, is it not exceſſively indecent, as well as abſolutely unreaſonable, to reflect upon the mother, for the miſdemeanors of the ſon?—Surely, the clauſe ſhould be rendered, in perfect conſiſtence with the genius of the original; Thou ſon of perverſe rebellion; or, more agreeably to the Engliſh idiom, Thou perverſe rebellious wretch! 1 Sam. xx. 20.

* Pſal. lxviii. 18.

from a voluminous pomp of parting clouds, pours a flood of ſplendor over all the face of nature.——We ſhall quickly perceive this open ſituation too hot to conſiſt with pleaſure; and muſt be obliged to ſeek for ſhelter, in the ſhady apartments of the houſe.

Will you admit me, Theron, into thoſe ſhady apartments?

Ther. Admit you, Aſpaſio!—I am ſurpriſed at your queſtion. I thought you had known me better; and I am ſorry, it ſhould be needful to aſſure you, that my houſe is as much your own, as it is mine. The more freely you command it, the more highly you will oblige me.

Aſp. May I believe you, Theron? Do you ſpeak from your heart? or muſt I conclude, that you plauſibly profeſs, what you have no intention to perform?—Would you be pleaſed, if I ſhould obſtinately perſiſt in theſe diſhonourable ſuſpicions, notwithſtanding all your friendly proteſtations?

Ther. My dear Aſpaſio, I ſee your deſign. I ſee, and am aſhamed; aſhamed to think, that I ſhould fancy myſelf more punctual in my profeſſions, than GOD is true to his word.——LORD, I believe, help thou mine unbelief!

DIALOGUE XVI.

OUR friends had agreed upon a viſit to Philenor. They rode through a fine open, fruitful country; which was covered with crops of ripened corn, and occupied by ſeveral parties of ruſtics gathering in the copious harveſt.

The rye, white and hoary as it were with age, waved its bearded billows, and gave a dry huſky ruſtle before the breeze.——The wheat, laden with plenty, and beautifully brown, hung the heavy head; and invited, by its bending poſture, the reaper's hand. Plats of barley, and acres of oats, ſtood whitening in the ſun. Upright, and perfectly even, as though the gardener's ſhears had clipped them at the top, they gratified the ſpectator's eye, and gladdened the farmer's heart.——Beans, partly clad in native green, partly transformed and tawny with the parching ray, were preparing the laſt employ for the crooked weapon.——Some of the grain lay flat, in regular rows, on the new-made ſtubble. Some was erected, in graceful ſhocks, along the briſtly ridges. Some, conveyed homewards on the loaded waggon, nodded over the groaning axle.

The villages ſeemed to be empty, and all their inhabitants poured into the plains. Here were perſons of each ſex, and of every age.—The luſty youths, ſtooping to their work, plied the ſickle; or ſwept, with their ſithes, the falling ranks.—The ſprightly females followed, binding the handfuls into ſheaves, or piling the ſwarths into haſty cocks.—Diſperſed up and down were the children of the needy, gleaning the ſcattered ears, and picking their ſcanty harveſt.—Nor were the old people abſent; but crawling into the ſun, or ſitting on a ſhady eminence, they beheld the toils,—the pleaſing toils they once ſuſtained.

This is the moſt joyful period of the country-man's life; the long expected crown of all his labours. For this he broke the ſtubborn glebe, and manured the impoveriſhed ſoil. For this he bore the ſultry beams of ſummer, and ſhrunk not from the pinching blaſts of winter. For this he toiled away the year, in a round of ceaſeleſs but willing activity; knowing, that * the huſbandman muſt labour before he partakes of the fruits.—And will not the bleſſed hope of everlaſting life; will not the bright expectation of conſummate bliſs, animate us with an equally-chearful reſolution, both to reſiſt the temptations, and diſcharge the duties of our preſent ſtate?

Short ſeemed the way, and quick paſſed the time, as they travelled through ſuch ſcenes of rural abundance, and rural delight.—Before they were aware, the horſes ſtopt at Philenor's ſeat: where they found, to their no ſmall diſappointment, that the maſter was gone abroad. ——They alighted however, and took a walk in the gardens.

The gardens, at proper intervals, and in well-choſen ſituations, were interſperſed with pieces of ſtatuary. At the turn of a corner, you are—not ſhocked with a naked gladiator, or a beaſtly Priapus,—but agreeably ſurpriſed with the image of Tully. He is juſt riſen from his ſeat, and upon the point of addreſſing himſelf to ſome important oration. A reverential awe appears in his countenance; ſuch as ſilently acknowledges, that he is going to plead before the rulers of the world. Sedate, at the ſame time, and collected in himſelf, he ſeems conſcious of ſuperior eloquence, and emboldened by the juſtice of his cauſe. His thoughtful aſpect, and gracefully-expanded arm, ſpeak to the eye, before the tongue has uttered a ſyllable.

You enter an alley, lined on either ſide with a verdant fan; and having no variety of objects to diverſify the intermediate ſpace, your view is conducted to a magnificent building at the end. As you walk along, contemplating the maſterly performance in architecture, an unexpected opening diverts your attention; and preſents you with ſome ſtriking imitation of virtuous or heroic life.——Not the Macedonian madman; nor Sweden's royal knight-errant; nor Cæſar, infamouſly renowned for his ſlaughtered millions; but the truly-gallant Czar, A drawn ſword in his hand, and a commanding majeſtic ſternneſs on his brow. The weapon is held in the moſt menacing poſture; and many a ſpectator has been obſerved to ſtart back, with apprehenſions of fear. It is that glorioufly-ſevere attitude, in which the grateful citizens of Narva beheld him, and in which all poſterity will admire him, when he turned upon his own victorious, but ungovernable troops, and threatened to drench the dagger in their hearts, if they did not immediately deſiſt from rapine * and ſlaughter; immediately allow quarter to their vanquiſhed foes.

Under a circular dome, ſupported by pillars of the Doric order, and in a ſpot where ſeveral walks centre, ſtands—not the Venus a mediçis; corrupting, while it captivates the world,—but a Spartan mother. Her habit decent and graceful; ſomewhat like the Juno Matrona of the Romans, as ſhe is finely depictured in Mr Spence's Polymetis. Her air ſtately and reſolved; expreſſive of dignity, yet mingled with ſoftneſs. She holds a ſhield; is in the act of delivering it to her ſon;

* 2 Tim. ii. 6. Beza thinks, that in ſettling the conſtruction of this verſe, the adverb πρῶτον ſhould be connected with the participle κοπιῶντα. If ſo, the tranſlation exhibited above, may bid fair for acceptance; and one of the moſt celebrated hiſtorians, may have the honour of commenting on the greateſt of the apoſtles; Ne illi falſi ſunt, qui diverſiſſimas res expectant, ignaviæ voluptatem, et præmia virtutis. SALLUST. i. e. They are, beyond all diſpute, moſt egregiouſly miſtaken, who hope to unite thoſe incompatible things, the pleaſures of indolence, and the rewards of induſtry.

* "As ſoon as the ſoldiers were maſters of the town, (Narva), "they fell to plunder, and gave themſelves up to the moſt enor- "mous barbarities. The Czar ran from place to place, to put a "ſtop to the diſorder and maſſacre. He was even obliged to kill "with his own hand ſeveral Muſcovites, who did not hearken to his "orders." VOLTAIRE's hiſt. Charl. XII.

a youth ſetting out for the army, and going to hazard his life, in the defence of his country. She is ſuppoſed to add that ſpirited and magnanimous exhortation, which is engraven on the protuberance of the buckler,——Bring it back, my ſon, as thy trophy; or be brought back upon it, as thy bier.

I am particularly pleaſed, ſaid Theron, with the contrivance of this laſt ornament. It is regulated by one of the moſt refined rules of art; not to laviſh away all the beauty at a ſingle view, but to make a ſkilful reſerve for ſome future occaſion.——The dome and the columns afford pleaſure, when beheld at a conſiderable diſtance. The fine animated figure in the midſt diſplays its graces, on a nearer approach. By which means, the attention is kept awake, and the entertainment continues new.

But what I principally admire, is the ſpirit or ſtyle of the decorations in general. They put me in mind of a very juſt remark, which Mr Pope has ſomewhere made. It is, if I remember right, to this effect.——"A man not "only ſhews his taſte, but his virtue, in the choice of his "ornaments. A proper piece of hiſtory, repreſented in "painting on a rich man's walls, (or exhibited in imagery "amidſt his gardens) is very often a better leſſon, than any "he could teach by his converſation. In this ſenſe, the "ſtones may be ſaid to ſpeak, when men cannot, or will "not."——All but the comparative or ſatirical part of the obſervation, I would apply to the proſpect before us, and its worthy owner.

Aſp. Philenor's gardens are, I think, more chaſte and delicate in their ornaments, than a certain collegiate church. In the latter place, we might reaſonably expect the ſtricteſt adherence to purity, if we ſhould not meet with the ſymbols of piety and incitements to religion.——What then would be the reflections of a judicious obſerver, if, in ſuch a ſolemn and venerable edifice, he ſhould ſee a huge brawny fellow ſtuck up againſt the wall, with his poſteriors half bare, his whole body more than half naked, and in an attitude none of the moſt decent *.——Excuſe me, Theron. I confeſs myſelf aſhamed even to rehearſe the deſcription. How then can the ſpectacle itſelf become the houſe of divine worſhip?

Ther. But perhaps this ſame brawny fellow may repreſent a Heathen demigod; one of the idols worſhipped by antiquity; the tutelary deity of valour.

Aſp. And will this juſtify the practice? Does not this add profaneneſs to immodeſty? Are we Chriſtians to thank Hercules for the valour of our warriors, and make our acknowledgments to Pallas for the conduct of our generals? Shall we Chriſtians behold with admiration, or recognize as our benefactors, what the apoſtle has ſtigmatized under the character of devils †?

If HE, who overthrow the tables of the money-changers, had taken a walk in theſe famous cloyſters, I am apt to ſuſpect, he would have paid no very agreeable compliment to this fine piece of ſtatuary. Take theſe things hence, would probably have been his command; and make not the precincts of your temple a chamber of Pagan imagery, his rebuke *.——Neither is it at all unlikely, that the image itſelf, notwithſtanding its inimitable workmanſhip, might have ſhared the fate of its kinſman Dagon;

——When the captive ark
Maim'd his brute image, head and hands lopp'd off
In his own temple, on the groundſell edge
When he fell flat, and ſham'd his worſhippers †.

Ther. But how ſhould the artiſt repreſent the great achievements and the ſhining qualities of his hero, if you will not allow him to make uſe of theſe ſignificant emblems?

Aſp. I queſtion, whether they are ſo very ſignificant. The mirror ſeems to characterize a fop, rather than a ſoldier. It leads us to think of a ſoft Narciſſus, admiring himſelf; rather than a ſagacious general, planning the operations of the campaign.——Beſides, is ſacred literature ſo deſtitute of proper emblems, that we muſt borrow the decorations of our churches and the trophies of our conquerors, from the dreams of ſuperſtition or the deluſions of idolatry? How juſt and expreſſive are thoſe emblematical repreſentations, exhibited in Ezekiel's viſion! where activity and ſpeed are ſignified, by hands in conjunction with wings; and the deep, the complicated, yet ever-harmonious ſchemes of Providence, by a wheel in the middle of a wheel. With what propriety and force are the nobleſt endowments pictured, in the revelations of St John, and their grand machinery! Superior wiſdom and benevolence of heart, are deſcribed by the face of a man; ſtrength of mind and intrepidity of ſpirit, by the viſage of a lion; calmneſs of temper and indefatigable application, by the features of an ox; a penetrating diſcernment, and an expeditious habit of acting, by the form of a flying eagle ‡.

Theſe hieroglyphics are graceful, are pertinent and ſuch as every ſpectator will underſtand. Whereas the devices of our new monumental encomium are, I preſume, to the unlearned hardly intelligible; to the ſerious, little better than profane; and to every beholder, indelicate if not immodeſt.——Philenor, I imagine, would bluſh to admit them into his walks or avenues. And I am ſorry to find them received into the moſt ancient ‖, moſt renowned, and moſt frequented church in the kingdom.

Talking in this manner, they come to a curious grove, formed on that uncommon plan, propoſed by Mr Addiſon, in one of his Spectators.—It conſiſted wholly of evergreens. Firs, clad in verdant ſilver, pointed their reſinous leaves, and ſhot aloft their towering cones. Laurels, arrayed in gloſſy green, ſpread their ample foliage, and threw abroad their rambling boughs.—Bay trees were expanded into a fan, that no weather could tarniſh; or rounded into a column, that knew not how to moulder. While the lauruſtinus ran out into a beautiful irregularity of ſhape; and compacted her reddening gems, in order to unfold her whitening bloom.—In one place lay a dale, gently ſinking, and coated with the chamomile's natural frieze; which never changes its colour, never loſes its gloſs.

* Referring to the monument, lately erected for MAJOR-GENERAL FLEMING, in Weſtminſter-Abbey. Where, under the General's buſt, are placed Hercules and Pallas. Hercules with his club and lion's ſkin, in the manner related above. Pallas, with a mirror and a ſerpent at her ſide.——The reader may ſee a picture and an explanation of this monument, in the Gentleman's Magazine for Auguſt 1754.

At this church has been the burial-place of the moſt illuſtrious perſonages, for many centuries; as it is the place, where all our kings receive their crowns, and many of them depoſit their aſhes; it is ſingularly eminent for its antiquities and monuments; there is a large reſort both of natives and foreigners, to view its grand and ſolemn curioſities. Whatever, therefore, is erected in a place ſo circumſtanced and ſo diſtinguiſhed, ſhould, I apprehend, not only diſplay an air of elegance in the execution, but include a beauty of hoc in the deſign: becauſe nothing can lay claim to the το καλον, which is not poſſeſſed of the το πρεπον. Nor can any performances, as ſituated, be pronounced truly graceful, but ſuch only as correſpond with the character, and ſubſerve the deſign of the ſacred place. It was thought, by a very able critic and a very candid writer, that more impropriety of taſte, in ornamenting one of the monuments, called for his cenſure. Surely then a violation of decency, and an approach to Paganiſm, call more loudly for public animadverſion, and proper reformation. See Spect. vol. I. No. 26.

† 1 Cor. x. 20.

* John ii. 16.

† MILTON. b. I. 458. ‡ Rev. iv. 7.

‖ Some antiquarians trace back the origin of this church, even to the reign of Lucius; which is more than the ſpace of 1506 years. Others ſuppoſe, that Sebert, King of the Eaſt-Saxons, about the year of our LORD 605, built the firſt religious ſtructure on this ſpot. All agree, that it was re-edified and enlarged by Edward the Confeſſor; and that the preſent ſtately and magnificent fabric was founded by Henry III.

Near

Near it, and ſcooped, you would imagine, from the ſame hollow, aroſe a mount, ſoftly ſwelling, and ſhagged with furze; gay with perennial verdure, and generally decked with golden bloſſoms.——Here you are led through a ſerpentine walk, and hedges of box; and find, perhaps, a ſolitary pyramid or a capacious urn, each compoſed of unfading yew. There you look through a ſtrait alley, fenced on either ſide, and arched over head, with mantling philirea; and ſee, at the extremity, an obeliſk ſheathed in ivy, and ornamented with its ſable cluſters, as with wreaths of living ſculpture.——Scattered up and down, were ſeveral ſorts of holly; ſome ſtriped with white; ſome ſpotted with yellow; ſome preparing to brighten and beautify the ſcene, with berries of glowing ſcarlet.

The heads of the trees, ariſing one above another, in a gradual ſlope, from the diminutive mazerean to the lofty cypreſs; the ſeveral ſhadings of their green attire, greatly diverſified, and judiciouſly intermixed; afford, eſpecially in the winter-ſeaſon, a moſt enlivened and lovely proſpect.——As the ſunſhine is, by the frequenters of this grove, uſually more coveted than the ſhade; it is ſo diſpoſed, as to admit, in one part or another, every gleam of fine weather, which exhilarates the winter.

Aſp. There muſt be ſomething unſpeakably pleaſing in a plantation, which appears lively and fruitful when all its neighbours of the woodland race are barren, bleak, or dead. But how much more chearing and delightful muſt it be, when decrepit age, or bodily infirmities, have impaired the vigour, and laid waſte the gratifications of our youthful prime, to find a ſolid undecaying pleaſure in the favour of GOD, and the hope of glory!—Now indeed the feathered tribes reſort to the more flowing umbrage of the poplar and the aſh. But, amidſt December's cold, you ſhall obſerve them forſaking the leafleſs woods, and flocking to this friendly receptacle; hopping acroſs the ſunny walks, or ſheltering themſelves, in the wet and ſtormy day, under theſe truſty boughs. So, the many thoughtleſs creatures, who turn their back upon religion, amidſt the ſoft and ſmoothing careſſes of proſperity, will want, extremely want, its ſovereign ſupports, under the ſharp and diſtreſſing aſſaults of adverſity, ſickneſs, and death.——This collection, it is true, may not equal the groves of annual verdure, in floridity of dreſs; but it far exceeds them, in the duration of its ornaments.——'Ere long, yonder ſhewy branches will be ſtript of their holiday cloaths: whereas theſe will retain their honours, when thoſe are all rags, or nakedneſs. Thus will it be with every refuge for our poor imperfect, ſinful ſouls; excepting only the righteouſneſs of our LORD JESUS CHRIST. Every thing elſe will fade as a leaf *. This, my Theron, and this alone is an evergreen; always free for our acceptance, and always effectual to ſave.

Ther. An evergreen it is. But, like the ruddy and inviting fruits, which hang on the uppermoſt boughs of thoſe lofty trees in the orchard, it ſeems to be quite out of my reach.

Aſp. Are you ſenſible, that you need the immaculate and perfect righteouſneſs of our SAVIOUR?

Ther. Was Jonah ſenſible, how much he needed the cooling ſhelter of his gourd, when the ſun ſmote fiercely upon his temples, and all the fervours of the fiery eaſt were glowing around him?—So is your Theron ſenſible, that, without a far better righteouſneſs than his own, he muſt inevitably be condemned by the ſentence of the law, and cannot poſſibly ſtand before the high and holy GOD.

Aſp. Remember then, what our LORD ſays to ſuch perſons; Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you reſt †. How gracious is the invitation? Come unto ME, the Father of compaſſions, and the Giver of every good gift.——How extenſive as well as gracious! All that are weary *, toiling in a fruitleſs purſuit of happineſs, and ſpending your labour for that which ſatisfieth not. All that are heavy laden †, oppreſſed with the ſervitude of ſin, or bowed down under a load of miſery.—Theſe, all theſe are called; and you, my friend, in the number.—They have not a ticket, a bond, or ſome inferior pledge, to aſcertain their ſucceſs; but they have a promiſe from faithfulneſs and truth itſelf. I will give you reſt, ſays the Strength of Iſrael; whoſe will is fate, and his word the baſis of the univerſe.——And if CHRIST will give you reſt, he will waſh you in that blood which atones, and inveſt you with that righteouſneſs which juſtifies; ſince nothing ſhort of theſe mercies can afford any ſatisfaction to the guilty conſcience, or true ſatisfaction to the reſtleſs ſoul.—Permit me to aſk farther, Do you earneſtly deſire this righteouſneſs?

Ther. Will yonder hirelings, when fatigued with the heat and burden of a long, laborious, ſultry day, deſire the ſhades of the evening, and the repoſe of the night?—I can truly, on this occaſion adopt the words of the prophet; The deſire of my ſoul is to thy name, bleſſed JESUS, and to the remembrance of thy righteouſneſs. The very mention of this ſpotleſs righteouſneſs is muſic to my ears. Every freſh, though diſtant diſcovery of it, gleams pleaſure upon my mind. And that would be a welcome day, a day greatly to be diſtinguiſhed, which ſhould bring it near to my view, and home to my ſoul.

Aſp. Say not then, my dear friend, that CHRIST, and the bleſſings of his purchaſe, are beyond your reach. They are now, even now at your door. You need not argue anxiouſly and deſpondingly, Who ſhall aſcend into heaven, to bring down CHRIST from above? or, who ſhall deſcend into the deep, to bring up CHRIST from beneath ‡? There is no ſuch impoſſibility, no ſuch difficulty in the thing. CHRIST and his righteouſneſs, CHRIST and his ſalvation, are brought nigh in the word of promiſe. And if thou ſhalt confeſs with thy mouth the LORD JESUS, as dying on the croſs for thy redemption; if thou ſhalt believe in thy heart, that GOD hath raiſed him from the dead for thy juſtification, thou ſhalt be ſaved ‖. In ſo doing, thou ſhalt receive remiſſion of ſin, and power to withſtand its temptations.

Have you never, in your travels, been overtaken by the dark and tempeſtuous night? When chilled with the cold, and almoſt drowned in the rain, you arrived at the houſe of ſome valuable friend, was you not willing to gain admittance?

Ther Willing! I was deſirous, I was almoſt impatient; I thought every moment an hour, till the hoſpitable door opened; till I exchanged the diſmal gloom and the driving ſtorm, for the chearful light and the amiable company within.

Aſp. The adored EMMANUEL profeſſes himſelf equally willing to come unto you. Behold! ſays the SAVIOUR of the world, I ſtand at the door, and knock. If any man hear my voice, and open the DOOR, I ſhall come in unto him, and will ſup with him, and he with ME §.—Like one expoſed to all inclemencies of the air, whoſe head is filled with dew, and his locks with the drops of the night ¶, he is not only willing, but deſirous to enter.——He ſtands at the door, with great long-ſuffering and perſeverance; till all obſtacles are removed, or rather till that one grand obſtacle is taken out of the way, unbelief.—He knocks by the preaching of his word, and the promiſe of his goſpel; like one who ſolicits admiſſion, and will take no denial.—Hear then his ſoliciting voice, and he will ſup with you; will make his abode with you, will manifeſt his glories in you, and communicate his grace to you. Believe his promiſing word, and you ſhall ſup with him.

* If. lxiv. 6. † Matth. xi. 28.

* Κοπιωντας. † Πεφορτισμενοι

‡ Rom. x. 6, 7. ‖ Rom. x. 9.

§ Rev. iii. 20. ¶ Cant. v. 2.

this will be refreshing to your distressed soul, as the most sumptuous banquet to the famished stomach and craving appetite.

Ther. I cannot open my heart.

Asp. CHRIST has the key of David. He openeth, and none can shut; he shutteth and none can open *.——HE is able to make all grace, not only to exist in you, but abound towards you †.——And, what is still more encouraging, he is professedly the author and finisher of our faith ‡. Since he has claimed this character to himself, since he has undertaken to execute this office, why should we harbour the least distrust? Will HE not fulfill his own office, and act agreeably to his own character?—Be not, my dear Theron, be not faithless, but believing.

Ther. This I believe,—That I am a lost sinner; under the curse of the law, and liable to the wrath of GOD; that there is no relief for my distress, but in CHRIST and his transcendent merits. HE, and HE alone, is able to save me from my guilt, and all its dismal train of miseries. He is a SAVIOUR fully proportioned to my wants; exactly suited to my several necessities.——I believe, and am persuaded, that, if I was interested in the divine JESUS, my soul should live.

Asp. Be persuaded likewise, that there is no clogging qualification, no worth to be possessed, no duty to be performed, in order to your full participation of CHRIST and his riches. Only believe, and they are all your own. CHRIST dwelleth in our hearts,—how? by legal works, and laborious prerequisites? No; but by faith ‖. He that believeth on the SON, hath—a chimerical? far from it; a real and a substantial happiness; even everlasting life §.

Ther. Ah! my Aspasio! I cannot believe. I feel my impotency. My mind is, as you formerly hinted, like the withered arm.

Asp. It is no small advantage, Theron, to be convinced of our inability in this respect. This is, if not the beginning of faith, the sign of its approach; and shews it to be, if not in the soul, yet at the very door.—Fear not, my friend. He who bids you stretch out, will strengthen the withered arm. He first makes us sensible of our weakness, and then fulfills all the good pleasure of his will, and the work of faith with power ¶.

Can you doubt of his willingness? Then go to mount Calvery. There listen to the sounding of his bowels, and of his mercies towards you ‡. Has not every drop of blood a tongue? Cannot you read a language in each streaming wound, and hear a voice in every dying pang?—Do they not all speak his infinite love even to wretched sinners? Do they not all address you with that tender remonstrance, O thou of little faith, wherefore dost thou doubt +? Nay, do they not all declare, with an energy superior to the force of words, that he will deny you no manner of thing that is good?

Who gave his blood, what gift will he with-hold!

Ther. I am ashamed to recollect, what mistaken notions I once entertained concerning the easiness of believing; as though it were to be performed, like the act of rising from our seat, or stepping into a coach, by our own strength, and at our own time. What a stranger was I then to the blindness of my understanding, and the hardness of my heart; to my bondage under unbelief, and averseness to the way of salvation by grace through faith!

Asp. Since you are sensible of your impotence, beware of the contrary extreme. Because you cannot, by your own strength, exercise faith, let not this occasion a tame resignation of yourself to infidelity. You must endeavour, diligently endeavour, to believe; and wait, and pray, for the divine SPIRIT. Though it is his office to testify of CHRIST, and bring near the REDEEMER's righteousness *; yet his influences are not to supersede, but to encourage our own efforts.—Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; here is our duty. For it is GOD that worketh in you both to will and to do †; here is our encouragement. And O! what a glorious encouragement, to have the arm of Omnipotence stretched out for our support and our succour!

Ther. How, or in what manner, does the divine SPIRIT work faith in the heart of a sinner? You wonder, perhaps, that I ask such a question. But my apprehensions are strangely dull, and my views very dim, with regard to spiritual things. If in this respect I have any sight, it is like his, who saw men as trees walking; saw these several objects, but so obscurely, so confusedly, that he could not distinguish one from the other, only by the circumstance of motion.

Asp. The most enlightened minds see only in part; and all have reason to make the blind beggar's supplication their own request; LORD, that I may receive my sight!—The operation of the HOLY SPIRIT in producing faith, is thus described by a master in Israel: "The "divine SPIRIT brings CHRIST and his righteousness "nigh unto us in the promise of the gospel; clearing at "the same time our right and warrant to intermeddle "with all, without fear of vitious intromission; en- "couraging and enabling to a measure of confident ap- "plication, and taking home all to ourselves, freely, "without money, and without price."

You was once, Theron, a zealous advocate for good works. Now you seem to have abandoned your clients. Remember, my dear friend, what our LORD JESUS CHRIST says, ‡ This is the work of GOD, of all works most acceptable and most honourable to the divine MAJESTY, that you believe on him whom he hath sent.

Ther. The true belief, according to your notion, Aspasio, is so refined and exalted a virtue, that I very much question, whether I shall ever be able to attain it.

Asp. If you are unable to attain it, is the LORD unable to give it? Our sufficiency for this and every good work, is not in ourselves, but in GOD.——And to him difficulties are easy. Before him mountains are a plain.——You will please to remember, that sinners are said to believe, not through their own ability, but through the power of grace. And you will permit me to ask, how you became acquainted with my notion of faith?

Ther. I am not so inattentive a reader of your letters, as to forget your definition of this momentous article. Faith, you say, is "a real persuasion ‖, that the blessed "JESUS has shed his blood for me, and fulfilled all right- "eousness in my stead: that, through this great atone- "ment and glorious obedience, he has purchased even "for my sinful soul, reconciliation with GOD, sanctify- "ing grace, and all spiritual blessings §."

* Rev. iii. 7. † 2 Cor. ix. 8. ‡ Heb. xii. 2.
‖ Eph. iii. 17. § John iii. 36.
¶ 2 Thess. i. 11. † Is. lxiii. 15. + Matth. xiv. 31.

* Is. xlvi. 1. † Phil. ii. 12. 13. ‡ John vi. 29.

‖ Budæus and Stephens derive the original word from πιπυσαι, he is persuaded: and, I think, very properly; for whatever we believe, of that we have a real persuasion.—The latter most accurate and masterly critic gives this interpretation of πιστις. Persuasio certa, quam in nobis efficit Spiritus Sanctus, de salute in Christo promissa, quam sibi quisque credendo applicat. To corroborate which exposition, he adds; Hac etiam in significatione nomen fidei a theologis Latinis receptum fuit,

§ See Letter X. Here is, it must be acknowledged, a total omission of all preparatory or rather impulsive dispositions; such as conviction of sin, and hungering after salvation.——Here is likewise a total silence concerning all causes, instrumental or efficient, such as the power of the divine WORD, and the agency of the divine SPIRIT.——No mention is made of the fruits or concomitants; such as love to CHRIST, love of the

Asp. I am obliged to you, Theron, for the honour you do my letter; and I hope, you will pay an equal regard to the determination of our church. You once apprehended, that my attachment to the church of England was unfettled and wavering. Judge now, who has moſt thoroughly imbibed her doctrines, and is moſt invariably tenacious of her true intereſts. In the firſt part of the homily concerning the ſacrament, we have this definition of faith; "It is a belief, not only that the death of CHRIST "is available for the remiſſion of ſins, and reconciliation "with GOD, but alſo that he made a full and ſufficient "ſacrifice for thee, a perfect cleanſing for thy ſins *."

My notion of faith, you ſee, is evidently the voice of the eſtabliſhment; and I think it gives us a clear intelligible ſenſe, ſuited to the moſt common acceptation of the word; ſuch as would naturally ariſe in the mind of a ſtranger, who, without any bias on his judgment, ſhould inquire into the purport of our religion, or conſider the language of our Bible.

Ther. How ſuited to the moſt common acceptation of the word?

Aſp. When you ſent a meſſage to your tenant,—who, in his laſt ſickneſs, expreſſed ſo much uneaſineſs on account of his numerous family, and embarraſſed circumſtances,—aſſuring him, that you had cancelled the bond, and forgiven his debt; when you told the poor woman, —whoſe huſband fell from the loaded waggon, and broke both his legs,—that you would order a ſurgeon to attend him, and would continue his weekly pay: how did they regard, how receive your promiſed kindneſs? So let us credit the gracious declarations of our GOD; ſo accept his faithful promiſe; and then we ſhall anſwer the import of the word,——then we ſhall truly believe.

Ther. Where is there, in ſcripture, any thing parallel or ſimilar to theſe inſtances?

Aſp. Have you never read the words of Micah; Who is a GOD like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and paſſeth by tranſgreſſion †? Here is the gracious declaration.—— He will turn again; he will have compaſſion upon us; he will ſubdue our iniquities ‡. Here is the faithful promiſe.—— And why, my friend, why ſhould we pay leſs credit to the ever-living JEHOVAH, than to a man "whoſe breath is in his noſtrils?" Is there treachery with the HOLY ONE of Iſrael? Does the LORD make, and then violate his promiſe? "Aſk now of the days that are "paſt, aſk from the one ſide of heaven unto the other, "whether ſuch a thing hath ever been?"

Ther. GOD has never violated his promiſe, when it was expreſsly made, and particularly applied. But, in this circumſtance, there is a wide difference between the caſe of our friend, and the caſe of his poor people. I named the object of my compaſſion in one of the inſtances, and made a perſonal application in the other. Neither of which is done in the ſcriptures.

Aſp. Though we are not particularly named, yet we are very exactly deſcribed, by our family, our inclination, our practice.——What ſays eternal Wiſdom, when ſhe makes a tender of her ineſtimable bleſſings? To you, O men, not to fallen angels, I call; and my voice is, not to this man or that man excluſively, but to the ſons of men indefinitely ‖.—What ſays the holy apoſtle, when he publiſhes the counſels of heaven? This is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, that CHRIST JESUS came into the world to ſave—the upright? the unblameable? Was this the caſe, our hopes would be covered with a cloud; or rather, totally and finally eclipſed. But ſee! they are clear as the light, and conſpicuous as the noonday. For he came (chearing, charming word!) he came to ſave ſinners *.

Conſonant to all which, is the declaration of another ſacred envoy. He, the PRINCE of peace, the MONARCH of the univerſe, ſuffered—for whom? They, in whoſe behalf this matchleſs ranſom was paid, muſt have an undeniable right to look upon redemption as their own. And bleſſed, for ever bleſſed be GOD, it is moſt peremptorily ſaid, he ſuffered for the unjuſt †.

That no part of our character might be omitted, and no ſort of our miſery paſs unrelieved, it is farther declared, When we were without ſtrength, CHRIST died for the ungodly ‡. When we were ungodly, and conſidered only as ungodly creatures; neither poſſeſſed of any thing amiable, nor having the leaſt ability to acquire it; nay, when we were chargeable with horrid guilt, and incapable of expiating a ſingle offence? then, even then CHRIST died, and for ſuch abominable wretches he died.——Are we not of the human family? Are we not unjuſt ‖ towards our fellow-creatures, and ungodly towards our great CREATOR? Are we not, in all relations, and in every reſpect, ſinners? If we are, (and, upon theſe queſtions, incredulity itſelf will ſcarcely demur) let us not frowardly reject, rather let us thankfully receive thoſe ſpiritual treaſures, which, by virtue of the aforecited conveyance, belong to ſuch people; which, by ſeveral other clauſes in the will and teſtament of our crucified LORD, evidently devolve to ſuch perſons.

Ther. Is it poſſible, Aſpaſio! Can we be warranted and encouraged to receive theſe treaſures, in a capacity and under a denomination, which I ſhould think more likely to exclude us, diſinherit us, and overthrow all our pretenſions?

Aſp. This may ſeem ſtrange, but it is true. All the bleſſings of the goſpel proceed upon a ſuppoſition of ſinfulneſs. CHRIST is made wiſdom unto his people; but what occaſion for the acceſſion of wiſdom, unleſs it be in the caſe of ignorance and folly? CHRIST is made righteouſneſs; but who can ſtand in need of a juſtifying righteouſneſs, if they are not in themſelves unprofitable and guilty? CHRIST is made ſanctification: and does not this imply a ſtate of corruption to be remedied, a body of ſin to be deſtroyed? CHRIST is made redemption; and from what are perſons redeemed, but from chains and bondage, from miſery and ruin, from all manner of evil?

It is alſo a moſt precious and invaluable truth; ſuch as I would hold faſt, and never, never let go. When I ſearch for my own endowments, I find nothing that I dare venture to plead; being in my beſt moments, and amidſt my choiceſt duties, a ſinner. As this is, at all times, my undoubted character, I have at all times an undoubted warrant to ſay, The uncreated WISDOM calleth me; the bleſſed JESUS came to ſave me; the great MESSIAH ſuffered death for me.

Let me illuſtrate the point.——Romulus, you know, the founder of the Roman empire, was a poor prince; had but a handful of ſubjects, and very ſcanty territories. What expedient could he deviſe, to enlarge the boundaries of the one, and augment the number of the other? He iſſued a proclamation, addreſſed to outlaws and criminals; all that were involved in debt, or obnoxious to puniſhment; promiſing, that as many as would ſettle under his dominion, ſhould brethren, or purity of heart.—Nothing is exhibited to view, but the form and eſſence of faith; or that particular act, which characterizes and conſtitutes real faith; which diſtinguiſhes it from the hypocritical pretenſion, and the hiſtorical notion.—This ſimple view is given, that the mind may fix upon the grand point, and not be embarraſſed with a multiplicity of ideas.

* Anſwerable to this, was the doctrine of the primitive church; Η πιστις ιδιοποιεῖται τον Θεον. CHRYSOST.

† Mic. vii. 18. ‡ Mic. vii. 19. ‖ Prov. viii. 4.

* 1 Tim. i. 15. † 1 Pet. iii. 18. ‡ Rom. v. 6.

‖ He is unjuſt towards his neighbour, who neglects to love his neighbour as himſelf. And if this is the ſtandard, who has not fallen ſhort?

be

be secured from prosecution, and vested with considerable privileges.——We will suppose a person in those distressed circumstances. Upon hearing the welcome invitation, he hangs down his head, and, with a dejected air, cries, "I am a debtor, I am a criminal, and therefore unworthy of the royal protection."——What answer should be made to such a dispirited complainer? Make the same to yourself, whenever you are inclined to review the present objections.——Remembering, that the infinite and eternal SOVEREIGN, to display the magnificence of his majesty, and manifest the riches of his goodness, has commissioned his ambassadors to publish in every nation under heaven,—"That all unhappy sinners, who are oppressed by the devil and liable to damnation, may come to CHRIST, and rely on CHRIST; may, in this manner, obtain pardon, righteousness, and all the privileges of children."

Ther. At this rate, the vilest miscreants have as clear, nay have the very same warrant to believe in CHRIST, and receive his salvation, as the highest saints.

Asp. The very same. In this respect there is no difference. All have sinned, and must sue for spiritual blessings, not as deserving, but as guilty creatures; must receive them, not as the recompence of their own worth, but as the issues of infinite mercy.—The vilest miscreants are blinded by the devil, and enslaved to their lusts. Therefore they see no beauty in a SAVIOUR, that they should desire him. Whereas, when the divine SPIRIT opens their eyes, and inclines their hearts, they discover and make use of just the same right to CHRIST and his merit, as the highest saints: A right founded, not on their awakened desires, not on any thing in themselves, but purely, solely, entirely on the free grant of a SAVIOUR.

Should you ask the highest saints, On what their hopes are grounded? This, or something to this effect, would be their reply:—"On the free exhibition of CHRIST and his salvation, recorded in the word of truth.—— There we find it written, To you, though Gentiles and idolaters, is preached the remission of sins *.——The promise is to you, even to you, whose wicked hands have crucified and slain the LORD of life; and not to you only, but to all that are afar off, even as many as the LORD our GOD, by the message of his everlasting gospel, shall call †.— We remember, Theron, though you seem to have forgotten, the wretched outcast, polluted in its blood, yet accepted by the HOLY ONE of Israel. We remember the heavenly gifts, received by the triumphant REDEEMER, for enemies, and for the rebellious. Nor can we easily forget the promise of forgiveness which was made, and the blessing of forgiveness which was vouchsafed, even to the murderers of the LORD of glory ‡."

Ther. This is a pleasing supposition. But it would be more satisfactory, if you should produce any of the saints speaking in this manner.

Asp. Isaiah, you will allow, was a saint of no inferior rank. Yet he breathes the spirit I am describing, and acts the part I am vindicating. Turn to that epitome of the gospel, his fifty-third chapter. There you may observe him claiming a share in the greatest of all privileges, salvation through the blood of CHRIST. How does he advance and maintain his claim? Not in the capacity of a sanctified, but under the character of a sinful person. These are his words; The LORD hath laid on him, on his Son CHRIST JESUS, the iniquity of us all *. Of me, and of my brethren in piety, does he mean? No; but of me, and of my fellow-transgressors. This is evidently implied in the clause I have quoted. In the preceding part of the verse, the prophet explains himself, and leaves no room for hesitation. All we, like sheep, have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own ways; yet our transgressions, our iniquities, the GOD of all mercy has transferred from us, and charged upon our REDEEMER.——As the vilest miscreants are indispensably obliged to confess the former, they have a free and full right to profess, to assert, and to believe the latter.

At this you may probably wonder; at this we ought all to wonder; this is that amazingly-rich grace, which will be the wonder of saints and angels through a boundless eternity.——Yet, though we wonder, let us not murmur. Let not the elder brother repine, because the young prodigal enters at the same door, and is admitted to the same table with himself.

To this testimony of the saints, shall I add the decision of their King? GOD so loved the world, even the fallen, the wicked, the apostate world, that, in the fulness of time, he gave his only begotten SON †, to bring in a perfect righteousness, and obtain eternal redemption. And he still gives him with all his saving benefits, in the promise of the gospel.

Ther. Does this general gift warrant a sinner to make a particular application of all to himself?

Asp. It warrants, it demands, and in other instances obtains, a particular application. When Jonah, in pursuance of the divine command, cried and said, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown; here was no particular mention of man, woman, or child. Neither the king, nor the nobles, nor the commons were specified. Much less was each and every inhabitant threatened by name. Nevertheless, this general denunciation alarmed them all; was influential on them all. Insomuch that the people of Nineveh believed GOD, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least ‡.——They believed; hence we learn the true nature of believing; "GOD speaks to me; and what he speaks, "he will perform;" is its genuine profession. Hence we likewise discover, who they are which ought in this manner to apply the general word; All, from the least even unto the greatest, believed.

Ther. The case is not parallel, Aspasia. This was a denunciation of vengeance, not a promise of grace.

Asp. And can you suppose, that GOD is more liberal of vengeance, than he is communicative of grace? Vengeance is his strange work, but in mercy and loving-kindness he delighteth.——Are we bound to believe and apply his dreadful threatenings? not allowed to believe and apply his precious promises? Surely, the LORD's ways are not so unequal.—When the law says, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things ‖; should not every hearer take this to himself, and submit to the sentence of just condemnation? When the gospel says, HE came to save that which is lost §; should not every hearer take this also to himself, and embrace the tender of free salvation?

However, if you dislike my instance, I will give you another; which is not of the vindictive, but of the beneficent kind.——When the manna made its first appearance in the wilderness; when the Israelites knew, neither what it was nor for whom intended; both these particulars were explained by Moses: This is the bread which the LORD hath given you to eat ¶. No mention is made of any individual person. Yet the whole con-

* Acts xiii. 38.

† Acts ii. 39. Call—in the same manner, as he called those to whom Peter spake: which evidently means, not the inward efficacious call, wrought by the SPIRIT; but the outward call, delivered in the word. Otherwise, we must suppose every individual person in this promiscuous assembly, to be savingly changed; which will hardly be credited by those, who remember, that the congregation consisted of mockers, murderers, and sinners.

‡ Referring to Dialogue XV.

* Is. liii. 6.

† John iii. 16.

‡ Jonah iii. 5.

‖ Gal. iii. 10.

§ Matth. xviii. 11.

¶ Exod. xvi. 15.

gregation

gregation looked upon this as an undoubted permiſſion, both for themſelves and their children, to gather, to fetch home, and to uſe the miraculous food.——And here, Theron, here lies the principal difference between the vile miſcreant, and the exalted ſaint; not that the one was originally better, than the other; not that the one has a clearer grant of CHRIST than the other; but the latter has gathered the heavenly manna, and uſes it to his unſpeakable advantage. Whereas it lies round about the tents of the former; and whoever will, may take, may eat, and his ſoul ſhall live.

Ther. GOD gave the manna to all the Iſraelites, both good and bad. But does he give CHRIST with this unlimited freeneſs?

Aſp. Our LORD himſelf, alluding to this very miracle, vouchſafes you an anſwer: My FATHER giveth you the true bread from heaven *. My FATHER giveth you his incarnate SON, and his divinely-excellent righteouſneſs. Theſe are bread indeed; bread, which came down from the regions of heaven; and bread which nouriſheth the ſoul for the joys of heaven.—This my FATHER giveth you; though not in actual poſſeſſion, yet in right to poſſeſs. This he giveth you, in the free indefinite grant of his word: without which grant, any attempt to poſſeſs, even in the moſt upright of men, would be illegal and preſumptuous: by virtue of which grant, even the poor ſinner has an unqueſtionable warrant to receive and poſſeſs the riches of CHRIST.

Ther. Unqueſtionable! is not this expreſſion too peremptory? That ſuch a grant ſhould be made to believers, I can eaſily conceive. But is it made to ſinners,—to any ſinners,—to the moſt abandoned ſinners?

Aſp. Yes, Theron, to ſinners. And when ſinners receive the grant, then they commence believers.——Was it made to believers only, no man living would inherit the bleſſing: becauſe all men are, by the depravity and impotence of their nature, originally concluded under ſin and unbelief.

What ſaid our LORD? My Father giveth you; that is, the people who ſtood around, and heard his gracious voice: many of whom were in a carnal ſtate habitually, and even then were in a murmuring wicked frame †.—What ſays his prophet: To us a Son is given; not to us, who were antecedently children of the light; but who walked in darkneſs, and dwelt in the ſhadow of death ‡.——What ſaith GOD the LORD? he that created the heavens, and ſtretched them out? I will give thee, meaning his beloved SON, for a covenant; it is not ſaid, of believers, but of the people; it is not ſaid, of new creatures, but of the Gentiles; who were the vileſt of all creatures, or, as you have properly ſpoke, the moſt abandoned ſinners.——That we may underſtand more clearly the ſignification of theſe terms, and ſee the true extent of this gift, it is added, I will give thee to open the blind eyes, and to bring out the priſoners from the priſon ‖. Miſerable and guilty wretches, blinded by the devil, and enſlaved to their luſts; theſe are the patentees in the heavenly grant. To theſe the great SURETY is given, together with all the benefits of his covenant.

Here then the grant and the gift are mentioned; the perſons for whom they are deſigned, are ſpecified, and expreſsly named. They are ſinners; blinded and enſlaved ſinners; or, if there be any other more obnoxious ſort, they are all comprehended in this one word, Gentiles.—Only allow theſe texts to be true; only allow the divine ſpeaker to be ſincere and faithful; then we may boldly affirm, that any, that every poor ſinner is authoriſed to ſay, "GOD gives me his SON, to be my covenant-ſurety. "I take him at his word. The SURETY and all his "merits are mine."——Divinely-rich bounty! O, let us not refuſe what, on this conſideration, the unerring SPIRIT calls our own mercy *. Let us adore the beneficence of our GOD; let us believe his promiſing word; and, in this ſweet, this eaſy manner, obtain both preſent and final ſalvation.

Ther. Let me recollect:—CHRIST is given for the world, the apoſtate world, to believe on:—CHRIST has died, not for the righteous, but for the ungodly:—CHRIST came in the fleſh to ſave ſinners, even the chief of ſinners.——Well, Aſpaſio, if theſe things are true, (and how can they be otherwiſe? ſince they are the expreſs doctrine of ſcripture) it is pity, but they were more generally known. For my part, I muſt confeſs, they are not only new, but ſtrange to me. Though I have read them in the Bible, yet when I come to conſider them, and compare them with what paſſes in my breaſt, I find they are quite contrary to my uſual ways of thinking.

Aſp. You remind me of a valuable perſon, whom I once numbered among my acquaintance, and whoſe way of thinking was ſomewhat ſimilar to your own.—Will you give me leave to relate his caſe?

Ther. Moſt gladly. It will be ſome kind of conſolation to hear, that others have laboured under the ſame difficulties with myſelf, and been ſubject to the ſame diſtreſſes. If I am informed of their deliverance from thoſe diſtreſſes, it will be like ſhewing me an opened door, for effecting my own eſcape. If I am likewiſe acquainted with the manner of their deliverance, this will furniſh me with a clue to guide my ſteps.

Aſp. This perſon was rouſed from a habit of indolence and ſupineneſs, into a ſerious concern for his eternal welfare. Convinced of his depraved nature and aggravated guilt, he had recourſe to the ſcriptures, and to frequent prayer. He attended the ordinances of Chriſtianity, and ſought earneſtly for an aſſured intereſt in CHRIST; but found no ſtedfaſt faith, and taſted very little comfort. At length, he applied to an eminent divine, and laid open the ſtate of his heart. Short, but weighty, was the anſwer he received. "I perceive, Sir, the cauſe of all your "diſtreſs. You do not, you will not, come to CHRIST "as a ſinner. This miſtake ſtands between your ſoul and "the joy of religion. This detains you in the gall of bit"terneſs; and take heed, O! take heed, leſt it confign "you over to the bond of iniquity!" This admonition never departed from the gentleman's mind; and it became a happy means of removing the obſtructions to his peace.

Remember this little hiſtory, Theron; and may it prove as efficacious for your good, as it is pertinent to your circumſtances! Remember, that the free grant of CHRIST, made in the word of truth, and addreſſed to ſinners of mankind, is the only baſis and ground-work of faith. An apoſtle, after all the labours of his exemplary life, can have no better. And a Magdalene or a Manaſſeh, as a motive and encouragement for their turning to the LORD, have the very ſame.

But we digreſs from the principal ſubject. Since you diſapprove my account of faith, I muſt deſire you to favour me with a deſcription, more correct and unexceptionable. For, as you juſtly obſerved, this is a very momentous article.——Is not CHRIST the ſource of all ſpiritual good, and faith the main channel of conveyance? Surely then it ſhould be made and kept as clear as poſſible.——Is not CHRIST the foundation of all true godlineſs, and faith the maſter-arch in this ſacred ſtructure? Surely then it ſhould be raiſed and turned with the utmoſt care.

Ther. Palæmon's account is this—Faith, he ſays, is a firm perſuaſion, that JESUS CHRIST has ſhed his blood, and fulfilled all righteouſneſs; has ſuſtained

* John vi. 32.

† John vi. 26, 41.

‡ Iſ. ix. 2, 6.

‖ Iſ. xlii. 6, 7.

* Jonah. ii. 8.

the punishment due to sin; and obtained full reconciliation with GOD: that all this grace, and each of these benefits, are free; perfectly free; for you, for me, for others. In consequence of this persuasion, the sinner flies to CHRIST, comes to CHRIST, and trusts in CHRIST for his own salvation.

Asp. I have the highest regard for Palæmon's judgment; and I cannot but think, my opinion is confirmed even by his.——The act of flying to CHRIST, is an appropriating act. It implies an intention to get out of danger; it implies a discovery of CHRIST as the appointed safety; and consists in making use of him as such. How can this be done, but by a persuasion that he is mine? that his sufferings were in my stead, and that his death is my safeguard?—What is meant by coming to CHRIST, we may learn from Jeremiah. Behold! we come unto thee, for thou art the LORD our GOD *. Coming, you see, includes a real persuasion, that the LORD is our GOD. While we are wholly destitute of this persuasion, we stand at a distance, and our souls are afar off. We are never brought nigh; we never come in the prophet's sense; till we are taught to say, each one for himself, Thou art the LORD my GOD.——The act of trusting in CHRIST is much of the same nature. It presupposes, that CHRIST is the trustee of the covenant of grace; it proceeds upon a conviction of his faithfulness in executing the office; and it is a solemn surrender or giving up the whole affair of our salvation into his hand; giving it up, not in uncertainty of success, (this would be mistrusting, rather than trusting), but with a certainty, in some measure suitable to the fidelity and ability of HIM, with whom we have to do.

If you still are doubtful, whether any such persuasion is implied in trusting, let us chuse a referee. Let us carry our controversy to the king of Israel. Inquire of David, why he trusts in the LORD, and what he means by trusting? To both these inquiries he answers distinctly and fully. "The LORD is my high tower, my "shield, and he in whom I trust †. He is—he is my shield; "—of this I am persuaded, and therefore I trust in him: "or this I believe, and, in so doing, I trust on him."

Ther. There is an air of assurance in your representation of faith; which sounds harsh in my ear, and appears presumptuous in my eye. It is as if people pretended to know their seat in heaven, before the judgment-day.

Asp. The Papists, I own, take great offence at this expression, and utterly explode this doctrine. But they are no infallible guides for us to follow; neither are they very inviting patterns for us to imitate. You and I, Theron, cannot be offended at the expression or the doctrine, if we recollect what we have been taught in the first stage of life, and what is professed in the last scene of mortality. We are taught, even from our infancy, that the sacrament of the LORD's supper, is not only a sign of spiritual grace, but a pledge to assure us thereof. At the interment of the dead, we profess our sure and certain hope of a resurrection to eternal life. That this is always applied, with due propriety, in our burial-service, I will not venture to assert; that it sufficiently countenances my sentiments, none will undertake to deny. And if this countenances, the apostle authorises them, when he addresses us with this very remarkable exhortation; Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of JESUS, let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith; with a firm persuasion of acceptance; with a certain expectation of success.

However, if you dislike the word assurance, we will change it for the more softened, and more modestly-sounding term, appropriation.

* Jer. iii. 22. † Psal. cxliv. 2.

Ther. You change it for a more softened, not for a more intelligible term. I must desire to know, what you mean by the word appropriation.

Asp. To appropriate, in the theological sense, is to take home the grace of GOD, which lies in the common indefinite grant of the gospel. Is CHRIST the treasure hid in the field? To appropriate this treasure, is to receive and use it as our own portion. Is CHRIST the balm of Gilead, full of saving health? To appropriate this balm, is to take and apply it for the recovery of our own souls. And without such an appropriation, how can we either be enriched by the former, or healed by the latter?

Let me farther explain my meaning, and exemplify the position, by considering CHRIST in his several offices.——CHRIST, as a Priest, is made to guilty creatures righteousness. When we appropriate the grace of our great HIGH PRIEST, this is the language of our hearts, In the LORD have I righteousness *.——CHRIST, as a Prophet, is made to ignorant creatures wisdom. When we appropriate the benefits of our unerring PROPHET, this is the persuasion of our souls, Though I sit in darkness, the LORD will be a light unto me †.——CHRIST, as a King, is made unto depraved creatures sanctification. When we appropriate the munificence of our almighty KING, this is our comfortable trust, The LORD will deliver me from every evil work ‡.

This is what I mean by appropriation.—That something of this kind is included in the essence of faith, is the sentiment I would maintain.——Which sentiment might be confirmed, if such confirmation were demanded, by a multitude of the most illustrious witnesses; witnesses so illustrious, that they were a blessing to the world, and an honour to human nature; so numerous, that, without giving an abstract of their testimonies, it might seem tedious only to recite their names ||.

Ther. I will dispense with your recital of their names, only let me have a specimen of their testimonies.

Asp. First, then, let me present you with Dr Owen; than whom England has produced few writers, either more judicious or more devout. "Faith," he tells us in his catechism, "is a gracious resting upon "the free promises of GOD in JESUS CHRIST "for mercy, with a firm persuasion of heart, that "GOD is a reconciled Father to us in the SON of "his love."——Next let me introduce the learned and

* Is. xlv. 24. † Mic. vii. 8.

‡ 2 Tim. iv. 18.

|| If the reader should inquire after their names, he will find some of them enumerated in the following catalogue. Luther, Calvin, Melancthon, Beza, Bullinger, Bucer, Knox, Craig, Melvil, Bruce, Davidson, Forbes, &c.—Ursinus, Zanchius, Junius, Piscator, Rollock, Daneus, Wendelinus, Chamierus, Sharpius, Bodius, Pareus, Altingius, Triglandii (Gisbertus & Jacobus), Arnoldus, Maresius; the four professors at Leyden, Wallæus, Rivetus, Pollyander, Thysius; Wollebius, Heideggerus, Essenius, Turretinus, &c. —Many eminent British divines. Bishop Babington, Davenant, Hall; Mr Perkins, Pemble, Willet, Gouge, Rogers, Burgess, Owen, Marshall, &c.

If we were apparently and demonstrably in an error, yet, to err with such company, and in the footsteps of such guides, must very much tend to mitigate the severity of censure. But, I believe, few serious persons will venture to charge error and delusion upon such a venerable body of Protestant divines; so eminent for their learning, and so exemplary for their holiness; whose labours were so remarkably owned by GOD, and whose sentiments, on this particular subject, have been adopted by so many reformed churches.—The declarations of the English and Palatine churches are produced in the dialogue. I have in my hand an extract from the confessions and standard doctrines of the church—of Scotland, —of Ireland—of France—of Helvetia. With all which Aspasio has the happiness to agree. Only some of them are much stronger in displaying and maintaining the special fiducia, or the appropriating persuasion of faith. To quote them, would dignify and strengthen the cause. But, to avoid prolixity, I forego this advantage.

juſtly-celebrated Altingius, profeſſor of divinity at Heidelberg. "Faith," he ſays, "is a knowledge of the "grace of God in CHRIST, together with a fiduciary "reliance on it, or an application of it to a man's own "ſelf."—To theſe let me add the unanimous ſuffrage of the churches of the Palatinate. It is aſked, in the twenty-firſt queſtion of their public catechiſm, "What "is the true faith?" To which this anſwer is returned. "It is not only an aſſent to all the truths which "GOD has revealed in his word; but it is an aſſured "truſt, wrought by the HOLY SPIRIT in my "heart, that remiſſion of ſins, complete righteouſneſs, "and eternal life are given; freely given, not to others "only, but to myſelf; and all this, from the mere mercy "of GOD, through the alone merits of CHRIST."

Theſe teſtimonies are but as the tythe to the whole crop. Yet theſe are more than enough to exempt me from the charge of ſingularity. You will not wonder therefore, if I ſtill abide by the good old Proteſtant doctrine, which is eſpouſed by ſo many of the ableſt judges; which was the darling tenet of almoſt all our reformers; which has been ſo ſignally inſtrumental in demoliſhing the ſuperſtitions of Popery; and is ſo evidently conducive to the holineſs and the happineſs of Chriſtians.—Eſpecially, as I apprehended, the determinations of ſcripture, and the experience of ſcriptural ſaints, are all on my ſide.

Ther. You have now brought the cauſe to the proper bar. When a queſtion ſo important is debated, and an intereſt ſo momentous is concerned, I cannot acquieſce in any authority leſs than divine. I cannot, and indeed, I think, we ought not. Nothing ſhould ſatisfy us on ſuch an occaſion, but the word, which is unerring and deciſive; the word by which we are to ſtand or fall eternally. Whence does it appear, that the determinations of this divine word are on your ſide?

Aſp. From the nobleſt deſcription of faith, which language itſelf can form. The writer to the Hebrews, having mentioned the life of faith, the perſeverance of faith, and the end or reward of faith, proceeds to a definition of this leading grace. *Now faith is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not ſeen.—The evidence, exhibiting not a faint ſurmiſe, but a clear demonſtration, both of inviſible bleſſings, and of our right to enjoy them.—The ſubſtance, realizing what is promiſed; and giving us, as it were, a poſſeſſion of good things that are remote, a preſent poſſeſſion of good things that are future.

Ther. What are thoſe bleſſings, and theſe good things?

Aſp. I will inform my Theron; and in ſuch a manner, from ſuch paſſages, as ſhall farther aſcertain my repreſentation of faith.—What ſays the apoſtle of the Gentiles? I preached unto you the goſpel.†—And what is the ſubſtance of this evangelical diſpenſation? CHRIST died for our ſins.‡—That ſo exalted a perſon as the SON of GOD, and LORD of glory, ſhould die, is wonderful!—That he ſhould die for ſins, the moſt abominable objects, and for ſinners, the moſt deteſtable creatures, is abundantly more wonderful!—That he ſhould die, not for ſins in general, but for our ſins in particular, this is inexpreſſibly wonderful, and at the ſame time inexpreſſibly comfortable.—Here we have the goſpel and its capital bleſſing, expreſſed in this propoſition, CHRIST died for ſins. Here we have faith and its principal acting, expreſſed in this propoſition, CHRIST died for our ſins. Till the former is preached, the doctrine is not goſpel; till the latter is believed, it ſhould ſeem from St Paul's account, the conviction is not faith.

Let me produce another inſtance, extracted, like the preceding, from the rolls of heaven. This is the record, that GOD hath given to us eternal life; § not propoſed it, on I know not what conditions, but hath given; freely and fully, without any reſerve, and with a liberality ſuited to his inconceivable goodneſs, hath given the richeſt of all prizes; and not to ſome only, or to others, but to us, even to us.

Ther. Us, that is, the apoſtles and exalted ſaints.

Aſp. Was eternal life given them becauſe they were apoſtles? No, No, verily; but becauſe CHRIST died for them.—Did CHRIST die for them, becauſe they were exalted ſaints? In no wiſe; but becauſe they were miſerable ſinners.—Eternal life was purchaſed for them, when they were ſinners. It was conſigned over to them, when they were ſinners. And neither the purchaſe, nor the gift, were founded on their being ſaints, but aimed at making them ſo.

That CHRIST died for our ſins;—that GOD hath given to us eternal life: theſe are the bleſſings of which faith is the evidence; theſe the good things, of which faith is the ſubſtance. This is the honey in the evangelical hive; and I am at a loſs to conceive, how we can taſte the honey, without ſome appropriation of the good things to ourſelves.—This, if I miſtake not, is comprehended in all thoſe figurative deſcriptions of faith, which occur in holy writ.

Ther. Favour me with ſome of thoſe deſcriptions, I begin to ſee a peculiar beauty, and an unequalled richneſs, in the figures of ſcripture. Nothing yields me a more refined pleaſure, than to inveſtigate and diſcover the exact ſenſe of thoſe inſtructive images. It is ſomewhat like kindling the conſecrated incenſe; which, when riſing in a flame, diffuſed light; when ſpreading in clouds of fragrance, diſtributed refreſhment.

Aſp. Faith is ſtyled, a looking unto JESUS. But if we do not look unto JESUS, as the propitiation for our ſins, what comfort or what benefit can we derive from the ſight?——A receiving of CHRIST. But can I have any pretence to receive him, or take poſſeſſion of his merits, unleſs I am convinced, that they are intended for me? This is what neither the dictates of conſcience will allow, nor the laws of reaſon authoriſe. —A reſting upon CHRIST.† But how can we reſt on a ſurety, if he has not interpoſed on our behalf? or how confide in a payment, which we believe to be made for others, not for ourſelves?—Surely, Theron, when I reſt upon an object, I uſe it as my ſupport. When I receive a gift, I take it as my own property. And when the Iſraelites looked unto the brazen ſerpent, they certainly regarded it as a remedy, each particular perſon for himſelf.

Ther. To caſt ourſelves upon CHRIST, as an all-ſufficient SAVIOUR; and rely on him, for our whole ſalvation; is not this real faith? This is what I heard, ſome time ago, from a celebrated pulpit.

Aſp. If you rely on the all-ſufficiency of his will, as well as of his power; if you take the comfort and appropriate the benefit reſulting from both; you practiſe the very thing I recommend. This is what was taught from the pulpit of infallibility; and by thoſe firſt of preachers, who ſpake as the HOLY GHOST gave them utterance. Let the convinced ſinner, and the afflicted ſoul, truſt in the name of the LORD, and ſtay upon his GOD. Let him not only reverence CHRIST, as the incarnate GOD, and therefore mighty to ſave; but look upon CHRIST as his GOD, and therefore willing to ſave. Thus let him

* Heb. xi. 1. † 1 Cor. xv. 1. ‡ 1 Cor. xv. 3. § 1 John v. 9.

† I find two words in the original, which expreſs the privilege and the duty of reſting on CHRIST. דום which implies ſuch a ſtate of acquieſcence, as ſilences the clamours of conſcience, and compoſes the perturbation of the ſpirit. מנוחה which ſignifies the refreſhment and repoſe of a weary pilgrim, when he arrives at the end of his journey, and is ſettled for life in a ſecure, commodious, plentiful habitation. Pſal. xxxvii. 7. Iſ. xxviii. 12.

lean

lean upon the ROCK * of ages, without indulging a doubt, concerning his right to make uſe of it, or the poſſibility of its failing him.

To caſt ourſelves upon CHRIST; to caſt our burden, or to caſt all our care † upon the LORD; are metaphors, which may receive ſome elucidation from an incident recorded in the Acts. When the mariners and paſſengers, which ſailed with St Paul, ſaw their veſſel ſhattered; ſaw the waves prevailing; ſaw no hope of ſafety from continuing in the ſhip; they caſt themſelves ‡ upon the floating planks. They caſt themſelves upon the planks without any ſcruple, not queſtioning their right to make uſe of them; and they clave to thoſe ſupporters with a chearful confidence, not doubting but, according to the apoſtle's promiſe, they ſhould eſcape ſafe to land.---Be this what people mean, when they ſpeak of venturing or caſting themſelves upon CHRIST, and I approve the expreſſion, I ſubſcribe the doctrine. It ſpeaks what I wiſh for my friend, for myſelf, and for my fellow-ſinners.

Let us ſhift our ſituation, and view the point in another light. Conſider the bleſſed and glorious object of our faith.---CHRIST is repreſented by the ſimilitude of bread, heavenly bread for the hungry ſoul. Faith is characterized by eating the food. And can this be done without a perſonal application?---CHRIST is held forth under the image of living waters, ever running, and always free for the thirſty appetite. But let them run ever ſo copiouſly, let them be preſented ever ſo freely, all this will neither quench the thirſt, nor refreſh the ſpirits, unleſs they are drank. To do this is the buſineſs of faith.---CHRIST is deſcribed as a garment, to accommodate deſtitute, and beautify deformed creatures. Faith is expreſſed by putting on this commodious garment, and wearing this beautiful robe. And can any idea, or any expreſſion, more ſtrongly denote an actual appropriation?

Ther. It is evident, that many holy people, in former ages, were not poſſeſſed of aſſurance.---What is the language of David? It is all deſpondency. I am caſt out of the ſight of thine eyes.---To the ſame melancholy tune is the harp of Aſaph ſtrung: Is his mercy clean gone for ever? doth his promiſe fail for evermore?---The ſame jealous and diſtruſtful air breathes in the complaint of the church. The LORD hath forſaken me, and my LORD hath forgotten me.---Why then ſhould my Aſpaſio ſet up a rule ſtricter and higher than thoſe eminent ſaints attained?

Aſp. You ſhould rather aſk, Why have the beſt judges, and the moſt exemplary Chriſtians, in their ſeveral writings, ſet up this rule? Why have the apoſtles of our LORD, and the SPIRIT of our GOD, ſpeaking in the Bible, ſet up this rule?---To which I might reply, Becauſe it is, of all precepts, the moſt beneficial. Therefore they have not ſo much ſet it up under the notion of a ſtrict rule, as they have ſet it forth under the character of a choice bleſſing.

Your complaint, when put into its proper language, ſeems to run thus; "Why muſt we be obliged to truſt "in CHRIST alone? Why muſt we be obliged to aſſure "ourſelves of ſalvation by HIM?"---Whereas, inſtead of a complaint, it ſhould be matter of exultation, and we ſhould rather expreſs ourſelves in this manner: "Bleſs the LORD, O my ſoul, that a ſinner, ſuch a "vile ſinner, ſhould be allowed to take CHRIST and "all his ſalvation as my own; and thus to aſſure myſelf "of pardon, holineſs, and glory."

This bleſſing was certainly enjoyed by the holy men of old; but, like every other ſpecies of felicity in this world, it was enjoyed after an imperfect manner.---They had an aſſured perſuaſion of GOD's preſent favour, and of their own final happineſs. Nevertheleſs, this aſſured perſuaſion was liable to the aſſaults, both of outward temptations, and of inward corruptions: which might, for a while, impair its vigour, though not deſtroy its being. As under a tranſient ſwoon, the ſpirits fail, the colour departs, but the vital principle ſubſiſts.

You may farther obſerve, concerning thoſe pious perſons, that, when they ceaſe to exerciſe this confidence of faith, they lament the failure; I ſaid, This is my infirmity *.---They chide themſelves for it; Why art thou caſt down, O my ſoul?---They encourage themſelves againſt it; Hope in GOD †, it is thy unqueſtionable privilege.---How could they do this? on what grounds, or from what motive? if they had not a ſecret perſuaſion, that their ranſom was paid, and their GOD reconciled; conſequently, that all their doubts were an injury to his fidelity and to his goodneſs.

Nay, the church even under her darkeſt apprehenſions, ſtill ſpeaks the ſentiment, ſtill retains the grace, for which I am pleading. My LORD, uttered with her lips, argues an applicatory faith in her heart.---So copious and pregnant are the evidences of this precious doctrine! It is confirmed by that very paſſage, which was produced for its confutation.

Ther. If this be the ſentiment of the church in general, is it alſo the temper of her particular members? Was each of them animated by this firm and lively faith?

Aſp. Let theſe particular perſons appear, and anſwer for themſelves.---Hear the declaration of the pſalmiſt; Bleſs the LORD, O my ſoul; and all that is within me, bleſs his holy name ‡. What is the cauſe of this holy tranſport, and devout praiſe? Is it, becauſe GOD poſſiby may, becauſe HE probably will? No; but becauſe HE actually does forgive: Who forgiveth all thine iniquities.---Take notice of Job's belief, and Job's ſupport, amidſt his unexampled ſufferings. I know that my REDEEMER liveth; not only that there is a Redeemer, but that he is, together with all his ſaving benefits, mine: which, being a truth ſo ſweet and delightful, is expreſſed a ſecond time; whom I ſhall ſee for myſelf ‖, to my own advantage, and for my own comfort: ſee him exerting his almighty power and infinite mercy, to reſcue my body from the grave, and to deliver my ſoul from hell.---What was Habakkuk's ſecurity, amidſt the threatening, the tremendous, the triumphant malice of his own, and his country's enemies? The LORD GOD is my ſtrength. He ſays not I wiſh, I pray, for the divine favour, and the divine ſuccour; but I am perſuaded, they both are mine; my ineſtimable portion, and my inviolable ſafeguard. He will make my feet like hind's feet, that I ſhall perfectly eſcape from all danger; and he will make me walk upon mine high places, beyond the reach of every evil §.

Ther. Is this the language of believers under the New-teſtament diſpenſation?

Aſp. Under every diſpenſation, Theron.---They who lived before the law, were perſuaded ¶ of the promiſes; had not the leaſt diſtruſt, with regard to the certainty of their performance; nay, they embraced them ⊥ as their own, they hugged them, as it were, to their very ſouls.---They who lived under the law could ſay, As far as the eaſt is from the weſt, ſo far hath he removed our tranſgreſſions from us +.---And can you imagine, in the days of the goſpel, when our advantages are greater and our light is clearer, that our faith ſhould be weaker, or our hope fainter? St Peter makes a profeſſion, which excludes all doubting; I am a witneſs of the ſufferings of CHRIST, and alſo a partaker of the glory that ſhall be revealed ++. St Paul anſwers in the ſame heroic ſtrain. I know whom I have believed; and I am perſuaded, that neither life, nor death, nor any creature, ſhall be able to ſeparate me from the love of

* יהוה Iſ. l. 10. † Επιῤῥιψαντες, 1 Pet. v. 7. ‡ Απορῤῥιψασθε, Acts xxvii. 43.

* Pſal. lxxvii. 10. † Pſal. xlii. 5. ‡ Pſal. ciii. 1. 3. ‖ Job xix. 25. 27. § Hab. iii. 19. ¶ Πεισθεντες, Heb. xi. 13. ⊥ Ασπασαμενοι + Pſal. ciii. 12. ++ 1 Pet. v. 1.

GOD,

GOD, which is in CHRIST JESUS my LORD *.——With both which, the confeſſion of faith recorded by St Luke, is exactly correſpondent; We believe, that, through the grace of the LORD JESUS CHRIST, we ſhall be ſaved even as they †.

Ther. Was not this a privilege peculiar to the apoſtle?

Aſp. By no means. All believers are brethren, and have like precious faith.——Hear how St Peter exhorts all his people; Gird up the loins of your mind, and hope to the end; or, as the word ſhould rather be tranſlated, hope perfectly, hope aſſuredly, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of JESUS CHRIST ‡. Maintain, not a dim, but a bright hope; not a wavering, but a ſteady expectation of eternal life; that free, but grand gift, of which the LORD JESUS, at his ſecond coming, ſhall put you in full poſſeſſion.——The apoſtle, writing to his Hebrew converts, encourages them all to hold faſt the confidence, and the rejoicing of hope, firm unto the end ‖.—From whence it is deducible, that a truſt amounting to confidence, and the joy which naturally reſults from ſuch a truſt, were the common portion of Chriſtians; poſſeſſed, not barely by ſome few exalted ſaints, but by the followers of JESUS in general.——I might bring many more inſtances. But why ſhould I multiply proofs? Since the beloved diſciple declares, Theſe things have I written unto you, that believe on the name of the SON of GOD, that ye may know that ye have eternal life.

Ther. True, Aſpaſio. This coincides with my apprehenſions. The ſcriptures are written,—firſt, that we may believe, and be entitled to eternal life;—next, that we may have the knowledge of our belief, and a conſciouſneſs of our title. The apoſtle ſuppoſes his correſpondents to poſſeſs the former, yet not to have attained the latter.

Aſp. Is it certain, that he makes ſuch a ſuppoſition? He writes, I imagine, not with a view of leading them to either, but of confirming them in both.——He intimates, that the privilege and the comfort ſhould go together. If we believe, that CHRIST is our Surety; we ſhould be perſuaded, that he has paid our debt, and ſatisfied juſtice to the very uttermoſt farthing.——If we believe, that CHRIST is our bridegroom; we ſhould reſt aſſured, that his righteouſneſs, his inheritance, and his kingdom are ours. And why ſhould we take pains to ſeparate, what GOD's word and the very nature of things have united? Will this turn to our advantage? muſt it not iſſue in our loſs?—Beſides, according to your own interpretation, whoever falls ſhort of this chearing knowledge, falls ſhort of one great end for which the ſcriptures were written. He receives not his full reward. He only gleans, where he might reap; is toſſed on the ocean of uncertainty: whereas they that have believed, have gained the port, have dropped their anchor, and enter into reſt §.

Ther. Believed! What? that our ſins are laid upon CHRIST? that he was obedient in our ſtead? that all ſpiritual bleſſings are thereby procured for our—even for our enjoyment?

Aſp. The bleſſings you mention, are evidently the purport of the goſpel. And I know of no other juſtifying faith, but that which relates to the goſpel, and believes its report ¶. Nor can I think, that any other belief will adminiſter the tranquillity, or produce the reſt, ſpecified by the apoſtle.——But here, I find, lies the core and root of our controverſy. This is the preciſe point to be ſettled; What it is to believe? what is included in this very important word?—This queſtion might renew our diſpute, and cauſe the paſt arguments to recur.——Whereas, I would gladly get rid of diſputation. We have already been too long detained in theſe diſagreeable paths. However, ſince you have given the occaſion, I may juſt touch upon another text or two. For I would willingly drive this nail to the head; and not leave my friend unconvinced, on a ſubject of the utmoſt conſequence.

The LORD declares by his prophet, I, even I am he, that blotteth out thy tranſgreſſions.——To believe, is to ſubſcribe this declaration; to ſubſcribe with our hand, and profeſs from our heart, "LORD, it is done, as thou haſt ſaid."—Faith is, if I may ſo ſpeak, the echo of the divine voice. It eagerly catches, and punctually reverberates the joyful ſound. Does GOD ſay, Thou art my people? Faith replies, Thou art my GOD *: not barely deſiring, but confidently averring, an intereſt in his favour. This explanation of faith is given us by a wiſdom which cannot be deceived, by a fidelity which cannot deceive.—Once more. Our LORD bears this teſtimony concerning Thomas; Thomas, thou haſt believed.——Now then, I think we have got an infallible touchſtone. Let us examine, what that is which JESUS CHRIST calls believing. Whatever it be, it is the determination of truth itſelf; and ſhould paſs for a verdict, from which there lies no appeal. And this, this is the confeſſion of Thomas, My LORD, and my GOD †.——This, this expreſſes what our divine MASTER calls believing.——When, therefore, we confeſs with our lips, and are perſuaded in our hearts, that JESUS is our LORD, who bought us with his blood; that JESUS is our GOD, who will exert all his adorable perfections for our good; then we truly believe. We believe, in our SAVIOUR's ſenſe of the word, we have that faith, which he allows to be genuine.

Ther. Is this the conſtant language of faith? According to this account, there is no difference between the infant and the adult; between the new-born babe, and the full-grown man in CHRIST. Your ſpiritual children, Aſpaſio, muſt be men from their birth; nay, born in all the vigour of manhood. Whereas, the apoſtle makes an evident difference between the babes, the young men, and the fathers; between faith, the aſſurance of faith, and the full aſſurance of faith. If we are told of a patriarch, who was ſtrong in faith; we read of ſome Roman converts, who were weak in the faith; and we hear our LORD ſpeaking to diſciples, who were fearful and of little faith.

Aſp. Between faith, and the full aſſurance of faith, the apoſtle makes a difference. The one is the moſt exalted pitch, where the other is but an inferior elevation. Yet both are rounds of the ſame ladder.——I don't remember, that the ſacred writer any where diſtinguiſhes between faith and aſſurance. Πιστις and Πεποιθησις, faith and confidence, are joined in the epiſtle to the Epheſians. It is the opinion of the beſt critics, that the ſenſe of the latter is included in the former. The critic's opinion is confirmed by the apoſtle's declaration, We have acceſs with confidence through faith ‡.——Could yonder ſun diffuſe warmth through the air, if it had no warmth in itſelf?—No more could faith produce confidence in the believer, if, in its own nature, it did not contain the ſame.

The caſe of little faith, I think, may be explained from our LORD's own expoſtulation; O thou of little faith, wherefore didſt thou doubt?——Here was a faith, not only in CHRIST's power, but alſo in his will. Nay, here was an appropriating faith, by which the apoſtle applied both to himſelf.——"I verily believe, "that my divine MASTER is able to preſerve me, "even though I venture to tread upon this tempe-"ſtuous ſea. I am perſuaded likewiſe, that he will

"uphold

* Rom. viii. 29. † Acts xv. 11.

‡ 1. Pet. i. 13. Εις τελος or μεχρι τελους, ſignify to the end. But τελειως, as far as I can recollect, is never uſed in this ſenſe, either by ſacred or profane writers. It may be rendered perfectè, integrè, in this connection, cum firma fiducia, with a firm affiance.

‖ Heb. iii. 6.

§ Heb. iv. 3. ¶ Iſ. liii. 1.

* Hoſ. ii. 23. † † John xx. 28, 29.

‡ Eph. iii. 12.

uphold me, and not ſuffer his ſervant to periſh in the hazardous enterpriſe." Nothing leſs than this could have produced that hazardous enterpriſe, or have emboldened him to walk upon the rolling billows.

Do you not diſcern, in this inſtance, ſome degree of perſonal application, ſome real aſſurance of faith! 'Tis true, this faith was violently aſſaulted by doubts, and greatly enfeebled by fears *. Yet ſtill it was of the applicatory kind. He can, he will, were expreſſive of its nature; though the boiſterous winds, and the terrifying appearance of things, almoſt drowned its voice, or ſtifled the words in their utterance.

Ther. If you allow no difference between faith and confidence, I am very ſure, St John puts a difference between babes, young men, and fathers.

Aſp. He does, Theron. And ſo would I. Neither can I think of any thing more proper to explain my meaning, or eſtabliſh my tenet, than your own compariſon.—In ſome fruitful family, you may ſee one child in leading-ſtrings; another able to walk by itſelf; a third come home, improved and cultivated, from the ſchool of literature. Obſerve their ſpeech. One liſps out a few broken ſentences; another talks intelligibly, but very incorrectly; the laſt has learned to expreſs himſelf with tolerable propriety. Yet each ſpeaks the ſame language, notwithſtanding the various degrees of fluency in their utterance, or purity in their diction.—So faith always ſpeaks one and the ſame uniform language. Whether ſhe liſps or ſtammers; whether ſhe whiſpers in faint accents, or raiſes her voice in a more manly tone: this is ſtill the unvaried import of her ſpeech; GOD, even our own GOD, will give us his bleſſing.—Can you forget, how St John addreſſes even his little children? I write unto you, little children, becauſe your ſins ARE FORGIVEN †.

Ther. Will not this account diſcourage ſome, and offend others, who are not arrived at ſuch an exalted pitch?

Aſp. I would not offend the meaneſt, nor diſcourage the weakeſt of my REDEEMER's ſervants.——As for offence, that cannot be given, and ought not to be taken, when all we advance is ſtrictly conformable to the unerring oracles. Whereas, to qualify and attenuate the ſcriptural deſcriptions of faith, in complaiſance to our own experience;—to make the unhappy fluctuations and unworthy ſuſpicions, which poſſeſs the breaſts of ſome particular Chriſtians,—to make them the rule of explaining, or the meaſure of enforcing ſo capital a duty; this, ſure, would be an offence to GOD, an injury to his word, and detrimental to the welfare of ſouls.

With regard to diſcouragement, I cannot conceive, how this ſhould enſue, from informing the poor ſinner, that he has a right to apply CHRIST, and all CHRIST's merits to himſelf; or from exhorting the poor ſinner to do this, without any heſitation, and with a reſolute dependance. In this caſe, to doubt is to be diſcouraged; as much as you want certainty, ſo much you want conſolation. The proper way to comfort theſe diſtreſſed people, is, not to allow but to diſſipate their doubts; to blow away thoſe dead aſhes, that the ſmothered embers may ſhine and glow.

Were we to inquire after the cauſe of that diſquietude and deſpondency which are ſo common among modern profeſſors, I am inclined to ſuſpect, we ſhould find it lying hid in their wrong apprehenſions both of CHRIST, and of faith.—They look upon CHRIST, as a rigorous and forbidding monarch, who inſiſts upon ſome hard terms and high qualifications. Whereas, his heart and his arms are ever open: his heart as open, as infinite love can ſet it; his arms as open, as infinite merit can make them.—They look upon faith, as containing a poſſibility only, or at moſt a probability of ſalvation through his name. It is with them a kind of peradventure; a ſituation of mind, fluctuating and pendulous. "Perhaps I may ſucceed, and be eternally "bleſſed. Perhaps I may be rejected, and eternally "ruined." Such a ſtate of ſuſpenſe, in an affair of everlaſting conſequence, cannot but create uneaſineſs and anxiety.

This uneaſineſs and anxiety ſeem to have been little known in the earlier and better days of the church. And why? Becauſe Chriſtians were then expoſed to the rage of perſecution? Becauſe they were placed nearer the time of CHRIST's ſojourning on earth? I rather think, becauſe they were taught this particular and comfortable application of CHRIST and his righteouſneſs. They exerciſed a confident affiance on JESUS as their own REDEEMER; and were ſhewn a more direct way to obtain this aſſurance, than merely to ſearch after their own renewed qualities.

Ther. Surely, Aſpaſio, in this particular you differ, not from me only, but from the generality of the orthodox.

Aſp. I am ſorry to find myſelf under a neceſſity of differing from any worthy perſons, much more of diſagreeing with the generality. This I can ſafely aver, that it is not from an affectation of novelty, or any fondneſs for diſputing, but from a diſintereſted regard to the truth of the goſpel. I ſhould be glad to have the concurrence of all the ſerious, and all the pious. But I dare not purchaſe their approbation, I dare not attempt a coalition of ſentiments, by diminiſhing the boundleſs riches of grace, or reſtricting the abſolute freeneſs of ſalvation by CHRIST.

You are pleaſed to remind me of the orthodox. Pray, my dear friend, what is the ſtandard of orthodoxy?—Is it the word of revelation? This ſpeaks once, yea twice, nay ſome hundreds of times in your favour.——Is it the doctrine of our reformers from Popery? With theſe we jar not, but exactly harmonize.——Is it to be taken from the old confeſſions of faith, and the catechiſms of Proteſtant churches? To theſe we appeal, and have the ſanction of their authority. Has the modern way of treating and ſtating this momentous ſubject ſo much to alledge for its ſupport?

Let me farther aſk,—Are we better than our fathers? Is Chriſtianity in a thriving condition, or practical religion on the advancing hand? The reverſe, the melancholy reverſe is undeniably true.——When our writers enforced, and our preachers urged, what I am defending, profeſſors were alive, and animated with the power of godlineſs. Whereas now we ſeem to be degenerated into the mere form; we have a name to live, but are languid, liſtleſs, and if not dead *, yet ready to die.——It behoves us therefore to conſider, whether the declenſion, the decays, the unfruitfulneſs, ſo juſtly lamented in the preſent age, be not owing to the abſence of this appropriating belief, or this aſſured perſuaſion.

A ſweet aſſurance of pardon, a comfortable perſuaſion of our reconciliation with GOD, an eſtabliſhed hope of eternal glory through JESUS CHRIST; theſe will be operative in the ſoul, as "a torch in the "ſheaf." Theſe will enkindle love, and increaſe watchfulneſs; theſe will beget the true humility of mind, and work an unfeigned abhorrence of ſin; theſe will enlarge the heart with charity, and exalt the affections above the world. Theſe are the proper, and the only effectual means of making the man of GOD perfect, that is, thoroughly furnished to every good work *.

* I muſt beg of the candid reader, to take particular notice of this limitation: and muſt entreat the impartial examiner, not to forget this conceſſion. We no where ſuppoſe, that a freedom from all fears, or a ſuperiority to all doubts, are included in the nature of faith. We only affirm, that an appropriating perſuaſion or aſſurance are neceſſary to the being of faith. This aſſurance may be encumbered with doubts, and may conflict with fears. But ſtill it is aſſurance,—real aſſurance,—and proves itſelf to be ſuch, by oppoſing and ſtruggling with the contrary principle.

* 1 John ii. 12.

* Rev. iii. 1.

But the doubting frame is not fitted to yield any of these fruits. Nay, I am apprehensive, there are several graces, which can hardly be exercised, several duties, which can scarcely be performed, so long as this spirit of diffidence prevails.

Ther. Name them, Aspasio.

Asp. I am afraid, lest I should seem to arrogate the office of a teacher; which neither becomes my condition, nor is agreeable to my temper.

Ther. I beseech you, my dear friend, let us wave ceremony, and have nothing to do with compliments. My soul is in jeopardy. My present comfort, and my everlasting happiness are at stake. And shall we suffer any little punctilios to overbear such weighty considerations?

Suppose you are a teacher; I have great need, and am very desirous, to become your scholar. For I freely confess, that, knowing as I may seem in other instances, I am very ignorant in the great peculiarities of the gospel. Nay, though I have read the scriptures in a critical view, I have been an utter stranger to their spiritual meaning. Here I am uninstructed as a babe. Here, therefore, I ought to be teachable as a babe. Yes, in this respect I would become as a little child, that I may enter into the knowledge, and possess the privileges of the kingdom of heaven.

Asp. Your answer, Theron, shall be a law.——Love to GOD, is the first commandment; and, without all peradventure, is the principal grace. But is it easy, is it possible to love GOD, before we have any persuasion of his love to us? This is what the apostles did not, could not do. And, if it exceeded their ability, it will doubtless be above the reach of our capacity. The thing may be attempted; the practice may be urged; we may see the necessity of it, and desire to perform it: but we shall never, never be able to exercise it, till we have some comfortable apprehension of GOD's reconciliation and good-will to us. We love HIM.——Wherefore? from what inducement? Because he first loved us †; and because this love hath been made evident to our consciences, by the light of faith.

What think you of delight in GOD? This also is a Christian grace. But how can two walk together except they be agreed? We never covet an intimacy with the person, who declares himself our enemy. Nay, if there be only a suspicion, that he bears us a secret ill-will, we shall be jealous of trusting him, and averse to approach him. This was the case of our first parents, immediately after the fall. Instead of drawing near to their CREATOR, with pleasure and gratitude; they fled from him, with anxiety and terror. And why? Because they were under the alarming apprehensions of his displeasure.——Whereas, let us once believe, what the apostle affirms, When we were enemies, we were reconciled to GOD by the death of his SON *. Let us cordially credit, what the prophet repeatedly declares, Therefore will the LORD wait that he may be gracious unto you; and therefore will he be exalted, that he may have mercy upon you †. Then we shall seek his face with alacrity. Our affections will be on the wing to salute the almighty BENEFACTOR. We shall joy in GOD through our LORD JESUS CHRIST.

Ther. To the enjoyment of so many spiritual consolations, and the exercise of several delightful graces, I acknowledge, an assured faith is necessary; but—

Asp. Ay, Theron, you may well hesitate. It will be difficult to fill up the chasm in your discourse. For my part, I know not any duty of holiness, which can be performed aright, without some degree of this confiding faith.——We are to walk worthy of HIM, who hath called us to his kingdom and glory ‡: but if we doubt, whether we in particular are called, how can this influence our conversation?——We are to be followers of GOD, as his dear children ‖. But if we do not, cannot, will not believe, so as to cry "Abba, FATHER," how can such a consideration sway our hearts?——Nay, upon what principles can such a person address himself to discharge any office of the Christian life? We are to abound in the works of the LORD, from the animating prospect of a glorious resurrection §. This he cannot do; because he apprehends himself to have no lot or portion in the blessed hope.——We are to open our hands in charity to others, from a view of that heavenly kingdom, which was prepared for us from the foundation of the world ¶: we are to cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, on account of those precious promises, which are freely given to us in CHRIST JESUS ‡: but where unbelieving doubts predominate, these endearing and invigorating motives are lost. The man has no interest in the encouraging promises, has no title to the blissful inheritance; consequently, these sinews of evangelical obedience, with respect to him, are benumbed, withered, dead.

Ther. Such a man may make prayers and supplications. Though he cannot rejoice in the privileges, he may request them at the throne of grace.

Asp. Prayer is a great duty, and as great a privilege. I wish my dear Theron the spirit of grace and supplication. This will be better, incomparably better and more advantageous, than a key to hidden treasures. But how can you pray with humble boldness, or with lively hope, unless you believe? believe, that CHRIST

* For the display and confirmation of these points, I do, with great pleasure, and without any diffidence, refer to Mr MARSHALL's Gospel-Mystery of Sanctification. Which I shall not recommend in the style of a critic, or like a reader of taste, but with all the simplicity of the weakest Christian; I mean, from my own experience. It has been made one of the most useful books to my own soul. I scarce ever fail to receive spiritual consolation and strength from the perusal of it. And was I to be banished into some desolate island, possessed only of two books besides my BIBLE, this should be one of the two, and perhaps the first that I would chuse.

Should any person, hitherto a stranger to the work, purchase it on this recommendation, I must desire to suggest one caution:—That he be not surprised, if, in the beginning, he meets with something new, and quite out of the common road: or, if surprised, that he would not be offended, but calmly and attentively proceed. He will find the author's design opening itself by degrees. He will discern more and more the propriety of his method: and what might, at the first view, appear like a stumbling block, will prove to be a fair, compendious, and ample avenue—to the palace of truth,—to the temple of holiness,—and to the bowers of happiness.—Our author's particular recommendation of this invaluable book, in a preface to an edition printed of it in London, will be inserted afterwards in this work.

† 1 John iv. 10.

* Rom. v. 10.

† Is. xxx. 18. That admirable commentator VITRINGA, who generally draws his bow with a steady hand, and shoots his arrow with the exactest aim, here seems to miss the mark. He appears to have thought, that waiting to be gracious, implies a delay in the exercise of the attribute, and is the same as to abstain from being gracious. Had this been the meaning, the language would probably have been, not יחנכם but מחנכם—To wait to be gracious signifies, to stand over a people with the continued tenders of grace and mercy, even while they refuse to accept them. This was the case with GOD and Israel. GOD promised to defend the Israelites; they obstinately refused to confide in his protection. GOD dissuaded them from trusting in the succour of Egypt; they presumptuously resolved to rely on that broken reed. Therefore, says GOD, I will—withdraw my slighted mercy? deny my despised assistance? This would be the manner of human procedure. But the LORD's ways are not as man's ways. His long-suffering triumphs over our perverseness. Therefore he says, "I will not turn away from "them, in displeasure; I will even wait for them, and wait upon "them, till they see their error, and accept my favour."—Amazing condescension and goodness! I was going to say. But divine condescension and goodness are, if I may so speak, infinitely more than amazing.

‡ 1 Thess. ii. 12. ‖ Eph. v. 1. § 1 Cor. xv. 58.

¶ Matth. xxv. 34 ‡ 2 Cor. vii. 1.

is your High Prieſt; is your Interceſſor with the FATHER; and, with the incenſe of his infinite merit, preſents your petitions? Then, and then only, can you have, what the apoſtle calls, boldneſs and acceſs with confidence *. Take notice of theſe vigorous expreſſions; and at your leiſure conſider, whether they countenance the ſuſpicious and miſgiving temper.——At preſent obſerve, how yonder lark warbles and mounts in the firmament; as if ſhe was bidding adieu to the earth, and going to mingle with the ſkies. An image this of believing prayer! Should a fowler ſhoot the ſoaring ſongſter through the wing, how would ſhe fall from her elevation, and flutter on the ground! An emblem that of diſtruſting prayer.

I know not how to leave this ſubject, without attending to the teſtimony of St James; than which nothing can be more awful, or more deciſive. It ſhould really alarm the doubting diſpoſition, as much as any ſolicitation to the moſt horrid ſin. It ſhould alarm the whole religious world, as much as the beacons, ſuddenly kindled, and all on a flame, would alarm the inhabitants of the maritime coaſts. Let him pray in faith, nothing doubting †; for he that doubteth is like a wave of the ſea, driven by the wind, and toſſed. Nay, the apoſtle adds,—and it is an addition greatly to be regarded. It ſhould abide with weight on our conſciences; for it comes from a caſuiſt, who could neither be too indulgent, through an exceſs of compaſſion; nor too rigorious, through an extravagance of zeal.——Let not that man, the doubting ſupplicant, think, that he ſhall receive any thing of the LORD.

Never then, my worthy friend, never more be an advocate for doubtings. Purſue them with fire and ſword. Give them no quarter. Deal with them as Saul was commanded to treat the Amalekites.

Ther. If we are grieved at the remembrance of paſt ſin, and feel an averſion to all ſin; if the prevailing bias of our affections be to the divine REDEEMER, and the habitual breathing of our ſouls after a conformity to his image; may we not ſuppoſe ourſelves poſſeſſed of the truth and reality, though we have not the confidence and rejoicing of faith? I ſay we; becauſe I apprehend, this is not my peculiar caſe, but common to myſelf, and many other Chriſtians of the weaker ſort. I aſk, therefore, in their name and in my own, May we not humbly ſuppoſe our condition ſafe, though we do not preſume to uſe the language of the ſpouſe, My BELOVED is mine, and I am his?

Aſp. So you are ſtill inclined to ſpare Agag; becauſe delicately and ſpeciouſly diſguiſed, under the appearance of tenderneſs to weak ſouls. I ſhould have thought, the text from St James muſt have done execution, like the prophet Samuel's ſword. But ſince corroſives ſucceed not, let us make trial of lenitives.

When the great JEHOVAH is pleaſed to ſay, I am the LORD thy GOD; then, upon this authentic warrant, to uſe the language of the ſpouſe, is neither more nor leſs than to declare; "I am perſuaded, that CHRIST is "faithful and true; that he ſays what he thinks; and "will do what he ſays."——Whereas, to deny this, by downright unbelief; or to queſtion this, by living in ſuſpenſe; is not humble duty, but proud diſobedience. Might not the LORD JESUS juſtly complain, What iniquity have ſinners found in me? what unkindneſs, or what unfaithfulneſs, that they are ſo much afraid of confiding in my grace, and of believing my word?

You aſk, Whether the ſtate of theſe perſons is ſafe, and their faith real? I anſwer, Why ſhould not their ſtate be happy, and their faith aſſured? Why ſhould you, or they, or any one, plead the cauſe of unbelief, and veil it with the plauſible pretext of humility? Let theſe perſons know, whatever their names or their circumſtances are, that they have as good a right to adopt the words of the ſpouſe, as we have to walk in theſe gardens, and enjoy their refined delights.—Yet they will do well to remember, that thoſe qualifications, however amiable, are by no means the ground of their right. They are to advance their claim, and hold faſt the bleſſing, not as men ornamented with fine endowments, but as poor, indigent, guilty ſinners. For ſuch the SAVIOUR is provided; to ſuch his benefits are propoſed, and on ſuch his grace will be magnified.

Ther. Do you elude my queſtion, or give up your point? One or the other my Aſpaſio certainly does.

Aſp. Since my friend ſo peremptorily affirms, I will not have the ill manners to deny. I will own the former charge; the latter I cannot admit. I will own, that, at preſent, I had much rather act as a comforter, than as a diſputant. On ſome other occaſion I will undertake to conſider, and endeavour to anſwer, all your objections.—In the mean time, I am far from giving up the point, barely by inquiring, Why ſuch perſons ſhould loſe their time, and perhaps embarraſs their minds, in theſe leſs profitable ſuppoſitions? when there is a direct, a compendious, and a certain method of obtaining peace, by appropriating CHRIST and his merits; without recurring to any ſuch qualifications.

Nevertheleſs, if you inſiſt upon a poſitive reply, I am obliged to declare, that faith conſiſts in none of thoſe qualifications which you deſcribe. The language of faith is not,—"I feel ſuch an averſion; I am actuated with ſuch "a bias; or I breathe ſuch a deſire." But—"GOD has "freely loved me; CHRIST has graciouſly died for me; "and the HOLY GHOST will aſſuredly ſanctify me "in the belief, the appropriating belief of theſe precious "truths *."

But ſee, Theron! Yonder black and low-hung cloud points this way. It ſeems big with a ſhower; it marches on apace, and will ſoon be over our heads. We muſt inſtantly fly to ſhelter.

Ther. It is well we have this ſummer-houſe for our ſhelter. The thickeſt boughs would be inſufficient to ſcreen us. I think, I never ſaw a more impetuous burſt of rain. A ſhower! No, 'tis a deſcending deluge. The large, ropy, reeking drops, come down like a torrent †.——Surpriſing! What a dreadful flaſh

pecu

* Eph. iii. 12. Προσαγωγὴν, acceſs with a chearing and graceful aſſurance; ſuch as thoſe petitioners enjoy, who are introduced to the royal preſence, by ſome diſtinguiſhed favourite.—Παῤῥησίαν, a boldneſs or unreſtrained liberty of ſpeech; ſuch as children uſe, when they preſent their addreſſes, and make known their requeſts, to an indulgent father.—Ἐν πεποιθήσει, with a well-grounded and ſteady confidence, that we ſhall obtain both a favourable acceptance, and a gracious anſwer.—And all this, through the faith of CHRIST; through the worthineſs of his perſon, and the prevalence of his interceſſion.

† Jam. i. 6. N. B. Nothing doubting, is the apoſtle's explanation of faith.—Μηδὲν διακρινόμενος is, in our tranſlation, nothing wavering. But the very ſame expreſſion is rendered, Acts x. 20. Nothing doubting. The ſenſe is, either way, alike. Though, I think, nothing wavering, correſponds too nearly with the compariſon, like a wave; makes ſomething of a diſagreeable jingle; and flattens the force, or ſuperſedes the neceſſity, of the following illuſtration.

* If the reader finds this dialogue too long, here he will have a convenient reſting-place.

† Come down like a torrent.—This is the import of that ſtrong picturesque word רדו Pſal. lxxvii. 17. In this manner, The clouds poured out water; while the air thundered and the arrows of the ALMIGHTY went abroad. Mr Addiſon, if I remember right, admires the pſalmiſt's deſcription of a ſtorm at ſea; becauſe it dwells only upon the grand and moſt ſtriking circumſtances; without deſcending, like Virgil's enervated repreſentation, to ſuch little particulars, as the cries of men, and the noiſe of oars. Clamorque virum, ſtridorque rudentum.—This deſcription of a tempeſt is, I think, equally admirable on the ſame account. The three greateſt and moſt terrible was there! A ſheet of ſulphureous fire, launched from the diſmal gloom, and wrapping the whole ſkies in a blaze!——Not a moment's interval between the lightning's rage, and the thunder's roar. How ſudden and vaſt the exploſion! What a deep, prolonged, tremendous peal enſues! It ſeems as if the poles of earth, and the pillars of nature cracked!

See, my dear Aſpaſio! ſee the direful havock; the horrid effects of this elementary tumult.——Yonder oak, which reared its towering head aloft, and ſpread wide its graceful branches, is, in the twinkling of an eye, turned into a naked trunk. There it ſtands, ſinged and tore; ſtripped of its verdant honours *, and ſurrounded with its own ſhattered fragments. How fearful is the artillery of heaven!

Aſp. And why—why did not the blow fall on this guilty breaſt? Why was not the fiery bolt, which flew ſo near, commiſſioned to pierce our hearts?—If our heavenly FATHER has been ſo tenderly careful of theſe periſhing bodies, will he not be much more gracious to our immortal ſouls? Will he not clothe them with that immaculate robe, which is the only ſecurity from the ſtroke of eternal vengeance?—And let me aſk, can this be a ſecurity to us, unleſs we are veſted with it! Could this building, though very ſubſtantial, have ſecured us from the ruſhing rains, if we had not betaken ourſelves to its friendly covert!

CHRIST is repreſented, in the prophecy of Iſaiah, by this very image; as a place of refuge, and as a covert from the ſtorm and from rain †. That is, his merits and death are a ſure protection from the curſe of the law, and the damnation of hell. No fury of the elements ſo terrible as theſe; no bulwark of ſtone ſo impregnable as thoſe.—If this is a proper emblem of CHRIST, to what ſhall we liken faith? To a perſuaſion, that the ſhelter of the ſummer-houſe is free for our uſe? To a high eſteem of its accommodation, an earneſt deſire after its protection, or an habitual tendency towards it?—Would this defend us from the inclemencies of the weather? Would this keep us dry, amidſt (what you call) the deſcending deluge? Would this eſteem, deſire, or tendency, unleſs carried into actual entrance and poſſeſſion, be a proper ſafeguard, or indeed any manner of advantage to our perſons?

Ther. No, Aſpaſio; neither would a perſuaſion that the ſummer-houſe is mine.

Aſp. True: but a belief that CHRIST is mine, is like entering the ſummer-houſe. When the divine SPIRIT reveals the obedient and dying SAVIOUR in my heart; when I am enabled to believe, that his death was the deſert of my ſins, and his obedience is the matter of my juſtification; when I live in the exerciſe of this appropriating faith, then I find that comfort, and I receive that benefit, which correſpond with the repoſe and ſecurity we now enjoy from this hoſpitable ſtructure.

Ther. May I then, from this inſtant, look upon CHRIST, his glorious perſon his perfect righteouſneſs, and his precious death, as my certain inheritance? May I firmly believe, that, through this grand immenſely-meritorious cauſe, I ſhall have pardon and acceptance, true holineſs and endleſs ſalvation?

Aſp. Why ſhould you not believe all this firmly? You have the ſame reaſon to believe with a ſteady confidence, as to believe with any degree of affiance. It is the free promiſe of the goſpel, addreſſed to ſinners, that warrants the latter; and the very ſame promiſe, under the ſame circumſtances of unmerited munificence, authorizes the former.

You have heard my opinion; hear now what our LORD himſelf ſays; Let him that is athirſt, come; and whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely *. He may partake of my ſpiritual and unſpeakable bleſſings, as freely as he makes uſe of the moſt common refreſhments; as freely as he drinks of the running ſtream. This is his royal proclamation.——Hear his gracious invitation. Look unto me, and be ye ſaved †; ſaved from your diſquieting fears, by juſtification; ſaved from your domineering corruptions, by ſanctification; ſaved from every evil; by complete and eternal redemption. To whom is this moſt affectionate call directed? Not to a few diſtinguiſhed favourites only, but to all the ends of the earth. None are excepted; none are prohibited; and can my Theron imagine, that he is excluded?

Nay farther, hear our LORD's earneſt entreaty; hear his tender and repeated importunity; As though GOD did beſeech you by us, we pray you, in CHRIST's ſtead be ye reconciled to GOD ‡. Hark! 'Tis the voice of infinitely-condeſcending love, ſpeaking by his ambaſſador:—"Sinners, accept my great ſalvation. Enjoy what I "have purchaſed for you, by my dying agonies. Do "not ſuſpect my kindneſs, or refuſe my gifts. This will "wound me deeper, than the ſpear which pierced my "heart."——O! the grace of our exalted KING. He bows from his celeſtial throne. He almoſt kneels to his guilty creatures. He begs, he even begs of obnoxious ſinners, not to reject his mercies.——After all this, can you entertain the leaſt doubt, Theron, whether you have a permiſſion to believe firmly?

Ther. This is extraordinary goodneſs indeed! I have often read theſe paſſages, but never ſaw them, till this hour, in a light ſo engaging and ſo encouraging.

Aſp. Should not this threefold cord be ſtrong enough to draw my dear friend; let me add (what muſt abſolutely ſuperſede all objections) the plain, expreſs, peremptory command of the ALMIGHTY: This is his command, that we ſhould believe on the name of his Son JESUS CHRIST ‖. Pray, examine the language; not he allows only; or barely adviſes; but commands. We are not only permitted, but ſtrictly required. It is not only our privilege, but GOD's poſitive injunction.——Upon the diſcovery of ſuch a SAVIOUR, methinks every heart ſhould cry; "O that I might be allowed to ap-"proach him! to ſolicit an intereſt in him! How glad-"ly would I wait, ever ſo long a time, in ever ſo mean a "poſture, if I might at the laſt receive him as my por-"tion?"—The ſuperabundant goodneſs of GOD prevents our wiſhes, and exceeds our hopes. "I freely give "my SON," ſaith the LORD, "and all his riches to "you. I beſeech you, as a compaſſionate friend, not to "refuſe him. I injoin you, as an uncontrollable Sovereign, "to believe on him."——How gracious! moſt amazingly gracious is this command! And give me leave to hint, it is the greateſt and moſt important command that ever iſſued from the throne of glory. If this be neglected, no other can be kept? if this be obſerved, all peculiarities are ſelected; and expreſſed with all the conciſeneſs, yet with all the vigour, which language can unite.

I have not met with any commentator, who enters into the ſpirit of the next verſe. And in our liturgy-tranſlation, its majeſty ſinks into meanneſs, its propriety degenerates into tautology. Whereas, it is by no means a vain repetition; but heightens and enlarges the formidable idea, by diſplaying the effects of what had been deſcribed, in the foregoing lines. The voice of thy thunder was in the heaven; the volleys not only reſounded, but reſounded from pole to pole, and filled גלגל the vaſt circumference of the ſkies.——The lightnings, lightened the world; the flaſhes not only ſhone, but ſhone far and near, and illuminated the whole world with their blaze. The earth trembled to its centre, and its inhabitants ſhook with horror.

* Does not this give us the moſt awful and grand ſenſe of Pſal. xxix. 9. The voice of the LORD, when uttered in thunder and accompanied with lightning, יחשף יערות, not diſcovereth the thick buſhes, but ſtrips the foreſts; lays bare the branching woods; reduces the moſt magnificent and flouriſhing cedars to naked and withered trunks.

† Iſ. iv. 6.

* Rev. xxii. 17. † Iſ. xlv. 22.

‡ 2. Cor. v. 20. ‖ 1 John iii. 23.

all others will be eaſy.——Now, Theron, will you not receive CHRIST, and look upon his all-ſufficient merits as your own? Is not your warrant clear and unexceptionable? nay, is not your obligation ſtrong and indiſpenſable?

Ther. Truly, Aſpaſio, you put all my miſtruſtful apprehenſions to the ſtand. Here is a proclamation from the bleſſed GOD,—ſeconded by his invitation,—accompanied by his entreaty,—and all enforced by his command. I know not what can be a fuller proof of your point, or a ſtronger inducement to believe.

Aſp. Yes, my friend, I can produce (if ſuch a thing be poſſible) ſtronger proof ſtill; ſuch as, I hope, will totally root unbelief, and drive all her forces from the field.

GOD has not only invited you, entreated you, and commanded you to live under the ſweet perſuaſion, that his SON is your SAVIOUR; but he has given you the grandeſt ratification of this precious truth.——He has paſſed his word; he has made you a firm promiſe; nay, he has given you many and various promiſes, of this inеſtimable bleſſing. And GOD is not a man, that he ſhould lie; or the SON of man, that he ſhould repent. Hath he ſaid, and ſhall he not do it? or hath he ſpoken, and ſhall he not make it good *? Heaven and earth may drop into nothing, ſooner than one promiſe, or indeed one jot or tittle of his promiſe, ſhould fall to the ground.

Beſides this, he has given you, if I may ſo ſpeak, a note under his own hand. He has recorded his promiſes in the Bible, and written them with an everlaſting pen: ſo that they will ſtand conſpicuous and indelible, like a bill drawn upon heaven, and a baſis laid for faith, ſo long as the ſun and moon endure.

Nay, he has confirmed all, by the moſt ſolemn ſanction imaginable; by his oath; by his own oath; by the oath of a GOD. Though his word is ſure, and his promiſe immutable, he adds (aſtoniſhing condeſcenſion! adorable benignity!) he adds HIS OATH to all.——He not only ſpeaks, but ſwears, ſwears by himſelf; ſwears by his own eternal exiſtence; that his promiſes belong —to whom? Mark this particular with the moſt exact attention. To whom do thoſe promiſes belong, which are ratified in this unequalled and inviolable manner?—To the holy, the upright, the accompliſhed?—To thoſe, ſays the ſcripture, who fly for refuge to the hope ſet before them †; the hope ſet before them in the propitiation, the righteouſneſs, the ineffable merits of CHRIST.

Ther. May I then believe, firmly believe, aſſuredly believe, that JESUS the Mediator, and all the rich benefits of his mediation, are mine? Pardon me, Aſpaſio, for reiterating the queſtion. I am really, with reſpect to the obedience of faith, too much like that Saxon monarch, who, for his remiſſneſs and inactivity, was ſirnamed The Unready ‡.

Aſp. I do more than pardon my dear Theron. I feel for him, and I ſympathize with him. If there is ſome of that Saxon prince's diſeaſe running in his religion; I am ſure, there is too much of it in mine; and I fear it is an epidemical diſtemper. But let us reflect a moment. ——Suppoſe any neighbour of ſubſtance and credit, ſhould bind himſelf by a deliberate promiſe, to do you ſome particular piece of ſervice;—if he ſhould add to his promiſe a note under his own hand; if he ſhould corroborate both by ſome authentic pledge;—if he ſhould eſtabliſh all by a moſt awful and ſolemn oath:—could you ſuſpect the ſincerity of his engagement, or harbour any doubt with regard to its execution? This would be moſt unreaſonable in any one; and to your generous temper, I am very certain, it would be impoſſible.—— Let us remember, that GOD has given us all this cauſe for an aſſurance of faith, and more. Nay, I will defy the moſt timorous and ſuſpicious temper, to demand from the moſt treacherous perſon on earth, a greater, ſtronger, fuller ſecurity, than the GOD of infinite fidelity has granted to you and me.——After all this, one would think, diffidence itſelf could no longer heſitate, nor the moſt jealous incredulity demur. Shall we, can we with-hold that affiance from the unchangeable CREATOR, which we could not but repoſe on a fallible creature?

Ther. You rouſe and animate me, Aſpaſio, O! that I may ariſe, and with the divine aſſiſtance, ſhake off this ſtupor of unbelief! Certainly, it can never be honourable to GOD, nor pleaſing to CHRIST, nor profitable to ourſelves.

Aſp. If it be, then cheriſh it; maintain it; and never relinquiſh it.——But how can it be honourable to GOD? It depretiates his goodneſs; it is a reproach to his veracity; nay, the apoſtle ſcruples not to affirm, that it makes him a liar *. Whereas, they who believe his teſtimony, glorify his faithfulneſs; glorify his beneficence; and, as John the Baptiſt ſpeaks, ſet to their ſeal, that GOD is true †.——I have been informed, that, when the late Elector of Hanover was declared, by the parliament of Great Britain, ſucceſſor to the vacant throne; ſeveral perſons of diſtinction waited upon his Highneſs, in order to make timely application for the moſt valuable preferments. Several requeſts of this nature were granted and each was confirmed by a kind of promiſſory note. One gentleman, particularly, ſolicited for the Maſterſhip of the Rolls. Being indulged in his deſire, he was offered the ſame confirmation, which had been vouchſafed to other ſucceſsful petitioners. Upon which, he ſeemed to be under a pang of graceful confuſion and ſurpriſe; begged, that he might not put the royal donor to ſuch unneceſſary trouble; at the ſame time proteſting, that he looked upon his Highneſs's word, as the very beſt ratification of his ſuit.——With this conduct, and this compliment, the Elector was not a little pleaſed. "This "is the gentleman," he ſaid, "who does me a real ho- "nour; treats me like a king; and whoever is diſap- "pointed, he ſhall certainly be gratified." So, we are aſſured by the teſtimony of revelation, that the patriarch, who ſtaggered not through unbelief, gave, and in the moſt ſignal, the moſt acceptable manner, glory to GOD ‡.

Is it pleaſing to CHRIST!—Quite the reverſe. It diſhonours his merit; it detracts from the dignity of his righteouſneſs; it would enervate the power of his interceſſion. Accordingly you may obſerve, there is nothing which our LORD ſo frequently reproved in his followers, as this ſpirit of unbelief.——What ſays he to his diſciples, when he came down from the mount of transfiguration? O faithleſs and perverſe ‖ generation! They were perverſe, becauſe faithleſs.——What ſays he to the travellers, whom he overtook in their journey to Emmaus? O fools, and ſlow of heart to believe §! They were fools, becauſe ſlow to believe.——What ſays he to the apoſtles, after his reſurrection? JESUS upbraideth them with their unbelief ¶. He took no notice

* Numb. xxiii. 19. † Heb. vi. 17. 18.

‡ ETHELRED.

* 1 John v. 10. † John iii. 33. ‡ Rom. iv. 20.

‖ Διεστραμμενη, Matth. xvii. 17. A believing ſtate of mind, is like ſome well-arranged and beautiful ſyſtem of limbs. Unbelief diſlocates the parts, diſtorts the harmonious frame, and diſfigures its comely proportion.

§ Ανοητοι, Luke xxiv. 25. Not thoughtleſs, but ſtupid creatures; void of underſtanding: as we ſay in Engliſh, without common ſenſe; or, as Horace would have ſaid in Latin,

O tribus Anticyris caput inſanabile!

¶ Mark xvi. 14. The word is not επιλεγειν, as in Luke xvii. 3. not ελεγξιν, as in Tit. i. 13. but ονειδισαι. Which ſignifies, not barely a rebuke, but a rebuke accompanied with keen and ſtinging reflections; ſuch as may cover the face with bluſhes, and wound the heart with anguiſh.——It is uſed, by the evangeliſt Luke, and by the apoſtle Peter, to deſcribe thoſe calumnies, invectives, and reproaches, with which the perſecutors of Chriſtianity endeavoured to gall and afflict the Chriſtians. Luke vi. 22. 1 Pet. iv. 14. ——Though our LORD JESUS was moſt amiably tender of their cowardly and perfidious behaviour; he inveighed againſt none of their other follies and infirmities; but he upbraided them with their unbelief. Not gently rebuked. No; this was a fault ſo unreaſonable in itſelf, ſo reproachful to their MASTER, ſo pernicious to themſelves, that he ſeverely reprimanded them for it; with an air of vehemence, and with a mixture of invective.

Is it profitable to ourſelves?—Nothing leſs. It damps our love, and diminiſhes our comfort. It ſubjects us to that fear, which hath torment; and diſqualifies us for that obedience, which is filial. In a word, this diſtruſtful and unbelieving temper weakens every principle of piety, and impoveriſhes the whole ſoul.——Whence come ſpiritual oſcitancy and remiſſneſs? whence proceed ſterility and unfruitfulneſs in the knowledge of CHRIST? St Peter aſcribes them all to an habitual unbelief. Such perſons, he ſays, have forgotten that they were purged from their former ſins *.—In the regenerate, where it remains, it is very detrimental; for they that will not believe, ſhall not be eſtabliſhed †. In the unregenerate, where it prevails, it is abſolutely deſtructive; and though it may not kill like an apoplexy, it waſtes like a conſumption. They could not enter in, becauſe of unbelief ‡.

Let us then, my dear friend, caſt away this ſin, which ſo eaſily beſets us both. It clogs our feet; it hampers all our powers; and hinders us from running, with alacrity and ſpeed, the race that is ſet before us.—What ſays David? GOD hath ſpoken in his holineſs ‖; hath made an expreſs and inviolable promiſe, that I ſhall be ruler of his people Iſrael. I will rejoice therefore; away with every alarming apprehenſion; I will even exult and triumph. Nay more; I will divide Shechem, and mete out the valey of Succoth; I will look upon the whole land as my own. I will divide it, and diſpoſe of it, juſt as if it was already in my poſſeſſion.—Why ſhould not you and I alſo ſay? GOD hath ſpoken in his holineſs; hath expreſsly and ſolemnly declared, The promiſe of an all-ſufficient SAVIOUR is to you. We will rejoice therefore; confiding in this moſt faithful word, we will bid adieu to all diſquieting fears, and make our boaſt of this glorious REDEEMER. Yes; notwithſtanding all our unworthineſs, CHRIST and his atonement, CHRIST and his righteouſneſs, are ours. GOD hath paſſed his word; and, amidſt our temptations, his word is our anchor; its hold is firm, and its ground immoveable §.

Ther. I have heard ſome people diſtinguiſh between the faith of reliance, and the faith of aſſurance; between the reflex and the direct act of faith. Methinks, I approve theſe ſentiments, though I diſlike the terms. The ſentiments are happily adapted to the relief of human infirmity; though the terms are rather too abſtruſe for ordinary capacities to underſtand.

Aſp. I cannot ſay, that I am very fond, either of the one, or of the other. In my opinion, they both partake too much of the ſubtilty of the ſchools; and are more likely to create perplexity, than to adminiſter godly edifying. For which reaſon, I ſhould chuſe to drop the difficult phraſes, and not to dwell on the nice diſtinctions. Yet, if we muſt not diſmiſs them, without ſome notice, I would juſt remark,—

That the faith of reliance, in its true ſcriptural ſenſe, includes or preſuppoſes a degree of aſſurance.—Includes; for what is reliance, but a repoſe of the mind, which is attended with tranquillity, and excludes perturbation? How can this take place, if there be no ſort of conviction, that the LORD is my light and my ſalvation?—Preſuppoſes; for who would rely on a ſatisfaction made, without being perſuaded, that the ſatisfaction is for him and his iniquities? Reliance, ſeparated from this perſuaſion, ſeems to be neither comfortable, nor reaſonable.

As to thoſe who inſiſt upon what they call the reflex act of faith; ſure, they miſtake the nature of the thing. This, if I underſtand them aright, is their way of arguing; "I am a new creature; I love the LORD JE-"SUS in ſincerity; I have the fruits of the SPIRIT. "From whence it is plain, that CHRIST and his ſalva-"tion are mine." Now, in all this procedure, I cannot diſcern the leaſt footſtep of faith; no not the leaſt trace of receiving a teſtimony, or relying upon a SAVIOUR. Here is nothing more than a logical deduction of one propoſition from another; a concluſion drawn from given premiſes. Grant the latter, and any perſon, without any aid from the SPIRIT, will infer the former. It may, therefore, more properly be reckoned an act of reaſoning, than of believing; it is founded on what we ourſelves feel, not upon the record of a faithful GOD; and it is ſtyled, by judicious writers, the aſſurance of ſenſe rather than of faith.

When, in conformity to the aforementioned opinion, we are adviſed to prove our title to comfort, by genuine marks of converſion; and taught on this column to fix the capital of aſſurance; I would rather propoſe a queſtion, than advance objections.—Is not this ſomewhat like placing the dome of a cathedral upon the ſtalk of a tulip?

Ther. No, ſay they; it was the practice of the apoſtle himſelf; and he has left it upon record, as a pattern for all poſterity to copy. We know that we are paſſed from death unto life, becauſe we love the brethren.

Aſp. Obſerve, Theron, the proceſs of the apoſtle's reaſoning. It is like the form of an inverted cone; where you have firſt the point, and from thence proceed to the baſe. So the ſacred writer begins with the leſs, and aſcends to the greater proof. He ſays, in one of the following verſes; Hereby perceive we the love of GOD *, becauſe he laid down his life, not merely for ſinners, but for us in particular.——Here, you ſee, is aſſurance by the direct act of faith. From this truth believed, from this bleſſing received, the love of the brethren takes its riſe. Which may very juſtly be admitted as an evidence, that our faith is real, and our aſſurance no deluſion. As yonder leaves may ſerve to diſtinguiſh the particular ſpecies, and aſcertain the healthy ſtate of the trees on which they grow.

When your tenants bring in their rent, this affords no contemptible evidence, that the lands which they reſpectively occupy, are yours. But this is a proof and gentle; yet, when ſeverity was neceſſary and wholeſome, he knew how to be ſevere. Our all-wiſe PHYSICIAN could apply the cauſtic, as well as adminiſter the cordial.

* 2 Pet. i. 8, 9. † Iſ. vii. 9.

‡ Heb. iii. 19. ‖ Pſal. lx. 6.

§ This very important doctrine is more copiouſly diſplayed, in ſome ſermons of Mr Ebenezer Erſkine's on the aſſurance of faith, vol. III. p. 201. *.—Was I to read, in order to refine my taſte, or improve my ſtyle; I would prefer Biſhop Atterbury's ſermons, Dr Bates's works, or Mr Saul's diſcourſes. But was I to read, with a ſingle view to the edification of my heart, in true faith, ſolid comfort, and evangelical holineſs; I would have recourſe to Mr Erſkine, and take his volumes for my guide, my companion, and my own familiar friend.

* This refers to a ſelect collection of Meſſ. Ebenezer and Ralph Erſkine's ſermons publiſhed at London, in three volumes Octavo. The ſermons on the aſſurance of faith are to be found in the firſt volume of Mr Ebenezer Erſkine's ſermons printed at Edinburgh in 1761.

* 1 John iii. 16. The word GOD is not in the original. It was omitted by the apoſtle, juſt as the particular name is omitted by Mary, when ſhe ſpeaks to the gardener; Sir, if thou haſt borne him hence;—and by the church, when ſhe addreſſes the ſacred object of her affection; Let him kiſs me with the kiſſes of his mouth: John xx. 15. Cant. i. 1.—In all which places, there is a language, a very emphatical language, even in the ſilence. It declares, how deeply the heart was penetrated, how totally the thoughts were poſſeſſed, by the beloved and illuſtrious ſubject. It expreſſes alſo the ſuperlative dignity and amiableneſs of the perſon meant: as though he, and he alone, either was or deſerved to be known and admired by all. For which reaſon, to mention his name, or diſplay his excellencies, ſeemed as needleſs, as to ſhew light to the opened eye.

which

which does not occur, every day or every week; it is occaſional only, and of the ſubordinate kind.——The grand demonſtration, that which is always at hand, and always forcible, is your poſſeſſion of the deeds of conveyance. Thus, the promiſe of GOD in his divine word is our charter, or the authentic conveyance of our right to pardon and ſalvation. Make juſt the ſame difference between this promiſe and your own holineſs, as you make between the writings of your eſtate and the receival of the revenues; you will then judge aright, becauſe your judgment will coincide with the apoſtle's.

Beſides, this method of ſeeking peace and aſſurance, I fear, will perplex the ſimple-minded; and cheriſh, rather than ſuppreſs, the fluctuations of doubt. For, let the marks be what you pleaſe, a love of the brethren or a love of all righteouſneſs, a change of heart or an alteration of life; theſe good qualifications are ſometimes like the ſtars at noon-day, not eaſily, if at all, diſcernable; or elſe they are like a glow-worm in the night, glimmering, rather than ſhining; conſequently will yield, at the beſt, but a feeble, at the worſt, a very precarious evidence.—If, in ſuch a manner, we ſhould acquire ſome little aſſurance, how ſoon may it be unſettled by the incurſions of daily temptation, or deſtroyed by the inſurrection of remaining ſin! At ſuch a juncture, how will it keep its ſtanding! how retain its being! It will fare like a tottering wall, before the tempeſt; or be as the ruſh without mire, and the flag without water *.

Inſtead therefore of poring on our own hearts, to diſcover, by inherent qualities, our intereſt in CHRIST, I ſhould rather renew my application to the free and faithful promiſe of the LORD; aſſert and maintain my title, on this unalterable ground.——"Pardon is mine, I "would ſay grace is mine, CHRIST and all his ſpiritual "bleſſings are mine. Why? becauſe I am conſcious of "ſanctifying operations in my own breaſt? Rather be-"cauſe GOD hath ſpoken in his holineſs; becauſe all theſe "precious privileges are conſigned over to me in the "everlaſting goſpel, with a clearneſs unqueſtionable as the "truth, with a certainty inviolable as the oath of GOD."

Caſt your eye into yonder meadow. Take notice of that induſtrious fiſherman; how intent he is upon the purſuit of his buſineſs. He has juſt thrown his net, and taken a conſiderable booty. You do not ſee him ſpending his time in idle triumphs, on account of his ſucceſs. He does not ſtand to meaſure the dimenſions of the fiſh, or complete the value of his prize. But having, without delay, ſecured the captives; he prepares for another caſt, and hopes for another draught.

So let us, inſtead of exulting in any paſt acquiſitions, ſeek afreſh to the inexhauſtible fulneſs of our SAVIOUR, for renewed communications. If we have been bleſſed with any taſte of his goodneſs, or any tokens of his love, let us not too fondly dote upon the ſweetneſs of ſuch experiences. Let us not make them the foundation of our confidence, but only ſo many encouragements to perſevere and advance in believing: that, having life and having peace from our divine HEAD, we may have them more abundantly †. Then will be fulfilled the ſaying which is written; The juſt, the righteous in JESUS CHRIST—ſhall live, ſhall not only be delivered from condemnation and death, but ſhall thrive in comfort, and flouriſh in holineſs:—How? by reflecting on their ſanctification, or viewing their own attainments? No; but by the infinitely more encouraging views of their completeneſs in CHRIST, and by a freſh, a repeated, a never-ceaſing exerciſe of faith ‡, on that HOLY ONE of GOD.

This, I verily think, nay this, the apoſtle teſtifies, is the moſt effectual way of feeding that lamp, and quickening that flame; which, having cheared us in our earthly pilgrimage, will be brightened up into immortal glory in the heavens.

* Job viii. 11. † John x. 10.

‡ Rom. i. 17.

Here they went in; and, after a ſlight refreſhment, took coach.——As they were returning home, Theron obſerved, not without concern, the changed and melancholy aſpect of things, in the territories of the huſbandman. The fields of corn, which, a little while ago, were gracefully erect, or ſoftly inclining to the breeze, lay ſunk and flatted under the impetuous rains.——Such, added Aſpaſio, ſuch I apprehend will be our faith, if it aſpires not after aſſurance, or if its aſſurance is erected on any endowments of our own.

Ther. If this is the caſe, what can be the reaſon, why ſo many people are totally deſtitute of all religious aſſurance? have no notion of it, much leſs aſpire after it? and as to full aſſurance, they would be much ſurpriſed, perhaps highly diſguſted, at the very mention of ſuch a doctrine?

Aſp. If people never aſpire after the aſſurance of faith, or an appropriating intereſt in CHRIST, I very much queſtion, whether they are truly awakened, or really in earneſt. They are like the men of Ephraim, whom the prophet ſtyles a cake not turned *; neither bread, nor yet dough; neither abſolute reprobates, nor real ſaints. Or, as our LORD explains the proverb, in his charge againſt the church of Laodicea, they are neither hot nor cold †; not frozen in inſenſibility, 'tis true; at the ſame time, not fervent in ſpirit; but indifferent and lukewarm in the concerns of religion.—As to a full aſſurance, or the higheſt degree of this grace, was I to declare myſelf more explicitly upon this point, it ſhould be in the calm and moderate words of a judicious divine; "I do not affirm, "that, without a full aſſurance, there is no faith. But "this I maintain, that where-ever the latter exiſts, there "will be a ſincere purſuit of the former."

Among the reaſons why ſo few perſons attain this eminent bleſſing, we may reckon the following.—They underſtand not the perfect freeneſs of grace, nor the immenſe merits of CHRIST.——They never conſider the unſpeakable value of an aſſured faith; neither are they aware, that it is intended for the enjoyment of ſinners.—Either they ſeek it not at all; or elſe they ſeek it, where it is not to be found; from ſome works of righteouſneſs in themſelves, rather than from the gracious promiſe of GOD in his word: which is altogether as ill judged, and as ſure to iſſue in diſappointment, as if a perſon ſhould go in queſt of ice amidſt the torrid zone, or expect to find ſpicy iſlands under the northern pole.

But whether people conſider it or no, the value of an aſſured faith is indeed unſpeakable.——When this is wrought in the heart, peace will ſtand firm, and afflictions drop their ſting. Prayer will return laden with treaſures, and death will approach ſtripped of its terrors. The ſoul will be as a watered garden, and all her graces bloſſom as a roſe.—When this is wrought in the heart, the goſpel of CHRIST will appear with new charms, and operate with new energy. Its hymns will no longer be a ſtrange language to your ear, nor its privileges as forbidden fruit to your palate. You will then, as you peruſe each ſacred page, feel it to be the power of GOD, and taſte that the LORD is gracious ‡. You will reap a benefit, and enjoy a delight, as much ſuperior to thoſe of the doubting reader, as the pleaſure of eating this delicious peach is ſuperior to the mere deſcription of its agreeable reliſh.

Bear with me a moment longer, Theron. For you can hardly imagine, what an improvement and exaltation this will give to every truth you contemplate, and every object you behold.——When you contemplate the riſe of kingdoms, and the fall of empires; when you recollect the many great and aſtoniſhing events recorded

* Hoſ. vii. 8. † Rev. iii. 15. ‡ 1 Pet. ii. 3.

recorded in the history of nations; how highly delightful must it be to say, "All these passed under the superintendency of that hand, which was pierced with the "bloody nail, and fastened to the cursed cross for me!" ——When you behold the magnificence of creation, and the richness of its furniture; the grandeur of nature, and the variety of her works; what a heightened pleasure must they all impart, if, as you view the glorious scene, your thoughts make answer to your eyes; "All these "were brought into existence by that adorable PERSON, "who sustained my guilt, and wrought out my justifying "righteousness!"

O! that ye may possess this precious faith *! that it may grow incessantly, grow exceedingly †! till it be rooted, like those full-grown oaks, under which we lately walked! and grounded ‡, like that well-built edifice, which is still in our view!

Ther. I join with my Aspasio in this wish; and must beg of him to inform me, how I may attain so desirable a blessing.

Asp. You have entirely cured me, Theron, of making apologes: would to GOD I might be as successfully instrumental in delivering my friend from his doubts! that the gospel might come to us, as it came to the Thessalonians, not in word only, but in power, and in the HOLY GHOST, and in much assurance ‖!

Prayer is the first expedient. Every good gift is from above, and cometh down from the FATHER of lights. CHRIST is not only the object, but the author and finisher of our faith. LORD, increase our faith, was the request of the disciples, and should be the prevailing language of our hearts.

Lay up many of the divine promises in your memory. Stock that noble cabinet with this invaluable treasure. Faith cometh by hearing §, by meditating on, by praying over, this word of life, and word of grace.—And never, never forget the freeness, with which the promise is made, and its good things are bestowed. You are to receive the one, and apply the other, not with a full, but with an empty hand; not as a righteous person, but as an unworthy creature.

Make the trial. Exercise yourself in this great secret of true godliness. I am satisfied, it will be productive of the most beneficial effects.——Look unto JESUS as dying in your stead, and purchasing both grace and glory for your enjoyment. Come unto GOD, as a poor sinner, yet with a confident dependence; expecting all spiritual blessings, through HIM that loved you, and gave himself for you.——He that believeth, with this appropriating faith, shall not be confounded *, nor frustrated in his expectations. He that believeth with this appropriating faith, shall have the witness in himself †. Nothing will bring in such light and peace, such holiness and happiness to his soul.——The Ephesians, thus believing, were sealed with that holy SPIRIT of promise ‡. The dispersed of Israel, thus believing, rejoiced with joy unspeakable ‖.—Those were marked out as rightful heirs, these were blessed with some delightful foretastes, and both were prepared for the complete fruition, of life and immortality. O! that we may be followers of their example, and sharers of their felicity!

As for those doubts, which have given you so much perplexity, and cost us so long a disquisition, look upon them as some of your greatest enemies.——Oppose them, with all the resolution and all the vigour of your mind. ——Nay, look upon those unreasonable doubts, as some of your greatest sins. Confess them, with the deepest shame; and pray against them, with the utmost ardour. ——With equal assiduity and zeal, let us press after a stedfast, an immoveable, a triumphant faith.——Faith is the vehicle and the instrument of every good; All things are possible to him that believeth §.—Faith is the immediate and grand end of the whole gospel; These things are written, that ye might believe ¶.—Let us therefore covet, earnestly let us covet this best of gifts, and shew all diligence to the FULL ASSURANCE of hope †.

* 2 Pet. i. 1. † 2 Thess. i. 3.

‡ Rooted and grounded, ἐρριζωμένοι καὶ τεθεμελιωμένοι. These are the apostle's beautiful ideas, or rather expressive similitudes, each comprehended in a single word, Eph. iii. 18. ‖ 1 Thess. i. 5.

§ Rom. x. 17. On which account the scriptures are styled, the words of faith, 1 Tim. iv. 6.

* 1 Pet. ii. 6. † 1 John v. 10.

‡ Eph. i. 13. Πιστεύσαντες ἐσφραγίσθητε, not after that ye believed, ye were sealed; but believing ye were sealed. In the way of believing, ye became partakers of this sealing and sanctifying SPIRIT. Conformably to the expostulation of the apostle on another occasion, Received ye the SPIRIT by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

‖ 1 Pet. i. 8. § Mark ix. 23.
¶ John xx. 31. † Heb. vii. 11.

DIALOGUE XVII.

THE next morning, Theron ordered a cold collation to be prepared, and his pleasure-boat to hold itself in readiness.—Breakfast being dispatched, and some necessary orders relating to the family given:—Now, says he to Aspasio, let me fulfil my promise; or rather let us execute our mutual engagement; and consign the remainder of this mild and charming day to a rural excursion.

We will take our route alone one of the finest roads in the world: A road incomparably more curious and durable, than the famous causeys raised by those puissant hands which conquered the globe: A road which has subsisted from the beginning of time; and, though frequented by innumerable carriages, laden with the heaviest burdens, has never been gulled, never wanted repair, to this very hour.—Upon this, they step into the chariot, and are conveyed to a large navigable river, about three quarters of a mile distant from the house.——Here they launch upon a new element, attended by two or three servants, expert at handling the oar, and managing the nets.

Is this the road, replied Aspasio, on which my friend bestows his panegyric? It is indeed more curious in its structure, and more durable in its substance, than the celebrated Roman causeys: though I must assure you, the latter have a very distinguished share of my esteem. I admire them far beyond Trajan's pillar, or Caracalla's baths; far beyond the idle pomp of the Pantheon, or the worse than idle magnificence of the amphitheatre. They do the truest honour to the empire; because, while they were the glory of Rome, they were a general good *; and not only a monument of her grandeur, but a benefit to mankind.

But more than all these works, I admire that excellent and divinely-gracious purpose, to which Providence made the empire itself subservient. It was a kind of road or causey for the everlasting gospel, and afforded the word of life a free passage to the very ends of the earth. The evangelical dove mounted the wings of the Roman eagle; and flew, with surprising

* These roads ran through all Italy, and stretched themselves into the territories of France. They were carried across the Alps, the Pyrenean mountains, and through the whole kingdom of Spain.—Some of them towards the south, reached even to Æthiopia; and some of them, towards the north, extended as far as Scotland. The remains of several of them continue in England to this day; though they were made, it is probable, above 1600 years ago.

prising expedition, through all nations.—Who would have thought, that insatiable ambition and the most bloody wars should be paving a way for the PRINCE of humility and peace? How remote from all human apprehension was such a design; and how contrary to the natural result of things was such an event! Most remarkably therefore was that observation of the psalmist verified; His ways are in the sea, and his paths in the great waters, and his footsteps are not known *.

Conversing on such agreeable subjects, they were carried, by the stream, through no less agreeable scenes. They pass by hills clothed with hanging woods, and and woods arrayed in varying green. Here, excluded from a sight of the outstretched plains, they are entertained with a group of unsubstantial images, and the wonders of a mimic creation.------Another sun shines, but stript of his blazing beams, in the watery concave: while clouds sail along the downward skies, and sometimes disclose, sometimes draw a veil over, the radiant orb. Trees, with their inverted tops, either flourish in the fair serene below; or else paint, with a pleasing delusion, the pellucid flood. Even the mountains are there, but in a headlong posture; and, notwithstanding their prodigious bulk, they quiver in this floating mirror, like the poplar-leaves which adorn their sides.

Soon as the boat advances, and disturbs the placid surface; the waves pushed hastily to the bank, bear off, in broken fragments, the liquid landscape. The spreading circles seemed to prophesy, as they rolled; and pronounced the pleasures of this present state,—the pomp of power, the charm of beauty, and the echo of fame; —pronounced them transient, as their speedy passage; empty, as their unreal freight.—Seemed to prophesy? It was more. Imagination heard them utter, as they ran,

Thus pass the shadowy scenes of life away!

Emerging from this fluid alley, they dart amidst the level of a spacious meadow. The eye, lately immured, though in pleasurable confinement, now expands her delighted view, into a space almost boundless, and amidst objects little short of innumerable. Transported for a while, at the numberless variety of beauteous images, poured in a sweet confusion all around, she hardly knows where to fix, or which to pursue. Recovering, at length, from the pleasing perplexity, she glances, quick and instantaneous, across all the intermediate plain, and marks the distant mountains: how cliffs climb over cliffs, till the huge ridges gain upon the sky; how their diminished tops are dressed in blue, or wrapped in clouds; while all their leafy structures, and all their fleecy tenants, are lost in air.

Soon she quits these aereal summits, and ranges the russet heath: here shagged with brakes, or tufted with rushes; there interspersed with straggling thickets, or solitary trees; which seem, like disaffected partisans, to shun each other's shade.—A spire, placed in a remote valley, peeps over the hills. Sense is surprised at the amusive appearance; is ready to suspect, that the column rises, like some inchanted edifice, from the rifted earth. But reason looks upon it, as the earnest of a hidden vale, and the sure indication of an adjacent town; performing in this respect, much the same office to the eye, as faith executes with regard to the soul, when it is the evidence of things not seen †.

Next, she roves, with increasing pleasure, over spacious tracts of fertile glebe, and cultured fields; where cattle of every graceful form, and every valuable quality, crop the tender herb, or drink the crystal rills.—— Anon, she dwells with the utmost complacency, on towns of opulence and splendor; which spread the sacred dome, and lift the social roof: Towns, no longer surrounded with the stern forbidding majesty of unpassable entrenchments, and impregnable ramparts; but encircled with the delicate, the inviting appendages of gardens and orchards: those, decked with all the soft graces of art and elegance; these, blushing and pregnant with the more substantial treasures of fruitful nature.—Wreaths of ascending smoke, intermingled with turrets and lofty pinnacles, seem to contend which shall get farthest from the earth, and neareſt to the skies. Happy for the inhabitants! if such was the habitual tendency of their desires *; if no other contention was known in their streets.

Villas, elegant and magnificent, seated in the centre of an ample park, or removed to the extremity of a lengthened lawn; not far from a beautiful reservoir of standing waters, or the more salutary lapse of a limpid stream. ——Villages, clad in homely thatch, and lodged in the bosom of clustering trees. Rustics, singing at their works; shepherds, tuning their pipes, as they tend their flocks; travellers, pursuing each his respective way, in easy and joyous security.

How pleasing, said Aspasio, is our situation! How delightful is the aspect of all things! One would almost imagine, that nothing could exceed it, and that nothing can increase it. Yet there is a method of increasing even this copious delight, and of heightening even this exquisite pleasure.——Let me desire my friend, answered Theron, to explain his remark; and not only to explain, but to exemplify.——If we view, resumed Aspasio, our own prosperous, and compare it with the afflicted condition of others, the method I propose, will be reduced to practice. Such a dark and mournful contrast must throw additional brightness, even upon the brightest scene.

Above, the skies smile with serenity; below, the fields look gay with plenty; all around, the sportive gales,

Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense
Native perfumes; and whisper, whence they stole
Those balmy spoils †.

With us all circumstances are as easy, as the wafture of the boat; as smooth, as the flow of the stream. ——But let us not forget these grievous calamities, which befal our brethren, in some remote tracts of the earth, or distant parts of the ocean. How many sailors are struggling, vainly struggling, with all the fury of rending winds, and dashing waves! while their vessel, flung to and fro, by tempestuous billows, is

* Psal. lxxvii. 19.

† Heb. xi. 1.

* This comparison, I think, cannot appear vulgar to those persons, who have read, and who reverence, the book of Canticles. There, the church, ascending continually in devout affections, to her beloved JESUS, and to her heavenly home, is characterized by this very similitude: Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness like pillars of smoke? Cant. iii. 6.——Though it must be confessed, that this similitude, like many of the illustrations used in scripture, might have a sort of local propriety; peculiar to the people of that age, country, and religion. It might probably refer to those columns of smoke, which arose from the burnt-offering, or fumed from the altar of incense. If so, this circumstance must give a solemnity and dignity to the idea, of which many readers are not at all aware, and which indeed no modern reader can fully conceive.

May I take leave to mention another comparison of this kind? The enemies of the LORD shall consume as the fat of lambs; yea, even as the smoke shall they consume away, Psal. xxxvii. 20.—As the fat of lambs, is not to us a striking representation. But to those who attended the altar, who saw the unctuous and most combustible parts of the victim blazing in the sacred fire, it presented a very lively image: which was still more apposite and significant, if this psalm was sung, while the sacrifice was burning.—None, I believe, in such a case, could forbear either observing or admiring the beautiful gradation: "They shall perish as yonder fat, which is so "easily set on fire; and, when once in a flame, is so speedily "consumed. Nay, they shall be as the smoke, which is still more "transient; whose light unsubstantial wreaths but just make "their appearance to the eye; and, in a moment, vanish into "empty air."

† Milton, book IV.

mounted into the clouds, or plunged in the abyſs. Poſſibly, the miſerable crew hear their knell ſounded in the ſhattered maſt, and ſee deſtruction entering at the burſting planks. Perhaps, this very moment, they pour the laſt, diſmal, dying ſhriek; and ſink, irrecoverably ſink, in the all-overwhelming ſurge.——The traveller, in Africa's barren waſtes, pale even amidſt thoſe glowing regions, pale with prodigious conſternation, ſees ſudden and ſurpriſing mountains riſe; ſees the ſultry deſert, aſcending the ſky, and ſweeping before the whirlwind. What can he do? whither fly? how eſcape the approaching ruin? Alas! while he attempts to rally his thoughts, attempts to deviſe ſome feeble expedient, he is overtaken by the choking ſtorm, and ſuffocated amidſt the ſandy inundation. The driving heaps are, now his executioner; as the drifted heaps will, ſoon, be his tomb.

While we poſſeſs the valuable privileges, and taſte the delicious ſweets of liberty, how many partakers of our common nature are condemned to perpetual exile, or chained to the oar for life? How many are immured in the gloom of dungeons, or buried in the caverns of the mines, never to behold the all-enlivening ſun again!—While reſpect waits upon our perſons, and reputation attends our characters; are there not ſome unhappy creatures, led forth by the hand of vindictive juſtice, to be ſpectacles of horror, and monuments of vengeance? ſentenced, for their enormous crimes, to be broke limb by limb on the wheel, or to be impaled alive on the lingering ſtake. To theſe, the ſtrangling cord, or the deadly ſtab, would be a moſt welcome favour. But they muſt feel a thouſand deaths, in undergoing one. And this, too probably, is but the beginning of their ſorrows; will not only conſign them over to infinitely more terrible torment.

While eaſe and pleaſure, in ſweet conjunction, ſmooth our paths, and ſoften our couch; how many are toſſing on the fever's fiery bed, or toiling along affliction's thorny road! Some under the excruciating, but neceſſary operations of ſurgery: their bodies ripped open, with a dreadful inciſion, to ſearch for the torturing ſtone; or their limbs lopt off by the bloody knife, to prevent the mortification's fatal ſpread. Some emaciated by pining ſickneſs, are deprived of all their animal vigour; and transformed into ſpectres, even before their diſſolution *. Theſe are ready to adopt the complaint of the pſalmiſt; I am withered like graſs: my bones are burnt up, as it were a firebrand; I go hence like the ſhadow that departeth. While health, that ſtaple bleſſing; which gives every other entertainment its flavour and its beauty; adds the gloſs to all we ſee, and the gout to all we taſte; health plays at our hearts; dances in our ſpirits; and mantles in our cheeks, as the generous champaign lately ſparkled in our glaſs.

We are bleſſed with a calm poſſeſſion of ourſelves; with tranquillity in our conſciences, and an habitual harmony in our temper. Whereas many, in the doleful cells of lunacy, are gnaſhing their teeth or wringing their hands; rending the air with volleys of horrid execrations, or burdening it with peals of diſconſolate ſighs. And O! what multitudes, even amidſt courts and palaces, are held in ſplendid vaſſalage, by their own domineering paſſions, or the vanities of a bewitching world! Far leſs innocently, far more deplorably diſordered †, than the fettered madman, they are gnawed by the envenomed tooth of envy; they are agitated by the wild ſallies of ambition; or feel the malignant ulcer of jealouſy, rankling in their breaſts. In ſome, avarice, like a ravening harpy, gripes. In ſome, revenge, like an implacable fury, rages. While others are goaded by lordly and imperious luſts, through the loathſome ſewers of impure delight; and left, at laſt, in thoſe hated and execrable dens, where remorſe rears her ſnaky creſt, and infamy ſharpens her hiſſing tongue. —— ——

Why this long pauſe! replied Theron. Your obſervations are as uſeful, as they are juſt. We ſhould all be acquainted, at leaſt in ſpeculation acquainted with grief; and ſend our thoughts, if not our feet, to viſit the abodes of ſorrow:—that, in this ſchool, we may learn a ſympathizing pity for our diſtreſſed fellow creatures; and ſee, in this glaſs, our inexpreſſible obligations to the diſtinguiſhing goodneſs of Providence; which has crowned our table with abundance, and repleniſhed our cup with delicacies; permitting neither penury to ſtint the draught, nor adverſity to mingle her gall.—Go on, I muſt entreat you, with your deſcription of comparative felicity. We have a large circuit ſtill to make, before we arrive at our intended port. And I could wiſh, that your diſcourſe might keep pace with the current.

Since you approve the ſubject, anſwered Aſpaſio, I will purſue it a little farther.—We, the inhabitants of this favoured iſle, breathe an air of the moſt agreeable temperature, and moſt wholeſome qualities. But how many nations languiſh under brazen ſkies, vaulted as it were with fire? They welter amidſt thoſe furnaces of the ſun, till their "viſage is burnt, and black as a coal*." ——What is far more diſaſtrous, beds of ſulphur and combuſtible materials lie in ſubterraneous anguiſh, ready to ſpring the irreſiſtible mine; ere long,—perhaps, on ſome day of univerſal feſtivity †, or in ſome night of deep repoſe,—to be touched by heaven's avenging hand.—Then with what outrageous violence will they burſt! rock the foundations of nature! wrench open the ponderous jaws of earth! and ſwallow up aſtoniſhed cities, in the dark, tremendous, cloſing chaſm!

Theſe earthquakes, it may be, both proceed and portend, the peſtilence that walketh in darkneſs, and the ſickneſs that deſtroyeth at noon-day ‡. They are, at once, a fearful omen, and a ruinous blow. The ſtagnating atmoſphere, rank with malignant vapours, becomes a ſource of deadly infection; or, replete with poiſonous animalcules, is one vaſt incumbent cloud of living bane. If the active gales ariſe, they ariſe only to ſtir the ſeeds of diſeaſe, and diffuſe the

* A very little excurſion of thought will eaſily convince the reader, that there is no period of time, in which ſome of theſe calamities do not befal our fellow-creatures, in one part of the world or another.

† Give me any plague, ſays an apocryphal writer, but the plague of the heart, Ecclus xxv. 13. Upon which judicious and weighty apophthegm, Maſſiniſſa's ſpeech in Mr Thomſon's Sophoniſba, is a very pertinent and affecting paraphraſe.

O! ſave me from the tumult of the ſoul!
From the wild beaſt within!—For circling ſands,
When the ſwift whirlwind whelms them o'er the lands;
The roaring deeps, that to the clouds ariſe,
While thwarting thick the mingled lightning flies;
The monſter-brood, to which this land gives birth,
The blazing city, and the gaping earth;
All deaths, all tortures in one pang combin'd,
Are gentle to the tempeſt of the mind.

* Lam. iv. 8.

† There is a remarkable paſſage in Pſal. lviii. 9. which ſeems to denote ſome ſuch unexpected, but ſpeedy and inevitable doom. The ſenſe is darkened, not a little, by the verſion admitted into our liturgy. I believe, the true tranſlation may be ſeen in the following Italics, and the true meaning learned from the interwoven paraphraſe.—Speedily, or before your pots can perceive the warmth of blazing thorns, ſhall HE that ruleth over all, ſweep away the wicked; ſweep him away by a ſtroke of righteous indignation, as by a fierce and mighty tempeſt: ſo that, even from the fulneſs of his ſufficiency, and the height of his proſperity, he ſhall be plunged into utter deſtruction.—The word חי, which is very unhappily rendered raw, ſignifies a ſtate of proſperity or pleaſureable enjoyment. 1 Sam. xxv. 6.—The whole verſe, in a gradation of ſtriking images, gives us a moſt awful diſplay of divine vengeance: vengeance quite ſudden; utterly irreſiſtable; and overtaking the ſecure ſinner, amidſt all the careſſes of, what the world calls, fortune.

‡ Pſal. xci. 6.

fatal

fatal contagion far and near.——Unhappy people! The plague, that ſevere miniſter of divine indignation, fixes her head-quarters in their blaſted provinces; and ſends death abroad, on his pale horſe *, to empty their houſes, depopulate their towns, and croud their graves.

Our iſland is ſeldom viſited with either of theſe dreadful judgments; and has never ſuſtained any very conſiderable calamity from the former. However, let us not be preſumptuouſly ſecure. We have, not long ago, received an awful warning. The rod has been ſhaken, or rather the ſword has been brandiſhed, over our territories.—Who can forget the general conſternation, which ſeized our metropolis, on occaſion of the late earthquake? And not without reaſon. For, of all divine viſitations, this is the moſt terribly vindictive. The whirlwind is ſlow in its progreſs; war is gentle in its aſſaults; even the raging peſtilence is a mild rebuke; compared with the inevitable, the all-overwhelming fury of an earthquake.—When it begins, it alſo makes an end †; puts a period, in a few minutes, to the work of ages, ruins all, without diſtinction; and there is no defence from the deſtructive ſtroke.

Should almighty vengeance ſtir up again thoſe fierce ſubterranean commotions; ſhould the moſt high GOD bid ſtrong convulſions tear the bowels of nature, and make the foundations of the world tremble like a leaf: what, O ye careleſs ones ‡, what will you do? whither will you fly?—See! the pavement ſinks under your feet.—Your houſes are tottering over your heads. The ground, on every ſide, cracks and opens like a gaping grave; or heaves and ſwells like a rolling ſea. A noiſe of craſhing ‖ is heard from without, occaſioned by the rending ſtreets, and falling ſtructures. Thunders, infernal thunders §, bellow from beneath; mingled with deſpairing ſhrieks, and dying groans from thoſe wretched creatures, who are jammed between the cloſing earth, or going down alive into the horrible pit ¶.——Where now will you fly? To your ſtrong towers? They are ſhattered in pieces.——To the ſtronger rocks? They are thrown out of their place.——To the open fields? They are a frightful gulf, yawning to devour you.——Where-ever you fly; in the wildneſs of your diſtraction, where-ever you ſeek for ſhelter; it ſhall be, as if a man fled from a lion, and a bear met him; or went into the houſe, and leaned his hand upon the wall, and a ſerpent bit him *.

Yet there is one place of refuge, which will prove an inviolable ſanctuary, and a perfect ſecurity. I mean, the great, the gracious, the adorable REDEEMER's righteouſneſs. Hither let us betake ourſelves. Now, before the day of deſolation cometh, let us betake ourſelves to this ſtrong-hold. Then ſhall we have no reaſon to fear, though the earth be moved, and though the hills be carried into the midſt of the ſea. For thus ſaith GOD, the omnipotent and faithful GOD; The ſun and the moon ſhall be darkened, and the ſtars ſhall withdraw their ſhining.——The LORD alſo ſhall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jeruſalem. The heavens and the earth ſhall ſhake; but the LORD JESUS CHRIST will be the hope of his people, and the ſtrength of the children of Iſrael †.——Or, if the true believer is involved in the ſame undiſtinguiſhed ruin with the ungodly; even this ſhall turn to his gain. It ſhall exempt him from the lingering pains, and the melancholy ſolemnities of a dying bed. Like Elijah's fiery chariot, it ſhall ſpeedily waft his ſoul to the boſom of his SAVIOUR. While the hideous cavern, that whelms his body in the centre, ſhall be its chamber of reſt, till the beloved BRIDEGROOM comes, and the day of reſurrection dawns.

We lift up our eyes, and behold the radiant colours, which fluſh the forehead of the morning: we turn, and gaze upon the no leſs beautiful tinges, which impurple the cheek of evening. We throw around our view, and are delighted with numberleſs forms of fertility, which both decorate and enrich our plains.—Whereas, other countries are over-run with immenſe ſwarms of locuſts: which intercept, where-ever they fly, the fair face of day; and deſtroy, where-ever they alight, the green treaſures of the ground.

Ah! what avails it, that the laborious hind ſows his acres, or the ſkilful huſbandman prunes his vineyard? that ſpring, with her prolific moiſture, ſwells the bud; or, with her delicate pencil, paints the bloſſom? Nor grain, nor fruit, can hope for maturity, while theſe rapacious and baleful creatures infeſt the neighbourhood.——They ravage the gardens they ſtrip the trees, and ſhave the meadows. Scarce a ſingle leaf remains on the boughs, or ſo much as a ſingle ſtalk in the furrows. A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth: the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a deſolate wilderneſs; yea, and nothing can eſcape them ‡.

Now, let the dreadful artillery roar from all its iron throats, and diſgorge the heavieſt glut of mortal hail. Now, ye ſons of ſlaughter, men ſkilful to deſtroy ‖, now hurl the ſulphureous globes, which kindle into a hurricane of fire, and burſt in ragged inſtruments of ruin.——To no purpoſe. The linked thunderbolts are

---

* Rev. vi. 8. † 1 Sam. iii. 12.

‡ Iſ. xxxii. 11. ‖ Zeph. i. 10.

§ Before the overthrow of Catania by an earthquake, a noiſe was heard, vaſt and horrid, as if all the artillery in the world was diſcharged at once.

¶ Very memorable, and equally tremendous, is the account of the earthquake, that viſited Sicily, in the year 1693.—It ſhook the whole iſland. The miſchief it cauſed, is amazing. Fifty-four cities and towns, beſide an incredible number of villages, were either demoliſhed, or greatly damaged. Catania, one of the moſt famous and flouriſhing cities in the kingdom, was entirely deſtroyed. Of 18,914 inhabitants, 18,000 periſhed.

Another earthquake almoſt as dreadful, and in the ſame year, ſpread deſolation through the colony of Jamaica. In two minutes time, it ſhook down, and laid under water, nine tenths of the town of Port-Royal. In leſs than a minute, three quarters of the houſes, and the ground they ſtood on, together with the inhabitants, were quite ſunk; and the little part left behind, was no better than heaps of rubbiſh.—The ſhake was ſo violent, that it threw people down upon their knees, or their faces, as they were running about for ſhelter. The ground heaved and ſwelled, like a rolling ſea; and ſeveral houſes, ſtill ſtanding, were ſhuffled ſome yards out of their places. The earth would crack and yawn; would open and ſhut, quick and faſt. Of which horrid openings, two or three hundred might be ſeen at once. In ſome whereof, the people went down, and were ſeen no more. In ſome they deſcended, and roſe again in other ſtreets, or in the middle of the harbour. Some ſwiftly cloſing, ſeized the miſerable creatures, and preſſed them to death; leaving their heads or half their bodies above ground, to be a ſpectacle of terror, and a prey to dogs. Out of others would iſſue whole rivers of water, ſpouted to a great height in the air, and threatening a deluge to that part, which the earthquake ſpared.—Scarce a planting-houſe or ſugar-work was left ſtanding in all the iſland. Two thouſand lives were loſt, and a thouſand acres of land ſunk. The whole was attended with frightful noiſes, with brimſtone blaſts, and offenſive ſmells. The noiſome vapours belched forth, corrupted the air, and brought on a general ſickneſs; which ſwept away more than three thouſand of thoſe who eſcaped the fury of the earthquake. See CHAMB. Dict. on the word earthquake.

* Amos v. 19. † Joel iii. 15, 16.

‡ A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth, Joel ii 3. This is one of thoſe bold and expreſſive metaphors, in which the Hebrew language delights, and by which it is eminently diſtinguiſhed. It ſignifies a total devaſtation, of the vegetable produce; ſuch as muſt enſue, if a raging and reſiſtleſs fire attended the progreſs of theſe pernicious animals; burning with ſuch vehement impetuoſity, that none could quench it; ſpreading ſuch extenſive havock, that nothing could eſcape it.

‖ Ezek. xxi. 31.

turned

turned into ſtubble, the burſting bombs are accounted as ſtraw. Theſe armies of the air laugh at all the formidable preparations of war; and when they fall on the ſword, they ſhall not be wounded *.——Surpriſing and awful deſtination of the everlaſting GOD! at once, to ſtain the pride, and chaſtiſe the guilt of man! Theſe are a deſpicable and puny race; clad in no coat of mail, but cruſhed by the ſlighteſt touch. They wear neither ſword, nor ſcymitar, nor any offenſive weapon. Yet, in ſpite of oppoſing legions, they carry on their depredations, and puſh their conqueſts. Terror marches in their front, and famine brings up the rear. They ſpread univerſal devaſtation, as they advance; and frequently give the ſignal for the peſtilence to follow. Potent armies loſe their hands, and haughty tyrants tremble for their dominions.

O! that the natives of Great Britain would bethink themſelves! would break off their ſins by righteouſneſs, and their iniquities by cheriſhing the influences of the divine SPIRIT! leſt this overflowing ſcourge †, under which ſome neighbouring kingdoms have ſeverely ſmarted, ſhould be commiſſioned to viſit our borders, and avenge the quarrel of its MAKER's honour.——Diſtant as thoſe countleſs legions are, with interpoſing ſeas between; yet, if GOD lift up a ſtandard from far, or but hiſs ‡ unto them from the ends of the earth they come with ſpeed ſwiftly.——Who will convey this wiſh to the ears, who will tranſmit it to the hearts of my countrymen? that our land may always appear, as it does at preſent, like the darling of Providence; may always reſound with the voice of joy, and be filled with the fruits of plenty; may always wear the robe of beauty, and be adorned with the ſmile of peace.

How great are the advantages of peace! ſaid Theron. Peace at her leiſure plans, and leads out induſtry to execute, all the noble and commodious improvements, which we behold on every ſide. Peace ſets the mark of property on our poſſeſſions, and bids juſtice guarantee them to our enjoyment. Peace ſpreads over us the banner of the laws, while we taſte, free from outrage, and ſecure from injury, the milk and honey of our honeſt toil *.—Amidſt the tumultuous confuſions of war, who could have a heart to contrive, or a hand to accompliſh, any ſuch works of dignity and uſe? In thoſe days of darkneſs and diſtraction, how languid to the ſight are all the dewy landſcapes of ſpring? How inſipid to the taſte are all the delicious flavours of autumn?—When the nation is over-run with armies, and embroiled in ſlaughter, a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and ſorrow of mind †, are the diſmal diſtinction of the times. Inſtead of a calm acquieſcence in our portion, our very life hangs in continual ſuſpenſe.

But what are all the benefits of external peace, though diſplayed in the faireſt light, and enlivened by the ſtrongeſt contraſts.——What are they all, compared with the bleſſings of the goſpel? by which ſinners may have peace with GOD through JESUS CHRIST our LORD.

This, reſumed Aſpaſio, ſuggeſts a freſh inſtance of happineſs, which others want, and we poſſeſs; an inſtance never to be omitted in our catalogue of peculiar mercies; I might add, never to be forgotten, by any Chriſtian, on any occaſion.——While many kingdoms of the earth are ignorant of the true GOD, and know neither the principles of piety, nor the paths of felicity; the day-ſpring from on high hath viſited us, to give the knowledge of ſalvation, and to guide our feet into the way of peace.——While millions of rebellious angels, caſt from their native thrones, are reſerved in chains of darkneſs, unto the judgment of the great day; we, though rebellious and apoſtate ſinners of mankind, are delivered from the wrath to come. The holy JESUS (bleſſed be his redeeming goodneſs!) has endured the croſs, and deſpiſed the ſhame, on purpoſe to reſcue us from thoſe doleful and ignominious dungeons; where the priſoners of almighty vengeance

——Converſe with groans,
Unreſpited, unpitied, unrepriev'd,
Ages of hopeleſs end ‡.

Yes, my dear Theron; let me repeat your own important words; "What are all the benefits of exter"nal peace, though diſplayed in the faireſt light, and "enlivened by the ſtrongeſt contraſts;—what are they
"all, compared with the bleſſings of the goſpel?"——This brings the olive-branch from heaven, and glad tidings of reconciliation with our offended GOD.——This compoſes the tumult of the mind; diſarms the warring paſſions; and regulates the extravagant deſires. This introduces ſuch an integrity of heart, and benevolence of temper, as conſtitute the health of the ſoul.

* The prophet Joel, foretelling the plague of locuſts, gives, under the image of an embattled hoſt, a moſt alarming diſplay of their terrible appearance; their impetuous progreſs; the horrible dread they raiſe, as they advance; and the irreparable miſchief they leave, as they depart; adding, among other amazing circumſtances, When they fall upon the ſword, they ſhall not be wounded. Which implies, I apprehend, that no method of ſlaughter ſhould prove deſtructive to their troops; or, that every expedient, contrived for their ſuppreſſion, ſhould be utterly baffled: being, through their immenſe numbers, as invincible, as if every one was abſolutely invulnerable. For, though millions and millions ſhould periſh by the weapons of war; even ſuch a blow, in reference to their whole collective body, ſhould ſcarce be perceived as a loſs, ſcarce be felt as a wound; neither diminiſhing their ſtrength, nor retarding their march, Joel ii. 8.

† Overflowing ſcourge, Iſ. xxviii. 15. It is the property of a ſcourge to laſh, of a river to overflow. The ſacred writer (by an elegant παρονομασια, which beautifies the original, but cannot be preſerved in the tranſlation) has connected theſe different ideas and different effects. The vindictive viſitation, with which he threatens the diſobedient Jews, ſhall pierce deep as a ſcourge, and ſpread wide as an inundation. They ſhall feel it to their very ſouls; and it ſhall involve the whole nation in miſery, anguiſh, and ruin.

There ſeems to be ſuch a form of expreſſion in the ſervice of our church; when we pray, in behalf of our fellow-Chriſtians; "Pour "upon them the continual dew of thy bleſſing;" that which may be refreſhing and ſalulary as the dew, yet copious and abundant as the ſhower.

‡ Hiſs unto them, Iſ. v. 26. With great ſignificancy, and peculiar grandeur, the prophet applies this expreſſion to the LORD GOD of hoſts, influencing the moſt powerful armies; q. d. "They come, without a moment's delay, and from the remoteſt "regions of the earth, to execute all his pleaſure. Formidable and "innumerable as they are, they come,—I ſay not, upon his re"peated injunctions, or at his ſtrict command,—but at the firſt,
"the very ſmalleſt intimation of his will;"—ſuch as the ſhepherds uſed to their flocks; ſuch as the bee-men, of old, to their ſwarms; or ſuch as we, in theſe days, to ſome of our domeſtic animals.—— The Hebrew שרק I would not tranſlate, at his whiſtle; becauſe this phraſe, in our language, creates a vulgar ſound, and conveys a low idea: but ſuch is the import of the original; which denotes all that unconcerned eaſe of action, without any of the offenſive familiarity of diction.

* Pax optima rerum, ſays the Latin poet.—But the Orientals, I think, diſcover the moſt ſuperlative eſteem for this bleſſing, by making it the conſtant form of their ſalutations, and the ſubject of their moſt cordial wiſhes for their friends; PEACE BE UNTO THEE.—In this ſhort ſentence, they ſeem to have compriſed a whole volume of mercies; meaning, by their ſingle שלום all that the Greeks expreſſed by their χαιρειν, υγιαινειν, ευπραττειν. i. e. a confluence of that joy of mind, that health of body, that proſperity of outward circumſtances, which complete the happineſs of mankind.

We have a fine deſcription of peace, and its various bleſſings, 1 Maccab. xiv. 8. 9, &c. The picture is very exact, though perfectly artleſs. Nothing ſhould hinder me from tranſcribing the paſſage, but a fear of being too diffuſive in my notes. Leſt the reader, who expects a treat, ſhould complain of a glut; or have reaſon to object, that the ſide-board is more copiouſly furniſhed than the table.

† Deut. xxviii. 65. ‡ MILTON.

ſoul. This ſpreads ſuch an uniform beauty of holineſs through the conduct, as is far more amiable than the moſt engaging forms of material nature.

O! that thou wouldſt bow the heavens! that thou wouldſt come down, celeſtial VISITANT; and make thy ſtated, thy favourite abode in our iſle! that every breaſt may be animated with thy power; and every community, every individual, may wear thy reſplendent badge!—Then ſhall it be the leaſt ingredient of our public felicity, that the ſword of ſlaughter is beaten into a plough-ſhare, and the once bloody ſpear bent into a pruning-hook. It ſhall be the loweſt upon the liſt of our common bleſſings, that violence is no more heard in our land, waſting and deſtruction within our borders. Our very officers will be peace, and our exactors * righteouſneſs. We ſhall call (and the event will correſpond with the name) our walls ſalvation, and our gates praiſe. Then ſhall every harp be taken down from the willows, and every voice burſt into a ſong.——"In other climes"——will be the general acclamation—

"In other climes, let myriads of curious inſects ſpin "the delicate thread, which ſoftens into velvet, ſtiffens "into brocade, or flows in gloſſy ſattin; which reflects "a lovelier glow on the cheek of beauty, and renders "royalty itſelf more majeſtic. We are preſented with "infinitely-finer robes, in the imputed righteouſneſs of "our REDEEMER, and the inherent ſanctification of "his SPIRIT; which beautify the very ſoul, and pre"pare it for the illuſtrious aſſembly—of ſaints in light, "—of angels in glory.

"Let eaſtern rocks ſparkle with diamonds, and give "birth to gems of every dazzling tincture. We have, "hid in the field of our ſcriptures, the Pearl of great "price; the white and precious ſtone † of perfect abſo"lution; a diadem, which will ſhine with undiminiſhed "luſtre, when all the brilliant wonders of the mine are "faded, extinguiſhed, loſt.

"Let richer ſoils nouriſh the nobleſt plants, and "warmer ſuns concoct their exquiſite juices; the lemon, "pleaſingly poignant; the citron, more mildly deli"cious; or that pride of vegetable life, and compen"dium of all the blandiſhments of taſte, the pine-apple. "We enjoy far more exalted dainties, in having acceſs "to the Tree of life, whoſe leaves are for the healing of the "nations ‡; whoſe boughs are repleniſhed with a never"failing abundance of heavenly fruits; and the nutri"ment they diſpenſe, is bliſs and immortality.

"Let Iberian vines ſwell the tranſlucent cluſter, and "burſt into a flood of generous wine: let the Tuſcan "olive extract the fatneſs of the earth, and melt into a "ſoft mellifluous ſtream. We ſhall neither envy, nor "covet theſe inferior gifts, ſo long as we may draw "water out of the wells of ſalvation: ſo long as we may "receive that unction from the HOLY ONE ‖, thoſe in"fluences of the COMFORTER, which not only make "a chearful countenance, but gladden the very heart: "imparting ſuch a refined ſatisfaction, as the whole "world cannot give; ſuch a permanent ſatisfaction, as no "calamities can take away.

"Let Ethiopian mountains be ribbed with marble, and "Peruvian mines embowelled with gold. We want "neither the impenetrable quarry, nor the glittering "ore; having, in our adored MESSIAH, a ſure foun"dation for all our eternal hopes, and an inexhauſtible "fund of the divineſt riches.

"Be it ſo, that our Iſis is but a creeping drop; and "the Thames itſelf no more than a ſcanty rivulet; com"pared with the magnificent ſweep of the Ganges, or "the ſtupendous amplitude of Rio de la Plata *. The "wretched natives, even on the banks of thoſe ſtately "rivers, are at a diſtance from all the ſprings of true "conſolation. Whereas we have a fountain, we have "a river, that iſſues from the ocean of eternal love. "With incomparable dignity, and with equal propriety, "it is ſtyled the river of life †. It viſits the houſe of the "mourner, and revives the ſpirit of the ſorrowful. It "makes glad the city, and makes happy the ſervants of "our GOD. It quickens even the dead; and every "human creature, that drinks of its water, lives for "ever.

"Let Aſiatic iſlands boaſt their mountains of myrrh, "and hills of frankincenſe; let Arabian groves, with a "ſuperior liberality, diſtil their healing gums; and "ripen, for rigorous operation, their vital drugs. We "have a more ſovereign remedy, than their moſt power"ful reſtoratives, in the great MEDIATOR's atoning "blood. We have a more refreſhing banquet, than all "their mingled ſweets, in commemorating his paſſion, "and participating his merits.

"In ſhort, we have an equivalent, far more than an "equivalent, for all thoſe choice productions, which "bloom in the gardens, or baſk in the orchards of the "ſun. We have a goſpel, rich in precious privileges, "and abounding with ineſtimable promiſes: we have a "SAVIOUR, full of forgiving goodneſs, and liberal of re"newing grace. At whoſe auſpicious approach, foun"tains ſpout amidſt the burning deſert; under whoſe "welcome footſteps, the ſandy waſte ſmiles with her"bage; and beneath his potent touch, the wilderneſs "buds and bloſſoms as a roſe ‡. Or, to ſpeak more "plainly, the deſolate and barren ſoul brings forth "thoſe fruits of the SPIRIT, which are infinitely more "ornamental than the ſilken gems of ſpring; in"finitely more beneficial than the ſalubrious ſtores of "autumn.

"We have a SAVIOUR,——tell it out among the "Heathen, that all the nations on earth may partake "of the gift, and join in the ſong,——a SAVIOUR "we have, whoſe radiant eye brightens the gloomy "paths of affliction; whoſe efficacious bleſſing makes "all things work together for the good ‖ of his people. "Death, gilded by his propitious ſmile, even death "itſelf looks gay. Nor is the grave under his be"nign adminiſtration, any longer a den of deſtruc"tion; but a ſhort and ſhady avenue to thoſe im"mortal manſions; whoſe foundations are laid with "ſapphires; whoſe windows are of agate; the gates

* If. lx. 17. Officers and exactors ſignify perſons veſted with public authority; who have it in their power to rule with rigour. But theſe, inſtead of abuſing their power, ſhall conduct the adminiſtration with all poſſible equity and gentleneſs; with a parental tenderneſs, rather than a magiſterial auſterity. So that, though the title and office of an exactor may remain; nothing of the domineering inſolence, or oppreſſive ſeverity, ſhall continue.—The prophet, who always delivers his ſentiments with the utmoſt emphaſis, ſays, They ſhall be, not barely peaceable and righteous, but poſſeſſed of theſe qualities in the higheſt degree. Or, which implies more, than any other words can expreſs, they ſhall be peace and righteouſneſs itſelf.—The ſame beautiful figure is uſed in the next clauſe, which deſcribes the inviolable ſecurity of the city, together with the univerſal both joy and piety of the inhabitants.

* This river is near two hundred miles broad, where it diſcharges itſelf into the ſea. It pours ſuch an immenſe quantity of the liquid element into the Atlantic ocean, that freſh water may be taken up for the ſpace of many a league. It continues thus amazingly vaſt through a courſe of ſix hundred miles; when it divides into two mighty branches, the Parana and the Paraguay, which, having run in ſeparate channels, ſeveral thouſand miles along the country, unite at laſt; and form, by their conflux, this magnificent and ſpacious ſtream: which is ſuppoſed to be the very largeſt in the world.—To conceive a proper idea of its prodigious dimenſions, we may imagine a current of waters, taking its riſe beyond Jeruſalem; and, after having received all the rivers of Europe into its capacious bed, making its entry on the Britiſh ocean, by a mouth extended from Dover to Briſtol.

† Rev. iii. 17. ‡ Rev. xxii. 2. ‖ 1 John ii. 20. † Rev. xxii. 1. ‡ If. xxxv. 1. ‖ Rom. viii. 28.

"of carbuncle; and all the borders of pleaſant ſtones *."

Pardon my rhapſody, dear Theron. Your own remark, added to the grand and lovely views, have warmed, have animated, have almoſt tranſported me.——Theron anſwered not a word; but ſeemed fixed in thought.——While he is indulging his contemplation, we may juſt obſerve ſome other peculiarities of the proſpect.

Here and there, a loneſome cottage ſcarcely lifts its humble head. No pompous ſwell of projecting ſteps ſurrounds the door; no appendant wings of inferior offices ſkirt the edifice; no ſtately hall, ſlabbed with marble, and roofed with ſculpture, receives the gazing ſtranger. But young-eyed Health, and white-robed Innocence, with ſweet-featured Contentment, adorn the habitation. While Virtue lends her graces, and Religion communicates her honours, to dignify the abode; rendering the blameleſs hut ſuperior, in real majeſty, to a diſſolute court.

At ſome diſtance, appear the hoary remains of an ancient monaſtery. Sunk beneath the weight of revolving years, the once venerable fabric is levelled with the duſt. The lofty and ornamented temple lies rudely overgrown with moſs, or ſtill more ignobly covered with weeds. The walls, where ſainted imagery ſtood, or idolized painting ſhone, are claſped with twining ivy, or ſhagged with horrid thorn.——Through iſles, that once echoed to the chantor's voice, mingled with the organ's majeſtic ſound, the hollow winds roar, and the daſhing ſtorm drives. Where are, now, the ſilent cells, the vocal choirs, the duſky groves, in which the romantic ſaints prolonged their lonely vigils, by the midnight-taper; or poured their united prayers, before the lark had wakened the morn, or ſtrolled, in ever-muſing melancholy, along the moon-like glade.—Surely, thoſe mouldering fragments now teach, (and with a much better grace, with a much ſtronger emphaſis) what formerly their unſocial and gloomy reſidentiaries profeſſed. They teach the vanity of the world, and the tranſitory duration of all that is moſt ſtable, in this region of ſhadows.

Behold, on yonder eminence, the rueful memorials of a magnificent caſtle. All diſmantled, and quite demoliſhed; it gives a ſhading of ſolemnity to the more lively parts of nature's picture; and attempers the rural delight, with ſome touches of alarming dread.—War, deſtructive war, has ſnatched the ſithe from the hand of time, and hurried on the ſteps of deſtiny. Thoſe broken columns, and battered walls; thoſe proſtrate towers, and battlements daſhed to the ground, carry evident marks of an immature downfal. They were built for ages, and for ages might have ſtood, a defence and accommodation to generations yet unborn, if haply they had eſcaped the dire aſſaults of hoſtile rage.—But what vigilance of can prevent the miner's dark approach? or what ſolidity of bulwark can withſtand the bellowing engine's impetuous ſhock?

Thoſe, perhaps, were the rooms, in which licentious Mirth crowned with roſes the ſparkling bowl, and tuned to the ſilver-ſounding lute the ſyren's inchanting ſong. Thoſe, the ſcenes of voluptuous Indulgence, where Luxury poured her delicacies; where Beauty, inſidious Beauty, practiſed her wiles; and ſpread, with bewitching art, her wanton ſnares.—Now, inſtead of the riotous banquet, and intrigues of lawleſs love, the owl utters her hated ſcreams by night, and the raven flaps her ominous wing by day.—Where are the violet-couches, and the woodbine-bowers, which fanned, with their breathing ſweets, the polluted flame? The ſoil ſeems to ſuffer for the abuſes of the owner. Blaſted and diſhonoured, it produces nothing but ragged briers, and noiſome nettles; under whoſe odious covert, the hiſſing ſnake glides, or the croaking toad crawls.—Fearful intimation of that ignominious and doleful cataſtrophe, which awaits the ſons of riot! when their momentary gratifications will drop, like the faded leaf; and leave nothing behind, but pangs of remorſe, keener far than the pointed thorn, and more envenomed than the viper's tooth.

Perhaps, they were the beauteous and honoured abodes, where Grandeur and Politeneſs walked their daily round, attended with a train of guiltleſs delights! where amiable and refined Friendſhip was wont to ſit and ſmile looking love, and talking the very ſoul: where Hoſpitality, with Oeconomy always at her ſide, ſtood beckoning to the diſtreſſed, but induſtrious * poor; and ſhowered bleſſings from her liberal hand.—But war, deteſted war, has ſtretched over the ſocial and inviting ſeat, the line of confuſion, and the ſtones of emptineſs †. Now, alas! nothing but deſolation and horror haunt the ſavage retreat. The ample arches of the bridge, which ſo often tranſmitted the wondering paſſenger along their penſile way, lie buried in the dreary moat.—Thoſe relics of the maſſy portals, naked and abandoned, ſeem to bemoan their melancholy condition. No ſplendid chariots, with their gay retinue,

* If. liv. 11, 12.

* I ſay diſtreſſed, but induſtrious poor;—becauſe I would not be underſtood as encouraging, in any degree, the relief of our common beggars.—Towards the former, I would cultivate a tender and ever-yearning compaſſion; I would anticipate their complaints; and, as a ſacred writer directs, would even SEEK to do them good.—But as to the latter, I frankly own, that I look upon it as my duty, to diſcourage ſuch cumberers of the ground. They are, generally ſpeaking, luſty drones; and their habitual begging is no better than a ſpecious robbing of the public hive. For ſuch ſturdy ſupplicants, who are able to undergo the fatigue of travelling; able to endure the inclemencies of the weather; and conſequently much more able, were they equally willing, to exerciſe themſelves in ſome ſpecies of laudable induſtry;—for theſe, the houſe of correction would be a far more ſalutary proviſion, than any ſupply from our table; and confinement to labour, a much more beneficial charity, than the liberality of the purſe.

We ſhould remember, and they ſhould be taught, that the law ordained by the court of heaven, is, If a man will not work, neither ſhall he eat. If then we contribute to ſupport them in idleneſs, do we not counteract and fruſtrate this wiſe regulation, eſtabliſhed by the great SOVEREIGN of the univerſe?—Is it not alſo a wrong to the deſerving poor, if we ſuffer theſe wens on the body politic to draw off the nouriſhment, which ought to circulate amongſt the valuable and uſeful members?—Money or victuals beſtowed on theſe worthleſs wretches, is not real beneficence, but the earneſt-penny of ſloth. It hires them, to be good for nothing; and pays them, for being public nuiſances.

Let us then unanimouſly join, to ſhake off theſe dead weights from our wheels, and diſlodge theſe ſwarms of vermin from our ſtate. Let us be deaf to their moſt important clamours; and aſſure ourſelves, that, by this determined inflexibility, we do GOD, we do our community, we do them, the moſt ſubſtantial ſervice.—Should they implore by the injured name of JESUS; for the honour of the LORD JESUS, let us reſolutely with-hold our alms. Their meaning is,—"I cannot go on in my preſent ſhame-"ful and iniquitous courſe; I can no longer continue to act the "wicked and ſlothful ſervant; unleſs you will adminiſter ſome "kindly pernicious aſſiſtance. For CHRIST's ſake, therefore, "aſſiſt me to diſhonour my Chriſtian name, and to live more in-"famouſly than the vileſt beaſts. For CHRIST's ſake, help me "to be a reproach and burden to my native country; and to per-"ſiſt in the way which leads to eternal deſtruction."—This is the true import of their petitions. And whether the ſanction of that moſt venerable name, added to ſuch a requeſt, ſhould move our commiſeration, or excite our abhorrence, let every thinking perſon judge.

I truſt, the reader will be ſo candid, as to excuſe this long digreſſive note; and do me the juſtice to believe, that I am not pleading againſt, but for the real poor; not to harden any one's heart, but rather to direct every one's hand.—Give, out of gratitude to CHRIST, out of compaſſion to the needy, and be for ever bleſſed: but give not to incorrigible vagrants; to maintain impiety, and pamper indolence; leſt it be demanded one day, Who hath required this at your hand? leſt, by ſupporting diſſolute creatures in that abandoned ſloth, which is the nurſe of all vice, we become partakers of their guilt, and acceſſary to their ruin.

† If. xxxiv. 11.

frequent

frequent the ſolitary avenues. No needy ſteps, with cheerful expectations, beſiege the once bountiful gate. But all is a miſerable, forlorn, hideous pile of rubbiſh.

Since riches ſo often take to themſelves wings, and fly away; ſince houſes, great and fair, reel upon their foundations, and ſo ſoon tumble into duſt; how wiſe, how ſalutary, is our divine MASTER's advice! Make to yourſelves friends with the mammon of unrighteouſneſs; that, when the world fails around you, when the ſprings of nature fail within you; they, as witneſſes of your charity, and vouchers for the ſincerity of your faith, may receive you into everlaſting habitations *.——This is to lay up treaſure for ourſelves †: whereas, whatever elſe we amaſs, is for our heirs, for our ſucceſſors, for we know not who.—— This wealth is truly and emphatically called our own ‡: it is an advowſon; we have the perpetuity. Whereas, whatever elſe we poſſeſs, is ours only for a turn, or in truſt.

See the dreadful, dreadful ravages of divil diſcord! Where-ever that infernal fury ſtalks, ſhe marks her ſteps in blood, and leaves opulent cities a ruinous heap ‖.—— What thanks then, what ardent and ceaſeleſs thanks, are due to that all-ſuperintending, ever-gracious LORD, who has daſhed the torch from her hand; has broke her murderous weapons; and driven the baleful peſt from our iſland!—May the ſame almighty goodneſs ſhortly baniſh the accurſed monſter from all lands! baniſh the monſter, with her hated aſſociate rapine, and her inſatiable purveyor ambition, to the deepeſt hell. Branded with everlaſting infamy, and bound in adamantine chains, there let them gnaſh their teeth, and bite the inevitable curb!—While Peace, deſcending from her native heaven, bids her olives ſpring amidſt the joyful nations; and Plenty, in league with Commerce, ſcatters bleſſings from her copious horn. While Gladneſs ſmiles in every eye; and Love, extenſive, univerſal love, levelling the partition-wall of bigotry, cements every heart in brotherly affection.

Near thoſe heaps of havock, lies the ſpot, ever-memorable and ſtill revered, on which an obſtinate and fatal battle was fought.——The huſbandman, as he breaks his fallow land, or rends the graſſy turf, often diſcovers the horrid implements, and the more horrid effects, of that bloody conflict. He ſtarts to hear his coulter ſtrike upon the boſſes of a ruſty buckler, gride over the edge of a blunted ſword. He turns pale, to ſee human bones thrown up before his plough; and ſtands aghaſt to think, that, in cutting his furrow, he opens a grave.—— The grey-headed ſire often relates to his grandſons, hanging with eager attention on the tale, and trembling for the event; relates the diſmal, the glorious deeds of that important day.——How the fields, now covered with waving crops, were then loaded with mangled and ghaſtly corpſes. How the paſtures, now green with herbage, were then drenched and incrimſoned with human gore.

"On that extended common," he ſays, "where the "buſy ſhepherd is erecting his hurdled citadel, the tents "were ſpread, and the banners diſplayed; the ſpears "briſtled in air, and the burniſhed helmets glittered to "the ſun.—On yonder riſing ground, where the friſking "lambs play their harmleſs frolics, ſtood the martial files, "clad in mail, and ranged in battle array; ſtood war, "with all its collected horrors, like ſome portentous "cloud, ready to burſt into an immediate ſtorm. On the "nearer plain, where the quiet ſteed grazes in ſafety, "and thoſe ſober oxen chew the juicy herb, the fierce "encounter mixed. There, the javelins, launched from "nervous arms, and aimed by vengeful eyes, flew and "reflew, whizzing with death. The arrows lightened * "from the ſtrings; and drenched their keen points, and "dipped their feathery wings in blood.—Soon as this "ſhower of miſſive ſteel ceaſed, inſtantly outſprung "thouſands of flaming ſwords. They claſh on the bra"zen ſhields; they cut their way through the riven ar"mour; and ſheath their blades in many a gallant "dauntleſs heart.—Here, on this diſtinguiſhed level, the "proud preſumptuous enemy, confident of victory, and "boaſting of their numbers, poured in like a flood.— "There, a bold determined battalion, of which myſelf "was a part, planted themſelves like a rock, and broke "the fierce attack.

"Then," adds the brave old warrior, "then the cow"ard herd fled before the vengeance of our conquer"ing arms. Then, theſe hands ſtrewed the plains "with a harveſt, different far from their preſent pro"ductions. Then the fathers, ſmitten with inexpreſ"ſible dread, looked not back on their children †; though

* Luke xvi. 9. † Matth. vi. 20. ‡ Luke xvi. 12.

‖ The effects of what Virgil calls bella, horrida bella, were never diſplayed in colours that glow, and with figures that alarm, like thoſe which are uſed by the prophet Jeremiah, chap. iv. 19, &c.—As this is perhaps the greateſt maſter-piece of the kind, the reader will permit me to enrich the notes with a tranſcript of the paſſage.

First we ſee, or rather we feel, the effects of war on the human mind: the keeneſt anguiſh, and the deepeſt diſmay. My bowels! my bowels! I am pained at my very heart. My heart maketh a noiſe in me; I cannot hold my peace: becauſe thou haſt heard, O my ſoul, the ſound of the trumpet, the alarm of war.—Deſtruction upon deſtruction is cried; for the land is ſpoiled. Suddenly are my tents ſpoiled, and my curtains in a moment.—How long ſhall I ſee the ſtandard, and hear the ſound of the trumpet?

Then we ſee the diſmal devaſtations of war; and who does not ſhudder at the ſight? the whole country laid in ruins! deprived of all its ornaments, and all its inhabitants! reduced to a ſolitude, and a chaos. I beheld the earth, and lo! it was without form and void; and the heavens, and they had no light.—I beheld the mountains, and lo! they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly.—I beheld, and lo! there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled.—I beheld, and lo! the fruitful place was a wilderneſs, and all the cities thereof were broken down, at the preſence of the LORD, and by his fierce anger.

If, after all this profuſion of imagery, bold and animated even to aſtoniſhment, we can have any reliſh for the cold correctneſs of a Heathen genius, we may find ſomething of the ſame nature in Horace, lib. II. Od. 1.

* Hab. iii. 11. ברק חניתך literally tranſlated, preſents us with that beautifully bold figure, the lightening of thy ſpear.—Which, with innumerable other graces of ſpeech, that give dignity and ſpirit to our modern compoſitions, are borrowed from the language of Zion, are tranſplanted from the ſchool of the prophets.—If we ſtart into a pleaſing amazement, at Homer's δουρι μαιμαιτι; have we not equal reaſon to be charmed and ſurpriſed at Nahum's ברחבות תתהלכן ? every chariot raged with violence and impetuoſity; was eager, was even mad to deſtroy. Nah. ii. 5.

† For this very ſtriking, and moſt terrific image, we are obliged to the prophet Jeremiah: who, in a few words, but with all the pomp of horror, deſcribes the din of approaching war, and the conſternation of a vanquiſhed people. At the noiſe of the ſtamping of the hoofs of his ſtrong horſes, at the ruſhing of his chariots, and at the rumbling of his wheels, the fathers ſhall not look back unto their children, for feebleneſs of hands. Jer. xlvii. 3.

Not to mention the thunder-like ſound of the diction; and that in a language much leſs ſonorous than the original; I appeal to every reader, whether the laſt circumſtance does not awaken the idea of ſo tremendous a ſcene, and ſo horrible a dread, as no words can expreſs. Virgil has imitated the prophet's manner, in that very delicate deſcriptive touch; where, repreſenting the prodigious alarm, excited by the yell of the infernal fury, he ſays,

Et trepidæ matres preſſere ad pectora natos.

That is, Each frighted mother claſped the infant to her fluttering boſom.

No one, I believe, need be informed, that the panic is painted, with a very ſuperior energy, by the poet of heaven. In the Pagan's draught, the effect of fear reſults from the conſtitution, and coincides with the bias of humanity. Whereas, in the prophet's picture, it counteracts, it ſuſpends, it entirely overbears, the tendereſt workings and ſtrongeſt

" ſhuddering at the lifted ſpear, or ſcreaming under the " brandiſhed ſword. The fathers looked not back on their " children, though they fell among the ſlain; gaſhed with " deadly wounds; or lay expiring, in groans of agony, " under our feet."

We leave the warrior, to repeat his ſhocking ſtory, and enjoy his ſavage ſatisfaction. For calmer ſcenes, and ſofter delights, we willingly leave him.——The eye is pleaſed with the elegant gaiety of the parterre; the ear is ſmoothed with the warbling melody of the grove; but grand objects, and the magnificence of things, charm and tranſport the whole man. The mind, on ſuch occaſions, ſeems to expand with the proſpect and ſecretly exults in the conſciouſneſs of her greatneſs.——Intent upon theſe large and excurſive views, our friends ſcarce advert to the minuter beauties, which addreſs them on every ſide. The ſwan, with her ſnowy plumes, and loftily-bending head; notwithſtanding all her ſuperb air, and lordly ſtate; rows by, without exciting admiration, or obtaining notice.——Equally unnoticed is both the array, and the action of the duck; her gloſſy neck, and finely-chequered wings; her diving into the deep, or her darting up into day.—The ſwallow, ſkimming the air in wanton circle, or dipping her downy breaſt in the flood, courts their obſervation in vain.——Nor could the finny ſhoals attract their regard, though they played before the boat in ſportive chace; or, glancing quick to the ſurface, ſhewed their pearly coats, bedropt with gold.——Thus they, engaged in ſublime, neglect inferior ſpeculations. And if the ſons of religion overlook the diminutive, tranſient, deluſory forms of pleaſure, which float on the narrow ſtream of time, or flit along the ſcanty bounds of ſenſe; it is only to contemplate and enjoy a happineſs in their GOD, which is elevated, ſubſtantial, and immortal.—Compared with which, whatever the eye can ſurvey, from pole to pole, from the riſing to the ſetting ſun, is a cockle-ſhell, a butterfly, a bubble.

From this open and enlarged ſcene, they enter the ſkirts of a vaſt, umbrageous, venerable foreſt.—On either ſide, the ſturdy and gigantic ſons of earth, rear their aged trunks, and ſpread their branching arms. Trees, of every hardy make, and every majeſtic form, in agreeable diſorder, and with a wild kind of grandeur, fill the aereal regions. The huge, expanſive, roaming boughs unite themſelves over the current, and diffuſe " their umbrage, " broad and brown as evening."——The timorous deer ſtart at the claſhing of the waves. Alarmed with the unuſual ſound, they look up, and gaze for a moment: then fly into covert, by various ways, and with precipitate ſpeed; vaniſhing, rather than departing, from the glade.

How awful to reflect, as they glide along the ſhelving ſhores, and the moſs-grown banks; as they ſail under the pendent ſhades of quivering poplar, of whiſtling fir, and the ſolemn-ſounding foliage of the oak,—how awful to reflect; " Theſe were the lonely haunts of the " Druids, two thouſand years ago! Amidſt theſe duſky " mazes, and ſympathetic glooms, the penſive ſages " ſtrayed. Here, they ſought, they found, and, with all " the ſolemnity of ſuperſtitious devotion, they gathered " their miſletoe *. Here the viſionary recluſes ſhunned " the tumultuous ways of men, and traced the myſteri- " ous paths of Providence. Here they explored the ſe- " crets of nature, and invoked their fabled gods."

Sometimes wrapt in a ſudden reverie of thought, ſometimes engaged in converſation on the ſolemn appearance of things, the voyagers ſcarce perceive their progreſs. Before they are aware, this venerable ſcene is loſt; and they find themſelves advanced upon the borders of a beautiful lawn. The foreſt, retiring to the right hand, in the ſhape of a creſcent, compoſed what Milton ſtyles, " a " verdurous wall of ſtatelieſt aſpect;" and left, in the midſt, an ample ſpace for the flouriſhing of herbage.

Here, ſaid Theron, if you pleaſe, we will alight; and leave the bearer of our floating ſedan, to purſue his ceaſeleſs courſe,—to enrich the boſom of other valleys, and lave the feet of other hills,—to viſit cities, and make the tour of counties,—to reflect the image of many a ſplendid ſtructure, which adorn his banks; and, what is far more amiable, to diſtribute, all along his winding journey, innumerable conveniencies both for man and beaſt: acquiring, the farther he goes, and the more benefits he confers, a deeper flow, and a wider ſwell; to the remarkable confirmation of that beneficent maxim, There is that ſcattereth, and yet increaſeth *.

Theron and Aſpaſio, walking acroſs the ſpacious amphitheatre, ſeated themſelves at the extremity of the bend. Before them, lay a verdant area, quite even; perfectly handſome; but far from gay. Green was all the dreſs, without any mixture of gaudy flowers, or glittering colours. Only, now-and-then, a gentle breeze, ſkimming over the undulating mead, impreſſed a varying wavy gloſs on its ſurface. The whole ſeemed to reſemble the decent and ſober ornaments of maturer age, when it has put off the trappings, and bid adieu to the levities of youth.——The broad, tranſparent ſtream, ran parallel with the lips † of the channel; and drew a line of circumvallation, as it were, to guard the calm retreat. It appeared, where ſhaded with boughs, like a barrier of poliſhed ſteel; where open to the ſun, like a mirror of flowing cryſtal.——The eaſtern edges of the river, were barricaded with a kind of mountainous declivity; on whoſe rude and rocky ſides, the timorous rabbit burrowed, and the bearded goat browzed.——Not far from the ſummit, two or three fountains guſhed: which uniting their currents, as they trickled down the ſteep, formed a natural caſcade: here it was loſt in the ruſhy dells, or obſcured by the twiſting roots; there it burſt again into view, and playing full in the eye of day, looked like a ſheet of ſpouting ſilver.

In this romantic retirement, ſaid Theron, we are quite ſequeſtered from ſociety. We ſeem to be in a world of our own; and ſhould almoſt be tempted to forget, that we are encompaſſed with a kindred ſpecies; did not the muſic of thoſe ſilver-tongued bells, poured from a diſtant ſteeple, and gliding along the gentle ſtream, bring us news of human kind.

Eſcaped from man, and his buſy walks, methinks, we are come to the houſe of tranquillity. Such a deep, undiſturbed compoſure reigns all around! It is as if ſome auguſt perſonage was making his entrance, or ſtrongeſt propenſities of nature; though inſtigated, on one hand, by the moſt importunate calls of exquiſite diſtreſs; and ſtimulated on the other, by all the ſolicitations of the moſt yearning compaſſion.

* If the reader pleaſes, he may ſee thoſe pompous ſolemnities deſcribed, in VANIERII Præd. Ruſt. pag. 125, &c. Where the curious narrative of Pliny is embelliſhed with the harmonious numbers of Virgil.——With regard to the reflections occaſioned by this account; the compliments laviſhed on the French, their religion, and their monarch; I believe, the judicious Proteſtant will confeſs with me, that as our charming author has copied the language, and entered into the ſpirit of the ancients; he has alſo catched a tincture of their ſuperſtition; imbibing, together with all their elegancies and graces, ſome of their fanciful and legendary levities.

Verum ubi plura nitent in carmine, non ego paucis
Offendar maculis. HOR.

* Prov. xi. 24.

† The Greek, which is above all languages happy, in its beautiful variety of compound words, very neatly expreſſes this appearance by —ισοχειλης τη γη.

ſome

ſome majeſtic being was upon the point to ſpeak, and all nature ſtood fixed in attentive expectation. No place better fitted to cheriſh, or to inſpire a contemplative ſedateneſs.

Obſerve the ſimplicity and grandeur of thoſe ſurrounding trees; the noble plainneſs of their verdure, and the prodigious ſtateline ſs of their aſpect. What a ſpark are our gardens, and what a mere dwarf are our groves, compared with theſe vaſt plantations?—Here is none of your nice exactneſs, but all is irregularly and wildly great. Here are no traces of the ſhears, nor any footſteps of the ſpade, but the handy-work of the DEITY is apparent in all.—Give me the ſcenes, which diſdain the puny aſſiſtance of art, and are infinitely ſuperior to the low toils of man. Give me the ſcenes, which ſcorn to bribe our attention, with a little borrowed ſpruceneſs of ſhape; but, by their own native dignity, command our regard. I love the proſpects, which, the moment they are beheld, ſtrike the ſoul with veneration, or tranſport it with wonder; and cry aloud in the ear of reaſon, Aſcribe ye greatneſs to our GOD.—Such, I think, in a very eminent degree, is the foreſt;

——High waving o'er the hills,
Or to the vaſt horizon wide diffus'd,
A boundleſs deep immenſity of ſhade.

Aſp. Solomon's refined genius ſeems to have been fond of the ſame ſituation, and delighted with the ſame objects. Therefore, at a great expence, and in the moſt curious taſte, he built the houſe of the foreſt.—Iſaiah's divine imagination was charmed with the ſame grand ſpectacle. More frequently, than any of the prophets, he derives his illuſtrations from it. One compariſon I particularly remember. Speaking of the Aſſyrian king, and his military forces, he likens them to ſuch an aſſemblage of trees: numerous, as their amazing multitudes; ſtrong, as their maſſy trunks. Yet, numerous and potent as they were, they ſhould all be brought low, and laid in the duſt. *For behold the LORD, the LORD of hoſts ſhall lop the bough with terror, and the high ones of ſtature ſhall be hewn down, and the haughty ſhall be humbled; and he ſhall cut down the thickets of his foreſt with iron, and Lebanon ſhall fall by a mighty one.

Then he paſſes, by a moſt beautiful tranſition, to his darling topic, the redemption of ſinners. He gives us, together with one of the fineſt contraſts † imaginable, a view of the MESSIAH and his great ſalvation. When thoſe lofty cedars are levelled with the ground, there ſhall come a rod, a twig ſhall ſpring from the ſtem of Jeſſe, and a branch ſhall grow out of his roots: ‡ which, notwithſtanding its mean original, and unpromiſing appearance, ſhall rear its head to the ſkies, and extend its ſhade to the ends of the earth.

Ther. You do well, Aſpaſio, to recal my roving thoughts. This magnificent ſolitude had captivated my imagination, and I was giving a-looſe to the uſual ſallies of my fancy. But, with willing compliance, I turn to a more excellent ſubject.—Only I muſt aſſure you, that your remark awakens a painful idea in my mind, though a joyful one in your own. For my hopes, which were once high and lifted up, are now too much like that devoted proſtrate foreſt.

Aſp. My dear Theron, give me leave to ſay, they were never rightly founded. They were, what Shakeſpear calls, the baſeleſs fabric of a viſion. Now the ſhadowy and tranſient hopes are demoliſhed, that ſolid and everlaſting joys may ſucceed. Let them reſt on CHRIST, the infinitely-glorious REDEEMER, and they ſhall never be overthrown, never be removed any more.

Caſt a look upon yonder ivy. What can be more feeble? It has not ſtrength enough to withſtand the ſlighteſt blaſt. Nay, if left to itſelf, its own weight would cruſh it to the earth. Yet, by twining around the oak, how high it riſes, and how firm it ſtands! An emblem of our ſtate, and a pattern for our imitation.—Thus let us, who in ourſelves are nothing, of ourſelves can do nothing, let us fly to CHRIST; rely on CHRIST; and, as Barnabas (that true ſon of conſolation) ſpeaks, *cleave to the LORD JESUS CHRIST, with full purpoſe of heart. Let us determine to know nothing, to deſire nothing, to depend on nothing, but JESUS CHRIST and him crucified. Let this be the motto for our faith, this the language of our ſouls, CHRIST is all. Then ſhall our virtues, though hitherto ſmitten with a blaſt, revive as the corn; then ſhall our hopes, though in themſelves weaker than the ivy, mount like the cedars.

Ther. You can hardly imagine, how a ſenſe of guilt and unworthineſs oppreſſes my mind. I am often diſcouraged, and cannot bring myſelf to be ſtedfaſt in faith, or joyful through hope.

Aſp. You cannot bring yourſelf, but GOD Almighty's power and grace can bring to paſs theſe deſirable effects. And hear what the prophet ſays farther, upon the charming topic which introduced our diſcourſe.—Whenever the eloquent Iſaiah undertakes to diſplay a truth, he gives it all the energy, all the beauty, and every heightening touch, which it is capable of receiving.—This humble ſhoot, ſpringing from the ſtem of Jeſſe, ſhall riſe to ſuch a pitch of elevation, that it ſhall be conſpicuous far and near, and ſtand for an enſign of the people. It ſhall be ſeen, not like a beacon upon the top of an hill, by the Iſraelites only, or the natives of a ſingle territory; but like the great luminaries of heaven, ſhall be viſible in every country, and by the whole inhabited world.—To it ſhall the Gentiles ſeek; not only from the remoteſt, but from the moſt barbarous and idolatrous climes. Theſe, even theſe perſons, though ſavage in their nature, and deteſtable in their manners, ſhall be freely admitted, and find reſt under his ſhadow. Nay, the refreſhment which he yields, and the comfort which they receive, ſhall be not ſeaſonable only, but of ſovereign efficacy; his reſt ſhall be glorious. †

From this we learn, that all the bleſſings of CHRIST's mediation are deſigned for Gentiles; for the moſt abandoned and abominable ſinners.—That they are ſo full and conſummate, as to create a calm of tranquillity; a glorious reſt, in the moſt troubled, afflicted, guilty conſciences.—And I dare challenge even my Theron's miſgiving mind, to ſpecify any want which is not ſupplied, any grievance which is not redreſſed, by the righteouſneſs of JESUS CHRIST. I formerly encountered your objections, let me now combat your ſcruples.

Ther. Sometimes I have a deep and diſtreſſing conviction of my extreme ſinfulneſs.—'Tis like a ſore burden, too heavy for me to bear.—'Tis like the vileſt filth, and renders me odious to myſelf; how much more loathſome to the all-ſeeing eye?—It appears like a debt of ten thouſand talents, and I have nothing, no, not any thing to pay.—Then I experience, what the pſalmiſt ſo pathetically laments; My ſins have taken ſuch hold upon me, that I am not able to look up: yea, they are more in number than the hairs of my head, and my heart is ready to fail; my hopes are upon the point to expire.

Aſp. Then, Theron, fly to that juſt and righteous ONE, who is the ſtrength of our hearts; the life of our hopes; and our portion for ever.

* If. x. 33, 34.

† This fine contraſt, and that artful tranſition are, by the injudicious diviſion of the two chapters, very much obſcured, if not quite loſt, to many readers. The chapters, I think, ſhould by no means be ſeparated; but the tenth and the eleventh, as a continuation of the ſame prophecy, ſhould be united.

‡ If. xi. 1.

* Acts xi. 23. † If. xi. 10.

If ſin is a ſore burden; look unto CHRIST, who bore it all, in his own body on the tree; and removed, entirely removed that tremendous load, which would otherwiſe have ſunk the whole world into the nethermoſt hell.—If ſin renders us filthy; let us have recourſe to that blood of ſprinkling, which cleanſes, not from a few ſtains only, but from all guilt. By which the moſt defiled tranſgreſſors become fair as the faireſt wool, nay whiter than the virgin ſnows.*——If ſin is a debt;† ſubjecting us to wrath, and binding us over to puniſhment; let us confide in that gracious SURETY, who has taken the debt upon himſelf, and made it all his own: and not only ſo, but has paid it; paid it to the uttermoſt farthing, to the very laſt mite: ſo that juſtice itſelf can demand no more.

Let me confirm and illuſtrate this comfortable truth by a ſcriptural ſimilitude. No ſimilitudes are more exact, and none ſo ſtriking. I have blotted out as a thick cloud your tranſgreſſions, and as a cloud your ſins.‡ A little while ago, the whole expanſe of yonder ſky was covered with clouds. Nothing could more ſtrongly repreſent a multitude of corruptions beſieging the heart, and a multitude of iniquities overſpreading the life.——But where is, now, that immenſe arrangement of gloomy vapours? The ſun has ſhone them, and the wind has ſwept them, clean away. There are none, neither great nor ſmall, remaining. From one end of the wide-extended hemiſphere to the other, we ſee nothing but the clear and beautiful blue of the firmament. So, ſaith the SPIRIT of GOD to the true believer, ſo totally is your guilt, however horrid and enormous, done away through the dying JESUS.

Ther. It is not poſſible to conceive, nor will the whole creation afford, a more exquiſitely-fine compariſon. Perhaps nothing can ſo emphatically deſcribe the moſt prodigious multitude, entirely obliterated, without the leaſt trace of their former exiſtence.—But I am not only chargeable with paſt iniquities; I am alſo liable to daily miſcarriages. I relapſe into ſin; and when I would do good, evil is preſent with me.——Nay, my beſt hours are not free from ſinful infirmities, nor my beſt duties, from ſinful imperfections; which, like a worm at the core of the fruit, eat away the vigour of my graces, and tarniſh the beauty of my ſervices.

Aſp. Becauſe, through the frailty of your mortal nature, you cannot always ſtand upright; becauſe even the juſt man falleth daily, and daily contracteth defilement; therefore a fountain is opened for ſin and for uncleanneſs.§ The blood and atonement of CHRIST are compared to a heavenly fountain. In which polluted ſinners may waſh daily, waſh hourly; and be conſtantly, perfectly clean.——A ciſtern may fail; may be broken or exhauſted. But it is the property of a real fountain, never to be dried up, always to yield its waters. Such is the efficacy of CHRIST's death; not to be diminiſhed by univerſal and by inceſſant uſe. It removes the iniquity of the land.‖ It takes away the ſin of the world.¶ It is new, for our application, every morning; new, for this bleſſed purpoſe, every moment.—On which account, it makes complete proviſion for our cleanſing, our reſtoration, and our comfort.—Eſpecially, as it is not only ſovereign in itſelf, and always free for our reproach, but is ever pleaded by a great HIGH PRIEST in our behalf. Therefore the inſpired caſuiſt directs us to this ſource of conſolation, under all the upbraidings of conſcience, and all the remains of inbred depravity. *If any man ſin, we have an advocate with the FATHER, JESUS CHRIST the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our ſins.

We; St John reckons himſelf in the number of thoſe frail offending creatures, who ſtand in need of CHRIST, as a perpetual Interceſſor. This is written, not to encourage us in the commiſſion of ſin; but that we may be the leſs diſcouraged, under a ſenſe of our infirmities. —We have; not we poſſibly may, but we actually have. A ſoul burdened with guilt, cannot be ſatisfied, cannot be eaſed, with a bare perhaps. It is therefore poſitively affirmed, as a matter of eſtabliſhed certainty, of which we ſhould not admit a doubt.—We have for our advocate, not a mean perſon, but HIM who received an illuſtrious teſtimony from the moſt excellent glory, This is my beloved SON.†——Not a guilty perſon, who ſtands in need of pardon to himſelf; but JESUS CHRIST the righteous.——Not a mere petitioner, who relies purely upon liberality; but one who has merited, fully merited whatever he aſks; he is the propitiation for our ſins, has paid our ranſom, and purchaſed our peace. ——In conſequence of which, he claims rather than aſks our renewed, our irrevocable forgiveneſs.——This he claims, not from an unrelenting Judge, but from his FATHER and our FATHER.——And can ſuch a plea meet with a repulſe? Can ſuch an advocate miſcarry in his ſuit?——If the prophets of old were reckoned the chariot of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof;‡ becauſe, like their anceſtor Jacob, they had power with GOD, and prevailed in prayer; O! what a defence! what a ſecurity, is the divinely-excellent, and ever-prevailing interceſſion of JESUS CHRIST!

"Your graces," you complain, "are ſullied, and your "ſervices defective."——Then, my dear friend, renounce them in point of confidence; and gladly receive, cordially embrace, the all-perfect righteouſneſs of your LORD. So ſhall your juſtification be complete; and your ſervices, though deficient in themſelves, be "ac-"cepted in the BELOVED."——I have ſomewhere ſeen, painted upon a flat ſurface, an awkward and diſagreeable countenance; in which was nothing regular, nothing graceful, but every feature diſproportionate. Yet this very face, reflected from a cylindrical mirror, has put off its deformity; the lineaments became well adjuſted; ſymmetry connected every part, and beauty ſmiled throughout the whole.——Like the former our virtues appear, when compared with the immaculate purity of GOD, or the ſublime perfection of his law. But they acquire the amiableneſs of the latter, when preſented to the FATHER by our divine MEDIATOR, and recommended by his inconceivably-precious oblation. §

Milton,

* Pſal. li. 7.

† By theſe three images, the pſalmiſt diſplays the horrible and deſtructive malignity of ſin, together with the free nature and invaluable worth of evangelical forgiveneſs. Bleſſed is he whoſe tranſgreſſion, as an inſupportable load, (נשוי) is bore or taken away; whoſe ſin, as being the moſt abominable filth, (נסוי) is covered; unto whom the LORD imputath not (לא יחשוב) that moſt ruinous of all debts, iniquity.——It is pleaſing to obſerve the vehemence and ardour, with which the royal penitent ſpeaks on this favourite topic. He breaks out with a kind of holy abruptneſs, and pours his ſoul in a variety of warm expreſſions; as one who thought, he could not poſſibly enter upon the ſubject too ſoon, or dwell upon it too long, Pſal. xxxii. 1, 2.

‡ Iſ. xliv. 22. § Zech. xiii. 1. ‖ Zech. iii. 9.

¶ John i 29.

* 1 John ii. 1. † 2 Pet. i. 17.

‡ 2 Kings ii. 12. xiii. 14. There is a peculiar beauty, and moſt appoſite ſignificancy, in this proverbial ſaying, as uſed by the ancient Iſraelites. Horſes and chariots were deemed, in thoſe ages, the principal ſtrength of the battle, the moſt formidable apparatus of war. Of theſe the Iſraelites were entirely deſtitute. Their GOD had expreſsly forbidden them to multiply horſes; and we never read of their bringing any conſiderable number of cavalry into the field.—But, ſo long as they enjoyed the preſence of their prophets, they wanted not this arm of fleſh. They had more than an equivalent for chariots and horſes, in the fervent, the effectual prayers of thoſe holy men of GOD.

§ They, the perſons and performances of frail men, ſhall come up with acceptance on mine altar, ſaith the LORD, Iſaiah lx. 7.

—Which

Milton, taking his hint from the revelations of St John, represents our great HIGH PRIEST in this glorious and delightful attitude; represents him offering up the supplications and penitential duties of our first parents; mixing with them the incense of his own merits; and thus interceding before the throne.

See, FATHER! what first fruits on earth are sprung
From thy implanted grace in man! These sighs
And prayers, which, in this golden censer mix'd With incense, I thy PRIEST before thee bring.
—Now therefore bend thine ear
To supplication; hear his sighs though mute!
Unskilful with what words to pray, let ME
Interpret for him; ME his advocate
And propitiation. All his works on ME,
Good, or not good, ingraft: MY merit these
*Shall perfect; and for these MY death shall pay.

The poet's words are very emphatical. Yet words can no more express the prevalence of our LORD's negotiation, than the picture of the sun can diffuse its splendor, or convey its warmth.

Ther. My spiritual wants are many. I have many duties to discharge, and many temptations to withstand; many corruptions to mortify, and many graces to cultivate, or rather to acquire. Yet have I no stock, and no strength of my own.

Asp. I rejoice, that my Theron is sensible of his own indigence. The good LORD keep us both, in this respect, as little children; whose whole dependence is upon their nurse's care, or their parent's bounty! Then may we, having such a sense of our poverty, and having a great HIGH PRIEST over the house of GOD, come boldly to the throne of grace. We may apply, through the righteousness of JESUS CHRIST, for all needful succour, and for every desirable blessing.—If Solomon could say, LORD, remember David, and all his trouble. If Moses could say, LORD, remember Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob thy servants. How much more confidently may we say, "LORD, remember JESUS, the "Son of thy love! remember JESUS, and all his suf-"ferings; JESUS, and all his merits. Shall they be "sent empty-away, who have their SAVIOUR's obedi-"ence to plead?"—No verily. Though they are altogether unworthy in themselves, yet worthy is the LAMB that was slain, for whose sake their petitions should be granted, and their every necessity supplied.

Let me repeat to you a most beautiful and encouraging portion of scripture; which you may look upon, under all your wants, as a charte blanche put into your hand by GOD all-sufficient: Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of JESUS, by a new and living way which he has consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having an HIGH PRIEST over the house of GOD; let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith †.

The apostle, in this place, and throughout this whole epistle, alludes to the Mosaic ordinances, in order to shew, that the privileges of the Christian dispensation were typified by, yet are greatly superior to, those of the Jewish.—Among the Jews, none but the high priest was permitted to set a foot within the holy of holies; and he, only on the solemn day of expiation. Whereas all Christians are allowed to enter into the immediate presence of the most high GOD; may have the nearest access to HIM, who dwells in the heaven of heavens; and this, not once in the year only, but at all times, and on all occasions.—The high priest never made that awful approach, but with the blood of a slaughtered animal. We have blood of infinitely-richer value, to atone for our failings, and recommend our addresses; even the blood of the crucified JESUS.—Aaron entered through the veil of the temple; a way, which was soon to become antiquated, and for ever to be abolished. We enter by a far more noble way; by the flesh of our blessed REDEEMER; given as a propitiatory sacrifice for our sins. Which way is both new and living; such as never waxes old, will subsist to the end of time, and leads to eternal life.—Trusting in this sacrifice, and entering by this way, which are consecrated on purpose for our use, we may not only draw near, but draw near with boldness, with an humble filial confidence; and present our supplications with faith,—with assurance of faith,—with full assurance of faith.

How strong is the contrast, and how fine the gradation! how precious the doctrine, and how free the privilege! What shall we fear, if we believe this doctrine? what can we lack, if we improve this privilege? —And why should we not believe the former, why should we not improve the latter? Since they both are founded, not on any excellent endowments, not in any recommending actions of our own, but purely, solely, entirely on the blood of JESUS CHRIST.

Ther. There may come seasons of desertion, when all graces are languid, if not dead; when the light of GOD's countenance is suspended, if not turned into darkness; and the man is more like a lifeless log than a zealous Christian. These frames of mind I have heard mentioned, and I begin to know something of them by experience.

Asp. Then, Theron, when you walk in darkness, and see no light of sensible comfort, trust in the name, the unchangeable grace, of the LORD; and stay upon the righteousness, the consummate righteousness, of *your GOD. This is not barely my advice, but the direction of an infallible guide.—This agrees also with the character of a real Christian, as it is most exactly drawn by an unerring pen; We rejoice in CHRIST JESUS, and have no confidence in the flesh †; no reliance on any thing of our own, either for present joy, or future glory.

To rely on the elevation of our spirits, on the enlargement of our devotion, is like building our house upon the ice; which may abide for a season, but, upon the first alteration of weather, ceases to be a foundation, and becomes "water that runneth apace." Whereas, to derive our consolation from the MEDIATOR's righteousness, and JEHOVAH's faithfulness, is to build our edifice upon the rock; which "may not be removed, but standeth fast for ever." The former of these, even amidst all our changes, is invariably the same. The latter, notwithstanding all our unworthiness, is inviolably sure. Therefore the fruit of that righteousness is peace, and the effect of this faithfulness

—Which is explained by St Peter's comment; Ye are an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable unto GOD by JESUS CHRIST, 1 Pet ii. 5. and still farther ascertained by St Paul's practice; who, when he addresses the MAJESTY of heaven with any petition, or presents the tribute of praise, presumes not to do either the one or the other, but in the blessed MEDIATOR's name: because, secluded from this grand recommendation, they would be offensive to the awful JEHOVAH, "as smoke in his nostrils;" accompanied with it, they are acceptable, "as the sweet-smelling incense."

* Par. Lost, book XI. l. 22. &c.

† Heb. x. 19. 20. 21. 22.

* Is. l. 10.

† Phil. iii. 3. Exactly drawn—Perhaps there is no where extant a finer, a more complete, or so lively a picture of the true Christian. 'Tis in miniature, I own; but it comprehends all the master-lines and every distinguishing feature. We are they, who worship GOD in the spirit; with the spiritual homage of a renewed heart; with faith, love, resignation. And rejoice in CHRIST JESUS; in him look for all our acceptance with GOD; from him derive all the peace of our minds; and on him place all the hope of our final felicity. And have no confidence in the flesh; renouncing ourselves, in every view, as unprofitable servants; disclaiming all our own works and attainments, as defective services.

faithfulneſs is, if not rapturous joy, yet quietneſs and aſſurance for ever *.

So that, when it is winter in my ſoul, and there ſeems to be a dearth on all my ſenſible delights, I would ſtill ſay with the pſalmiſt, "Why art thou ſo diſquieted, O my "ſoul? CHRIST is the ſame amidſt all thy derelictions. "He is a green fir-tree †, which never loſes its verdure. "Under his ſhadow thou mayeſt always find repoſe. "His merit and atonement are ſtill mighty to ſave; "they conſtitute an everlaſting and infinite righteouſ- "neſs. The promiſes of GOD, through his mediation, "are yea, and amen ‡; are unqueſtionably and unalien- "ably thine."

Ther. 'Tis very probable, I may meet with afflictions; death in my family, or diſeaſe in my perſon. Diſappointments may fruſtrate my deſigns. Providence may wear a frowning aſpect, as though the LORD had a controverſy with his ſinful creature, and was making him to poſſeſs the iniquities of his youth. And what will be ſufficient to ſupport and to chear, in ſuch a gloomy hour ‖?

Aſp. The righteouſneſs of CHRIST.—Nothing is ſo ſovereign, to calm our fears, and remove all apprehenſions of the divine wrath. Apprehenſions of the divine wrath would draw the curtains of horror around our ſick beds, and throw upon our languiſhing eye-lids the ſhadow of death ⊥. But a believing improvement of CHRIST's ſatisfaction for our offences, clears up the mournful ſcene, and takes away the ſting of tribulation.

Attending to this great propitiation, the ſufferer ſees his ſins forgiven, and his GOD reconciled. From whence he concludes, that the ſevereſt afflictions are only fatherly corrections; ſhall not exceed his ability to bear; and ſhall aſſuredly obtain a gracious iſſue. He can fetch comfort from that chearing word, I will be with him in trouble; and expect the accompliſhment of that moſt conſolatory promiſe, I will deliver him, and bring him to honour —+.—Theſe ſupports have enabled the ſaints, to kiſs the rod, and bleſs the hand, which chaſtiſed them; to poſſeſs their ſouls, not in patience only, but in thankfulneſs alſo. While they have looked inward, and diſcerned their abſolute need of theſe bitter but ſalutary medicines; have looked upward, and beheld the cup in a moſt wiſe and tender PHYSICIAN's hand; have looked forward, with a joyful hope, to that better world; where GOD will wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there ſhall be no more ſorrow, nor any more pain.

Ther. The laſt occaſion of need is the trying hour of death, and the tremendous day of judgment. Will this righteouſneſs carry us, with ſafety, through the darkſome valley, and preſent us, with acceptance, at the dreadful tribunal?

Aſp. It will; it will.—This ſilences all the curſes of the law, and diſarms death of every terror. To believe in this righteouſneſs, is to meet death at our SAVIOUR's ſide; or rather, like good old Simeon, with the SAVIOUR in our arms.—They overcame, ſays the beloved diſciple, they overcame the laſt enemy, not by natural fortitude, or philoſophic reſolution, but by the blood of the LAMB ++; by a believing application of the victorious REDEEMER's merit.—I know, adds the heroic apoſtle, whom I have believed *; I am aſſured, that my JESUS is infinitely faithful, and will not deſert me; that his ranſom is abſolutely ſufficient, and cannot deceive me. Therefore, with a holy bravery, he bids defiance to death; or rather, triumphs over it, as a vanquiſhed enemy; Thanks be to GOD who giveth us the victory through our LORD JESUS CHRIST †!—Nay, through the wonderful efficacy of CHRIST's propitiation, death is ours ‡; not our foe, but our friend and deliverer. We may number it among our treaſures; and reſt ſatisfied, that to die, is gain.

What? though our fleſh ſee corruption; though this body, vile at preſent, be made viler ſtill, by dwelling amidſt worms, and mouldering in the duſt? yet through HIS righteouſneſs, who is the reſurrection and the life, it ſhall ſhake off the diſhonours of the grave; it ſhall riſe to a new and illuſtrious ſtate of exiſtence; it ſhall be made like the glorious and immortal body of our triumphant LORD.—If the body be ſo refined, ſo exalted; what will be the dignity, what the perfection, of the ſoul? or rather, of ſoul and body both, when they are happily and indiſſolubly united, at the reſurrection of the juſt?—Shall they have any thing to fear, when the judgment is ſet, and the books are opened? 'Tis probable there will be no accuſation, 'tis certain there is no condemnation, to them that are in CHRIST JESUS ‖. Who ſhall lay any thing to their charge? It is GOD,—not man, or angel, or any creature, but GOD—that juſtifies them. The GOD whoſe law was broke, the GOD to whom vengeance belongeth, he himſelf pronounces them innocent, becauſe their iniquities have been laid upon CHRIST; he himſelf pronounces them righteous, becauſe they are intereſted in the obedience of their REDEEMER: on theſe accounts, he himſelf pronounces them bleſſed, and gives them an abundant entrance into the joy of their LORD.

But what can expreſs, or who can imagine their happineſs, when they take up their abode, in the palaces of heaven, amidſt the choirs of angels, and under the light of GOD's countenance! when they poſſeſs the hope of righteouſneſs ⊥; when they wear the crown of righteouſneſs —+; and receive that great, that eternal ſalvation, which is an adequate recompence for the humiliation and agonies of JESUS CHRIST the righteous ++.

Come then, my dear Theron, let us henceforth be as branches, ingrafted into the heavenly VINE; derive all our ſap, all our moiſture, all our conſolation, from his fulneſs. Let us live upon our all-ſufficient REDEEMER, as the Iſraelites ſubſiſted on their manna from heaven, and their waters from the rock, and not wiſh for other, as we cannot poſſibly enjoy better ſuſtenance.

Ther. Is this the meaning of our LORD's exhortation, when he ſhews the neceſſity of eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood?

Aſp. 'Tis the very ſame. A repeated and inceſſant application of our SAVIOUR's merits, for all the purpoſes of piety and ſalvation, is the kernel of this nut, the meaning of this metaphor.—When we habitually advert to JESUS CHRIST, as dying for our ſins, and riſing again for our juſtification; performing all righteouſneſs, that we may be entitled to an eternal crown; and interceding in heaven, that we may be filled with all the fulneſs of GOD: then we eat his fleſh, and drink his blood: then we derive a life of ſolid comfort, and real godlineſs, from his mediatorial offices; juſt as we derive the continuance of our natural life, from the daily uſe of alimentary recruits.

* Iſa. xxxii. 17. † Hoſ. xiv. 8. ‡ 2 Cor. i. 20.

‖ The ſufficiency of CHRIST's righteouſneſs, to anſwer all theſe important and delightful ends, is excellently diſplayed in Mr. RAWLIN's ſermons, on CHRIST the righteouſneſs of his people. In which the public have ſeen the grand and amiable eſſentials of the goſpel, delivered in maſculine language; defended by nervous reaſoning; and animated with a lively devotion.

⊥ Alluding to that deſcription of tribulation and anguiſh, which, I believe, no perſon of ſenſibility can read without ſhuddering; My face is foul with weeping, and on my eye-lids is the ſhadow of death, Job xvi. 16.

—+ Pſal. xci. 15. ++ Rev. xii 11.

* 2 Tim. i. 12. † 1 Cor. xv. 57. ‡ 1 Cor. iii. 22.

‖ Rom. viii. 1. ⊥ Gal. v. 5.

—+ 2 Tim. iv. 8. ++ 1 John ii. 1.

Ther.

Ther. Your diſcourſe brings to my remembrance that magnificent and beautiful paſſage in ſcripture, where CHRIST is called THE SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS. Your doctrine ſets the compariſon in a very advantageous light; gives it the utmoſt force, and the greateſt propriety.——The righteouſneſs of CHRIST, according to your account, is as extenſively uſeful in the Chriſtian life, as the beams of that grand luminary are in material nature.——The ſun fills the air; where it diffuſes light, and creates day.——The ſun penetrates the ocean; from whence it exhales vapours, and forms the clouds.—In the vegetable creation, the ſun raiſes the ſap, and protrudes the gems; unfolds the leaves, and paints the bloſſom; diſtends the fruit, and concocts the juices.—Turn we to the animal world; the ſun delights the eye, and gladdens the heart. It awakens millions of inſects into being; and imparts that general joy, which every ſenſible creature feels. Indeed there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

Aſp. Thus the LORD JESUS CHRIST, that true and only Sun of Righteouſneſs, ariſes on his people with healing in his wings *. So various, ſo efficacious, and ſo extenſive, are his influences. Like a ſun, he enlightens and enlivens; like wings, he cheriſhes and protects; like a remedy, he heals and reſtores: and all, by virtue of his righteouſneſs, on account of his righteouſneſs.—Nor can we doubt, nor need we wonder, if we conſider its nature and its author. Its nature: it is conſummately excellent, has every kind, and every degree of perfection. Its author; it is the righteouſneſs and obedience of that incomparable PERSON, in whom dwells all the fulneſs of the GODHEAD.

It muſt therefore,—you will permit me to ſum up in a word, what has been diſplayed at large,—it muſt be fully anſwerable to the demands of the law, even in its higheſt purity, and utmoſt exactneſs.—It is infinitely ſuperior to the demerit of ſin, and entirely abſolves from all guilt, entirely exempts from all condemnation.—It is a moſt valid and never-failing plea, againſt the accuſations of Satan, and the challenges of conſcience.—It eſtabliſhes an undoubted title to every bleſſing, whether in time or in eternity, whether of grace or of glory.—It is a ſure ſupport for the Chriſtian, in an hour of deſertion, and in the agonies of death. Caſting anchor on this bottom, he may diſmiſs every fear, and ride out every ſtorm. Leaning upon this ſtaff, he may go down to the repoſe of the grave; and neither be appalled at the ſolemn harbingers of diſſolution, nor terrified at its far more awful conſequences.—The merit of this righteouſneſs, and the power of its DIVINE AUTHOR, will unſeal the tomb; will bring forth the ſleeping duſt from the chambers of putrefaction; and build up the whole man into immortality and glory. By this he will be preſented without ſpot *; preſented faultleſs †; yea, be preſented perfect ‡, and with exceeding joy, before the throne.

What a gift then is the righteouſneſs of CHRIST!——Bleſſed be GOD, for all the indulgent diſpenſations of Providence! Bleſſed be GOD, for all the beneficial productions of nature! But above all, bleſſed be GOD, for the tranſcendent and unſpeakable gift of CHRIST,—for the unſearchable and infinite treaſures of HIS RIGHTEOUSNESS.

* Mal. iv. 2.

* Eph. v. 27. † Jude 24. ‡ Col. i. 28.

ASPASIO VINDICATED.

IN ELEVEN LETTERS

FROM THE LATE

Rev. Mr HERVEY,

TO THE

Rev. Mr JOHN WESLEY;

CONTAINING

An ANSWER to that GENTLEMAN's Remarks on THERON and ASPASIO.

PUBLISHED FROM THE

AUTHOR's MANUSCRIPT,

LEFT IN THE

POSSESSION OF HIS BROTHER W. HERVEY.

WITH A

PREFACE,

SHEWING THE REASON OF THEIR BEING NOW PRINTED.

I marvel, that ye are ſo ſoon removed from him that called you into the grace of Chriſt, unto another goſpel: which is not another; but there be ſome that trouble you, and would pervert the goſpel of Chriſt. Gal. i. 6. 7.

PREFACE.

THE following letters were written by my late brother, in anſwer to a piece, which was firſt ſent him from the Rev. Mr John Weſley, by way of private letter, containing ſome remarks which that gentleman had made on reading Theron and Aſpaſio. When my brother had read it over, he thought it beſt to be ſilent, as it contained nothing which could materially affect his judgment in regard to the work it cenſured: for this reaſon, as well as for peace ſake, he laid it by him unanſwered.—Mr Weſley then publiſhed a pamphlet, which he entitled, A preſervative againſt unſettled notions in religion; in which he printed the above-mentioned letter.

ment

This my brother looked upon as a ſummons to the bar of the Public; and upon this occaſion, in a letter to a friend, dated June 23, 1758, writes as follows.

["My dear friend,

"I little thought, when I put Mr Weſley's manuſcript "into your hand, that I ſhould ſee it in print ſo ſoon. I "took very little notice of it, and let it lie by me ſeveral "months, without giving it an attentive conſideration *. "It ſeemed to me ſo palpably weak, dealing only in po"ſitive aſſertions and poſitive denials, that I could not "imagine he would adventure it into the world, with"out very great alterations. But it is now come abroad, "juſt as you received it, in a two ſhillings pamphlet, en"titled, A preſervative againſt unſettled notions in religion.— "Of this pamphlet what he has wrote againſt me, makes "only a ſmall part. Now then the queſtion is, Whe"ther I ſhall attempt to anſwer it? Give me your opi"nion, as you have given me your aſſiſtance; and may "the Father of mercies give you an increaſe of know"ledge and utterance, of peace and joy in the Holy "Ghoſt."]

Between this and the October following, my brother began the letters contained in this volume, of which he thus ſpeaks in another letter to his friend, dated October 24, 1758.

["My dear friend,

"Let me repeat my thanks for the trouble you have "taken, and for the aſſiſtance you have given me, in re"lation to my controverſy with Mr Weſley. He is ſo "unfair in his quotations, and ſo magiſterial in his man"ner, that I find it no ſmall difficulty, to preſerve the "decency of the gentleman, and the meekneſs of the "Chriſtian, in my intended anſwer. May our divine "Maſter aid me in both theſe inſtances, or elſe not ſuffer "me to write at all."]

When, in the December following, I was ſent for to Weſton, in the very laſt period of my brother's long illneſs,—I aſked him (the evening before he died) "what "he would have done with the letters to Mr Weſley, whe"ther he would have them publiſhed after his death?" —He anſwered—"By no means, becauſe he had only "tranſcribed about half of them fair for the preſs; but "as the corrections and alterations of the latter part were "moſtly in ſhort-hand, it would be difficult to under"ſtand them, eſpecially as ſome of the ſhort-hand was "entirely his own, and others could not make it out; "therefore," he ſaid, "as it is not a finiſhed piece, I de"ſire you will think no more about it."

As theſe were his laſt orders concerning theſe letters, I thought it right to obey them; and therefore I withſtood the repeated ſolicitations of many of his friends, who wanted to have them printed; alleging the ſervice they might be of to allay the groundleſs prejudices, which the Preſervative might occaſion in the minds of many, againſt my brother's other writings, as well as the utility of them in general, as they contained ſo maſterly a defence of "the truth as it is in JESUS."

But, notwithſtanding the regard I had for the perſons who ſolicited the publication, I could not be perſuaded to print the letters; and they never had appeared in public with my conſent, had not a ſurreptitious edition of them lately made its way from the preſs, and was I not under a firm perſuaſion that will be followed by more.

As this is the caſe, I think it my duty to the memory of my late brother, to ſend forth as correct an edition as I poſſibly can; for as to that which has appeared (from what editor I know not) it is ſo faulty and incorrect, that but little judgment can be formed from it, of the propriety and force of my brother's anſwers to Mr Weſley.

As to the unfairneſs of publiſhing my brother's letters without my conſent, and the injuſtice to his memory, in ſending ſo mangled a performance out under his name, they are too apparent to need any proof: and though the editor, as I have been informed, gave away the whole impreſſion, ſo that it is plain, lucre was not the motive of his proceeding, and I would charitably hope he did it with a view of benefiting his readers; yet it is ſo like doing evil that good may come, as, in my opinion, to be quite unjuſtifiable.

However, as the only way now left to remedy in ſome ſort what has been done, and to prevent a further impoſition on the public, from worſe motives than actuated this publiſher, I have called a friend to my aſſiſtance; and, by this means, preſent the reader with as perfect a copy of theſe letters, as can poſſibly be made out from the original manuſcript now in my hands.

That the reader may judge more clearly of the ſtate of the controverſy between my late brother and Mr Weſley, I have thought it right to ſubjoin Mr Weſley's letter, word for word, as it ſtands in the Preſervative.

* Afterwards he read it again, and gave it, what he calls in the beginning of the firſt letter, "a careful peruſal."

A LETTER to the Rev. Mr ——.

DEAR SIR, Oct. 15. 1756.

A Conſiderable time ſince I ſent you a few haſty thoughts which occurred to me on reading the dialogues between Theron and Aſpaſio. I have not been favoured with any anſwer. Yet, upon another and a more careful peruſal of them, I could not but ſet down ſome obvious reflections, which I would rather have communicated, before thoſe dialogues were publiſhed.

IN the firſt dialogue there are ſeveral juſt and ſtrong obſervations, which may be of uſe to every ſerious reader. In the ſecond, is not the deſcription often too laboured, the language too ſtiff, and affected? Yet the reflections on the creation (in the 52d and following pages,) make abundant amends for this. (I cite the pages according to the Dublin edition, having wrote the rough draught of what follows, in Ireland *.)

P. 128. Is juſtification more or leſs, than GOD's pardoning and accepting a ſinner through the merits of Chriſt! That GOD herein "reckons the righteouſneſs and obedience which Chriſt performed as our own;" I allow, if by that ambiguous expreſſion, you mean only, as you here explain it yourſelf, "they are as effectual for obtaining our ſalvation, as if they were our own perſonal qualifications." P. 128.

* The pages in this edition refer to thoſe of THERON and ASPASIO, inſerted in the preceding part of this work. And the reader, by comparing the quotations with Mr Hervey's own words, will eaſily ſee, that Mr Weſley has, in moſt caſes, quoted very unfairly.

P. 129.

P. 129. "WE are not ſolicitous, as to any particular ſet of phraſes. Only let men be humbled, as repenting criminals, at Chriſt's feet; let them rely as devoted penſioners, on his merits; and they are undoubtedly in the way to a bliſsful immortality." Then for Chriſt's ſake, and for the ſake of the immortal ſouls which he has purchaſed with his blood, do not diſpute for that particular phraſe, the imputed righteouſneſs of Chriſt. It is not ſcriptural; it is not neceſſary. Men who ſcruple to uſe, men who never heard the expreſſion, may yet "be humbled, as repenting criminals, at his feet, and rely, as devoted penſioners, on his merits."——But it has done immenſe hurt. I have had abundant proof, that the frequent uſe of this unneceſſary phraſe, inſtead of "furthering men's progreſs in vital holineſs," has made them ſatisfied without any holineſs at all; yea and encouraged them to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs.

Ibid. "To aſcribe pardon to Chriſt's paſſive, eternal life to his active righteouſneſs, is fanciful rather than judicious. His univerſal obedience, from his birth to his death, is the one foundation of my hope."

THIS is unqueſtionably right. But if it be, there is no manner of need, to make the imputation of his active righteouſneſs, a ſeparate and laboured head of diſcourſe. O that you had been content with this plain ſcriptural account, and ſpared ſome of the dialogues and letters that follow!

THE third and fourth dialogues contain an admirable illuſtration and confirmation of the great doctrine of Chriſt's ſatisfaction. Yet even here I obſerve a few paſſages, which are liable to ſome exception.

P. 132. "SATISFACTION was made to the divine law." I do not remember any ſuch expreſſion in ſcripture. This way of ſpeaking of the law as a perſon injured and to be ſatisfied, ſeems hardly defenſible.

P. 137. "THE death of Chriſt procured the pardon and acceptance of believers, even before he came in the fleſh." Yea, and ever ſince. In this we all agree. And why ſhould we contend for any thing more?

P. 151. "ALL the benefits of the new covenant are the purchaſe of his blood." Surely they are. And after this has been fully proved, where is the need, where is the uſe, of contending ſo ſtremuouſly, for the imputation of his righteouſneſs, as is done in the fifth and ſixth dialogues?

P. 151. "IF he was our ſubſtitute as to penal ſufferings, why not as to juſtifying obedience?"

THE former is expreſsly aſſerted in ſcripture. The latter is not expreſsly aſſerted there.

P. 158. "As ſin and miſery have abounded through the firſt Adam, mercy and grace have much more abounded through the ſecond. So that none can have any reaſon to complain." No, not if the ſecond Adam died for all. Otherwiſe all for whom he did not die, have great reaſon to complain. For they inevitably fall by the firſt Adam, without any help from the ſecond.

Ibid. "THE whole world of believers" is an expreſſion which never occurs in ſcripture; nor has it any countenance there: the world in the inſpired writings being conſtantly taken either in an univerſal or in a bad ſenſe; either for the whole of mankind, or for that part of them who know not GOD.

P. 159. "IN the LORD ſhall all the houſe of Iſrael be juſtified." It ought unqueſtionably to be rendered, by or through the LORD:" this argument therefore proves nothing. "Ye are complete in him." The words literally rendered are, Ye are filled with him. And the whole paſſage, as any unprejudiced reader may obſerve, relates to ſanctification, not juſtification.

Ibid. "THEY are accepted for Chriſt's ſake; this is juſtification through imputed righteouſneſs." That remains to be proved. Many allow the former, who cannot allow the latter.

P. 159. Theron. "I SEE no occaſion for ſuch nice diſtinctions and metaphyſical ſubtilties.

Aſp. You oblige us to make uſe of them, by confounding theſe very different ideas, that is, Chriſt's active and paſſive righteouſneſs."

I ANSWER, We do not confound theſe: but neither do we ſeparate them. Nor have we any authority from ſcripture, for either thinking or ſpeaking of one ſeparate from the other. And this whole debate on one of them ſeparate from the other, is a mere metaphyſical ſubtilty.

Ibid. "THE righteouſneſs which juſtifies us, is already wrought out."——A crude, unſcriptural expreſſion! "It was ſet on foot, carried on, completed."——O vain philoſophy! The plain truth is, Chriſt lived and taſted death for every man; and through the merits of his life and death, every believer is juſtified.

P. 160. "WHOEVER perverts ſo glorious a doctrine, ſhews he never believed." Not ſo. They who turn back as a dog to the vomit, had once eſcaped the pollutions of the world by the knowledge of Chriſt.

Ibid. "THE goodneſs of GOD leadeth to repentance." This is unqueſtionably true. But the nice, metaphyſical doctrine of imputed righteouſneſs, leads not to repentance, but to licentiouſneſs.

Ibid. "THE believer cannot but add to his faith, works of righteouſneſs." During his firſt love, this is often true. But it is not true afterwards, as we know and feel by melancholy experience.

Ibid. "WE no longer obey, in order to lay the foundation for our final acceptance." No; that foundation is already laid in the merits of Chriſt. Yet we obey, in order to our final acceptance thro' his merits. And in this ſenſe, by obeying we lay a good foundation, that we may attain eternal life.

Ibid. "WE eſtabliſh the law; we provide for its honour, by the perfect obedience of Chriſt." Can you poſſibly think, St Paul meant this? that ſuch a thought ever entered into his mind? The plain meaning is, We eſtabliſh both the true ſenſe, and the effectual practice of it: we provide for its being both underſtood and practiſed in its full extent.

P. 161. "On thoſe who reject the atonement, juſt ſeverity." Was it ever poſſible for them, not to reject it? If not, how is it juſt, to caſt them into a lake of fire, for not doing what it was impoſſible they ſhould do? Would it be juſt (make it your own caſe) to caſt you into hell, for not touching heaven with your hand?

Ibid. "JUSTIFICATION is complete the firſt moment we believe, and is incapable of augmentation."

NOT ſo: there may be as many degrees in the favour as in the image of GOD.

P. 178. "ST PAUL often mentions a righteouſneſs imputed: (Not a righteouſneſs; never once; but ſimply righteouſneſs.) "What can this be, but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt?" He tells you himſelf, Rom. iv. 6. To him that believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, faith is imputed for righteouſneſs. "Why is Chriſt ſtyled Jehovah our righteouſneſs?" Becauſe we are both juſtified and ſanctified through him.

Ibid. "My death, the cauſe of their forgiveneſs; my righteouſneſs, the ground of their acceptance."

How does this agree with P. 129. "To aſcribe pardon to Chriſt's paſſive, eternal life to his active righteouſneſs, is fanciful rather than judicious?"

P. 171. "HE commends ſuch kinds of beneficence only, as were exerciſed to a diſciple as ſuch." Is not this a ſlip of the pen? Will not our LORD then commend, and reward eternally, all kinds of beneficence, provided they flowed from a principle of loving faith? Yea, that which was exerciſed to a Samaritan, a Jew, a Turk, or an Heathen? Even theſe I would not term "tranſient bubbles," though they do not procure our juſtification.

P. 172.

P. 172. "How must our righteouſneſs exceed that of the ſcribes and Phariſees? Not only in being ſincere, but in poſſeſſing a complete righteouſneſs, even that of Chriſt." Did our LORD mean this? Nothing leſs. He ſpecifies in the following parts of his ſermon, the very inſtances wherein the righteouſneſs of a Chriſtian exceeds that of the ſcribes and Phariſees.

Ibid. "HE brings this ſpecious hypocrite to the teſt." How does it appear, that he was an hypocrite? Our LORD gives not the leaſt intimation of it. Surely he loved him, not for his hypocriſy, but his ſincerity!

YET he loved the world, and therefore could not keep any of the commandments in their ſpiritual meaning. And the keeping of theſe is undoubtedly the way to, though not the cauſe of, eternal life.

P. 173. "By works his faith was made perfect; appeared to be true." No: the natural ſenſe of the word is, By the grace ſuperadded while he wrought thoſe works, his faith was literally made perfect.

Ibid. "HE that doth righteouſneſs is righteous,—manifeſts the truth of his converſion." Nay; the plain meaning is, He alone is truly righteous, whoſe faith worketh by love.

Ibid. "ST JAMES ſpeaks of the juſtification of our faith." Not unleſs you meant by that odd expreſſion, our faith being made perfect: for ſo the apoſtle explains his own meaning. Perhaps the word juſtified is once uſed by St Paul for manifeſted.—But that does not prove, it is to be ſo underſtood here.

Ibid, "WHOSO doth theſe things ſhall never fall into total apoſtaſy." How pleaſing is this to fleſh and blood! But David ſays no ſuch thing. His meaning is, Whoſo does theſe things to the end, ſhall never fall into hell.

THE ſeventh dialogue is full of important truths. Yet ſome expreſſions in it I can't commend.

P. 177. "ONE thing thou lackeſt, the imputed righteouſneſs of Chriſt." You cannot think, this is the meaning of the text. Certainly the one thing our LORD meant was, the love of GOD. This was the thing he lacked.

P. 179. "Is the obedience of Chriſt inſufficient to accompliſh our juſtification?" Rather I would aſk, Is the death of Chriſt inſufficient to purchaſe it?

P. 180. "THE ſaints in glory aſcribe the whole of their ſalvation to the blood of the Lamb." So do I: and yet I believe he "obtained for all a poſſibility of "ſalvation."

Ibid. "THE terms of acceptance for fallen man were a full ſatisfaction to the divine juſtice, and a complete conformity to the divine law." This you take for granted; but I cannot allow.

THE terms of acceptance for fallen man are repentance and faith. Repent ye, and believe the goſpel.

Ibid. "THERE are but two methods whereby any can be juſtified, either by a perfect obedience to the law, or becauſe Chriſt hath kept the law in our ſtead." You ſhould ſay, "or by faith in Chriſt." I then anſwer, This is true. And fallen man is juſtified, not by perfect obedience, but by faith. What Chriſt has done is the foundation of our juſtification, not the term or condition of it.

IN the eighth dialogue likewiſe there are many great truths, and yet ſome things liable to exception.

P. 187. "DAVID GOD himſelf dignifies with the moſt exalted of all characters." Far, very far from it. We have more exalted characters than David's,-both in the Old Teſtament and the New. Such are thoſe of Samuel, Daniel, yea and Job, in the former; of St Paul and St John in the latter.

"BUT GOD ſtyles him a man after his own heart." This is the text which has cauſed many to miſtake: for want of conſidering, firſt, that this is ſaid of David in a particular reſpect, not with regard to his whole character: Secondly, the time, at which it was ſpoken. When was David a man after GOD's own heart? When GOD found him following the ewes great with young, when he took him from the ſheep-folds, Pſal. lxxviii. 71. It was in the 2d or 3d year of Saul's reign, that Samuel ſaid to him, The LORD hath ſought him a man after his own heart, and hath commanded him to be captain over his people, 1 Sam. xiii. 14. But was he a man after GOD's own heart all his life? or in all particulars? So far from it, that we have few more exceptionable characters, among all the men of GOD recorded in ſcripture.

P. 109. "THERE is not a juſt man upon earth that ſinneth not." Solomon might truly ſay ſo, before Chriſt came. And St John might, after he came, ſay as truly, Whoſoever is born of GOD ſinneth not. "But in many things we offend all." That St James does not ſpeak this of himſelf, or of real Chriſtians, will clearly appear to all who impartially conſider the context.

THE ninth dialogue proves excellently well, that we cannot be juſtified by our works.

BUT have you thoroughly conſidered the words which occur in the 192d page?

"O CHILDREN of Adam, you are no longer obliged, to love GOD with all your ſtrength, nor your neighbour as yourſelves. Once indeed, I inſiſted upon abſolute purity of heart: now I can diſpenſe with ſome degrees of evil deſire. Since Chriſt"—has fulfilled the law for you, 'you need not fulfil it. I will connive at, yea accommodate my demands to your weakneſs."

I AGREE with you, that "this doctrine makes the holy One of GOD a miniſter of ſin." And is it not your own? Is not this the very doctrine which you eſpouſe throughout your book?

I CANNOT but except to ſeveral paſſages alſo in the tenth dialogue. I aſk, firſt,

P. 198. "DOES the righteouſneſs of GOD ever mean" (as you affirm) "the merits of Chriſt?" I believe not once in all the ſcripture. It often means, and particularly in the epiſtle to the Romans, GOD's method of juſtifying ſinners. When therefore you ſay, Ibid. "THE righteouſneſs of GOD means, ſuch a righteouſneſs as may juſtly challenge his acceptance," I cannot allow it at all: and this capital miſtake muſt needs lead you into many others. But I follow you ſtep by ſtep.

Ibid. "IN order to entitle us to a reward, there muſt be an imputation of righteouſneſs." There muſt be an intereſt in Chriſt. And then every man ſhall receive his own reward, according to his own labour.

Ibid. "A REBEL may be forgiven, without being reſtored to the dignity of a ſon." A rebel againſt an earthly king may; but not a rebel againſt GOD. In the very ſame moment that GOD forgives, we are the ſons of GOD. Therefore this is an idle diſpute. For pardon and acceptance, though they may be diſtinguiſhed, cannot be divided. The words of Job which you cite are wide of the queſtion. Thoſe of Solomon prove no more than this, (and who denies it?) that juſtification implies both pardon and acceptance.

P. 199. "GRACE reigneth through righteouſneſs into eternal life;"—That is, The free love of GOD brings us, through juſtification and ſanctification, to glory. Ibid. "That they may receive forgiveneſs, and a lot among the ſanctified:" that is, that they may receive pardon, holineſs, heaven.

Ibid. "Is not the ſatisfaction made by the death of Chriſt, ſufficient to obtain both our full pardon and final happineſs?" Unqueſtionably it is, and neither of the texts you cite proves the contrary.

Ibid. "IF it was requiſite for Chriſt to be baptized, much more to fulfil the moral law."

I CANNOT prove that either the one or the other was requiſite in order to his purchaſing redemption for us.

Ibid. "BY Chriſt's ſufferings alone, the law was not ſatisfied." Yes it was; for it required only the alternative, Obey or die. It required no man to obey and die too. If any man had perfectly obeyed, he would not have died. Ibid. "Where ſcripture aſcribes the whole of our ſalvation to the death of Chriſt, a part of his humiliation is put for the whole." I cannot allow this without ſome proof. He was obedient unto death, is no proof at all; as it does not neceſſarily imply any more, than that he died in obedience to the Father. In ſome texts there is a neceſſity of taking a part for the whole. But in theſe there is no ſuch neceſſity.

P. 200. "CHRIST undertook to do every thing neceſſary for our redemption;" namely, in a covenant made with the Father. 'Tis ſure, he did every thing neceſſary: but how does it appear, that he undertook this, before the foundation of the world, and that by a poſitive covenant between him and the Father?

YOU think this appears from four texts. 1. From that, Thou gaveſt them to me. Nay, when any believe, the Father gave them to Chriſt. But this proves no ſuch previous contract. 2. GOD hath laid upon him the iniquities of us all. Neither does this prove any ſuch thing. 3. That expreſſion, The counſel of peace ſhall be between them, does not neceſſarily imply any more, than that both the father and the Son would concur in the redemption of man. 4. According to the counſel of his will,—that is, in the way or method he had choſen. Therefore neither any of theſe texts, nor all of them, prove what they were brought to prove. They do by no means prove, that there ever was any ſuch covenant made between the Father and the Son.

P. 201. "THE conditions of the covenant are recorded. Lo, I come to do thy will." Nay here is no mention of any covenant, nor any thing from which it can be inferred. "The recompence ſtipulated in this glorious treaty."—But I ſee not one word of the treaty itſelf. Nor can I poſſibly allow the exiſtence of it without far other proof than this. Ibid. "Another copy of this grand treaty is recorded Iſaiah xlix. from the firſt to the ſixth verſe." I have read them, but cannot find a word about it, in all thoſe verſes. They contain neither more nor leſs than a prediction of the ſalvation of the Gentiles.

Ibid. "BY the covenant of works, man was bound to obey in his own perſon." And ſo he is under the covenant of grace; though not in order to his juſtification. "The obedience of our Surety is accepted inſtead of our own." This is neither a ſafe nor a ſcriptural way of ſpeaking. I would ſimply ſay, We are accepted through the Beloved. We have redemption through his blood.

Ibid. "THE ſecond covenant was not made with Adam, or any of his poſterity, but with Chriſt, in thoſe words, The ſeed of the woman ſhall bruiſe the ſerpent's head." For any authority you have from theſe words, you might as well have ſaid, it was made with the Holy Ghoſt. Theſe words were not ſpoken to Chriſt, but of him, and give not the leaſt intimation of any ſuch covenant as you plead for. They manifeſtly contain, if not a covenant made with, a promiſe made to Adam and all his poſterity.

Ibid. "CHRIST, we ſee, undertook to execute the conditions." We ſee no ſuch thing in this text. We ſee here only a promiſe of a Saviour, made by GOD to man.

Ibid. "'Tis true, I cannot fulfil the conditions." 'Tis not true. The conditions of the new covenant are, Repent and believe. And theſe you can fulfil, through Chriſt ſtrengthening you. 'Tis equally true, this is not required at my hands." It is equally true, that is, abſolutely falſe, and moſt dangerouſly falſe. If we allow this, Antinomianiſm comes in with a full tide. "Chriſt has performed all that was conditionary for me." Has he repented and believed for you? You endeavour to evade this by ſaying, "He performed all that was conditionary in the covenant of works." This is nothing to the purpoſe; for we are not talking of that, but of the covenant of grace. Now, he did not perform all that was conditionary in this covenant, unleſs he repented and believed. "But he did unſpeakably more." It may be ſo. But he did not do this.

P. 203. "BUT if Chriſt's perfect obedience be ours, we have no more need of pardon than Chriſt himſelf." The conſequence is good. You have ſtarted an objection which you cannot anſwer. You ſay indeed, "Yet we do need pardon; for in many things we offend all." What then? If his obedience be ours, we ſtill perfectly obey in him.

Ibid. "BOTH the branches of the law, the preceptive and the penal, in the caſe of guilt contracted, muſt be ſatisfied." Not ſo. "Chriſt by his death alone, (ſo our church teaches) fully ſatisfied for the ſins of the whole world." The ſame great truth is manifeſtly taught in the 31ſt article. Is it therefore fair, is it honeſt, for any one to plead the articles of our church in defence of abſolute predeſtination? Seeing the 17th article barely defines the term, without either affirming or denying the thing: whereas the 31ſt totally overthrows and razes it from the foundation.

Ibid. "BELIEVERS who are notorious tranſgreſſors in themſelves, have a ſinleſs obedience in Chriſt." O ſyren ſong! pleaſing ſound, to James Wheatley! Thomas Williams! James Reily!

I KNOW not one ſentence in the eleventh dialogue, which is liable to exception: but that grand doctrine of Chriſtianity, original ſin, is therein proved by irrefragable arguments.

THE twelfth likewiſe is unexceptionable, and contains ſuch an illuſtration of the wiſdom of GOD, in the ſtructure of the human body, as I believe cannot be parallelled, in either ancient or modern writers.

THE former part of the thirteenth dialogue is admirable. To the latter I have ſome objection.

P. 243. "Elijah failed in his reſignation, and even Moſes ſpake unadviſedly with his lips." It is true: but if you could likewiſe fix ſome blot upon venerable Samuel and beloved Daniel, it would prove nothing. For no Scripture teaches, that the holineſs of Chriſtians is to be meaſured by that of any Jew.

Ibid. "Do not the beſt of men frequently feel diſorder in their affections? Do not they often complain, When I would do good, evil is preſent with me?" I believe not. You and I are only able to anſwer for ourſelves. "Do not they ſay, We groan being burthened,—with the workings of inbred corruption?" You know, this is not the meaning of the text. The whole context ſhews, the cauſe of that groaning was their longing to be with Chriſt.

Ibid. "THE cure" of ſin "will be perfected in heaven." Nay ſurely, in paradiſe, if no ſooner. "This is a noble prerogative of the beatific viſion." No: it would then come too late. If ſin remains in us till the day of judgment, it will remain for ever. "Our preſent bleſſedneſs does not conſiſt in being free from ſin." I really think it does. But whether it does or no, if we are not free from ſin, we are not Chriſtian believers. For to all theſe the apoſtle declares, Being made free from ſin, ye are become the ſervants of righteouſneſs, Rom. vi. 18.

Ibid. IF we were perfect in piety (St John's word is, perfect in love) Chriſt's prieſtly office would be ſuperſeded." No: we ſhould ſtill need his Spirit, (and conſequently his intereeſſion) for the continuance of that love from moment to moment. Beſide, we ſhould ſtill be encompaſſed with infirmities, and liable to miſtakes; from which words or actions might follow, even though the heart was all love, which were not exactly right. Therefore, in all theſe reſpects, we ſhould ſtill have need of Chriſt's prieſtly office: and therefore as as long as he remains in the body, the greateſt ſaint may ſay,

Every moment, LORD, I need
The merit of thy death.

The text cited from Exodus aſſerts nothing leſs than, that iniquity "cleaves to all our holy things till death."

Ibid. "SIN remains, that the righteouſneſs of faith may have its due honour." And will the righteouſneſs of faith have its due honour no longer than ſin remains in us? Then it muſt remain, not only on earth and in paradiſe, but in heaven alſo—"And the ſanctification of the Spirit its proper eſteem." Would it not have more eſteem, if it were a perfect work?

P. 244. "IT (ſin) will make us lowly in our own eyes." What, will pride make us lowly? Surely the utter deſtruction of pride would do this more effectually. Ibid. "It will make us compaſſionate." Would not an entire renewal in the image of GOD make us much more ſo? "It will teach us to admire the riches of grace." Yea, but a fuller experience of it, by a thorough ſanctification of ſpirit, ſoul, and body, will make us admire it more. "It will reconcile us to death." Indeed it will not: nor will any thing do this, like perfect love.

Ibid. "IT will endear the blood and interceſſion of Chriſt." Nay, theſe can never be ſo dear to any, as to thoſe who experience their full virtue, who are filled with the fulneſs of GOD. Nor can any "feel their continual need" of Chriſt, or "rely on him," in the manner which theſe do.

DIALOGUE 14. P. 246. "THE claims of the law are all anſwered." If ſo, Count Zinzendorf is abſolutely in the right: neither GOD nor man can claim my obedience to it. Is not this Antinomianiſm without a maſk?

P. 247. "YOUR ſins are expiated through the death of Chriſt, and a righteouſneſs given you, by which you have free acceſs to GOD." This is not ſcriptural language. I would ſimply ſay, By him we have acceſs to the Father.

THERE are many other expreſſions in this dialogue, to which I have the ſame objection, namely, 1. That they are unſcriptural; 2. That they directly lead to Antinomianiſm.

THE firſt letter contains ſome very uſeful heads of ſelf-examination. In the ſecond,

P. 255, 6. I READ, "There is a righteouſneſs which ſupplies all that the creature needs. To prove this momentous point, is the deſign of the following ſheets."

I HAVE ſeen ſuch terrible effects of this unſcriptural way of ſpeaking, even on thoſe who had once clean eſcaped from the pollutions of the world, that I cannot but earneſtly wiſh, you would ſpeak no otherwiſe than do the oracles of GOD. Certainly this mode of expreſſion is not momentous. It is always dangerous, often fatal.

LETTER III. p. 256. "Where ſin abounded, grace did much more abound: that as ſin had reigned unto death, ſo might grace—the free love of GOD—reign through righteouſneſs, through our juſtification and ſanctification, unto eternal life, Rom. v. 20, 21. This is the plain natural meaning of the words. It does not appear, that one word is ſpoken here about imputed righteouſneſs; neither in the paſſages cited in the next page, from the common-prayer and the article. In the homily likewiſe that phraſe is not found at all, and the main ſtreſs is laid on Chriſt's ſhedding his blood. Nor is the phraſe (concerning the thing there is no queſtion) found in any part of the homilies.

P. 258. "IF the fathers are not explicit with regard to the imputation of active righteouſneſs, they abound in paſſages which evince the ſubſtitution of Chriſt in our ſtead: paſſages which diſclaim all dependence on any duties of our own, and fix our hopes wholly on the merits of our Saviour. When this is the caſe, I am very little ſolicitous about any particular forms of expreſſion." O lay aſide then thoſe queſtionable, dangerous forms, and keep cloſely to the ſcriptural.

LETTER IV. p. 259. "The authority of our church and of thoſe eminent divines," does not touch thoſe particular forms of expreſſion: neither do any of the texts which you afterward cite. As to the doctrine we are agreed.

Ibid. "THE righteouſneſs of GOD ſignifies, the righteouſneſs which God-man wrought out." No. It ſignifies GOD's method of juſtifying ſinners.

P. 260. "THE victims figured the expiation by Chriſt's death, the cloathing with ſkins, the imputation of his righteouſneſs." That does not appear. Did not the one rather figure our juſtification, the other, our ſanctification?

Ibid. ALMOST every text quoted in this and the following letter, in ſupport of that particular form of expreſſion, is diſtorted above meaſure from the plain, obvious meaning, which is pointed out by the context. I ſhall inſtance in a few, and juſt ſet down their true meaning, without any farther remarks.

Ibid. To ſhew unto man his uprightneſs. To convince him of GOD's juſtice, in ſo puniſhing him.

P. 261. HE ſhall receive the bleſſing—pardon—from the LORD, and righteouſneſs—holineſs—from the GOD of his ſalvation,—the GOD who ſaveth him both from the guilt and from the power of ſin.

Ibid. I WILL make mention of thy righteouſneſs only.—— Of thy mercy. So the word frequently means in the Old Teſtament. So it unqueſtionably means in that text, In (or by) thy righteouſneſs ſhall they be exalted.

P. 262. ZION ſhall be redeemed with judgment—after ſevere puniſhment—and her converts with righteouſneſs—— with the tender mercy of GOD, following that puniſhment.

Ibid. IN (or through) the LORD I have righteouſneſs and ſtrength, juſtification and ſanctification. P. 69. He hath clothed me with the garments of ſalvation,—ſaved me from the guilt and power of ſin: both of which are again expreſſed by, He hath covered me with the robe of righteouſneſs.

Ibid. MY righteouſneſs——my mercy——ſhall not be aboliſhed.

P. 263. To make reconciliation for iniquity—to atone for all our ſins,—and to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs, ſpotleſs holineſs into our ſouls. And this righteouſneſs is not human, but divine. It is the gift and the work of GOD.

Ibid. THE LORD our righteouſneſs—The author both of our juſtification and ſanctification.

P. 266. "WHAT righteouſneſs ſhall give us peace at the laſt day, inherent or imputed?" Both. Chriſt died for us and lives in us, that we may have boldneſs in the day of judgment.

LETTER V. p. 267. That have obtained like precious faith through the righteouſneſs—the mercy—of our LORD. Seek ye the kingdom of GOD and his righteouſneſs—the holineſs which ſprings from GOD reigning in you.

Ibid. THEREIN is revealed the righteouſneſs of GOD—GOD's method of juſtifying ſinners.

P. 268. "WE eſtabliſh the law, as we expect no ſalvation without a perfect conformity to it—namely, by Chriſt." Is not this a mere quibble? and a quibble, which, after all the laboured evaſions of Witſius and a thouſand more, does totally make void the law? But not ſo does St Paul teach. According to him, Without holineſs, perſonal holineſs, no man ſhall ſee the LORD. None who is not himſelf conformed to the law of GOD here, ſhall ſee the LORD in glory.

THIS is the grand, palpable objection to that whole ſcheme. It directly makes void the law. It makes thouſands content to live and die tranſgreſſors of the law, becauſe Chriſt fulfilled it for them. Therefore though I believe, he hath lived and died for me, yet I would ſpeak very tenderly and ſparingly of the former, (and never, ſeparately from the latter) even as ſparingly as do the ſcriptures, for fear of this dreadful conſequence.

though

P. 268. "THE gift of righteouſneſs muſt ſignify a righteouſneſs not their own." Yes, it ſignifies the righteouſneſs or holineſs, which GOD gives to and works in them.

P. 269. "THE obedience of one is Chriſt's actual performance of the whole law." So here his paſſion is fairly left out! Whereas his becoming obedient unto death, that is, dying for man, is certainly the chief part, if not the whole which is meant by that expreſſion.

Ibid. "THAT the righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in us—That is, by our repreſentative in our nature. Amazing! But this, you ſay, "agrees with the tenor of the apoſtle's arguing. For he is demonſtrating we cannot be juſtified by our own conformity to the law." No: not here. He is not ſpeaking here of the cauſe of our juſtification, but the fruits of it. Therefore that unnatural ſenſe of his words does not at all "agree with the tenor of his arguing."

Ibid. "I TOTALLY deny the criticiſm on δικαιοσυνη and δικαιωμα, and cannot conceive on what authority it is founded. O how deep an averſion to inward holineſs does this ſcheme naturally create?

P. 270. "THE righteouſneſs they attained could not be any perſonal righteouſneſs." Certainly it was. It was implanted as well as imputed.

Ibid. "FOR inſtruction in righteouſneſs, in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt." Was there ever ſuch a comment before? The plain meaning is, For training up in holineſs of heart and life.

P. 271. He ſhall convince the world of righteouſneſs—That I am not a ſinner, but innocent and holy.

Ibid. "THAT we might be made the righteouſneſs of GOD in him. Not intrinſically, but imputatively." Both the one and the other. GOD, through him, firſt accounts and then makes us righteous. Accordingly,

P. 272. THE righteouſneſs which is of GOD by faith, is both imputed and inherent.

P. 273. "MY faith fixes on both the meritorious life and atoning death of Chriſt." Here we clearly agree. Hold then to this, and never talk of the former without the latter. If you do, you cannot ſay, "Here we are expoſed to no hazard." Yes, you are to an exceeding great one; even the hazard of living and dying without holineſs. And then we are loſt for ever.

THE ſixth letter contains an admirable account of the earth and its atmoſphere, and comprizes abundance of ſenſe in a narrow compaſs, and expreſſed in beautiful language.

P. 279. GEMS have "a ſeat on the virtuous fair one's breaſt." I cannot reconcile this with St Paul. He ſays, Not with pearls; by a parity of reaſon, not with diamonds. But in all things I perceive, you are too favourable, both to the deſire of the fleſh and the deſire of the eye. You are a gentle caſuiſt as to every ſelf-indulgence which a plentiful fortune can furniſh.

P. 280, 1. "OUR Saviour's obedience"—O ſay, with the good old Puritans, our Saviour's death or merits. We ſwarm with Antinomians on every ſide. Why are you at ſuch pains to increaſe their number?

P. 284. MY mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy righteouſneſs and thy ſalvation.—Thy mercy which brings my ſalvation.

THE eighth letter is an excellent deſcription of the ſupreme greatneſs of Chriſt. I do not obſerve one ſentence in it, which I cannot chearfully ſubſcribe to.

THE ninth letter, containing a deſcription of the ſea, with various inferences deduced therefrom, is likewiſe a maſter-piece, for juſtneſs of ſentiment, as well as beauty of language. But I doubt whether "mere ſhrimps," P. 214. be not too low an expreſſion; and whether you might not as well have ſaid nothing of "cod, the ſtanding repaſt of Lent;" or concerning "the exquiſite reliſh of turbot, or the deliciouſneſs of ſturgeon," p. 299. Are not ſuch obſervations beneath the dignity of a miniſter of Chriſt? I have the ſame doubt concerning what is ſaid (p. 303, 4.) of "delicately-flavoured tea, finely-ſcented coffee; the friendly bowl, the pyramid of Italian figs, and the piſtacia-nut of Aleppo." Beſide that the mentioning theſe in ſuch a manner is a ſtrong encouragement of luxury and ſenſuality. And does the world need this? the Engliſh in particular?—Si non inſaniunt ſatis ſua ſponte, inſtiga.

LETTER 10. P. 306. "Thoſe treaſures which ſpring from the imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs." Not a word of his atoning blood? Why do ſo many men love to ſpeak of his righteouſneſs, rather than his atonement? I fear, becauſe it affords a fairer excuſe for their own unrighteouſneſs. To cut off this, is it not better to mention both together? at leaſt never to name the former without the latter?

P. 310. "FAITH is a perſuaſion that Chriſt has ſhed his blood for me, and fulfilled all righteouſneſs in my ſtead." I can by no means ſubſcribe to this definition. There are hundreds, yea thouſands of true believers, who never once thought, one way or the other, of Chriſt's fulfilling all righteouſneſs in their ſtead. I perſonally know many who to this very hour have no idea of it; and yet have each of them a divine evidence and conviction, Chriſt loved me and gave himſelf for me. This is St Paul's account of faith: and it is ſufficient. He that thus believes, is juſtified.

Ibid. "IT is a ſure means of purifying the heart, and never fails to work by love." It ſurely purifies the heart —if we abide in it: but not if we draw back to perdition. It never fails to work by love, while it continues; but if itſelf fail, farewell both love and good works.

"FAITH is the hand which receives all that is laid up in Chriſt." Conſequently, if we make ſhipwreck of the faith, how much ſo ever is laid up in Chriſt, from that hour we receive nothing.

LETTER 11. P. 311. "FAITH in the imputed righteouſneſs of Chriſt, is a fundamental principle in the goſpel." If ſo, what becomes of all thoſe who think nothing about imputed righteouſneſs? How many who are full of faith and love, if this be true, muſt periſh everlaſtingly?

P. 314. "THY hands muſt urge the way of the deadly weapon, through the ſhivering fleſh, till it be plunged in the throbbing heart." Are not theſe deſcriptions far too ſtrong? may they not occaſion unprofitable reaſonings in many readers?

Ne puerum coram populo Medea trucidet.

Ibid. "How can he juſtify it to the world?" Not at all. Can this then juſtify his faith to the world?

P. 316. "YOU take the certain way to obtain comfort; the righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt." What, without the atonement? Strange fondneſs for an unſcriptural, dangerous mode of expreſſion!

Ibid. "So the merits of Chriſt are derived to all the faithful." Rather the fruits of the Spirit: which are likewiſe plainly typified by the oil in Zechariah's viſion.

P. 317. "HAS the law any demand? It muſt go to him for ſatisfaction. Suppoſe, "Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf." Then I am not obliged to love my neighbour. Chriſt has ſatisfied the demand of the law for me. Is not this the very quinteſſence of Antinomianiſm?

P. 218. "THE righteouſneſs wrought out by Jeſus Chriſt, is wrought out for all his people, to be the cauſe of their juſtification, and the purchaſe of their ſalvation. The righteouſneſs is the cauſe, the purchaſe." So the death of Chriſt is not ſo much as named! "For all his people." But what becomes of all other people? They muſt inevitably periſh for ever. The die was caſt or ever they were in being. The doctrine to pass them by, has

Consign'd their unborn souls to hell; could sooner be a Turk, a Deist, yea an Atheist, than could believe this. It is less absurd to deny the very being of GOD, than to make him an almighty tyrant.
And damn'd them from their mother's womb!

P. 319. "THE whole world and all its seasons, are rich with our Creator's goodness. His tender mercies are over all his works." Are they over the bulk of mankind? Where is his goodness to the non-elect? How are his tender mercies over them? "His temporal blessings are given to them." But are they to them blessings at all? Are they not all curses? Does not GOD know they are? that they will only increase their damnation? Does not he design they should? And this you call goodness! this is tender mercy!

P. 320. "MAY we not discern pregnant proofs of goodness, in each individual object?" No; on your scheme, not a spark of it, in this world or the next, to the far greater part of the work of his own hands!

P. 324. "Is GOD a generous benefactor to the meanest animals, to the lowest reptiles? And will he deny my friend what is necessary to his present comfort, and his final acceptance?" Yea, will he deny it to any soul that he has made? Would you deny it to any, if it were in your power?

But if you lov'd whom GOD abhorr'd,
The servant were above his LORD.

P. 325. THE wedding garment here means holiness.

Ibid. "THIS is his tender complaint, They will not come unto me!" Nay, that is not the case; they cannot. He himself has decreed, not to give them that grace without which their coming is impossible!

P. 326. "THE grand end which GOD promises in all his favourable dispensations to fallen man, is to demonstrate the sovereignty of his grace." Not so: to impart happiness to his creatures, is his grand end herein. "Barely to demonstrate his sovereignty," is a principle of action fit for the great Turk, not the most high GOD.

Ibid. "GOD hath pleasure in the prosperity of his servants. He is a boundless ocean of good." Nay, that ocean is far from boundless, if it wholly passes by nine-tenths of mankind.

Ibid. "YOU cannot suppose GOD would enter into a fresh covenant with a rebel." I both suppose and know he did. "GOD made the new covenant with Christ, and charged him with the performance of the conditions." I deny both these assertions, which are the central point wherein Calvinism and Antinomianism meet. "I have made a covenant with my chosen." —Namely, with David my servant. So GOD himself explains it.

P. 332. "HE will wash you in the blood which atones, and invest you with the righteousness which justifies." Why should you thus continually put asunder, what GOD has joined.

P. 360. "GOD himself at the last day pronounces them righteous, because they are interested in the obedience of the Redeemer." Rather, because they are washed in his blood, and renewed by his Spirit.

UPON the whole, I cannot but wish, that the plan of these dialogues had been executed in a different manner. Most of the grand truths of Christianity are herein both explained and proved with great strength and clearness. Why was any thing intermixed, which could prevent any serious Christian's recommending them to all mankind? any thing which must necessarily render them exceptionable, to so many thousands of the children of GOD? In practical writings I studiously abstain from the very shadow of controversy. Nay, even in controversial, I do not knowingly write one line, to which any but my opponent would object. For opinions shall I destroy the work of GOD? then am I a bigot indeed. Much more, if I would not drop any mode of expression, rather than offend either Jew or Gentile, or the church of GOD. I am,

With great sincerity,
Dear Sir,
Your affectionate brother and servant,
J. W.

I have but one thing more to add, which is, concerning the seasonableness of the following publication. It may, perhaps, be thought a needless revival of a dispute, which happened long ago, and which is now probably forgotten. In answer to which, I can assure the reader, that the above is printed from an edition of the Preservative, now on sale at the Foundary. The seasonableness of this publication is therefore apparent; for though my brother died December 25, 1758, the controversy did by no means die with him, but still subsists in the daily publication and sale of the Preservative, which also comes with a special * recommendation from Mr Wesley, into the hands of all his preachers, to be by them first "carefully read, then to be recommended and explained to the several societies where they labour." So that the controversy is, in the most effectual manner, daily and hourly kept alive by Mr Wesley himself. This proves very sufficiently the seasonableness, and, as things have happened, the expediency, of the present appearance of the following letters in public. How pertinent an answer they contain to Mr Wesley's objections, is now to be left to the consideration of the candid reader.

Miles's-Lane,
December 5, 1764.

W. HERVEY.

* See the last paragraph of a tract, entitled, Reasons against a separation from the church of England. Printed also in the Preservative, p. 237.

LETTERS to the Rev. Mr JOHN WESLEY.

LETTER I.

REV. SIR,

I Received the letter you mention, containing remarks on the dialogues between Theron and Aſpaſio. As, after a careful peruſal, I ſaw very little reaſon to alter my ſentiments, I laid aſide your epiſtle without returning an anſwer, in hopes that my ſilence (which it ſeems you miſtook for obſtinacy) would moſt emphatically ſpeak my advice; which, had it been expreſſed more plainly, would have been delivered in the apoſtle's words, That ye ſtudy, or make it your ambition, to be quiet *.

Since you have, by printing theſe remarks, ſummoned me, though reluctant, to the bar of the public, it ſhould ſeem, that I ought not to diſcredit the truth once delivered to the ſaints, by a timid ſilence; and I am the more willing to anſwer for myſelf, as I have now the privilege of an unprejudiced judge, and an impartial jury.——If my defence ſhould be loſt on my opponent, it may poſſibly make ſome uſeful impreſſions on the court, and candid audience. However, I will not abſolutely deſpair of convincing Mr Weſley himſelf, becauſe it is written, Give admonition to a wiſe man, and he will yet be wiſer †. On ſome very momentous and intereſting points, I may probably be a little more copious than the ſtrict laws of argument demand, in order to exhibit ſome of the great truths of the goſpel, in ſo clear a light, that he may run who readeth them; in ſo amiable and inviting a light, that the believer may rejoice in them, and the ſinner may long for them. For ſuch digreſſions, I promiſe myſelf an eaſy pardon, both from yourſelf and the reader.

Thus you open the debate; "In the ſecond dialogue, "is not the deſcription often too laboured, the language "too ſtiff and affected?" I muſt confeſs, Sir, this animadverſion ſeems to be as juſt, as the praiſe which you have here and elſewhere beſtowed, appears to be laviſh: the former, if not more pleaſing, may be no leſs ſerviceable than the latter. For both I acknowledge myſelf your debtor; and if ever I attempt any thing more in the capacity of an author, I will be ſure to keep my eye fixed on the caution you have given.

I am ſorry that the next words bring on a complaint, ſo cloſe to my acknowledgment. "You cite the pages "according to the Dublin edition, having wrote the "rough draught of what follows in Ireland." But ſhould you not, in complaiſance to your readers on this ſide the water, have referred to the pages of the Engliſh edition? For want of ſuch reference, there is hardly diſtinction enough, in ſome places, to know which are your words, and which are Aſpaſio's.——Should you not alſo, in juſtice to the author, before you tranſcribed the rough draught for the preſs, have conſulted the laſt edition of his work? Which you well knew was not the copy, from which the Iriſh impreſſion was taken, yet might reaſonably ſuppoſe to be the leaſt inaccurate.

When I read your next paragraph, I am ſtruck with reverence, I am aſhamed and almoſt aſtoniſhed, at the littleneſs of the preceding obſervations. Stiffneſs of ſtyle, and a thouſand ſuch trifles, what are they all compared with juſtification before the infinite and immortal GOD? This is a ſubject that commands our moſt awful regard, a bleſſing that ſhould engage our whole attention. As this is the grand article to come under our conſideration, I would deſire to maintain an inceſſant dependance on the divine SPIRIT, that my thoughts may be influenced, and my pen guided by the wiſdom which cometh from above; that I may neither pervert the truth, by any erroneous repreſentations, nor diſhonour it by an unchriſtian temper. It would be eaſy to make uſe of bitter ſatire, and diſdainful irony, the contemptuous ſneer, or the indignant frown.——And indeed, Sir, you have laid yourſelf open to every attack of this kind; but theſe are not the weapons of a Chriſtian's warfare.

—— —— Non defenſoribus iſtis.

We are to give a reaſon of the hope that is in us, with meekneſs and fear; meekneſs, with regard to thoſe who interrogate or oppoſe us; fear, with regard to HIM, whoſe cauſe we plead, and whoſe eye is ever upon us. "Is juſtification," you ſay, "more or leſs, than GOD's "pardoning and accepting a ſinner, through the merits "of CHRIST?" I ſomewhat wonder, Sir, that you ſhould aſk this queſtion, when it is profeſſedly anſwered by Aſpaſio, who has preſented you with a very circumſtantial definition of juſtification, explaining it, eſtabliſhing it, and obviating ſeveral objections advanced againſt it. If you would animadvert with ſpirit and force, or indeed to any conſiderable purpoſe, ſhould you not lay open the impropriety of this definition, ſhewing from reaſon and ſcripture, that it is neither accurate nor orthodox?

At page 128. the reader may ſee Aſpaſio's account of juſtification, and find the words imputation and righteouſneſs of CHRIST, particularly explained; the latter denoting, "all the various inſtances of his active and paſ-"ſive obedience;" accordingly it is affirmed (page 128.) "The puniſhment we deſerved, he endures; the obe-"dience which we owed, he fulfils."——What Aſpaſio here profeſſes to underſtand by the righteouſneſs of CHRIST, the reader is particularly requeſted to bear in his memory, that he be not miſled by Mr Weſley, who often forgets it, and complains when the righteouſneſs of CHRIST is mentioned, that his penal ſufferings are quite omitted. I would not wiſh, Sir, to have a plainer proof, that you do not diſcard the active, than Aſpaſio has hereby given, that he never excludes the paſſive.

By your queſtion, you hint a diſlike, yet without informing us what it is, or wherein Aſpaſio's illuſtrations and proofs are deficient. You propoſe, and only propoſe, another definition. Well then, to differ from you as little as poſſible, nay, to agree with you, as far as truth will permit, ſince you are ſo loath to admit of our repreſentation, we will accede to yours; eſpecially if it be ſomewhat explained, and a little improved. For indeed the words, in their preſent form, are rather too vague to conſtitute any definition. Pardoning and accepting may happen to be only diverſified expreſſions of the ſame idea. The merits of CHRIST will certainly comport, either with Popiſh or Socinian notions. It abounds in writers of the former ſort, and it is to be found in the latter. Therefore, to be more † Prov. ix. 9. The orginal phraſe is only מן Give, which may ſignify, Give admonition, as well as (what our verſion has ſuppoſed) inſtruction.

* 1 Theſſ. iv. 11. Φιλοτιμεισθαι, a beautiful word, rich with meaning, and not adequately tranſlated by Make it your ambition, ſtill more inadequately by our common verſion.

more explicit,—by pardoning, I mean, GOD's acquitting a ſinner from guilt of every kind, and of every degree. By accepting, I mean ſtill more, GOD's receiving him into full favour, conſidering and treating him as righteous, yea perfectly and glorioufly righteous.——By the merits of CHRIST, I would always be ſuppoſed to ſignify, his active and paſſive obedience, all that he wrought, and all that he ſuffered, for the ſalvation of mankind *. Intereſted in all this, the believer enters into the divine preſence, and ſtands before the divine MAJESTY.—— Not like David's ambaſſadors, ſtealing themſelves into Jericho; ſafe indeed, but with the marks of Ammonitiſh inſults on their perſons: he rather enters like that illuſtrious exile, Joſeph, into the preſence of Pharaoh, when his priſon-garments were taken from him, and he was arrayed in veſtures of fine linen, meet for the ſhoulders of thoſe who appear before kings. With this explication I am content that your definition take place of mine †. I would farther obſerve, that you have dropt the word imputed, which inclines me to ſuſpect, you would caſhier the thing. But let me aſk, Sir, how can we be juſtified by the merits of CHRIST, unleſs they are imputed to us? Would the payment made by a ſurety, procure a diſcharge for the debtor, unleſs it was placed to his account? It is certain, the ſacrifices of old could not make an atonement, unleſs they were imputed to each offerer reſpectively. This was an ordinance ſettled by JEHOVAH himſelf ‡. And were not the ſacrifices, was not their imputation typical of CHRIST, and things pertaining to CHRIST? the former prefiguring his all-ſufficient expiation, the latter ſhadowing forth the way whereby we are partakers of its efficacy. The righteouſneſs (not the righteouſneſs and obedience, Aſpaſio ſpeaks otherwiſe) which CHRIST performed is reckoned by GOD as our own. This you call an ambiguous expreſſion; but, if conſidered in conjunction with the foregoing and following enlargements, I ſhould think it can hardly deſerve the charge. Aſpaſio all along labours to be underſtood. In this place he more fully opens his meaning, by giving another view of the nature, and by ſpecifying the effects of imputation. The nature,—it being the ſame as placing to our account ſomething not our own ‖. The effects,—CHRIST's righteouſneſs, thus placed to our account, being as effectual for obtaining our ſalvation, as if it was our own perſonal qualification §. To the latter you expreſsly agree, to the former you make no objection: to the whole doctrine, thus explained, you elſewhere declare your aſſent.

If in all this we may depend upon you, Sir, muſt we not feel an alarming ſhock at your adjuration in the next paragraph?

"For CHRIST's ſake do not." What? ſurely nothing leſs can excite or juſtify this vehement exclamation, but the obtruſion of ſome doctrine, that is moſt glaringly falſe and abſolutely damnable. Shall we have ſuch a ſolemn firing, ſuch a thunder of exploſion, only to ſilence a particular phraſe? In another perſon this would look like profane levity; in Mr Weſley, the ſofteſt appellation we can give it, is idle pomp.——All this clamour merely againſt words! words too, the explication of which, and the doctrine contained in them, yourſelf allow. Dear Sir, what is a word or a phraſe? Can it do either good or harm, but as conveying right or wrong ſentiments? Will the mere pronouncing or hearing of a word (be it abracadabra, or higgajon ſelah, or imputed) without its idea, poiſon the principles of men, and induce them to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs? As you have been firing without an enemy, (Aſpaſio is owned for an ally,) ſo you ſeem to be triumphing without a victory. Aſpaſio's charity for thoſe who are diſguſted at the expreſſion, and have no explicit knowledge of the doctrine, is guarded by the words immediately following—"yet live under the belief of the truth, and "in the exerciſe of the duty," as well as by the annexed deſcription of the perſons, and their temper; who are far enough from fancying, that if they may but be pardoned for the ſake of CHRIST, they can obtain the divine favour, and a title to future happineſs, by their own good behaviour. Hence it will appear, that he has been too cautious, to part with the very thing for which he is contending. And this is more abundantly evident from the cloſe of his charitable paragraph, wherein, though he allows ſuch people to be ſafe; yet he laments their embarraſs, and their deficiency in light, ſtrength, and conſolation. "The phraſe is not ſpiritual." Suppoſe it were not, this would afford but a ſlight reaſon, for ſo paſſionate an outcry: however, this is certain, St Paul uſes the phraſe, GOD imputeth *, and that righteouſneſs might be imputed †. Now, is it poſſible, that there ſhould be righteouſneſs imputed, yet not an imputed righteouſneſs? To aſſert this muſt argue either a wonderful ſubtile refinement, or an exceeding ſtrong prejudice. "It is not neceſſary."——Perhaps ſo. But is it not neceſſary Mr Weſley ſhould either inform us, what ſenſe of the phraſe it is, which he apprehends ſo likely to miſlead men, or elſe, inſtead of exclaiming againſt Aſpaſio, ſhould join all his force with him, in defending that ſenſe which they both eſpouſe? "It has done im-"menſe hurt."——When we are made ſenſible of the immenſe, or indeed of any real, hurt done by the phraſe, imputed; when we ſee thoſe who diſlike it, cordially warm for the ſentiment expreſſed in other words, we will then conſent to reſign it for its equivalent, reckoned as our own,—placed to our account,—as effectual as if our own perſonal qualification. Till then we muſt guard the caſket for the ſake of the jewel. We prefer the word imputed, becauſe it ſays more at once, than any other term we know; and becauſe we are aware of a common practice uſed in all ages, by the oppoſers of ſound doctrine.—— They pretend a zeal only againſt the phraſe, that by bringing this into diſuſe, they may cauſe that to be forgotten. Shall we not then diſpute for imputed righteouſneſs? Yes, Sir, we muſt diſpute, both for the doctrine and for the phraſe, ſince there are perſons who openly ſtrike at the one, and we fear with a view to ſupplant the other. Shall we not diſpute for imputed righteouſneſs,—though the words are a grand peculiarity of the ſcriptures, and the thing the very ſpirit and eſſence of the goſpel? Not diſpute for that which is better to us ſinners than all worlds, better than our hearts could wiſh, or our thoughts conceive; which in ſhort is the beſt, the

* The merits of CHRIST is certainly an ambiguous phraſe, and what I can by no means admire; but as it occurs in Mr Weſley's letter, and in many valuable writers, I have, led by their example, uſed it in the following debate, ſtill underſtanding it, and ſtill uſing it, in the ſenſe explained above.

† To gratify Mr Weſley, I have admitted his phraſe, "the merits of CHRIST," though, as it is a phraſe of dubious import, and what almoſt any ſect or hereſy will ſubſcribe, I ſhould much ſooner chuſe to abide by Aſpaſio's language. And why ſhould we not all ſpeak with the ſcriptures? Why ſhould we not uſe the expreſſions of the apoſtle? He ſays, juſtified by the blood of CHRIST; he ſays, made righteous by the obedience of CHRIST. When therefore we ſay, Sinners are pardoned and accepted through the blood, and through the obedience of CHRIST, we have a warrant for our doctrine, which is indiſputable; and a precedent for our language, which is unexceptionable.

‡ Lev. vii. 18. If any of the fleſh of the ſacrifice of his peace-offerings be eaten at all on the third day, it ſhall not be accepted, neither ſhall it be imputed unto him that offereth it. It ſhall not be accepted. Why? for this reaſon, becauſe it ſhall not be imputed. A plain indication, that the latter is the cauſe of the former. That without imputation, whether it be of the typical or real ſacrifice, the blood of the beaſt, or the death of CHRIST, there is no acceptance.

‖ Theron and Aſpaſio, p. 128. § Ibid.

* Rom. iv. 6. † Rom. iv. 11.

nobleſt,

nobleſt, the completeſt gift, that GOD himſelf can beſtow.

When ſuch a gift, and ſuch a righteouſneſs is the ſubject of diſputation, we muſt not give place, no, not for an hour: we muſt maintain its matchleſs excellency, ſo long as we have any breath, or any being. We muſt ſay, in direct oppoſition to your fervent but unadviſed zeal, "For CHRIST's ſake," let us contend earneſtly for imputed righteouſneſs; becauſe it is the brighteſt jewel in his mediatorial crown. "For the ſake of immortal "ſouls," let us hold faſt and hold forth this precious truth; becauſe it yields the ſtrongeſt conſolation to the guilty conſcience, and furniſhes the moſt endearing, as well as the moſt prevailing inducement to univerſal obedience.

"To aſcribe pardon to CHRIST's paſſive, eternal life "to his active obedience, is fanciful rather than judici- "ous." The remark is juſt; not ſo the quotation; Aſpaſio is ſomewhat diſfigured by your diſtortion of his features; he limps a little, by your diſlocation of a limb. There is, in his language, guard enough to check every attempt, either to diſſolve the union, or ſever the coagency, of the different parts of our LORD's righteouſneſs.

But let us give Aſpaſio a fair hearing. Thus he expreſſes himſelf, "To divide them (the active and paſſive righte- "ouſneſs) into detached portions, independent on each "other, ſeems to be fanciful rather than judicious." To divide into detached portions, is more than to diſtinguiſh between the one and the other. The latter Aſpaſio practiſes, the former he diſavows. "Independent of "each other,"—do theſe words ſtand for nothing? Have they no meaning, that here your ſhew them no regard, and never recollect them throughout your whole epiſtle? Had you honoured them with any degree of notice, ſeveral of your objections muſt have been precluded; and if the more candid reader pleaſes to bear them in memory, ſeveral of your objections will, at the very firſt view, fall to the ground. Beſides, the perſon who tells us, the caſe ſeems to be ſo, is not ſo peremptory, as he who roundly affirms it to be ſo; the former is all that Aſpaſio has advanced. Though I am willing that you ſhould correct his ſtyle, yet I muſt beg of you, Sir, not to make him quite ſo poſitive; let him have the ſatisfaction of being modeſt, even where he has the misfortune, in your opinion at leaſt, to be erroneous.

"CHRIST's univerſal obedience from his birth to "his death, is the one foundation of my hope," ſays Aſpaſio. To which you aſſent, and with a laudable vehemence, reply, "This is unqueſtionably right." I wiſh, Sir, you would ponder your words before you ſpeak, at leaſt before you print, that there may be ſomething fixed and certain, on which we may depend, and by which you will abide. One would think, after this acknowledgment, pronounced with ſuch an air of ſolemnity, you could never ſo far forget yourſelf, as to open your mouth againſt the obedience, the univerſal obedience of CHRIST, which ſurely muſt include both what he wrought, and what he ſuffered. You confeſs it to be your foundation,—the foundation of your hope, the only foundation of your hope; can you then, without the moſt amazing inconſiſtency, either wiſh to ſecrete the doctrine, or offer to diſcountenance the expreſſion?

"There is no manner of need to make the imputa- "tion of CHRIST's active righteouſneſs a ſeparate head "of diſcourſe."—No manner of need, even though you declare, that this active righteouſneſs, together with the expiatory death, is the only foundation of your hope! Can you think it poſſible to treat of ſuch a topic too particularly, too diſtinctly, too minutely?——Aſpaſio has ſhewn the need, or aſſigned the reaſon for this method of handling the ſubject; becauſe it ſets the fulneſs of our LORD's merit in the cleareſt light, and gives the completeſt honour to GOD's holy law.—Have you alleged any thing to diſprove, or ſo much as to invalidate his plea? Ought not this to have been done before your aſſertion can be valid, or even decent?

Beſides, are there not perſons in the world, who fondly imagine, that if they can but have pardon through CHRIST, they ſhall by their own doings ſecure eternal life? When ſuch perſons are in danger of overlooking the active obedience of the REDEEMER, why ſhould you not for their ſakes allow us to make the imputation of his righteouſneſs "a ſeparate head of diſ- "courſe?" That, ſeeing the tranſcendent perfection of CHRIST's work, they may ceaſe from confiding in their own *; leſt it be ſaid to them another day, I will declare thy righteouſneſs, and thy works, that for the grand purpoſe of juſtification they ſhall not profit thee †.

We muſt therefore take leave to dwell upon the active righteouſneſs of our LORD; we muſt diſplay its perfection, in oppoſition to all the vain pretenſions of human qualifications, endeavours, or attainments; we muſt demonſtrate, that as the heavens are higher than the earth, ſo is this divine obedience higher than all the works of the children of men; yea, ſo tranſcendent in itſelf, and abſolutely perfect, as to be incapable of any augmentation. All the good deeds of all the ſaints, could they be added to it, would not increaſe in any degree its juſtifying efficacy; it is like all the other works of GOD, concerning which we are told, nothing can be added to them. This brings to my remembrance a moſt beautiful and ſublime repreſentation, which you muſt have read in the evangelical prophet; Every valley ſhall be exalted, and every mountain and hill ſhall be made low, and the crooked ſhall be made ſtraight, and the rough places plain, and the glory of the LORD ſhall be revealed, and all fleſh ſhall ſee it together. Here mountains are demoliſhed, valleys are elevated, and the earth is levelled into a ſpacious plain, on purpoſe to accompliſh what Mr Weſley ſuppoſes unneceſſary; on purpoſe to give the moſt clear, full, ſtriking view of the great REDEEMER, of his wonderful perſon, and glorious work; that he alone may be diſtinguiſhed and exalted; may walk majeſtic and conſpicuous through the midſt of mankind, as being ſingly and completely ſufficient for the recovery of ſinners. That all fleſh, not Jews only, but Gentiles alſo; not men of reputation only, but the meaneſt of mortals, the moſt infamous of wretches, may together ſee his glory, may on equal ground, without any pre-eminence of one above another, contemplate and partake of his precious death and perfect righteouſneſs, which are the one object of divine complacency, and the ſovereign glory of the LORD REDEEMER. According to the import of this magnificent piece of imagery, all the differences that ſubſiſt between one man and another are aboliſhed; nothing but CHRIST and his complete work are propoſed, as the cauſe of juſtification and the ground of hope. Faith beholds nothing but the divine JESUS; it never inquires, What have I done? what have I ſuffered? but what has that moſt illuſtrious perſonage done, and what ſuffered? What has JEHOVAH manifeſted in our nature, wrought for the benefit and redemption of ſinners?——Faith is never weary of viewing or reviewing either the active or paſſive obedience of IMMANUEL. Faith will declare, that neither of theſe points can be ſet forth in too ſtrong or too recommending a light. Faith is ever deſiring to ſee more and more of the SAVIOUR's worthineſs, that the ſoul may rejoice in his excellency, and be filled with all his fulneſs.

May you, dear Sir, abound in this faith, and live under ſuch views of GOD our SAVIOUR; then I flatter myſelf you will be diſſatisfied with your preſent opinion, and not be diſguſted at the freedom of ſpeech, uſed by

Your's, &c.

* Heb. iv. 10. † Iſ. lvii. 12.

LETTER II.

REV. SIR,

I Am particularly pleaſed at my entrance on this epiſtle, becauſe it preſents me with a view of Mr Weſley in very good humour. Inſtead of rebuking, he commends. He puts off the frown of cenſure, for the ſmile of approbation. I hope to follow the amiable example; to approve and applaud, where-ever opportunity offers, and truth permits. And though I ſhall be ſometimes obliged to oppoſe or refute; yet I ſhall do both with all the tenderneſs and lenity, which may conſiſt with a proper vindication of the truth.

"The third and fourth dialogues contain an admi-"rable illuſtration and confirmation of the great doc-"trine of CHRIST's ſatisfaction."—This is generouſly acknowledged. Yet even here it ſo unhappily falls out, that complaiſance gets the ſtart of judgment.—Did you advert, Sir, to the ſtate of the controverſy, or ſee the conſequence of Aſpaſio's arguing, you muſt either give up a favourite tenet, or elſe diſſent from his doctrine.

Aſpaſio maintains, that CHRIST's ſufferings were puniſhment; real, proper puniſhment. Now could CHRIST, an innocent perſon, be puniſhed, without bearing ſin; the very ſin of others? Could CHRIST, a divine perſon, bear the ſin of others, and not do it perfectly away! Or can they whoſe guilt was puniſhed in CHRIST, and whoſe ſin is perfectly done away by CHRIST, can they periſh eternally? But I forbear. Yourſelf, and the judicious reader will eaſily apprehend my meaning, and diſcern the point, to which theſe queſtions lead. All the benefit I propoſe by this remark, is, to convince Mr Weſley, that he is not incapable of miſtake;—that he has tripped a little, in what he commends, and therefore may poſſibly make a falſe ſtep, in what he condemns.

Unleſs I may be allowed to propoſe this additional advantage, the rectifying an impropriety in ſome people's apprehenſions, concerning our LORD's vicarious ſufferings. It is uſual to ſay, "He bore the puniſh-"ment, not the guilt; the penalty, not the fault." Which ſeems to be a diſtinction more ſcruptilous than judicious; anſwers no other end, but that of derogating from our REDEEMER's grace, and weakening the foundation of our hopes.

The guilt of ſin, I take to be what the apoſtle calls, ανομια the tranſgreſſion of the law. From hence ariſes the obligation to puniſhment. This guilt our LORD ſo truely bore, that he was no leſs liable to the arreſt of juſtice, and the infliction of vengeance, than if he himſelf had committed the moſt enormous crimes.——He bare, ſays the HOLY GHOST, the ſin of many. But puniſhment cannot be reckoned the ſame as ſin, any more than wages can be accounted the ſame as work. If then our LORD bore ſin itſelf, he muſt bear every thing criminal, that is included in it; no circumſtance of demerit aggravation excepted.

He bore the fault, therefore he makes us without fault in the ſight of GOD; and will preſent us faultleſs before the throne, with exceeding joy.——He bore the guilt;——therefore our LORD's ſufferings were real puniſhment, juſtly inflicted by the ſupreme JUDGE, and, on principles of juſtice, diſcharge us from all puniſhment whatever. He bore the filth;——Therefore he felt, what thoſe wretched ſouls endure, who die in their iniquities; his eternal FATHER forſook him, and hid his face from him as from an abominable object.

This renders our SAVIOUR's propitiation great, wonderful, glorious. Seeing this, believing this, we have nothing to fear. Conſcience is ſatisfied, and the accuſer of the brethren is ſilenced. Nothing can be laid to our charge by the righteous law, and nothing remains to awaken the indignation of the righteous JUDGE.——Whereas, if this was not done, we have reaſon to be terribly apprehenſive. If CHRIST bore not the guilt, then ſinners muſt bear it in their own perſons; if he took not away the filth, then it muſt lie on tranſgreſſors, and render them loathſome for ever. If the fault was not tranſferred to him, then it muſt abide upon us, and be our everlaſting ruin.

Neither does this doctrine in any degree detract from our SAVIOUR's dignity. It rather gives him the honour due unto his name, JESUS. As in the ſcales of a balance, the lower the one deſcends, the higher the other mounts; ſo the deeper our MEDIATOR's humiliation ſinks, to the more exalted height does his glory riſe. The more horrible the condition to which he ſubmitted, the more illuſtriouſly his goodneſs ſhines, and the more clearly the perfection of his work appears.

Satisfaction was made to the divine law, ſays Aſpaſio. "I do not remember any ſuch expreſſion in ſcripture," replies Mr Weſley.——But do you not remember this expreſſion in the epiſtle to the Galatians, CHRIST was made under the law? * Why was he made under the law, but to fulfill its precepts, and undergo its penalty? and is not this a ſatisfaction to its demands?

The truth is, the divine law was violated by our ſins. It was abſolutely impoſſible for us to make any reparation; therefore CHRIST in our nature and in our ſtead ſubmitted to its obligations, that he might magnify its injured authority, and render it in the higheſt degree venerable; might make even its tremendous ſanctions and rigorous requirements, the very baſis of grace, mercy, and peace.——Divinely-noble contrivance! unſpeakably-precious expedient! By this means, vengeance and forbearance have met together; wrath and love have kiſſed each other, in the redemption of ſinners. The law ſays, I am fulfilled. Juſtice ſays, I am ſatisfied. While both concur to expedite and aſcertain the ſalvation of a believer.

"This way of ſpeaking of the law, as a perſon in-"jured, and to be ſatisfied, ſeems hardly defenſible." Does not the apoſtle ſpeak of the law as a perſon? a perſon that liveth,† to whom ſome are married, and to whom others are dead? Aſpaſio will always think himſelf, and his manner of ſpeaking ſufficiently defenſible, ſo long as he has the apoſtolical practice for his precedent.

Having ſuch a precedent, he wants no other; otherwiſe he might plead the authority of Mr John Weſley; who, in his explanatory notes on the New Teſtament, ſays, "The law is here ſpoken of (by a common "figure) as a perſon, to which as to an huſband, life

* Gal. iv. 4. There is, I think, ſomething uncouth in this expreſſion, made under the law. Γενομενον 'tis true very well comports with both the clauſes, αι γυναικος ὑπ νομον. But in the Engliſh tranſlation, the participle might, not ungracefully, be varied, perhaps in ſome ſuch manner; The Son of GOD was made of a woman, and become ſubject to the law.

† Rom. vii. 1. 4. The word ζη at the end of the firſt verſe is ſpoken of the law, not of the man, as Mr Weſley and others have very juſtly obſerved. It ſhould therefore be tranſlated not he, but it.

" and death are aſcribed.*" And if the law be an huſband, may not an huſband be injured? may not an injured huſband inſiſt upon being ſatisfied?

" All the benefits of the new covenant are the pur-" chaſe of CHRIST's blood;" this is Aſpaſio's belief. To this you aſſent, " Surely they are."——With pleaſure I ſhould receive your ſuffrage, was I not afraid that this is your meaning; they are as the purchaſe of his blood, as not to have any dependence on, or any connection with, his moſt perfect obedience. I was alarmed by the cloſe of your laſt paragraph, and my ſuſpicions are increaſed by the following negative interrogation; " After this has been fully proved, where is the " need, where is the uſe of contending ſo ſtrenuouſly, " for the imputation of his righteouſneſs?"

Aſpaſio has informed you, Sir, in the ſecond dialogue. He has there ſhewn the advantage of unfolding, circumſtantially and copiouſly, this momentous truth.—To give you farther ſatisfaction, he has quoted the words of an eminent divine, of which the following are a part,——" Whoever rejects the doctrine of the " imputation of our SAVIOUR's righteouſneſs to " man, does, by ſo doing, reject the imputation of " man's ſin to our SAVIOUR, and all the conſequences " of it."——If you are not ſatisfied with Mr Staynoe's reaſons, you are remitted to St Paul. In Romans v. (a chapter of diſtinguiſhed dignity and importance) he teaches mankind, that CHRIST died for the ungodly; that we are juſtified through his blood, are ſaved from wrath by his death. After all this had been fully proved, where was the need, where was the uſe of inſiſting largely upon that obedience of ONE, by which many are made † righteous? or upon that righteouſneſs of ONE, which is imputed to many for juſtification of life? Yet this the inſpired writer evidently does.

Anſwer the foregoing queſtion, in behalf of the apoſtle, and you will anſwer it in behalf of Aſpaſio; or if you decline the office, give me leave, Sir, to anſwer it on behalf of them both. The blood of CHRIST is never conſidered as independent on, or detached from, the righteouſneſs of CHRIST. They united their bleſſed efficacy in accompliſhing the work of our redemption; we always look upon them as a grand and glorious aggregate, in their agency inſeparable, though in meditation diſtinguiſhable. Being thus diſtinguiſhable, at proper times, we meditate upon each diſtinctly. We diſplay each with all the particularity poſſible, and cannot but contend for the imputation of one, as well as of the other. The farther we dig into either of theſe ſpiritual mines, the greater fund of treaſures we diſcover. The more we glorify the SAVIOUR, the more we ſtrengthen faith, and the greater addition we make to our comfort, our peace, our joy.

Aſpaſio inquires, If CHRIST was our ſubſtitute as to penal ſuffering, why not as to juſtifying obedience? You reply,—" The former is expreſsly aſſerted in ſcrip-" ture, the latter is not expreſsly aſſerted there." A ſmall inaccuracy here, Sir! the former is no more a ſcripture expreſſion, than the latter; while the latter is no leſs the doctrine and ſenſe of ſcripture than the former.—A little piece of forgetfulneſs likewiſe! ſince you juſt now acknowledged, that " CHRIST's uni-" verſal obedience was the one foundation of your hope." But how can his obedience be any foundaton of your hope, if in this capacity he was not your ſubſtitute? Take away the circumſtance of ſubſtitution, and, there is no more ground for your reliance on the obedience of CHRIST, than for your reliance on the obedience of Gabriel. We are made the righteouſneſs of GOD, becauſe we are IN him, as our proxy and our head; becauſe he wrought the juſtifying righteouſneſs, not only in our nature, but in our name, not only as our benefactor, but as our repreſentative.

" As ſin and miſery have abounded through the firſt " Adam, mercy and grace have much more abounded " through the ſecond. So that now none have reaſon " to complain." Here indeed we have Aſpaſio's words, but in a patched and diſfigured condition. One part taken from page 181. and another wrenched from page 177. Let any one read the whole of thoſe paſſages, and judge whether they can be fairly applied to the doctrines of election or predeſtination. Yet Mr Weſley is reſolved at all adventures, with or without occaſion, to introduce theſe ſubjects of deep and perplexed diſputation. Therefore he replies, " No, not if the ſe-" cond Adam died for all, otherwiſe all for whom he " did not die, have great reaſon to complain."

Here, Sir, do you not force an inference from Aſpaſio's words, foreign to his deſign? He is ſpeaking of thoſe who betake themſelves to CHRIST, and are recovered through his righteouſneſs. Such perſons he particularly mentions. Of ſuch alone he diſcourſes; without conſidering the caſe of others, who, deſpiſing or neglecting the REDEEMER, reject the counſel of GOD againſt themſelves.——Would it not be as edifying to the reader, and as agreeable to your office, if you ſhould join with Aſpaſio in diſplaying the free, ſuperabundant, infinitely-rich grace of our GOD; altogether as becoming this, as to divert his aim, and retard his ſteps, when he is preſſing forwards to this prize of our high calling in CHRIST JESUS?

Aſpaſio's words are, " When we betake ourſelves to " CHRIST JESUS, we ſhall find, that, as ſin and " miſery have abounded, &c." Pleaſe to obſerve, Sir, how he limits his diſcourſe, conſequently is obliged to defend nothing, but what correſponds with ſuch limitation.

Had the Iſraelites any cauſe to be diſſatisfied with the proviſion made for their ſuſtenance and their cure, when the ſerpent of braſs was lifted up on the pole, and when the bread from heaven lay round about their tents? No more have ſinners any cauſe to think themſelves aggrieved, when the ſalvation of GOD is evidently ſet before them in the goſpel; is brought to their very door, in the preaching of the word, and they are allowed, importuned, commanded to receive it by faith. This is enough for me. Enough this for any tranſgreſſors, who want, not to gratify curioſity, but to inherit life.——If they, or you, Sir, chuſe to pry further, and to intrude into the divine ſecrets, I muſt leave you to yourſelves; ſaying, as I depart, *The ſecret things belong unto the LORD our GOD; but thoſe things which are revealed, belong unto us and our children.

" The whole world of believers."—" This is an ex-" preſſion which never occurs in ſcripture."—It affords me a kind of preſumptive proof, that ſolid objections are not at hand, when ſuch ſhadows are liſted into the ſervice.——I ſhould be under no pain if you could prove your charge, beyond all contradiction. To what would it amount? Why, that Aſpaſio, having occaſion to mention a certain topic, happened not to make uſe of the very ſyllables and letters made uſe of in ſcripture. And do you or I, Sir, in all our ſermons, journals, preſervatives, and Chriſtian libraries, undertake to uſe none but ſcriptural expreſſions? Had we done this, one benefit might indeed have accrued to the public. It would conſiderably have reduced our volumes.—But I trifle as well as Mr Weſley. You proceed to enforce your remonſtrance, by adding,—" Neither has the ex-" preſſion any countenance from ſcripture." I am really aſhamed to detain our readers any longer upon ſo trivial a point. Therefore what I am going to reply, is only a word to yourſelf. You, Sir, can tell who it is that affirms in a certain hymn;

For ev'ry Man
'Tis finiſh'd, 'tis paſt—

* See Explan. notes, Rom. vii. 1.

† Rom. v. 19.

* Deut. xxix. 29.

The world is forgiv'n
For JESUS's sake.

The world forgiven! What, all the world? every child of Adam; they who believe not on CHRIST and die in their sins? This you cannot mean; this you dare not assert; this, I think, no mortal can suppose. You yourself therefore, by "the world," must intend "the believing world;" and are you offended at Aspasio for commenting on your text? for expressing plainly what is implied in your own words?

In the LORD shall all the house of Israel be justified. This text Aspasio quotes, and acquiesces in the common version, upon which you animadvert. "It ought unquestionably to be rendered by or through the LORD." How hard is Aspasio's lot! If he does not use the exact language of scripture, he is criminal at your bar, witness the preceding objection; if he does use the exact language of scripture, as in the present instance, you indite him for an erroneous translation. So that it is next to impossible to escape your censure.

In the LORD, you affirm, is not the pure language of scripture, it is a wrong translation, "and ought unquestionably to be rendered by or through the LORD." Yet quisquis adhuc uno partam colit asse Minervam——Whoever has learned Hebrew no more than a month, will assure our English reader, that the prefix ב is the very first word in the Bible. Must it there be translated by or through the beginning?—If our young scholar have only his psalter, he can shew the same particle occurring three times within the first verse. In the counsel—in the way—in the seat.——Twice in the second verse; His delight is in the law—in his law will he exercise himself. Three times more in the remainder of the psalm, shall bring forth fruit in his season—shall not stand in judgment. Neither in the congregation of the righteous.——Now let the English reader judge for himself, whether the Hebrew prefix must "unquestionably be rendered" in all these places "by or "through." By or through his season! by or through the congregation! But I stop, there is no need to apply all the passages. Neither is there any need of critical skill in languages, to determine concerning any one of them. Common sense in this case is sufficiently qualified to be our critic and our arbitrator.——I only wish, Sir, you had produced the evidence for the corrected version. Then the public might have seen on which side the balance were likely to turn; and which were the most cogent logic, "Aspasio's doctrine is false, therefore "the translation is wrong; or the translation is fair, "therefore his doctrine is true."

By this time, I believe, the unlearned reader will begin to discern, what degree of credit is due to your criticisms upon the original, and to your alteration of the common version, when they are supported by nothing more, than your bare assertion.—I also begin to be apprehensive, that our canvassing the sense of words, and sifting the dead languages, will be no very agreeable entertainment to any reader. I will therefore for the future be more concise in the execution of this business; especially as I have here given a specimen of what might be done. I will try if it is not possible, to animate what would otherwise be dull, and to blend godly edifying with critical disquisition.

Ye are complete in him. With this translation also Mr Wesley finds fault. "The words literally rendered are, "Ye are filled with him."——I am ready to grant, that places may be found, where the preposition ἐν must be understood according to your sense. But then every one knows that this is not the native, obvious, literal meaning; rather a meaning swayed, influenced, moulded by the preceding or following word. The literal signification of ἐν αὐτῷ is as we have rendered it.——Nor is there the least occasion to depart from the received interpretation; it is suitable to the context, and to the scope of the whole epistle.

However, we will suppose your criticism to be just. Does this destroy or enervate Aspasio's argument? Would you have one meaning contradict or supplant the other? "Ye are filled with him, therefore ye are "not complete in him?" Does the former sense include or imply the latter? Can you, or I, or any one be filled with every requisite for our recovery and happiness, yet not be complete? It seems, therefore, you get nothing by this criticism, but the satisfaction of doing violence to the phrase, without any improvement of the sense, or any advantage to your cause.

"The whole passage (you affirm) relates to sanctifi-"cation, not to justification." Where is your proof, Sir? This we always expect. This Mr Wesley seldom, if ever, condescends to give. "Yes," he says, "any "unprejudiced reader may observe it." A strange kind of proof! reducible to no figure in logic, unless there be a figure styled presumption. Was I to answer for the unprejudiced reader, I think he would observe the very reverse. The words of the apostle are not a little forcible against your sense of the passage, as will appear from the transitive adverb also. The next and the subsequent verses, we allow, relate to sanctification; if this verse does the same, such is the manner of the apostle's reasoning, "In whom ye are sanctified, in whom also ye "are sanctified." Whereas, if the first clause denotes the justification of the Colossian converts through the righteousness of CHRIST, if the following periods describe their sanctification, as a consequence of this most happily operating privilege, then the reasoning is just, and the transition graceful. "In him ye are complete-"ly justified, in him also ye are truly sanctified."

The whole passage is calculated to teach us, that CHRIST is the fulness of our sufficiency. In him, and in him alone, there is enough to answer all the purposes of wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. ---It is intended likewise to admonish us, that we should rest satisfied with him alone, in opposition to all the fond inventions of men; who would introduce something else for the ground of our confidence, and the cause of our consolation, as though it was said;---

If indeed our LORD JESUS CHRIST had been an ordinary person, or merely a created being, ye might well be offended at my doctrine. Ye might then with some colour of reason seek to the maxims of philosophy for wisdom, or to the works of the law for righteousness. But CHRIST is an immensely-glorious person, for in him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.—— CHRIST is an incomparably-exalted sovereign,—for he is the head of all principalities and powers.——Yea, CHRIST is the supreme incomprehensible JEHOVAH; for in him dwelleth all the fulness of the GODHEAD bodily. Being therefore transplanted into him by faith, ye are complete. Partakers of him; ye have every blessing and all good. Thought cannot imagine, nor desire crave, any thing farther, greater, higher.

Matchless privilege! exalted felicity! O may the knowledge, the experimental knowledge of it, fill our hearts, as the waters cover the abyss of the sea! Then will we sing the hymn which once expressed your sentiments, and still expresses mine.

* Join earth and heav'n to bless
The LORD our righteousness.
The mystery of redemption this,
This the SAVIOUR's strange design;
Man's offence was counted his,
Ours his righteousness divine.

* See p. 56. of Hymns and spiritual songs. Anonymous indeed, but universally ascribed to Mr Wesley. In these excellent lines, how strongly marked are the sentiments of the gospel!

Our

In him complete we ſhine,
His death, his life is mine:
Fully am I juſtified,
Free from ſin, and more than free,
Guiltleſs, ſince for me he died,
Righteous, ſince he liv'd for me.

The text lately quoted from Iſaiah, is part of a paragraph eminent for its dignity and uſefulneſs. We then conſidered a fragment of it in a critical view; let us now examine the whole of it with a devotional ſpirit. Thus examined, I truſt it will be no longer a dry bone, but a feaſt of fat things full of marrow. Permit me to propoſe a correct tranſlation of the original; to add a ſhort illuſtration of the meaning, and then take my leave for the preſent.

Look unto me and be ſaved all the ends of the earth, for I am GOD, and there is nought elſe. By myſelf have I ſworn, the word of † righteouſneſs goeth out of my mouth, the word ſhall not return. To me every knee ſhall bow, and every tongue ſhall ſwear ‡, ſaying, Surely ‖ in the LORD have I righteouſneſs § and ſtrength. To him ſhall men come, and all that are offended in him, ſhall be aſhamed. In the LORD ſhall all the ſeed of Iſrael be juſtified, and in him ſhall they glory.*

Here the SON of GOD preſents himſelf in all the glories of his perſon, and all the riches of his grace; preſents himſelf as the object of faith, and the author of ſalvation; to be received by ſinners, without any recommending qualities, or any pre-eminence of one above another.——But hear his gracious words.

Look unto me, wretched ruined tranſgreſſors, as the wounded Iſraelites looked unto the brazen ſerpent. Look unto me dying on the croſs as your victim, and obeying the law as your ſurety.——Not by doing, but by looking and believing; not by your own deeds, but by my works, and my ſufferings, be ye ſaved. This is the myſterious but certain way of ſalvation. Thus ſhall ye be delivered from guilt, reſcued from hell, and reconciled to GOD. Who are invited to partake of this ineſtimable benefit? All the ends of the earth. People of every nation under heaven; of every ſtation in life; of every condition, and every character, not excepting the chiefeſt of ſinners.

Is it poſſible that the obedience of one ſhould ſave innumerable millions? It is not only poſſible, but indubitable. For I am GOD infinite in dignity and power; therefore all-ſufficient, yea omnipotent to ſave; to ſave all that come unto me; be the multitudes ever ſo great, or their caſes ever ſo deſperate.——(Is nothing to be done by tranſgreſſors themſelves? Are no conditions to be fulfilled on their part?) None,——there is nought beſide me. No perſon can take any ſhare in this great tranſaction. Nothing can in the leaſt degree co-operate with my merits. Should you add to my obedience and death, all that ſaints have performed, and martyrs have endured, it would be like adding a grain to the ſands of the ocean, or a moment to the days of eternity.

Such is my compaſſionate invitation, and this my inviolable decree. I have not only ſpoken, but ſworn; ſworn by myſelf, and all my incomprehenſible excellencies. The word of righteouſneſs, that which relates to the grandeſt of all ſubjects, and moſt important of all intereſts, is planned, adjuſted, and unalterably determined. Now, even now, it goes out of my mouth, is declared with the utmoſt ſolemnity, and eſtabliſhed by veracity itſelf. The word ſhall not return, either to be repealed by me, or fruſtrated by any other—What is the decree confirmed by this moſt awful oath? We are all attention to hear it. To me every knee ſhall bow. Every ſoul of man, who deſires to inherit eternal life, ſhall ſubmit to my righteouſneſs, and as an unworthy creature, as an obnoxious criminal, obtain the bleſſing wholly through my atonement.—To me every tongue ſhall ſwear. Be man's ſuppoſed virtues ever ſo various, or ever ſo ſplendid, all ſhall be diſclaimed, and my worthineſs alone ſhall ſtand. Renouncing every other truſt, they ſhall repoſe the confidence of their ſouls on me alone, and make public confeſſion of this their faith before the whole world.—But we, O LORD, are ignorant, we cannot order our ſpeech by reaſon of darkneſs.——This then ſhall be the form of your oath, ſuch the tenor of your confeſſion.

Surely——It is a moſt wonderful, yet a moſt faithful ſaying, extremely comfortable and equally certain. Only——not in myſelf, not in a poor frail creature, but in the incarnate JEHOVAH alone, in his divinely-excellent deeds, and unutterably-meritorious ſufferings, I have righteouſneſs, a righteouſneſs without ſpot, without defect, and in all reſpects conſummate; ſuch as ſatisfies every requirement of the law, and moſt thoroughly expiates all my iniquities; ſuch as renders me completely accepted before my judge, and entitles me to everlaſting life. From the joyful knowledge, the perſonal appropriation, and the perpetual improvement of this ineſtimable privilege, I have ſtrength for my ſanctification. Now do I indeed delight myſelf in the LORD, who, perfectly reconciled, and infinitely gracious, has done ſo great things for me. Now do I cordially love my neighbour; and being ſo happy myſelf, unfeignedly long for his eternal happineſs, that he may be a partaker with me of this great ſalvation.

To this ſovereign decree, the prophet ſets, as it were, his ſeal, or elſe, in a tranſport of joy, he foretels the accompliſhment of it. Yes, my brethren, to him, even to this gracious REDEEMER, ſhall men come. I ſee them flying as clouds for multitude, as doves for ſpeed. They believe the report of his goſpel, and receive of his fulneſs.——Whereas, all they that are offended in him, that cannot away with his doctrine, which pour

Our offences ſo fully imputed to CHRIST, as to be accounted his. His righteouſneſs ſo fully imputed to us, as to be accounted ours. In him we are complete, becauſe his moſt obedient life, and his all-atoning death are ours. We are guiltleſs, not through our repentance, or reformation, but becauſe he has died for us. We are righteous, not on account of any graces or attainments of our own, but becauſe he has lived for us. To theſe truths I moſt cordially ſubſcribe. This is that good old wine that once made Mr Weſley's heart glad. He has ſince taſted new; but I hope he will be brought to ſay, "The old is better."

* None elſe—אין זולתי exactly rendered, ſignifies there is not beſides. Not any perſon, nor any thing. No perſon, able to lend an helping hand. No thing capable of yielding the leaſt aſſiſtance.

† The word of righteouſneſs, דבר צדקה I apprehend is equivalent to St Paul's λογος δικαιοσυνης, and ſignifies, if not the whole goſpel, that precious doctrine, which is the goſpel in epitome. For the vindication of this verſion, ſee Vitringa in loc.

‡ Shall ſwear. Our tranſlation ſeems to diſcontinue the divine ſpeech here; which weakens the force, and diminiſhes the dignity of the paſſage. I apprehend JEHOVAH is ſtill ſpeaking, and in the following words, preſcribes the form of the confeſſion, or dictates the words of the oath, in which ſinners ſhall teſtify their allegiance,—even the allegiance of faith. Agreeably to this ſuppoſition, I would tranſlate the word לאמר ſaying. It will then denote not one, or a few, but every tongue mentioned in the foregoing verſe, תשבע I am aware is of the feminine gender, but every reader knows how often the Hebrews neglect the nicety of grammatical conſtruction, and every reader ſees that the idea of לשון or of a perſon, is comprehended in the word tongue.

‖ The prophet's אך ſurely, is ſomething like the apoſtle's αλλα μενουνγε, yea, doubtleſs, Phil. iii. 8. The HOLY GHOST teaches believers to ſpeak with vehemence upon this point, to ſignify their ſtedfaſt and reſolute affiance in the glorious REDEEMER, together with the mighty and matchleſs importance of this faith. I have taken in this idea, becauſe it is ſuggeſted by the Engliſh tranſlation, though I prefer the excluſive ſenſe only; as implying an abſolute and total renunciation of every other confidence.

§ Righteouſneſs. This is the preciſe ſignification of צדקות, which being in the plural number, ſeems to denote completeneſs. A righteouſneſs, perfect, entire, and lacking nothing; having every thing neceſſary for our pardon, our acceptance, our everlaſting juſtification.

pours contempt upon all human excellency, and will allow no righteouſneſs to avail but that which is divine; who refuſe to come unto him, poor, and miſerable, and ſtript of every recommendation; all they ſhall be aſhamed. The fig-leaves of their own duties, or their own endowments, ſhall neither adorn them for glory, nor ſcreen them from wrath,---but ſhall abandon them to vengeance, and cover them with double confuſion. While, on the other hand, all the ſeed of Iſrael, every true believer, ſhall be juſtified in the LORD. Againſt theſe perſons no accuſation ſhall be valid; no condemnation ſhall take place: ſo magnificent is the majeſty, ſo ſurpaſſingly-efficacious are the merits of their SAVIOUR, that in him they ſhall not only confide, but glory: not only be ſafe, but triumphant; clothed with his incomparable righteouſneſs, they ſhall challenge every adverſary, and defy every danger.

To this portion of ſcripture I have led back your thoughts, that I might not cloſe with any diſguſting ſentiments; but might leave a ſweet ſavour on your mind, on the reader's mind, and on the mind of

REV. SIR,

Your's, &c.

LETTER III.

REV. SIR,

LET me, now, reſume my obſervations on your epiſtle. Which I do, not for the ſake of diſputing, but for the cauſe of truth.

The goſpel contains many ſublime and glorious truths. But there is one, which, beyond all others, characterizes its nature, its import, and deſign; which makes it moſt eminently to differ from every other form of religion, profeſſed or known in the world. I mean the doctrine of free juſtification, through the righteouſneſs of CHRIST. This is to the religion of JESUS, what the particular features and turns of countenance are to each individual perſon.

I have ſometimes amuſed myſelf, with ſtanding by a painter, and obſerving him at his work. Here I have been ſurpriſed to ſee, how much a very little ſtroke would alter the aſpect of his draught; would turn the gay into a melancholy, or the compoſed into a frantic countenance. Several of Mr Weſley's touches are to appearance ſmall; but, I fear, they will be found to diſfigure more than a little the heavenly portrait; and give a new, not the native, air, to the truth as it is in JESUS.---But I proceed; my buſineſs being to prove, not to blame.

Sinners who betake themſelves to the all-ſufficient SAVIOUR for redemption, are fully accepted by GOD, for his beloved SON's ſake. This is juſtification through imputed righteouſneſs, ſays Aſpaſio.---"That remains to be proved," anſwers Mr Weſley.---I think, it is pretty largely, and, I would hope, it is ſatisfactorily proved, through the whole book.---Nay, I find My Weſley himſelf ere long acknowledging, that "as to the doctrine we are agreed." Either therefore you have received the proof, which you demand; or elſe you can ſubmit without conviction, and agree without cauſe of agreement.---Not to take advantage of ſuch ſlips, I would rather enlarge upon what may be uſeful.

I would aſk Mr Weſley; In what other way ſinners can be juſtified or accepted, ſave only through imputed righteouſneſs?---Through their own good deeds, and holy temper? This ſuppoſes the fruits to be good, while the tree is corrupt; and would make ſalvation to be of works, not of grace.---Through their own faith, ſtanding in the law? Then they are juſtified before a perfect GOD, by an imperfect endowment; and life eternal is obtained, by the exerciſes of their own mind, not by the merits of JESUS CHRIST.---Are they juſtified without any righteouſneſs, either wrought by themſelves, or received * from another? This is an unworthy thought; this were an unſufferable practice; JEHOVAH himſelf being judge, He that juſtifieth the wicked is an abomination.†

Say not, GOD is a free agent, and not bound to obſerve his own law. Say rather, the rule of righteouſneſs revealed in the law, is his moſt ſtedfaſt will; unchangeable as his nature.---Conſider alſo, what this law requires. A ſatisfaction for ſin, not defective, but completely ſufficient; a performance of the command, not ſincere only, but abſolutely perfect.---Will GOD, in juſtifying a ſinner, diſregard, contradict, overthrow his own law? In no wiſe. Since then it inſiſts upon what no mortal can yield; muſt not all fleſh periſh for ever?

This would be the unavoidable conſequence, if matters reſted on human abilities. But here the bleſſed goſpel comes to our relief; ſhewing us, that GOD, in his immenſe mercy, and unſearchable wiſdom, has found out a way, at once to ſatisfy the unalterable law, and ſave inſolvent man; to juſtify even the chief of ſinners; yet without the leaſt violation of juſtice, truth, or holineſs.---What is this way? His own SON accompliſhes the great work.---How? By relaxing the precepts of the law, that we may perform them? by diſannulling the ſentence of the law, that we may eſcape it? Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away, before any ſuch diſhonourable expedient takes place. On the contrary, he gives ſatisfaction to the ſentence, by ſuffering the tremendous puniſhment denounced; and he fulfils the precept, by yielding the ſinleſs obedience required.---Becauſe this was to be finiſhed in the nature which had tranſgreſſed, therefore he was made man. Becauſe this was to be truly, or rather infinitely meritorious, therefore the man was one perſon with the GODHEAD.

Still it may be inquired, How the obedience of another can relieve my diſtreſs? How indeed! But by GOD's transferring my guilt to him, and imputing his obedience to me. By this method, the thing is clearly and completely effected. In this method, I ſee a propriety and an efficacy, that ſilence my doubts, and comfort my heart. Accordingly, it is written, in the ſcriptures, GOD was in CHRIST reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them.---GOD; the work was too arduous to be performed by a created agent. Therefore God himſelf was in CHRIST. None leſs than the almighty LORD could execute the buſineſs. But if HE undertake it, how ſucceſsfully muſt it be carried on, and how glorioufly finiſhed!---Reconciling the world: not ſetting poor tranſgreſſors to reconcile themſelves, but himſelf contriving all, providing all, doing and ſuffering all, that was needful for this great purpoſe; being himſelf the creditor, the ſponſor, and payer of the debt.---How was all this brought to paſs? By not imputing our treſpaſſes unto us; but taking them all upon himſelf; bearing them all, in his own body, upon the tree; and ſuſtaining the vengeance due to all our crimes.—Thus was the holy ONE and the juſt made ſin for us; that we, ſinful duſt and aſhes, might, in the very ſame manner, be made the righteouſneſs of GOD in him. The former could be only by imputation; and ſo only can be the latter.

* Οι λαμβανοντες, They who receive the gift of righteouſneſs. Rom. v. 17.

† Prov. xvii. 15. This is an invariable maxim. It is that word of GOD, which endureth for ever. Yet it is no objection to his method of juſtifying the ungodly. Becauſe he firſt imputes his SON's righteouſneſs unto them; thereby renders them truly and perfectly righteous: then pronounces them ſuch; and, as ſuch, receives them to pardon, to favour, and eternal life.—does not the text, thus conſidered, afford an inconteſtable argument for the neceſſity of an imputed righteouſneſs?

If men talk of being accepted for CHRIST's ſake, yet reject the imputation of righteouſneſs, they muſt have very inadequate notions concerning the relation which CHRIST bears to his people, and the nature of his mediatorial undertaking.—Does this ſeem obſcure? I explain myſelf.——A perſon may conduct himſelf ſo honourably and excellently, as, on account of his worthy deeds, to obtain favour in behalf of another; and this, without being his ſurety, or any thing like his proper righteouſneſs. Witneſs the famous inſtance of the two brothers, Amyntas and Eſchylus. The former was a gallant hero; who expoſed his life, and loſt his arm, in defence of his country. The latter was an abandoned and infamous profligate; whoſe crimes had brought him to the bar of public juſtice. The hero, on the day of trial, appeared as an advocate for his brother. He ſpoke nothing, but only lifted up to view the maimed and diſmembered arm. This ſilent oratory ſtruck the aſſembly; and pleaded ſo powerfully, that the criminal was unanimouſly acquitted.——Here was an acquittal of one, in conſideration of the merits of another. But then the obnoxious party had no ſpecial intereſt in thoſe merits. They were not acquired or exerciſed, with a particular reference to his good. He could not ſay, they are mine. Neither did they make him, in any degree, or in any ſenſe, righteous.—Whereas, the reverſe of all this is true, with regard to JESUS CHRIST, and juſtified ſinners. This you and I, Sir, have aſſerted. Let us never retract the good confeſſion. But, as it is the truth of the goſpel, let us ſtill and for ever ſay,

In HIM complete we ſhine,
Becauſe
Ours is righteouſneſs divine.

Theron, ſpeaking of the terms inherent and imputed, calls them nice diſtinctions and metaphyſical ſubtilties. Mr Weſley makes Aſpaſio apply the depretiating remark to the active and paſſive righteouſneſs of CHRIST. Whereas he ſays no ſuch thing. He means no ſuch thing. He is treating of a ſubject totally different. And was he to maintain ſuch a ſentiment, every one muſt obſerve, it would entirely overthrow his whole ſcheme.

"You oblige us to make uſe of metaphyſical ſubtil-"ties, by confounding theſe very different ideas, that "is, CHRIST's active and paſſive righteouſneſs."—— I could hardly believe my eyes, for ſome time; though both of them atteſted, that this was produced as a quotation from page 159. In which page, and for a conſiderable ſpace, before and after, the ſubject of debate is the difference between inherent and imputed righteouſneſs.——I was, I own, quite vexed to ſee Aſpaſio ſo maltreated; his diſcourſe ſo miſrepreſented; and ſo little regard paid to literary juſtice. And glad I am, that I did not give vent to my thoughts, juſt at that inſtant. I might have been too warm, and not have ſpared the rod. But, upon cooler conſideration I began to recover, and the preſcription of Horace was of ſervice, Amara lento temperat riſu.

I began to call your conduct, not artifice or ſleight of hand, but incogitancy or thought miſapplied. As you had been thinking ſo long upon the other topic, it dwelt upon your imagination; kept this from your attention; and led you both to miſtake and to miſcall things. Like a certain preacher, who having loſt his fortune in the bubbles of the year 1719, and having occaſion to mention the deliverance of the Iſraelites from Egypt, told his audience, that Pharaoh and his hoſt were all drowned in the South ſea——Poor man! he meant the Red ſea.

Mr Weſley proceeds: "We do not confound the "active and paſſive righteouſneſs."——Does Aſpaſio, Sir? he that conſiders them particularly and diſtinctly? he that examines each with a critical and minute exactneſs? If this be to confound, order and confuſion have changed their nature.

"Neither do we ſeparate them." It is ſomewhat difficult to underſtand, what you mean by ſeparating the active and paſſive righteouſneſs of our LORD.—— Separating them, as to their influence? Then you muſt be ſenſible, this is never done by Aſpaſio. You cannot but know, that he diſclaims ſuch a refinement. He proteſts againſt ſuch a practice.——Do you mean, treating them as things really diſtinct, though always uniting their agency? Then I am at a loſs to reconcile Mr Weſley with himſelf. For, in the very next paragraph, he thus expreſſes himſelf. "Through the merits of "his life and death, every believer is juſtified." Are not the merits of his life here diſtinguiſhed from the merits of his death? Does not the former expreſſion denote his active, the latter his paſſive obedience? Or would you be underſtood to mean, "through the merits of "his life, which are nothing elſe but the merits of his "death?" If you would not ſpeak in this manner, ſo unworthy of your better judgment, you do the very thing which you blame.——This is done ſtill more apparently, in one of your hymns. Where we ſee, not only a ſeparation, but a diſtinct uſe and application of the ſeparated ſubjects.

Grant this, O LORD; for thou haſt dy'd,
That I might be forgiven;
Thou haſt the righteouſneſs ſupply'd,
For which I merit heaven.

I could eaſily excuſe Mr Weſley, for being a little inconſiſtent with himſelf; did he not alſo venture to confront the apoſtle, by the following aſſertion. "Neither have we any authority from ſcripture, for either "thinking or ſpeaking of one ſeparate from the other." ——Does not St Paul, in one paſſage, ſpeak of the obedience? in another, of the death of CHRIST? Does he not, in one place, enlarge upon the righteouſneſs? in another upon the blood of CHRIST? If ſo, we have an authority from ſcripture, we have the example of the chiefeſt apoſtle, for this way of thinking and ſpeaking.

We have alſo a concurrent teſtimony from the genius and import of the original language. Do not δικαιωμα and δικαιοσυνη ſignify ſomewhat different from αιμα and δικαιος? Are there any approved writers who uſe theſe words promiſcuouſly? as ſo many ſynonymous and convertible terms? If not, the voice of grammar will vindicate the propriety of our conduct, while we aſſign a ſeparate diſcourſe to each ſubject, and exhibit them ſeverally in the moſt diſtinct view.

Are not light and heat always united in the ſun? Is the naturaliſt to blame, who conſiders them diſtinctly; and examines each property, in a ſeparate treatiſe? You would commend this practice in the philoſopher, as the way to enter thoroughly into the knowledge of his ſubject. And why ſhould you explode or cenſure it, in the Chriſtian divine? Are not theological truths as worthy of a circumſtantial and accurate inveſtigation, as philoſophical? Will they not as amply reward our diligence, and yield as rich advantage to the ſerious inquirer?

The righteouſneſs which juſtifies ſinners, is already wrought out, ſays Aſpaſio.——"A crude unſcriptural expreſſion," replies Mr Weſley.—It may be ſo. But if the expreſſion is plain and true, I will ſit down content. This, however, you will allow me to obſerve, that it is no new one, and is not far from ſcriptural. Worketh righteouſneſs, you know, is a ſcriptural phraſe.—— Does the word out ſpoil it, or the word already? I ſuppoſe ſuppoſe, the latter may be moſt offenſive. Yet you ſpeak, in this very paragraph, of being "juſtified by the "merits of CHRIST's life and death." Are not theſe matters already tranſacted? is not the merit of them already perfect? or can any language expreſs theſe things more clearly, and affirm them more ſtrongly, than thoſe emphatical words in one of your own hymns?

Let us for this faith contend,
Sure ſalvation is its end:
Heav'n already is begun,
Everlaſting life is won.

Pardon me then, Sir, if I ſtill ſuſpect, that the doctrine and its conſequences, rather than the expreſſion and its crudity, awaken your jealouſy. If this doctrine be admitted, if the juſtifying righteouſneſs be already wrought, it muſt abſolutely overturn all your pre-requiſites, qualifications, and conditions; conditions of repentance, obedience, and I know not what beſides. We muſt ſay to every one of them, as Jehu ſaid to the meſſengers of Joram: What haſt thou to do with the grand article of juſtification? Get thee behind me. Could they be fulfilled, they would come a day too late; like the ſickle, when the harveſt is reaped. Could they be fulfilled in all their imaginary dignity, they would in this relation, be needleſs; like a propoſal for augmenting the ſplendour of the ſun.

"The righteouſneſs which juſtifies ſinful man, was "ſet on foot, when GOD ſent forth his SON, from the "habitation of his holineſs and glory, to be born of a "woman, and made ſubject to the law.—It was carried "on, through the whole courſe of our SAVIOUR's life; "in which he always did ſuch things, as were pleaſing "to his heavenly FATHER.—It was completed, at that "ever memorable, that grand period, when the bleſſed "IMMANUEL bowed his dying head; and cried, "with a ſtrong triumphant voice, IT IS FINISHED."

"—Upon this extract from Aſpaſio's diſcourſe, Mr Weſley "exclaims, O vain philoſophy!"——Philoſophy! this philoſophy, Sir! Never did I hear, till this moment, ſuch doctrines aſcribed to philoſophy. But this I have heard, and this I believe, that the world, even the learned and philoſophic world, by their boaſted wiſdom knew not GOD; nor GOD's method of ſalvation, by the ſufferings of an innocent, and the obedience of a divine perſon. Their philoſophy prejudiced them againſt it; puffed them up with a vain conceit of their own ſufficiency; and ſet them at the greateſt diſtance from ſubmitting to the righteouſneſs of GOD.

I wiſh, Sir, you would ſhew me, in which of the philoſophers I might find theſe ſacred ſentiments; or a grain, or a ſpice, or a ſavour of them. I have, for a conſiderable time, laid aſide my Plato, and have no more inclination to turn over my Seneca: becauſe I can ſee nothing like this divinely-precious truth, adorning and enriching their pages. But if you will diſcover this golden vein in their works, I will immediately renew my acquaintance with them; and will do the philoſophers a piece of juſtice, which Mr Weſley denies them. I will not call their philoſophy vain, but the wiſdom of GOD, and the power of GOD.—A righteouſneſs wrought out, and a redemption obtained for us! the former divine! the latter eternal! theſe, rightly underſtood, make us, beyond all the treaſures of literature, wiſe.—— Theſe, habitually enjoyed, will, more effectually than all the delineations of morality or exhortations to virtue, render us holy.

A divine righteouſneſs (pardon me for dwelling on my favourite topic) already wrought! A great redemption perfectly finiſhed! And this by the abaſement, the ignominy, the indignities; by the cries, the agonies, the blood of our SAVIOUR. Yea, of our GOD, in faſhion as a man; in the form of a ſervant, a ſlave, an execrable malefactor.—What, like this, did a thouſand philoſophers teach? What, like this, do a thouſand of their volumes contain? to ſtab our pride; to tame our fury; and to quench our luſt? to kindle our benevolence; to inflame our devotion; to make us, in a word, wiſe unto ſalvation?

"The plain truth is, CHRIST lived and taſted death "for every man."——To be ſure then, ſince every man is not ſaved by him, he lived and died only to make their ſalvation poſſible——From this and other hints, I gueſs your opinion to be, that CHRIST, by his life and death, obtained only a poſſibility of ſalvation. [Which ſalvation is to become our own, upon performing terms and conditions, bringing with us pre-requiſites and qualifications.]——If I miſtake you, Sir, in this caſe, you have nothing more to do, than ſimply to deny my ſuppoſition. This exculpates you at once. I ſhall rejoice to hear you ſay, "As CHRIST made us, and not we "ourſelves; in like manner he ſaves us, and not we "ourſelves. No human endowments, no human per-"formances, but CHRIST alone is the author of eternal "ſalvation.

Should you reply, True—CHRIST is the author of eternal ſalvation, but to thoſe only who obey him;——I muſt then aſk, what obedience CHRIST requires? The law ſays, "Do and live." CHRIST, the end of the law, ſays, "Believe in ME, and live. Be verily perſuaded, "that I am ſufficient for thy ſalvation, without any "working of thine at all. Is not the SON, the SON of "the moſt high GOD, given unto thee in the divine "record? Be ſatisfied with his doing and ſuffering, "without wiſhing for, or thinking of, any thing more, "to procure thy final acceptance."——Let no one account lightly of this obedience. It is the obedience of faith. The obedience ſuited to the name JESUS.—— Obedience to the firſt and great command of the goſpel. Beyond all other expedients, it excludes boaſting; and, at the ſame time, produces that genuine love, that filial fear, which the law of works requires in vain.

Only to make a thing poſſible, and to effect it, are widely different. When our king fits out a fleet, and gives his admiral a commiſſion, to haraſs the French coaſts, and deſtroy the French ſhipping, he makes the thing poſſible. But to carry this deſign into execution; to accompliſh the enterprize, now become practicable; is a far more arduous taſk, and a far more honourable achievement. How ſtrangely do thoſe writers derogate from the dignity and glory of the REDEEMER, who would aſcribe to him, what correſponds with the former; and attribute to man, what bears a reſemblance to the latter!

If CHRIST only made our ſalvation poſſible, then we are to execute the plan. We are to face the enemy, to ſuſtain the charge, and ſilence the battery: we are to climb the ſteep, to enter the breach, and bring off the ſtandards. And ſo, in all reaſon, the honour and praiſe muſt be our own.——Whereas, the goſpel gives all the honour to the Captain of our ſalvation. He bore the heat and burthen of the dreadful day. He made reconciliation for iniquity, and brought in everlaſting righteouſneſs. So that all our officious attempts, like a pinnace arriving after the victory, ſhould be told, It is finiſhed; the great ſalvation is already wrought. And inſtead of being diſſatisfied or diſappointed, methinks, we ſhould rejoice, unfeignedly rejoice, in the accompliſhment of the glorious work.

If it ſhould occur to the reader's mind, that the Chriſtian life is repreſented as a warfare; and that we ourſelves are commanded to fight, though under the banner of our divine leader; to this doubt I would anſwer, ——The Canaanite is ſtill in the land; and we fight, not to gain the country, but only to ſubdue the rebels.

"Whoever perverts ſo glorious a doctrine, ſhews he "never believed."——This may be the ſubſtance of what Aſpaſio maintains; though not repreſented ſo fully or ſo clearly, as he has expreſſed himſelf. However, ſuch a ſmall wrong we will readily excuſe. It was done with no ſiniſter intention, but for the ſake of brevity.

To

To this position Mr Wesley replies; "Not so."—That is; they did really and truly believe. But, after their belief, they apostatized, and fell from the faith. They were, some time, the members of CHRIST, and temples of the HOLY GHOST; but, quickly severed from their divine head, they became the slaves of the devil, and brands for the everlasting burning. Their names were, indeed, written in heaven. But, it seems, the heavenly records were less faithful than the parish-register. They were quickly erased, and their place in the book of life knew them no more.

Or thus—They did as really and truly believe, as those who are now in the mansions of glory. But, after their true knowledge of the name of the LORD JESUS; after their full conviction of his sufficiency and faithfulness for their salvation; even such as inclined and enabled them, to put their trust in him alone, for their acceptance with GOD; they were disappointed. Though CHRIST called them his sheep, as thus hearing his voice; yet he did not give unto them eternal life, according to his promise; but suffered Satan to pluck them out of his hand.

These sentiments have no very probable, much less have they a pleasing or recommending aspect. Let us inquire whether they comport with St John's determination of the case. Speaking of such backsliders, he says, They went out from us, but they were not of us. Mr Wesley, to be consistent with himself, should say on this occasion; "Not so; they were of you, but they fell away from you."—The apostle proceeds; For if they had been of us, no doubt, they would have continued with us. Had they been really converted, they would most undoubtedly have continued in our doctrine and fellowship. Their revolt from our doctrine, is a manifest proof, that they never truly received it, nor with their heart believed it. Their departure from our fellowship, is an evident indication, that they were, notwithstanding all their professions, still carnal, and never renewed by grace.

Mr Wesley produces a text from St Peter, with a view to support his objection. They who turn back as a dog to his vomit, had once escaped the pollutions of the world, through the knowledge of CHRIST. Here and elsewhere I perceive the cannon roar, but without feeling the ball. Before this piece of sacred artillery can be brought to bear upon us, it will be necessary to prove, that the knowledge of CHRIST, or even believing in CHRIST, always signifies true faith. In some places, it certainly does. In other places, it signifies no such thing.—— Though I have all knowledge, says the apostle, yet even with this spacious endowment I may be nothing. There is a knowledge, says the same author, which, instead of edifying, or establishing the soul in godliness, puffeth up with pride. We are likewise assured, that Simon the sorcerer, though in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity, yet had knowledge of the things which concerned the kingdom of GOD, and the name of JESUS CHRIST; nay, that he also believed, yet he had neither lot nor portion in the inestimable blessing.

Let us attend to the apostle's manner, and we shall be led to put the same interpretation upon the phrase, as it is used in the passage before us—These people are not described like the true believers, to whom he addresses the epistle. Here is no mention of their being partakers of a divine nature; of being born again by the incorruptible seed; or of having their souls purified by the SPIRIT. They are only said to have escaped the pollutions of the world.——Again; the word expressive of these pollutions is μιασματα, which denotes the grossest excesses, and most scandalous iniquities. Consequently, their abstaining from such abominations, implies no more than what is called a negative goodness, or a mere external reformation. Their lusts had been restrained only, not subdued. Therefore the unhappy wretches were easily overcome by their old corruptions.—It is farther observable, that St Peter never considers these persons as new creatures. He calls them by no other name, than the dog and the sow. Such they were at first; no better, under all their profession of Christianity; and no other, even in their foulest relapses. When they returned again to their vomit, or their filthy practices, they returned to their own.

There is, then, a knowledge of CHRIST, which is only superficial and notional; floats idly on the understanding, but neither penetrates, nor sanctifies the heart. There is also a knowledge of CHRIST, which is wrought by the SPIRIT, and ingrafted into the soul; which receives the gift of righteousness, and brings justification into the conscience. The comfort and joy of which mortify the love of sin, and produce the life of holiness. This knowledge, Sir, may you and I teach; in this knowledge may our hearers and readers abound; and may the divine power give us, by means of this knowledge, all things pertaining to life and godliness!

The goodness of GOD leadeth to repentance.——"This is "unquestionably true," says Mr Wesley. "But the nice "metaphysical doctrine of imputed righteousness."—— Should you not rather have said, the nice metaphysical phrase? since, as to the doctrine, we are, according to your own confession, agreed; bound therefore, each of us, equally bound to clear it of the consequences, with which it may be charged, by the author of the Preservative, or by any other objector.—And as to the phrase, I cannot understand, by what authority Mr Wesley calls it metaphysical. Theron, it is true, uses the word, and applies it to the present object. But does not Mr Wesley know, that Theron often personates an enemy, and speaks the language of unbelief?—Be pleased, Sir, to explain your terms; and shew, in what sense it is compatible with this article of my faith? "I am acquitted and "counted righteous before GOD, only through the im-"putation of my SAVIOUR's obedience and death?" Which is, both in style and sentiment, truly evangelical; but, in no degree, that I can discern, metaphysical.

When Mr Wesley adds, "This leads not to repen-"tance, but to licentiousness;" he speaks what we understand, not what we allow.——Will any one say, that speculative reasoning upon the goodness of GOD, or contemplating it barely in our ideas, leadeth to repentance? But, when we taste and enjoy, when we apply and appropriate, his profusely-rich liberality in CHRIST; we are thereby prompted to neglect, abuse, and dishonour our great benefactor? Or shall it be said, the divine goodness, manifested in common providence and inferior instances, tends to awaken love and work godliness? But the same divine goodness, shining forth in the most illustrious manifestation, that men or angels ever knew; shining forth with a glory, a richness, a perfection, sufficient to transport heaven and earth with joy unspeakable: this goodness tends to excite contempt of GOD, and to cherish carnal indulgence? Such an insinuation, so depretiatory to the righteousness of the blessed JESUS, I had much rather have heard in a Jewish synagogue, than have seen in Mr Wesley's writings.

No, Sir; this and this alone leadeth a sinner to repentance. Not all the munificence of the DEITY; neither the rain from heaven, nor fruitful seasons; neither the fatness of the earth, nor the abundance of the seas; can take away the enmity of our nature, and reconcile our affections to GOD. Nothing, nothing but a sense of pardon and acceptance, through the work finished on IMMANUEL's cross.—If you please to review the text, you will not affirm, that the apostle is asserting the efficacious influence of providential goodness on the hearts of men. He is evidently inveighing against the gross and almost general abuse of such bounty. Though it ought, it does not produce gratitude and duty. It would indeed upon upright, but it does not thus operate upon depraved minds. No cause is adequate to this effect, but free justification through JESUS CHRIST. "The

"The believer cannot but add to his faith, works of "righteouſneſs."——"During his firſt love," ſays Mr Weſley, "this is often true. But it is not true after-"wards, as we know and feel by melancholy expe-"rience."——How, Sir! do you yourſelf feel this! Where then is your ſinleſs perfection? Can they be perfect, whoſe love ceaſes to glow, and whoſe zeal loſes its activity? Does Mr Weſley himſelf make this confeſſion? Let him then ſay with us?—and let us ſay, with invariable ſtedfaſtneſs, and with increaſing gratitude,—Bleſſed be GOD for perfection in JESUS CHRIST!

Do you learn, Sir, what is here acknowledged, by obſervations made upon others? Then thoſe others, I apprehend, if they do not exerciſe themſelves in good works, either have no faith, and deceive both you and themſelves,—or elſe they intermit an ddiſcontinue the exertion of their faith. Which neither detracts from the efficacy of the principle, nor diſproves Aſpaſio's opinion. It is not ſaid, the believer never trips, nor falters in the courſe of his obedience; but he always adds to his faith, the duties and works of obedience. Whenever the former act, the latter conſtantly enſue. So long as we live by the faith of the SON of GOD, we ſhall not fail to bring forth thoſe fruits of righteouſneſs, which are through JESUS CHRIST.

This is ſtrongly maintained, by Aſpaſio, in another place. "It is as impoſſible for the ſun to be in his "meridian height, and not diſſipate darkneſs, or dif-"fuſe light; as for faith to exiſt in the ſoul, and not "exalt the temper, and meliorate the conduct."—— This is very forcibly implied, in our LORD's interrogation to his diſciples; Where is your faith? It muſt be dormant and inactive, like the ſap of the trees in winter, or like the faculty of reaſoning in ſleep. Otherwiſe it would baniſh your fears, even amidſt the raging ſtorm; and produce an undaunted confidence in GOD your SAVIOUR.——The deſign of all this is, to evince the wiſdom of the goſpel, which lays ſuch a ſtreſs upon faith; ſo frequently urges the neceſſity of faith, above and before all things; repreſenting it, as the principal work of the divine SPIRIT, and the great inſtrument of receiving ſalvation. Hence it appears, that the ſacred plan is not formed in vain; much leſs is it calculated to ſuppreſs or diſcourage real holineſs.

"We no longer obey, in order to lay the founda-"tion for our final acceptance." Theſe words I read with pleaſure.——"That foundation is already laid "in the merits of CHRIST:" Theſe I contemplate with ſtill greater ſatisfaction.—But when I come to the following clauſe, "Yet we obey, in order to our "final acceptance through his merits;" with diſappointment and regret I cry, How is the gold become dim! how is the moſt fine gold changed!

A foundation, for what? Aſpaſio would reply, For pardon, for reconciliation, and for everlaſting ſalvation; for peace of conſcience, for acceſs to GOD, for every ſpiritual and eternal bleſſing.—A foundation, of what kind? In all reſpects perfect; incapable of any augmentation; not to be ſtrengthened, enlarged, or improved by all the duties and all the deeds of prophets, apoſtles, martyrs; becauſe it has omnipotence for its eſtabliſhment.——A foundation for whom? For ſinners; for the vileſt and moſt miſerable of ſinners: that all guilty and undone wretches may come; and though ever ſo weary, ever ſo heavy laden, may caſt their burthen upon this Rock of ages; in full aſſurance of finding reſt, and obtaining ſafety.

This is chearing; this is charming. What pity it is, that ſuch an illuſtrious truth ſhould be clouded, ſuch a precious privilege ſpoiled, by that ungracious ſentence! "We obey, in order to our final acceptance."——But is this, Sir, your conſtant profeſſion? I muſt do you the juſtice to own, that you have happier moments, and more becoming apprehenſions.——When you join in public worſhip, this is your humble and juſt acknowledgment; "Although we be unworthy, through our "manifold ſins, to offer unto thee any ſacrifice; yet "we beſeech thee to accept this our bounden duty and "ſervice."——When you criticiſe upon Aſpaſio, the note is changed, and this is the purport of your ſtrain; "We beſeech thee to accept us, on account of theſe "our ſervices; for we do them, O LORD, with a "profeſſed view to this end."——To implore acceptance for our duties, confeſſes them to be mean and contemptible. Whereas, to expect acceptance on their account, ſtrongly intimates their excellency; that they are worthy in a very high degree; ſo as to obtain favour, not for themſelves only, but for a miſerable creature alſo, who confeſſes himſelf ſubject to manifold ſins.

I ſaid, "on account of"—For, if you obey, in order to your final acceptance; ſurely, you muſt expect final acceptance and eternal life, on account of your own obedience. A poor object diſplays his ſores, and relates his diſtreſs, in order to obtain your alms. Does he not then expect your alms on account of his ſores, his diſtreſs, and his piteous tale?——What a coalition is here between Mr Weſley and the ſubjects of the triple crown! I find the whole council of Trent eſtabliſhing his ſentiments by their anathematizing decree. Theſe are their words; "If any one ſhall ſay, that the righ-"teous ought not, for their own good works, to ex-"pect the eternal reward, through the merit of JE-"SUS CHRIST, let him be accurſed."*——Do you ſpeak of the merit of CHRIST? So do they. Do you, in ſome ſenſe, allow CHRIST to be the foundation? So do they. Are your works to rear the edifice, and perform the moſt reſpectable part of the buſineſs? So are theirs.

By this time, I believe, the thoughtful reader will gueſs the reaſon, why you oppoſe and decry imputed righteouſneſs. You are ſolicitous, it ſeems, not barely for works of obedience, but for their value and credit in the affair of ſalvation; for their ſignificancy and influence, in winning the good-will of JEHOVAH. Since this is your notion, you may well be offended at CHRIST's imputed righteouſneſs. This will admit of no partner or coadjutor. This, Sir, in the caſe of juſtification, pours contempt upon all your moſt laborious exerciſes, and admired attainments. Yea, this being divine and inconceivably excellent, pours all around a blaze of glory, in which all our puny doings are loſt, as the ſtars in the meridian ſunſhine.

"We obey in order to final acceptance."—Methinks, this diſcovers no more gratitude, than wiſdom. Is it not an officious indignity to that noble goodneſs, which has ſet forth JESUS CHRIST for a propitiation? Is it not a contemptuous diſregard of that heavenly voice, which ſaid, with ſo much ſolemnity, In him I am well pleaſed with the children of men?——Does this exalt, does it not degrade the SAVIOUR? Does it mortify, does it not cheriſh the pride of man?——According to this ſcheme, the merits of our LORD are the foundation, not immediately of our acceptance, but of that ſituation only, in which we are ſuppoſed capable of acquiring it ourſelves. They are, in ſhort, no more than a mere pedeſtal; on which human worth, or rather human vanity may ſtand exalted, and challenge the favour of heaven.

Ah, Sir! acceptance with GOD, is an immenſely-rich and glorious bleſſing; a high and tranſcendently-precious privilege; incomparably too high and glorious to be obtained, in any degree, by ſuch mean obedience as yours and mine.——The pardon of rebels againſt the King of kings! the reception of leprous ſinners into the boſom of heaven! ſhall ſuch effects, than which nothing can be greater; ſhall ſuch benefits, than which nothing can be richer; be aſcribed to human obedience? What, but the very diſtraction of our diſeaſe, can have occaſioned or can account for a thought ſo extreme in abſurdity?——[Shall we, ſordid wretches, with our ulcerous ſores, our withered limbs, and a ſtupor over all our faculties; ſhall we think ourſelves able to do ſomething for HIM, who needeth not the ſervices of angels? nay, to do ſomething conſiderable enough, to found a claim to that tranſcendent honour and happineſs, the light of his countenance?]——Our adorations! our thankſgivings! our praiſes! our prayers! our preaching! our ſacramental duties! what are they all but filthy rags,* compared with his inconceivable holineſs and glory? What part of his work do we attempt, but we debaſe it with our deplorable imperfections, or pollute it with our very touch?—Shame then belongs to us, ſhame and confuſion of face, whenever we look to ourſelves or our own performances. While all our comfort, all our hope, is to be derived from the only righteous one CHRIST JESUS.

* Si quis dixerit, juſtos non debere, pro bonis operibus, expectare æternam retributionem, per Jeſu Chriſti meritum, anathema ſit. De bon. oper. can. xxvi.

If we know not enough of our own meanneſs and impotency, let us liſten to the prophet Iſaiah.† In order to our acceptance with GOD, he informs us, Lebanon with all her ſtately cedars is not ſufficient to burn; nor all the beaſts, that range through her extenſive ſhades, ſufficient for a burnt-offering. Nations, whole nations, avail no more than ſingle perſons. Should they unite their abilities, and exert all their efforts, to do ſomething which may recommend them to JEHOVAH;‡ all would be mean, ineffectual, deſpicable. Mean, as the drop of a bucket, which falls to the ground, and none regards it. Ineffectual, as the duſt upon the balance, which wants even that ſmall degree of impetus, neceſſary to turn the moſt nicely poiſed ſcales. Deſpicable, as the atom that floats in the air, and has not weight enough to ſettle itſelf on any object.—Should you reply, in all theſe things there is ſome, though very little ſubſtance; the prophet farther declares, that all nations in the world, with all their virtues, accompliſhments, and works, would before the infinitely-majeſtic GOD, be as nothing, leſs than nothing, yea, vanity itſelf; incapable, abſolutely incapable of winning his favour, or doing any thing worthy of his notice. §——Bleſſed therefore, for ever bleſſed be divine grace, that we have a great High Prieſt, in whom GOD is pleaſed; is well pleaſed; and his very ſoul delighteth: whoſe ſacrifice, and whoſe work, have merited all the good, that ſinners can want, or the ALMIGHTY can beſtow.

If we are not yet duly humbled, nor willing to profeſs ourſelves beholden to divine grace alone; if we ſtill reſolve to be principals or partners with the one MEDIATOR, in the purchaſe of the ineſtimable jewel, let us fear, leſt the LORD our righteouſneſs reſent ſuch a diſhonour done to himſelf; and ſwear in his wrath, that we ſhall have neither lot nor portion in this matter. Of this he has expreſsly warned us by his apoſtle; If ye be circumciſed, CHRIST ſhall profit you nothing. What would St Paul teach us by this ſolemn proteſtation?——That no Jew can be ſaved? Himſelf was an Hebrew of the Hebrews; circumciſed the eighth day.——That a Chriſtian would, by receiving circumciſion after his converſion to CHRIST, forfeit all his privileges? No; for he himſelf circumciſed Timothy, to gain him a fair hearing from the judaizing bigots.—Or is circumciſion here uſed, by way of ſynecdoche, for the ceremonial law? teaching us, that, as the Moſaic rites were now aboliſhed, an attempt to continue the obſervance of them, would be an unpardonable oppoſition to the deſigns of Providence? The charitable compromiſe, recorded in the xivth to the Romans, leads to a different concluſion. ——Or did thoſe ſeducing teachers, who required this

——Egregium opus
Culpa deterere ingeni.

The prophet, ſtruck with the contemplation of a moſt glorious perſonage, cries out, like one tranſported and amazed, Who? Never was any thing comparable to him, either exiſting in nature, or imagined by fancy. Who hath meaſured the waters, the unfathomable deep, and the boundleſs wave; meaſured them, not in his capacious ciſtern, but in the hollow of his hand? Who hath meted out heaven, an expanſe in which worlds revolve, and extended to immenſity; meted it, not with an out-ſtretched line, but with the ſpan of his fingers? Who hath comprehended the duſt of the earth, all the ſolid contents of this prodigiouſly-large globe, as a little pittance in the ſmalleſt meaſure? Who hath weighed the mountains, with all their ponderous ridges, and the hills, with all their maſſy rocks, as a man weigheth an ounce or a dram in his ſcales? Here I would only obſerve the judicious choice of objects. By far the moſt diſtinguiſhed and magnificent, that the univerſe affords. The abyſs of waters, and the circuit of the ſkies! the dimenſions of the earth, and the elevation of the mountains! Compared with which, the loftieſt groves are leſs than the hyſſop on the wall; and the moſt ample cities are ſmaller than a grain of muſtard ſeed.

Then follows a compariſon, more admirable, if it be poſſible, than this fine deſcription. Behold! The nations, whether on the neighbouring continent or in the remoteſt iſles, are, before this exalted Being, as the ſmall drop of a bucket, which is almoſt too ſcanty to deſerve our notice. They are as the ſmaller duſt upon the balance, which is not ſufficient even to turn the hovering ſcale. They are as the ſmalleſt atom, which has not weight enough to reach the ground, nor force enough to reſiſt the ſlighteſt undulations of the air. Yea, all the nations of the earth, amidſt all their pomp and grandeur, with all their boaſted accompliſhments and admired works, are, before this incomprehenſible GOD, as a mere nothing.—Can language go farther? Can imagination take a bolder flight? Yes; the aſtoniſhingly-rich ideas of the prophet add a heightening, a redoubled heightening even to this inimitable picture. The kingdoms of the world, with all their inhabitants, and all their honours, are leſs than nothing; are leſs than vanity itſelf, in the eſtimate of the almighty JEHOVAH.

This, if I am not greatly miſtaken, is one of the moſt highly-finiſhed ſketches of the beautiful and ſublime, extant in the whole compaſs of letters.—Let us always remember, that the majeſtic perſon, whom it deſcribes, is our atonement and righteouſneſs (ver. 2.) is our ſhepherd and guide (ver. 11.); it will then be one of the moſt conſolatory and delightful truths, in all the book of GOD.—And O! may we never forget, that the ſmall drop of the bucket, the ſmaller duſt on the balance, the volatile atom, and that which is leſs than nothing, are intended to ſhew us, what figure our own endeavours, works, and duties make in the ſight of almighty GOD. We ſhall then have a doctrine, moſt powerful to humble us, to abaſe us, and to teach us to renounce our own righteouſneſs.

conformity

* If. lxiv. 6. In ſuch a light, I cannot but look upon the ſervices and works of frail man. In ſuch a light they are repreſented, in various parts of our public devotions. And if we are but humble enough to confeſs ourſelves ſinners, in ſuch a light they muſt appear to every diſcerning and impartial eye. Since nothing, even in hell itſelf, is more loathſome, or imparts a more horrid defilement, than ſin.—If ſuch ſervices are a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to GOD, it is owing to that copious incenſe, (θυμιαματα πολλα, Rev. viii. 3.) which ariſes from the golden cenſer and the golden altar. (Rev. viii. 3.) It is wholly owing to the infinite dignity and all-recommending efficacy of CHRIST's blood, interceſſion, and righteouſneſs.

† If. xl. 15, 16, 17.

‡ Do we want to learn the prophet's aim and deſign in this magnificent paragraph? we may, to our great ſatisfaction, conſult his ſagacious and devout commentator Vitringa. Hic altius ſurgens oratio, non tantum omne meritum abjudicat carni, ſed docet etiam et inculcat, eſſe hæc omnia quæ gentes ad placandum numen finxerunt, merum nihil et inane. Nullum plane pondus afferre in commendatione cauſæ ſuæ apud Deum: imo eſſe nihilo ipſo et inani inferiora, ſi quid nihilo minus fingi et cogitari poſſit. Non poteſt in natura: ſed fingi poteſt et obtinet in œconomia ſpirituali. Eſt enim ibi quod ita non prodeſt ad obtinendam juſtitiam apud Deum, ut ſimul noceat. Cujus generis ſunt omnia αυτοσχεδια et commenta ſapientiæ carnis. Non tantum Deo non commendant, ſed potius iram et indignationem divinam provocant.

§ May I be allowed to elucidate the noble paſſage quoted above? Sure I am, the reader will not be diſpleaſed with the digreſſion, unleſs the annotator fails in the execution, and has the misfortune onformity from the Gentile converts, require them to renounce CHRIST, and relapſe into mere Judaiſm? Neither is this at all ſuppoſable. They only required ſuch a conformity, "in order to their acceptance through his merits;" which they never rejected, but only placed as a foundation for their own.

What then can be meant by, CHRIST ſhall profit you nothing, if ye be circumciſed? If ye make circumciſion, or anything whatever, beſides the righteouſneſs of CHRIST, neceſſary to your acceptance with GOD, ye ſhall receive no advantage from all that the REDEEMER has done and ſuffered. This is to halt between works and grace, between CHRIST and ſelf. And ſuch divided regards, he will interpret as an affront, rather than an acceptable homage. Indeed, this is, in Chriſtians, the grand apoſtaſy. By this they deny the ſufficiency of their SAVIOUR's moſt conſummate righteouſneſs. They caſt themſelves entirely out of the covenant of grace, and muſt expect no ſalvation but by doing the whole law.

This is the awful apoſtolic caution. To which let me ſubjoin the plain apoſtolic inſtruction—Ye are accepted, ſays St Paul, not partially, but entirely; not occaſionally, but finally, in the BELOVED. All acceptance, of whatever kind, or whatever date, is wholly in him, not in any thing of our own.——The author to the Hebrews affirms, that CHRIST hath obtained redemption, not left it to be accompliſhed, either in greater or ſmaller meaſure, by our diligence and duties. No; he himſelf hath obtained, both preſent and final, yea, complete and eternal redemption for us. And will you, Sir, aſcribe to your own obedience, what the apoſtle ſo expreſsly aſcribes, and ſo entirely appropriates, to the bleſſed JESUS?——The ſame writer aſſures us, that CHRIST, by one offering, hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified. Them that are cleanſed with the blood of ſprinkling, he hath not only diſcharged from the guilt of ſin, but rendered them unblameable and unreproveable, before the Majeſty of heaven. He hath done all that is neceſſary for their full, perfect, and everlaſting acceptation. Yes; whether it be in life or death; whether it be at the throne of grace, or the tribunal of judgment; during the ſpan of time, or through the ages of eternity; all that is neceſſary for our perfect acceptation is done: done by an infinitely-better hand, than our own; by an infinitely-better expedient, than any human obedience.

Do I, by theſe remonſtrances, ſet at nought true holineſs? or ſuppoſe a ſalvation ſeparate from holy obedience? You, Sir, cannot entertain ſuch a ſuppoſition; ſince, in your very laſt remark, you was diſſatisfied with my inſiſting on the inſeparable connection of a living faith, and works of righteouſneſs.—I honour and prize works of righteouſneſs. I would inceſſantly inculcate, both the indiſpenſable neceſſity, and the manifold utility, of holy obedience. We are redeemed, that we may be zealous of good works. We are created in CHRIST JESUS, that we may be able to do good works. And by good works we are to glorify our FATHER which is in heaven.

Only I would have good works know their proper ſtation, and their proper office. I am far from ſetting at nought the ſervices of the hand or the foot. But I ſhould very much diſapprove their deſign, I ſhould utterly deſpiſe their pretenſions, if they ſhould offer to intrude themſelves on the province of the eye, or act as the organs of ſight. Apply this ſimile to the obedience of man, and juſtification before GOD, or acceptance with GOD, you will then ſee, in what rank I place, in what eſteem I hold, both the one and the other.

As I would have obedience know its proper place, ſo I would have it take a right form. The obedience, which you propoſe, is the obedience of the bond-man, not of the free. A ſlave, bought with our money, obeys in order to be accepted. A ſervant, hired to diſpatch our buſineſs, obeys in order to receive his wages. But the child obeys, becauſe he is beloved; becauſe he is the heir; and all things, which the father hath, are his.

"Obey in order to acceptance!"—— Indeed, Sir, you quite miſtake the principle and ſource of Chriſtian obedience. Nor ſhall I undertake to rectify your miſtaken apprehenſions, leſt you ſhould ſcorn to learn from an inferior. I will refer you to a ſet of teachers, from whom you need not bluſh to receive inſtruction. But as this may demand a very particular conſideration, I ſhall poſtpone it to ſome future opportunity, and aſſign to it a diſtinct epiſtle.

In the mean time, if you ſhould aſk, why I have been ſo copious upon this point? I anſwer, becauſe it is a matter of the utmoſt importance. An error on this ſubject, is as detrimental to our ſpiritual welfare, as a fault in the firſt concoction is to the animal conſtitution. A miſtake concerning acceptance with GOD, muſt ſet in a falſe light every religious truth, and ſhed a malignant influence on every religious ſentiment.

If you aſk, why I have repeated the obnoxious propoſition, almoſt as frequently as the rams horns ſounded the fatal blaſt, on the day when Jericho was overthrown? I anſwer, For the very ſame purpoſe. To overthrow, if poſſible ſo pernicious a notion; to lay it as low, as the fortifications of that devoted city. And I hope, neither Mr Weſley, nor any other, will attempt to rebuild it, leſt they lay the foundation thereof, in the diſhonour of the bleſſed REDEEMER, and ſet up the gates of it, in the diſtreſs of precious ſouls. Both which effects, I am perſuaded, are very remote from your intention. That they may be equally remote from your preaching, your writing, and all your doctrine, is the ſincere wiſh of, &c.

LETTER IV.

REV. SIR,

I Had, in the warmth of my concern; almoſt forgot to take notice of a text, which you produce from 1 Tim. vi. 17, 18, 19. and, which is ſomewhat ſtrange, produce as a proof, that the apoſtle requires Chriſtians to obey, in order to their final acceptance."

Is Paul then become the apoſtate? and do the curſes which he has denounced againſt the ſeducers of the Galatian converts, fall at length on his own head? He placed Timothy at Epheſus, as a bulwark againſt the encroachments of other doctrines. Was it with a reſerve for liberties of this kind, which he himſelf ſhould take? Can we think his mind ſo much altered, ſince he told thoſe very Epheſians, that, without ſeeking acceptance through their obedience, they were already accepted in the BELOVED! Does he now retract the bleſſed truth? adviſing the rich, to raiſe a cloud of golden duſt, that it may cover their ſins, and waft them to the ſkies? at the ſame time, excluding the poor from the fellowſhip of this new goſpel, and the hope of glory. Is he grown aſhamed of that righteouſneſs of GOD, which, he aſſured the Romans, was the power of GOD unto ſalvation, only through believing? And are we, Sir, grown weary of that pure doctrine, which was reſtored to us, by our glorious reformers. Are we willing to give up the depoſitum, and return to the more than Egyptian darkneſs of friars and monks? with whom

—Cælum

——Cælum eſt venale DEUSque!

But to the point.——I ſhall tranſcribe the text, and add a ſhort paraphraſe; which may, perhaps, explain the meaning, and beſt refute the objection. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate; laying up in ſtore for themſelves a good foundation, that they may lay hold on eternal life. Charge them, thoſe believers * among you, who are rich in this world; that they do good, that, as members of CHRIST, they ſhew kindneſs, and exerciſe beneficence to others. That they be rich in good works, abounding in thoſe works and labours of love, which flow from faith, or a comfortable perſuaſion of their intereſt in CHRIST. Ready to diſtribute, on all proper occaſions, with chearfulneſs and delight; as counting it more bleſſed to give, than to receive. Willing, even without ſolicitation, to communicate; and not only embracing, but ſeeking every opportunity of relieving the neceſſitous. Lightly eſteeming all that is called wealth here below; and laying up in ſtore for themſelves another kind of treaſure, [even CHRIST, who is the pearl of price, and the true riches.] This will be a good foundation of hope, of comfort, and joy: againſt the time to come, whether it be the trying ſeaſon of ſickneſs, the awful hour of death, or the more trememdous day of judgment: That, placing their affections on him, and having their treaſure in him, they may be found wiſe merchants: not graſping uncertainties and ſhadows, but laying faſt hold on † ſure and ſubſtantial poſſeſſions; even on eternal life.

"We eſtabliſh the law: we provide for its honour by "the perfect obedience of CHRIST;" ſays Aſpaſio.—"Can you poſſibly think," replies Mr Weſley, "that St "Paul meant this?"—Before I anſwer this queſtion, give me leave to aſk another. Have you, Sir, done juſtice to Aſpaſio? Is what you quote, the whole of his interpretation? have you not ſecreted a ſentence, which ſpeaks the very thing you blame for omitting?

A member of the houſe of Commons, haranguing the honourable aſſembly, took the liberty to aſſert, "The gentlemen in the miniſterial intereſt, never pro-"poſe any thing for the good of their country."—This was no ſooner uttered, than a warm partizan of the other ſide ſtarting up, complained loudly of calumny and ſcandal. Hold, Sir, for a moment, ſaid the interrupted orator. Let me juſt finiſh my ſentence, and then give vent to your vehement invectives. My intention was to have added; "but we in the oppoſition readily agree "to their meaſures."—Upon hearing this explanation, the houſe ſmiled, and the haſty zealot ſat down aſhamed.

Let me produce the whole period now under conſideration. Then I believe, the reader will allow, that Mr Weſley has imitated this haſty gentleman, in one inſtance; and whether he has not ſome reaſon to imitate him in another, I ſhall leave to his own determination. —Immediately after the diſplay of free juſtification, or of righteouſneſs imputed without works *, Aſpaſio, aware of the poſſibility of abuſing his doctrine, aſſerts the indiſpenſable neceſſity of holineſs. This done, as quite cleared from the accuſation, he triumphs with the apoſtle; "Do we then make void the law, through faith, in the im-"puted righteouſneſs of our LORD? GOD forbid! yea, "we eſtabliſh the law. Conſidered as the original cove-"nant of life, we provide for its honour, by the perfect "obedience of CHRIST. Conſidered as the invariable "ſtandard of duty; we enforce its obſervance, by the "moſt rational, manly, and endearing motives †."—Here, Sir, was hardly any room for the precipitancy of interruption, becauſe the whole paſſage lay before you. And it is a little ſurpriſing, that you ſhould ſee and animadvert upon the former clauſe; yet neither ſee, nor regard the clauſe immediately following.

"Did ſuch a thought (of eſtabliſhing the law, by the "atonement and righteouſneſs of CHRIST) ever enter "into St Paul's mind?"—Let the preceding context determine. Has the apoſtle been opening the true ſenſe of the precepts, that they might be rightly underſtood? Has he been inculcating the inviolable obligation of the precepts, that they might be duly practiſed? Has he not been aſſerting a juſtification abſolutely free, effected by the righteouſneſs of GOD, without any co-agency from the righteouſneſs of man? Does he not, in the laſt words, profeſſedly encounter the objection, which in every age, has been raiſed againſt this ſacred doctrine? "Hereby you neglect and diſhonour the divine "law." No; ſays the inſpired apologiſt, the law is hereby eſtabliſhed, and ſhewn to be more ſtable than earth or heaven. The grand legiſlator himſelf ſhall be humbled to its obedience; the GOD who gave the law, ſhall bleed for its penalties; rather than a tittle fail of its due accompliſhment.—Magnified thus, the law indeed is and made for ever honourable. And though Aſpaſio does not exclude our practical regards, I do verily, for my own part, believe; that the former ſentiment, againſt which you exclaim, was uppermoſt with the apoſtle, and is the chief deſign of the text.

Yes, Sir; it was the apoſtle's chief deſign, to ſhew the perfect conſiſtency of free juſtification with the moſt awful glories of the DEITY; and thereby lay a firm foundation for the hope of a ſinner. Had juſtice, which is the eſſential glory of GOD's nature, or the law, which is the revealed glory of his will—had either of theſe been violated, by the evangelical ſcheme; benign and deſirable as it is, it muſt have been utterly rejected; it could never have taken place; the whole world muſt have periſhed, rather than ſuch an injury be offered to any of the divine perfections. Therefore St Paul moſt ſweetly teaches, and moſt ſatisfactorily proves, that, inſtead of being injured, they are moſt illuſtriouſly diſplayed by the obedience and death of CHRIST. By this means, JEHOVAH is inflexibly juſt, even in juſtifying the ungodly; and his law is highly exalted, even in abſolving the tranſgreſſor, that believeth in JESUS.

Here is firm footing; here is ſolid rock.

Solid rock, on which the ſinner may reſt, who is well nigh ſunk in deſpair; while the waves and billows o

[* The exhortation is addreſſed, not to the ungodly, but to true believers; who had received CHRIST, and were ſaved through grace; conſequently, had no need to win or attain eternal life, but only to make it, in their own apprehenſion, or to their own conſciences, more and more ſure. Had they been unconverted people, the apoſtle would, like his divine MASTER diſcourſing with the rich, but unregenerate Nicodemus, have ſtruck at the root of their miſery; and ſpoke of more important things, than diſtributing a little ſhining duſt among the poor.]

† Take faſt hold on—thus I would tranſlate that emphatical compound word επιλαβωνται. Which agrees with the experience of the Chriſtian, and is not without the authority of the critic.—With the experience of the Chriſtian. Since believers, by the exerciſe of faith, producing all good works, are continually maintaining and increaſing their hold of CHRIST; and of that eternal life, which is given them in him.—With the authority of the critic. For the word ſignifies, "to ſeize with great vehemency; to lay hold on "with both hands, as upon a thing we are glad to have got, and "will be loath to let go again." LEIGH's Crit. Sacr.—That it does not, in this connection, denote an apprehending of ſomewhat not taken hold of before, is evident from verſe the twelfth, where this very exhortation is directed to Timothy himſelf: who was an eminent man of GOD, and the ſubject of particular prophecies; was a believer of the firſt claſs, and an undoubted heir of life and immortality: who needed not therefore to attain, but to live in the ſtedfaſt hope and unintermitted expectation of the glorious inheritance.

* Rom. iv. 6. † Theron and Aſpaſio, p. 160.

divine

divine indignation go over his alarmed ſoul.—Firm footing, on which he may proceed, who ſees the importance of his eternal intereſts, and does not riſk them on the vague notion of mere mercy; dares not give into the modiſh religion, which leaves ſuch venerable things, as the juſtice of the Moſt High and the law of the Moſt Holy, deſtitute of their due honour; and leaves ſuch impotent creatures as men, to ſhift for themſelves, by doing the beſt they can.

"The plain meaning is, we eſtabliſh both the true "ſenſe, and the effectual practice of the law: we pro- "vide for its being both underſtood and practiſed in "its full extent."——How can you make this proviſion, if you ſet aſide the conſummate obedience of CHRIST; who is the end of the law for righteouſneſs; for accompliſhing that righteouſneſs, which its precepts deſcribe, and its conſtitution demands.

O! Sir, did you conſider, what that meaneth, which the apoſtle ſtyles το αδυναλον τε νομε, you would not uſe this language. Can we—can ſuch miſerable ſinners as we, ever dream of effectually practiſing, in its full extent, that law, which condemns every failure; which requires truth in the inward parts, which inſiſts upon perfection, abſolute perfection, in every inſtance, and on all occaſions; charging us,

With act intenſe, and unremitting nerve,
To hold a courſe unfaltering, to the very end of our lives, and from the beginning of them too?——Attend, I entreat you, Sir, to this moſt ſublime ſanctity of the divine law. Then, inſtead of ſaying, we provide for its performance in the full extent of its demands; you will probably ſay, with a more becoming modeſty, we provide for its performance, in a way of willing, chearful, ſincere obedience, ſtill looking unto HIM for juſtification, who has, in our name, and as our ſurety, fulfilled it to the very uttermoſt.

It is, I apprehend, one of your leading errors, that you form low, ſcanty, inadequate apprehenſions of GOD's law; that law, which is a bright repreſentation of his moſt pure nature; a beautiful draught of his moſt holy will, and never, ſince the fall, has been perfectly exemplified in any living character, but only in the man CHRIST JESUS.—From this error, many others muſt unavoidably follow; a diſeſteem of imputed righteouſneſs, and a conceit of perſonal perfection; a ſpirit of legal bondage, and, I fear, a tincture of Phariſaical pride.

Should Mr Weſley aſk, why I harbour ſuch a ſuſpicion concerning his ſentiments in this particular? I anſwer, Becauſe, here, he ſpeaks of practiſing this law, which is ſo exceeding broad, in its full extent. Becauſe, elſewhere, he repreſents the violations of this law, whoſe leaſt tittle is of greater dignity than heaven and earth, as ſmall matters; as petty offences; or, to uſe his own words, as "things not exactly right."—But more of this hereafter.

Aſpaſio, to vindicate the equity of the future judgment, declares, "I ſee ſomething arbitrary in this pro- "cedure; but an admirable mixture of juſt ſeverity, "and free goodneſs. On thoſe, who reject the atone- "ment, juſt ſeverity. To thoſe, who rely on their "SAVIOUR, free goodneſs."—Mr Weſley, as though he would exculpate the ungodly, aſks, "Was it ever "poſſible for them not to reject it?—What ſays our infallible Counſellor; the TEACHER ſent from GOD? They will not come to ME that they may have life. They rejected his counſel. They would not ceaſe from their own works, and betake themſelves wholly to the righteouſneſs of CHRIST. This method of ſalvation they diſliked. It was fooliſhneſs unto them. Therefore they were diſobedient to the heavenly call.——Does this take away their guilt? Muſt GOD be reckoned unjuſt in puniſhing, becauſe men are obſtinate in their unbelief?

GOD does not require me, as you too injuriouſly hint, to "touch heaven with my hand," in order to eſcape damnation. But he invites and requires me, to accept of CHRIST and his ſalvation. If, intent upon any imaginary accompliſhments of my own, I overlook the gift; or if, eager in the purſuit of worldly gratifications, I trample upon it; is not the fault entirely my own? Does it not proceed from the folly of my mind, or the bad diſpoſition of my heart; and leave my conduct without excuſe?

Juſtification is complete, the firſt moment we believe; and is incapable of augmentation. Thus Aſpaſio ſpeaks. Thus Mr Weſley replies, "Not ſo."——And has he, for his authority, a ſingle text of ſcripture? No; but the whole council of Trent; one of whoſe canons dogmatizes in this manner: "If any ſhall affirm, that "righteouſneſs received is not preſerved, and increaſ- "ed likewiſe, by good works; but that good works "are only the fruits and ſigns of juſtification obtained, "not the means of increaſing it alſo, let him be ac- "curſed." *——I am ſorry, Sir, to ſee you again in ſuch company. And I would hope, if it were not an unhandſome reflection, you did not know your aſſociates. Yet it is ſtrange, that a Proteſtant divine ſhould have been ſo inattentive to the main part of his character; or ſhould be able to forget, that complete juſtification, through the righteouſneſs of our LORD alone, is the very eſſence, ſoul, and glory of the reformation.

But let us examine the point.——Juſtification, I apprehend, is one ſingle act of divine grace. It muſt, therefore, be either done, or undone. If done, in my very idea of the act, it includes completeneſs. So that to ſpeak of incomplete juſtification, is a contradiction in terms; like ſpeaking of dark ſunſhine, or a round ſquare.

An incomplete juſtification ſeems, in the very nature of things, to be an abſolute impoſſibility. Even an earthly judge cannot juſtify, where there is the leaſt departure from integrity. He may overlook; he may ſhew clemency; he may forgive. But he cannot, in ſuch a caſe, pronounce righteous. Much leſs can we ſuppoſe, that juſtification ſhould take place before an infinitely-pure and jealous GOD, unleſs all guilt be done away, and the perſon be rendered completely righteous.

Beſides, can that juſtification be other than complete, which is brought to paſs by the moſt majeſtic SON of GOD? by his perfectly-holy nature; by his infinitely-precious ſufferings; and by his inconceivably-meritorious obedience? This, if any thing in the world, muſt be abſolutely complete; beyond compare, and beyond imagination complete; to ſpeak all in a word, complete in proportion to the dignity, perfection, and glory of the accompliſher.

Is any ſuch notion, as an incomplete juſtification, to be found in the Bible? St Paul ſays, Whoſoever believeth is juſtified; to all intents and purpoſes juſtified. No, ſays Mr Weſley; he may be juſtified only in part or by halves. ——He that believeth, adds the apoſtle, is juſtified from all things. No, replies Mr Weſley; many that believe, eſpecially in the infancy of their faith, are juſtified only from ſome things. There is no neceſſity, that juſtification ſhould be complete, when or where-ever it exiſts.

Is there no neceſſity? Why then does the voice of inſpiration aſſert, that the righteouſneſs of GOD is upon them that believe? Can a man have that incomparably-magnificent righteouſneſs, and yet be incompletely juſtified?——Does not the ſame inſpired writer declare,——that this perfect and divine righteouſneſs is upon all; not upon ſome only, but upon all believers? whether they be weak or ſtrong; whether in the firſt moments of their converſion, or in the laſt ſtage of their warfare.—Yes; and he farther aſſures us, that there is no difference. No difference, with regard to the righteouſneſs itſelf; for it is the one everlaſting righteouſneſs of the incarnate GOD. No difference, as to the reality of its imputation; for it is unto all, and upon all. No difference, in the way of receiving it; which is by faith in JESUS CHRIST. Conſequently, no difference in the fruits or effects; which are pardon and acceptance, free and full juſtification.

* Si quis dixerit, juſtitiam acceptam non conſervari, atque etiam non augeri coram Deo per opera bona, ſed opera ipſa fructus ſolummodo et ſigna eſſe juſtificationis adeptæ, non etiam ipſius augendæ cauſam, anathema eſto. Seſſ. vi. can. 24.

Is Mr Weſley, like the Popiſh party, an advocate for a firſt, for a ſecond, for I know not how many juſtifications? According to this ſcheme indeed, juſtification may be an incomplete thing. But the misfortune attending this ſcheme, is, that it has no foundation in ſcripture. The ſcripture knows nothing of it; the ſcripture declares againſt it; and acknowledges, as but one faith, but one baptiſm, ſo but one juſtification.

This is the grand ſcriptural maxim; HE hath, by one oblation, perfected for ever them that are ſanctified. The oblation is one, needing no repetition, and no appendage. It does not partially accompliſh, but perfects the buſineſs of juſtification; perfects it, not at the laſt only, but from firſt to laſt; yea, for ever and ever; in behalf of all thoſe, who are ſanctified; or made partakers of this great ſacrifice, and this divine atonement.

This is the fine ſcriptural illuſtration; The heir, even while he is a child, is lord of all. You have, perhaps, a ſon born. Upon this child you multiply your favours and careſſes. He grows in wiſdom and ſtature. Yet neither your favours nor his growth, add any thing to his ſonſhip, nor augment his right to your inheritance. With both theſe he was inveſted, the firſt moment he drew breath. So, we are no ſooner juſtified, than we are heirs; heirs of GOD and joint heirs with CHRIST. The perception and enjoyment of this privilege may increaſe. But the privilege itſelf, like the birth-right of the firſt-born, is incapable of augmentation.

Would Mr Weſley, with the followers of Arminius, exclude the righteouſneſs of CHRIST; and introduce ſomething of man's as the efficient, or as a concurrent, cauſe of juſtification? Then likewiſe his notion of a gradual, a variable, an incomplete juſtification, muſt enſue. Whether it be faith, which he would introduce for this purpoſe, or repentance, or ſincere obedience, or whatever elſe he pleaſes; according to the meaſure of theſe works or graces, muſt be the degree of juſtification; and not only as to different perſons, but as to the ſame perſon, at different times.

Farther, ſince all theſe endowments are, ſo long as we continue in the preſent ſtate, imperfect; our juſtification muſt, according to this plan, unavoidably partake of their imperfections. It cannot be entire and lacking nothing, till mortality is ſwallowed up of life.—But how contrary is this to a cloud of witneſſes from the ſcriptures! Ye are, even now, juſtified. He hath, even in this preſent time, reconciled you to GOD.—Through the birth and death of IMMANUEL, there is not only peace on earth, but good-will towards men; favour, complacency, and love, from the holy GOD, to the fallen ſoul. And is not this complete juſtification?

"There may be as many degrees in the favour, as "in the image of GOD."—This objection turns upon a ſuppoſition, that the favour of GOD towards us is occaſioned by the image of GOD in us: which is the doctrine of the law; the very language of Heatheniſm; and has not a ſavour of that goſpel, in which CHRIST is all. And I think myſelf more concerned, to remove ſuch very prejudicial miſtakes, than to ſift and adjuſt any nice ſpeculations, relating to degrees of the divine favour. Aſpaſio has touched this point. Referring you to his obſervation, I ſhall confine myſelf to a more intereſting ſubject.

It is CHRIST, who has redeemed us to GOD, to the favour and fruition of GOD, by his blood; by his blood alone, without any aid from our goodneſs, or any co-operation from any creature.—His work pleaſes GOD. His work magnifies the law. His work is incomparably the nobleſt of all things in heaven or earth. This therefore is our recommendation to the divine Majeſty. Inveſted in this, we ſtand perfectly righteous before the KING immortal, and ſhall be eternally acceptable in his light.—It was only on account of Abraham's ſupplication, that GOD ſhewed compaſſion to Abimelech. It was only on account of Job's interceſſion, that the LORD was pacified towards his three friends. And it is only on account of CHRIST's righteouſneſs, that the HIGH and HOLY ONE beholds any child of Adam with complacency and delight. To JESUS alone belongs the honour of reconciling, juſtifying, ſaving the innumerable millions of redeemed ſinners. And is not the LAMB that was ſlain, worthy to be thus honoured, and thus exalted?

Is then our own internal and external goodneſs of no avail in this matter?—Let us hear the eloquent Iſaiah, the evangeliſt of the Jewiſh church. The lofty looks of man ſhall be humbled, and the haughtineſs of men ſhall be bowed down; and the LORD, the LORD JESUS CHRIST, alone, ſhall be exalted in that day.—Does this text, it may be ſaid, relate to the goſpel, and the caſe of acceptance with GOD? Or is it poſſible to make what follows, conſiſtent with ſuch an interpretation?—Let us ſee, whether it be not, by the HOLY GHOST himſelf, made perfectly conſiſtent with ſuch a ſenſe.

This day of the LORD of hoſts, in the prophetical ſcriptures, generally and principally ſignifies the time of the goſpel-diſpenſation; when the LORD puts the finiſhing hand to his revelation; gives the brighteſt diſplay of his grace; and gathers together all things in CHRIST.

This day, and its influence, ſhall cauſe a wonderful revolution in, what is called, the righteous, virtuous, moral world. It ſhall fall like a thunderbolt upon every idol, ſet up in the hearts of men; ſhall prove their wiſdom to be folly; their ability to be impotence; all their work to be worthleſs.

This prophecy, being repugnant to our notions, and ſo diſguſtful to our inclinations, is aſſerted and enforced with the greateſt particularity, both as to perſons and to things.

As to perſons.—For the day of the LORD of hoſts ſhall be upon whom? upon the ſordid wretch, or the ſcandalous ſinner? Rather upon every one that is proud and lofty in his own conceit; pluming himſelf with the notion of ſome imaginary pre-eminence above his neighbour. It ſhall be likewiſe upon every one, that is lifted up in the eſteem of others; either on account of Roman virtue, or Athenian philoſophy, or Phariſaical zeal. And, notwithſtanding his aſpiring pretenſions, or glittering accompliſhments, he ſhall be brought low; ſhall be degraded to the rank of a loſt, undone helpleſs ſinner.

So that none ſhall have it in his power to ſay, "I am "better than thou. I ſtand upon more honourable "terms with my MAKER, and am a fitter object for "his favour." They ſhall all be like priſoners, confined in the ſame dungeon, and liable to the ſame condemnation. Every one of them equally deſtitute of any plea for juſtification; and all of them, as to acceptance with their CREATOR, without any difference. No difference, in this reſpect, between the accompliſhed gentleman, and the infamous ſcoundrel; no difference between the virtuous lady, and the vile proſtitute. No difference at all, as to the way and manner of their obtaining ſalvation. So that the whole may appear to be of grace.

As to things.—This part of the ſubject is illuſtrated by a grand aſſemblage of images; comprehending all that is moſt diſtinguiſhable in the viſible creation, and denoting whatever is moſt admired or celebrated among the ſons of men.—Oaks and cedars are the moſt ſtately productions of vegetable nature. Therefore the day ſhall be upon all the cedars of Lebanon, and upon all the oaks of Baſhan.—Hills and mountains are the moſt conſpicuous and majeſtic elevations of the earth. Therefore the day ſhall be upon all the high mountains, and upon all the hills that are lifted up.—Towers and cities are the moſt magnificent works of human art. Therefore the day ſhall be upon every high tower, and upon every fenced wall.—The ſhips of Tarſhiſh are put for the wealth, the advantages, and the various improvements, procured by navigation and commerce. Pleaſant pictures may repreſent every elegant and refined embelliſhment of civil life.—The whole collection of metaphors, ſeems to expreſs all thoſe attainments, poſſeſſions, and excellencies, which are ſuppoſed to add dignity to our nature, or ſtability to our hopes; to conſtitute a portion, in which we ourſelves may reſt ſatisfied, or a recommendation, which may entitle us to the favour of heaven.

Yet all theſe things, before the requirements of GOD's law, and before the revelation of his righteouſneſs, ſhall be eclipſed and diſgraced. Thrown to the bats, and conſigned over to obſcurity; thrown to the moles, and trampled into the duſt. So that, in the purſuit of eternal life, none ſhall regard them; or elſe regard them, only to deſpiſe them.

Thus, ſays the prophet a ſecond time.—To render the work of humiliation effectual, he redoubles his blow. May our whole ſouls feel the energy of his vigorous expreſſions! Thus ſhall the loftineſs of man be bowed down, and the haughtineſs of men ſhall be laid low. All notion of perſonal excellency ſet aſide, they ſhall be baſe and vile in their own eyes; acknowledge the impoſſibility of being reconciled by any duties of their own, and place all their confidence on the propitiating death and meritorious obedience of JESUS CHRIST. They leſs than nothing; HE all in all.

With this important ſentiment I cloſe my letter; not without an ardent wiſh, that it may ſink into our thoughts, and dwell upon both our hearts.

Your's, &c.

LETTER V.

REV. SIR,

YOUR laſt, and ſeveral of your other objections, appear more like notes and memorandums, than a juſt plea to the public, or a ſatisfactory explanation of your opinion! They have rather the air of a caveat, than a confutation; and we are often at a loſs to diſcern, how far your remonſtrance is either forcible or appoſite.

Brief negatives, laconic aſſertions, and quick interrogatories, opened by no pertinent illuſtrations, ſupported by no ſcriptural authority, are more likely to ſtagger, ſtun, and puzzle, than to ſettle our notions in religion. You ſeem, Sir, to have forgotten, that propoſitions are not to be eſtabliſhed, with the ſame eaſe, as doubts are ſtarted; and therefore have contented yourſelf with a brevity, which produces but little conviction, and more than a little obſcurity.

This brevity of yours is the cauſe, and, I hope, will be the excuſe, of my prolixity; which, I perceive, is growing upon my hands, much more than I intended. If you had been pleaſed to ſhew your arguments at full length, and to accompany with proof your gloſſes upon ſcripture, the reader would then have been able to determine the preponderating evidence between yourſelf and Aſpaſio; and my trouble had been conſiderably leſſened, perhaps quite ſpared.

An inſtance of the foregoing remark, is the objection which follows.—St Paul often mentions a righteouſneſs imputed, ſays Aſpaſio. "Not a righteouſneſs," ſays Mr Weſley; "never once; but ſimply righteouſneſs."—St Paul mentions δικαιοσυνη, the righteouſneſs which is imputed, both with and without the Greek article. And do neither of theſe ſignify a righteouſneſs? This is a piece of criticiſm, as new to me, as it is nice in itſelf.—Beſides, where is the difference between a righteouſneſs, and righteouſneſs? Is not every righteouſneſs, a righteouſneſs? Is not every perſon, a perſon? and every prodigious refinement, a prodigious refinement?—I thought, Mr Weſley had known how to employ his time better than in ſplitting, or thus attempting to ſplit hairs.

To what purpoſe, Sir, is the exceſſive refinement? Many of your readers, I apprehend, will find it difficult to conjecture. For my own part, I freely confeſs, that I could not for a conſiderable time, diſcern your aim. Nor can I, even now, diſcover any other deſign, than a forced endeavour, to exclude the righteouſneſs of CHRIST; and introduce a miſtaken ſomething of your own, to officiate in its ſtead.—As the thread of your criticiſm is ſpun extremely fine, we muſt examine it with the cloſeſt attention. But firſt let me juſt take notice,—

That Aſpaſio, in conſequence of his obſervation, deduced from the apoſtle's language, aſks, What or whoſe righteouſneſs can this be? To which Mr Weſley anſwers! "He tells you himſelf: faith is imputed for righteouſ-"neſs."—But have you never read Aſpaſio's interpretation of this text? If not, be ſo impartial, as to caſt your eye upon the tenth dialogue. There he conſiders this paſſage at large, and lays before you his expoſition of the words; not impoſing it, without aſſigning a reaſon; but, together with his expoſition, preſenting you with the grounds of his opinion. If you can overthrow them, try your ſtrength and your ſkill. They ſtand ready to receive your attack; being, at preſent, in full poſſeſſion of the field.

However, if you will not advert to his thoughts, allow me, if I can, to penetrate your's. "St Paul never men-"tions a righteouſneſs, but ſimply righteouſneſs."——Thus, I preſume, you argue—"Not a righteouſneſs; "that might ſeem to denote ſome real righteouſneſs; "ſome actual conformity to the divine law, imputed to "ſinners for their juſtification.—Whereas, if faith be "ſubſtituted inſtead of this real righteouſneſs; if faith "be all that to us, which our own obedience to the law "ſhould have been, and which Aſpaſio ſuppoſes the righ-"teouſneſs of CHRIST is appointed to be; if faith it-"ſelf be all this to us, then we are made righteous with-"out a righteouſneſs. Something is accounted to us "for righteouſneſs, which is really no ſuch thing.—— "Then we ſhall be under no neceſſity of ſubmitting to "the righteouſneſs of our GOD and SAVIOUR, but "may eaſily be furniſhed out of our own ſtock."

Is not this, or ſomething like this, your way of reaſoning? Do you not, in this manner, underſtand faith imputed for righteouſneſs? not as deriving all its efficacy, all its ſignificancy, from its moſt magnificent object; but as being itſelf the efficient of juſtification; the very thing for which we are accepted; in oppoſition to "the "wicked and vain commentaries of the Calviniſts, which "ſay, that all this is reſident in CHRIST, and appre-"hended by faith."

This led me to uſe that ſingular expreſſion, "a "miſtaken ſomething." Since this is an egregious miſtake miſtake of faith; of its nature, its end, its import.——Of its nature. For it is a going out of ſelf, and a flying to CHRIST, for pardon, for peace, and for every ſpiritual bleſſing.——Of its end. For it is ordained, to preclude all boaſting; that itſelf may be nothing; that its owner may be nothing; that the grace of GOD, and the righteouſneſs of CHRIST, may be all in all.——Of its import. For it ſays, according to the prophet, In the LORD, not in myſelf, have I righteouſneſs. It would expoſtulate, in the words of the apoſtle, with its overweaning and doating admirers; Ye men of Iſrael, why look ye ſo earneſtly on me; as though, by my own power or dignity, I had procured your reconciliation, and rendered you accepted? The GOD of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob has glorified his SON JESUS, and appropriated this honour to his obedience and death. In the matter of juſtification, it is my buſineſs, not to furniſh a contingent, not to ſupply any part, but to receive the whole from his fulneſs.

On CHRIST's death ſinners are to rely, as the cauſe of their forgiveneſs; on CHRIST's obedience, as the ground of their acceptance. "How does this agree "with pag. 129."—Be pleaſed to turn back, Sir; and, with a very little attention, you will perceive the agreement. Then let me deſire you to turn inward; and you will, probably, diſcern more than a diſingenuity in your own procedure; ſince you reſolve to ſtop your ears againſt the author's explanation, his very particular explanation and reſtriction of his own meaning *.—If you was examining a mathematical ſyſtem, you would always carry in your memory, the leading problems or introductory axioms. If you did not, your own judgment would blame you. And when you neglect to do the ſame, in canvaſſing a theological treatiſe, does not your own conſcience reprove you?

Our LORD commends ſuch kinds of beneficence only, as were exerciſed to a diſciple, in the name of a diſciple. Here Mr Weſley aſks; "Is not this a ſlip of the "pen?"—Read the paſſage, Sir; and anſwer yourſelf. What are our LORD's words; Inaſmuch as ye have done it to theſe my brethren. Have you not then as much reaſon, to charge our divine MASTER with a ſlip of the tongue, as to charge Aſpaſio with a ſlip of the pen? It is undeniably plain, that he does in fact commend only ſuch kinds of beneficence, as were exerciſed towards his brethren. And I preſume, you will readily grant, that his brethren, the nobler relation, cannot be more extenſive than his diſciples, the inferior.

"Will not our LORD then commend all kinds of "beneficence, provided, &c."——Excuſe my cutting ſhort your ſpeech. You are rambling from the point. What CHRIST will do, is quite another queſtion.——Aſpaſio neither denies, nor affirms any thing, on this ſubject. All that he conſiders, is, what appears to be really done, in that particular deſcription of the laſt day, and its awful proceſs. Nor will he ſcruple to affirm, a ſecond time, that our LORD applauds ſuch acts of beneficence only, as were exerciſed to a diſciple; to believers; to his brethren.

The righteous Judge ſpecifies this ſort of munificence, becauſe it is a ſure indication of one begotten by the word of truth. It is a teſt, which none but the ſaints and faithful in CHRIST JESUS will come up to.——And a Chriſtian is moſt properly diſtinguiſhed, not by what he does in common with others, but by the different principle from which he acts.——Of this particularity Aſpaſio takes notice, on purpoſe to warn, as well as to exhort his readers. Exhort them, that they may abound in works of generoſity. Warn them, that their works may ſpring from the right ſource, faith in the divine REDEEMER.

"You are not willing to call works of beneficence, "though exerciſed to a Samaritan or a Heathen," tranſient bubbles.——No more is Aſpaſio, in the ſenſe and manner, which you would inſinuate. He calls them ſuch, not abſolutely, but relatively. Not in themſelves, but with reſpect to an affair, infinitely too great for them to tranſact, either in whole or in part. In this view (as relative to juſtification) St Paul calls them dung, which is deſpicable and ſordid. Surely then Aſpaſio may call them bubbles, which are ſhewy but inſignificant.——I don't call the deſk, on which I write, a mere egg-ſhell. Yet I ſhould not heſitate to ſay, it is ſcanty as an egg-ſhell, if appointed to tranſport an army to the Indies; feeble as an egg-ſhell, if ſet up as a wall of munition, againſt a battery of cannon.

How muſt Chriſtians exceed the ſcribes and Phariſees? To this Aſpaſio replies. Not only in being ſincere; in having reſpect unto all GOD's commandments; but alſo in poſſeſſing a complete righteouſneſs. Nor can this be any thing leſs, than the perfect obedience of our great MEDIATOR.—"Did our LORD "mean this? Nothing leſs."——Peremptorily affirmed; but not ſo eaſily proved.——Yes, you add; "he ſpeci-"fies, in the following parts of his ſermon, the very in-"ſtances, wherein the righteouſneſs of a Chriſtian ex-"ceeds that of the ſcribes and Phariſees."——He does ſo. But is it not an abſolutely-complete righteouſneſs? A meekneſs, without the leaſt emotion of reſentment. A purity, without the leaſt ſtain of evil concupiſcence. A love, a long-ſuffering, a perfection, ſuch as our FATHER which is in heaven exerciſes. Now if this does not exceed the righteouſneſs of all the Chriſtians in the world, or if this is to be found in any character, ſave only in the character of our great MEDIATOR, I retract, moſt freely retract my opinion.

The diſcourſe relates to that righteouſneſs, by which we are ſaved; or by virtue of which we enter into the kingdom of heaven *. And why, Sir, why will you not reſign the honour of obtaining ſalvation, to the moſt bleſſed IMMANUEL's blood and obedience? Why will you hedge up your people's way to the immortal manſions, by teaching them to depend upon duties and attainments of their own?——Should any one, hearing this doctrine, that the law of the ten commandments requires a perfect, ſinleſs obedience; that none can be delivered from the wrath to come, or enjoy eternal life, without this unſinning, perfect obedience; ſhould ſuch a one, ſtruck with ſurpriſe and anxiety, inquire, "Who then "can be ſaved?" What anſwer would Mr Weſley give? The anſwer we would make, is obvious and full of conſolation. "No man, by his own performances. But ſalva-"tion is to be ſought, ſalvation is to be obtained, by the righ-teouſneſs

* In pag. 129. Aſpaſio, ſpeaking of the obedience and death of CHRIST, profeſſedly declares; "However, therefore, I may hap-"pen to expreſs myſelf, I never conſider them, as acting in the "excluſive ſenſe; but would always have them underſtood, as a "grand and glorious aggregate. Looking upon our SAVIOUR's "univerſal obedience, which commenced at his incarnation; was "carried on through his life; and terminated in his death;—"looking upon all this, in its collective form, as the object of my "faith, and the foundation of my hopes."

* Chriſtus magna aſſeveratione pronunciat, Phariſaicam illam juſtitiam, quæ non perfectiſſime habet integram legis impletionem, non poſſe ingredi regnum cœlorum. Suorum igitur juſtitiam vult eſſe abundantiorem, hoc eſt, ſuos vult ad judicium Dei afferre abundantiſſimam, plenifſimam, et perfectiſſimam juſtitiam, ut per ac propter eam poſſent ingredi regnum cœlorum. Eam vero, quia in ſe non inveniunt, fide quærunt et apprehendunt in impletione legis, a Chriſto pro nobis præſtita. Vid. CHEMNITII Harm. Evang. p. 722.

A truly valuable work, in which the learned reader will find many traces of lively devotion; many pieces of ſolid criticiſm, and many fine views opened, to ſee more clearly the wiſdom, beauty, and tranſcendent excellency of our bleſſed REDEEMER's life. This book is particularly eſtimable, for diſplaying with great perſpicuity, and enforcing with proportionable zeal, that diſtinguiſhed article of Chriſtianity, juſtification through the righteouſneſs of JESUS CHRIST; which is, as our author very emphatically ſpeaks, ipſiſſimum evangelii fundamentum.

" teousneſs of another; even by the conſummate obe" dience of our LORD JESUS CHRIST."

He brings this ſpecious hypocrite to the teſt:—— " How does it appear," you aſk, " that this young " ruler was an hypocrite?"—It appears from his conduct. For, he came kneeling to our SAVIOUR, as one ſincerely deſirous of learning his duty; yet, when inſtructed in it, he would not perform it.—It appears from your own character of him. You ſay, " He " loved the world." Then the love of the FATHER was not in him. That he pretended to the love of GOD, is evident from his own words. That he had no real love, is certain from your own acknowledgment. If pretence without reality be not hypocriſy, pleaſe to inform us, what is.——It is farther apparent from your deſcant on the caſe. " Therefore he could not keep " any of the commandments in their ſpiritual ſenſe." And it is a ſure, as well as an important truth, that whoever pretends to keep the commandments, yet does not keep them in their ſpiritual meaning, is a deceiver of himſelf; a deceiver of others; a hypocrite.

" The keeping of the commandments," ſays Mr Weſley, " is undoubtedly the way to, though not the " cauſe of eternal life."——How then came it to paſs, that our LORD JESUS CHRIST ſhould declare, I am the way? The way, to what? To the favour of GOD; to the fruition of GOD; to every ſpiritual bleſſing; of, in other words, to eternal life.——After ſuch a claim, from ſuch a perſon, may I not, without the imputation of undue confidence, deny your aſſertion in your own form of ſpeech? " The keeping " of the commandments undoubtedly cannot be the way " to eternal life;" ſince this is an honour, this is a prerogative, which the all-glorious REDEEMER has challenged to himſelf.

Hence your diſtinction between the way to, and the cauſe of, appears to have no countenance from ſcripture. And will it not, upon a review, appear to have as little ſupport from reaſon? Caſt your eye upon yonder bridge. It is thrown over a deep and wide river. It is the way, the only way, whereby I croſs the water, and arrive at the oppoſite bank. If ſo, is it not likewiſe the cauſe of my ſafe arrival on the other ſide? There may be, in this caſe, other cauſes, concomitant or ſubordinate. But the bridge is the grand one; that which every body chiefly regards; and to which my paſſage is always aſcribed.

CHRIST therefore is the way, the only way, to life and immortality. By his precious blood, and by his divine righteouſneſs, we paſs the gulf of wrath and deſtruction. By the things which he has done, by the pains which he has endured, we enter the realms of peace and joy. Accordingly, we are exhorted to walk in him; and are aſſured, that as many as walk in this way, ſhall renew their ſtrength. This is, what the apoſtle calls, the new and living way. This is, what the pſalmiſt ſtyles, the way everlaſting. And though other ways may ſeem right unto a man, yet the end thereof are the ways of death.

A doubt, perhaps, may ariſe in the reader's mind, ſuggeſted by the words of the prophet; An high-way ſhall be there, and a way, and it ſhall be called the way of holineſs. True. The way is CHRIST, the incarnate GOD, with all his gifts, privileges, and bleſſings. It ſhall be called the way of holineſs.* None can enter and advance therein, yet continue carnal and unclean. All that travel this road renounce the hidden things of darkneſs, and do the works of righteouſneſs. It does not indeed find, but it aſſuredly makes, the paſſengers righteous. And though holineſs is not their way, yet it is a principal part of their buſineſs, while they walk in CHRIST.

Aſpaſio, having occaſion to ſpeak of Abraham's faith, quotes the words of the apoſtle; By works his faith was made perfect. Which he thus explains; " His faith " here by anſwered its proper end, and appeared to be " of the true, the triumphant, the ſcriptural kind; ſince " it overcame the world, overcame ſelf, and regarded " GOD as all in all."——To this Mr Weſley replies, with the ſolemnity of a cenſor, and the authority of a dictator; " No. The natural ſenſe of the words is, " By the grace ſuperadded, while he wrought thoſe " works, his faith was literally made perfect."——Your proof, Sir. What have you to make good this interpretation? There is not a word in the text about grace ſuperadded. This is not aſſigned as the cauſe of a perfected faith. Nay, the ſacred writer expreſsly aſſigns another. By works, ſays St James, his faith was made perfect. No, ſays Mr Weſley; but by grace ſuperadded. St James affirms one thing; Mr Weſley affirms the contrary; and who am I, that I ſhould decide between two ſuch diſputants? But I believe, the reader will, without my interpoſal, eaſily chuſe his ſide.

Perhaps, you will reply, If this is not the true ſenſe, produce a better.——One leſs oppoſite to the natural import of the words, and the apparent meaning of the apoſtle, is already produced. Do you inſiſt upon another? I will then refer you to abler judges.——Shall I ſend you to an expoſitor, whom you yourſelf admire? Dr Doddridge thus comments upon the text. " His faith " was perfected by works: the integrity of it was made " fully apparent, to himſelf, to angels, to GOD."—— Shall I remit you to any expoſitor, who can neither deceive, nor be deceived? The GOD of glory ſays, My ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs. Made perfect! How? Is there any ſuch thing as a ſuperaddition to GOD Almighty's power, while he exerts it in behalf of his people? This none can imagine. But it is hereby manifeſted, to their comfort, and his glory. The ſame word is uſed concerning Abraham's faith, and concerning the GOD of Abraham's ſtrength. Why then ſhould it not be underſtood in the ſame ſenſe? Here it is τελειωθεις; there it is τελειωθη. And, in both places, it ſignifies not " literally made perfect," but illuſtriouſly diſplayed.

Shall I ſend you to a familiar illuſtration? I view, from my window, a young tree. The gardener, when he planted it, told me, it was a fruit-tree, a pear-tree, a right beaute du roy. It may be ſuch a tree, and have its reſpective ſeed in itſelf. But this did not then appear. If, when autumn arrives, its branches are laden with fruit, with pears, with that delicious kind of pears; this will be a demonſtration of all thoſe properties. This will not make it ſuch a particular tree; no, nor make it a good and fruitful tree; but only ſhew it to be of that fine ſort, or make its nature and perfections evident.

St James ſpeaks of the juſtification of our faith; thus proceeds Aſpaſio. And thus replies Mr Weſley; " Not unleſs you mean by that odd expreſſion, our " faith being made perfect."—I mean ſuch a perfection of faith as is mentioned above. Other perfection Iſ. xxxv. 8. Upon this ſubject, Dr Owen ſpeaks excellently. " CHRIST is the medium of communication between GOD " and us. In him we meet, in him we walk. All influences of " love, kindneſs, mercy from GOD to us, are through him; all " our returns of love, delight, faith, obedience unto GOD, are " all through him. He being that one way, GOD, ſo often pro- " miſeth his people: and it is a glorious way, Iſ. xxxv. 8. An " high-way, a way of holineſs, a way that none can err in, that " once enter it. Which is further ſet forth, Iſ. xlii. 16. All " other ways, all other paths, but this, go down to the chambers " of death: they all lead to walk contrary to GOD."

See a treatiſe, entitled Communion with GOD. By JOHN OWEN, D. D. Which preſents us with the ſpirit and quinteſſence of the goſpel; with the nobleſt privileges and ſtrongeſt conſolations of Chriſtianity; animating us thereby to all the duties of holy obedience.—Here are pinks and roſes in the path. Milk and honey in the cup. Marrow and fatneſs on the table. In many treatiſes, the author has done worthily; but in this, I think, he excelleth them all.

I find not, either in books or men. Was faith perfect in your ſenſe of the word, love, joy, and all holineſs would be perfect likewiſe. Correſpondent to the principle, would be the ſtate of the production. There would be no longer any cauſe for that petition, which the diſciples put up; LORD increaſe our faith. Nor for that ſupplication, which you and I, ſo long as we continue members of the church of England, muſt uſe; "Give unto us the increaſe of faith, hope, and cha-"rity."

You call the juſtification of our faith an "odd expreſſion."——Is it not founded on the tenor of the apoſtle's diſcourſe? Is it not the native reſult of the apoſtle's inquiry? Shew me thy faith. Prove it to be real and unfeigned. Prove it by ſuch acts, as demonſtrate you truſt in JESUS alone for everlaſting life. If it ſtands this teſt, we ſhall acknowledge it to be that precious faith, whoſe author is GOD, and whoſe end is ſalvation.—Is not that a juſtification of faith, which diſplays its ſincerity, and renders it without rebuke? Somewhat like this would be reckoned a juſtification of any perſon, or of any other thing, and why not of faith?

Something, you ſee, Sir, may be ſaid in vindication of this expreſſion. However, if it be thought improper; if it tend to create any confuſion in our ſentiments; or to draw off any attention from that grand idea, which is peculiar to the word juſtification; the idea, I mean, of being made righteous before GOD; I freely give it up; I will alter it in my book, and uſe it no more.

He that doth righteouſneſs, is righteous: he manifeſts the truth of his converſion, and juſtifies his profeſſion from all ſuſpicion of inſincerity.——"Nay;" ſays Mr Weſley, "the plain meaning is, He alone is truly righ-"teous, whoſe faith worketh by love."—Your expoſition may be true, and Aſpaſio's no leſs true. I leave the reader to determine, which is moſt exactly ſuitable to the apoſtle's arguing.——He is ſpeaking of the Chriſtian righteouſneſs; that which renders us righteous before GOD; that which fleſh and blood could never have diſcovered; which therefore was graciouſly revealed in the goſpel, and is the principal ſubject of goſpel-preaching. As there were, and always would be, many pretenders to the noble privilege, St John lays down a maxim or a touchſtone, to diſtinguiſh the ſincere from the hypocrite. He that uniformly doth righteouſneſs, in a way of ſanctification; he, and he only, is to be acknowledged by us, as truly righteous by way of juſtification.

Far be it from me, Sir, to be fond of wrangling. Where you hit upon the truth, or come pretty near it, I ſhall never be eager to oppoſe. On the contrary, I ſhall be very deſirous to agree; and preſerve, as much as poſſible, both the unity, of opinion, and the harmony of affection.——Your own interpretation ſhall take place. Only let your working be the ſign and fruit of a righteous ſtate, not that which makes or conſtitutes us righteous. The righteouſneſs of fallen creatures, is not of themſelves, but of me, ſaith the LORD. It is brought in and accompliſhed by HIM, whom GOD hath ſet forth to be their MEDIATOR and SURETY. So that we are made righteous, not by doing any thing whatſoever, but ſolely by believing in JESUS. Our character as the redeemed of the LORD, is, ὁ ἐκ πίστεως; Men, having their exiſtence, their ſubſiſtence, their all, by faith. Hence it comes to paſs, that we really are, what the apoſtle affirms, in the following words, righteous, even as he is righteous. Not barely righteous, as the moral Heathens, by dint of human reſolution; not barely righteous, as the reputable Jews, by the influence of their legal ſanctions; but righteous with that very righteouſneſs, which adorns and exalts, and will eternally diſtinguiſh the only begotten SON of GOD.

It remains to be inquired, what faith is moſt likely to operate, in this excellent and happy manner? I mean, to work by love.——Let me illuſtrate the point by a ſhort apologue; then releaſe the reader from his attention, and the writer from his taſk.

A certain king had two favourites, whom he honoured with his peculiar regard, and enriched with a ceaſeleſs liberality. They both, inſenſible of their vaſt obligations, became traitors and rebels. Being convicted of treaſon againſt their ſovereign, he was determined to overcome their evil with good. Accordingly, when they had nothing to plead in their own behalf, he generouſly forgave them both. The one he diſmiſſed from priſon, and ſuffered to live unmoleſted on his private inheritance. The other he reſtored to all his high preferments, and public employs. He adorned him again with the robe of honour, and admitted him again into the boſom of favour.—Which of them, now, will feel the warmeſt affection for their ſovereign? Which of them will be moſt ready to ſerve him on all occaſions; and, if need be, to hazard even life in his defence?——He, doubtleſs, on whom moſt was beſtowed.

And is not that perſon moſt likely to work and obey, from a principle of love, who believes, that his divine LORD has not only bore the curſe, but fulfilled the law for him? has given him, not barely an exemption from puniſhment, but a title to eternal life? yea, has clothed him with his own moſt perfect and glorious righteouſneſs. By virtue of which, he will, ere long, be preſented faultleſs before the throne of judgment, and have an abundant entrance into the everlaſting kingdom.——Will not the faith of ſuch unſpeakably-rich grace, pacify the conſcience, and purify the heart? awaken gratitude to our heavenly Benefactor, and enkindle zeal for his glory? cauſe us to diſcharge all the duties of our ſtation chearfully, and withſtand every allurement to evil reſolutely?

Surely, we may ſay of this faith, what David ſaid of Goliath's ſword; There is none, there is nothing like it. For all theſe bleſſed purpoſes, it is beyond compare, and I ſhould think, beyond diſpute, efficacious.——That you, Sir, may know more of this faith, and diſpute leſs againſt it, is the ſincere and fervent wiſh of, &c.

LETTER VI.

REV. SIR,

AS this letter may probably be pretty long, I ſhall not increaſe the prolixity by a preface; but enter upon it without any farther introduction.

Whoſo doth theſe things, ſaith David, ſhall never fall. which Aſpaſio thus interprets, "ſhall never fall into "final apoſtaſy."——You are pleaſed to reply; "David "ſays no ſuch thing. His meaning is, Whoſo doth "theſe things to the end, ſhall never fall into hell."——It would be a great wonder, I muſt own, if he ſhould. But if he happens to fail, at ſome times, and in ſome inſtances, what becomes of him then?——However, let you and I, Sir, be at as little variance as poſſible. Where is the extraordinary difference between yourſelf and Aſpaſio? If a profeſſor of religion falls into hell, muſt he not previouſly fall into final apoſtaſy? and if he falls into final apoſtaſy, muſt he not inevitably fall into hell?

When you inſert the clauſe, to the end, do you interpret? do you not rather interpolate the ſacred text? The words of the pſalmiſt relate to the preſent time, עשה doth, not יעשה ſhall do. They contain an encouragement to thoſe, who, at this inſtant, bring bring forth the fruits of evangelical righteouſneſs. The encouragement is deduced from the comfortable doctrine of final perſeverance. It carries this chearing import; "Whoſoever believes in JEHOVAH, as laying all his "ſins upon CHRIST, and giving him eternal life freely; whoſoever, from this principle of faith, ſincerely "loves and willingly obeys GOD; he ſhall never fall."—The words are לְעוֹלָם לֹא יִמּוֹט, He ſhall never be moved. A phraſe common among the Hebrews, to denote the ſtability of a man's happineſs. An immoveable thing never falls, either one way or another. So, this righteous perſon ſhall never fall; either into final apoſtaſy, which is the greateſt miſery here; or into hell, which is the conſummation of miſery hereafter.

But I begin to apprehend what you mean, and of what you are jealous. Your exclamation unravels all; "How pleaſing is this to fleſh and blood!"—Under favour, Sir, I cannot conceive how this doctrine ſhould be pleaſing to fleſh and blood. Fleſh and blood, or corrupt nature, is proud. Any ſcheme of perſeverance, to be accompliſhed by our own ſtrength, would indeed be agreeable to the vanity of our mind. But a perſeverance, founded on the fidelity and the power of GOD; a perſeverance, which acknowledges itſelf owing, not to any human ſufficiency, but to an union with CHRIST, and the interceſſion of CHRIST; this is a diſguſting method. This is what the natural man cannot away with. You will find the generality of people utterly averſe to it.—Fleſh and blood will not ſubmit, either to be made righteous before GOD, by the imputed righteouſneſs of CHRIST; or to be made faithful unto death, by the ever-failing faithfulneſs of CHRIST.——Try your friends; try your followers; try your own heart on this point.

To the humble believer, I acknowledge, this is a moſt pleaſing and conſolatory doctrine. He who feels his own impotence; who knows the power of his inbred corruptions; and is no ſtranger to the wiles of his ſpiritual enemy; he will rejoice in the thought, that nothing ſhall pluck him out of his almighty REDEEMER's hand. That his advocate with the FATHER, will ſuffer neither principalities, nor powers, nor life, nor death, nor things preſent, nor things to come, nor any other creature, to ſeparate him from the love of GOD.—Without ſuch a perſuaſion, we might too truly ſay of the Chriſtian's joy, what Solomon ſaid of worldly merriment; I ſaid of laughter, It is mad; and of mirth, What does it? If he, who is to-day baſking in the divine-favour, may before the morrow be weltering in a lake of fire; then joy, even joy in the HOLY GHOST is unreaſonable; and peace, even that peace which paſſeth all underſtanding, is chimerical. A building without a baſis; at leaſt, a bowing wall, and a tottering fence.

Let us examine the doctrine, which Mr Weſley ſays is ſo pleaſing to fleſh and blood; or, in other words, to carnal people.—What is the thing which the pſalmiſt teaches, and Aſpaſio profeſſes? That the perſons who are deſcribed in the pſalm *, ſhall never apoſtatize from the true faith, or from true obedience. Is this ſo agreeable to carnal people? Is it not rather unwarrantable in Mr Weſley to ſuppoſe, that carnal people either poſſeſs true faith, or perform true obedience, or can be pleaſed with either? Eſpecially, ſince the apoſtle aſſures us, that the carnal mind is not ſubject to the law of GOD, neither indeed can be.

* The xvth pſalm, I apprehend, deſcribes the perfect character. That perfection, which CHRIST really fulfilled; and is the righteouſneſs, in which GOD is well pleaſed. The children of the truth are, by the ſame SPIRIT, led to imitate this character, according to the meaſure of their faith. Yet ſo imperfectly, that when compared with it in their own perſons, they have reaſon to pray, Forgive us our treſpaſſes. Though, when conſidered as cloathed with the fulfilment of all in CHRIST, they may aſſure themſelves of acceptance with GOD, and an everlaſting title to the divine favour.

Beſides, are not the duties mentioned by the pſalmiſt, offenſive to fleſh and blood? Do they not require, or imply, the mortification of our carnal appetites, and the diſcipline of our unruly affections? Can it be a welcome piece of news to fleſh and blood, that this mortification ſhall take place? inſtead of being remitted ſhall increaſe? and never, never be diſcontinued, till mortality is ſwallowed up of life?——If ſo, the old man which is corrupt, muſt be pleaſed with the curb, and the dagger muſt delight in its own reſtraint, and its own deſtruction.——Such a paradox we muſt believe, before we can eſpouſe Mr Weſley's notion, that fleſh and blood are pleaſed with the doctrine of a final perſeverance in ſelf-denial, in righteouſneſs and true holineſs.

"Should your repentance be without a failure, and "without a flaw; I muſt ſtill ſay to my friend, as our "LORD replied to the young ruler, One thing thou lackeſt. In all theſe acts of humiliation, you have only "taken ſhame to yourſelf. Whereas, a righteouſneſs is "wanting, which may magnify the law, and make it "honourable."——Theſe are Aſpaſio's words; upon which Mr Weſley animadverts. "One thing thou lack"eſt, the imputed righteouſneſs of CHRIST. You "cannot think this is the meaning of the text."—Neither does Aſpaſio affirm this to be the meaning. He only uſes the words by way of accommodation. Could you demonſtrate, that our LORD intended no ſuch thing, yet the ſentence may not improperly expreſs Aſpaſio's opinion; and if ſo, be not unfit for his uſe.

However, let us inquire into the exact meaning of the text. A very little ſearch will yield the deſired ſatisfaction. Sell all thou haſt, and give to the poor, and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven. Treaſure in heaven was what the young gentleman lacked. Could this be any other than CHRIST himſelf? Is not CHRIST the treaſure, hid in the field of the goſpel? Is not CHRIST the inheritance, reſerved in heaven for us? Is not a communion with CHRIST, and an enjoyment of CHRIST, the ſupreme felicity of our nature?——David was of this mind, when he publicly declared, Whom have I in heaven but thee?——St John was of this mind, when he ſolemnly averred; He that hath the SON, hath life.—Whoever is of another mind, has very inadequate, very unworthy notions of heaven and its happineſs.——Now if CHRIST himſelf was the one thing needed, ſurely his righteouſneſs could not be ſecluded. His blood and obedience inſeparably accompany his perſon. He that hath the bridegroom, hath his riches alſo.

In oppoſition to this ſenſe, it is affirmed, "Certainly "the one thing our LORD meant, was the love of "GOD."——The love of GOD is certainly an eminent bleſſing. Poſſeſſed, I ſhould imagine, only by thoſe, who have firſt obtained eternal life, by knowing the true GOD and JESUS CHRIST. But does our love of GOD magnify the law; ſatisfy juſtice; or obtain heaven? Are we pardoned, are we reconciled, are we juſtified, on account of our love of GOD?——The young ruler wants that, which may open to him the kingdom of heaven; and that, whereby he may inherit eternal life. Mr Weſley, ſetting aſide pardon, reconciliation, juſtification, together with the one perfect righteouſneſs, which procures them, aſcribes all to our love of GOD. And, by this means, not to the true love, ariſing from the knowledge of him, as manifeſted in the goſpel; as having firſt loved us, in granting us remiſſion of ſins, freely through JESUS CHRIST.——This notion may paſs current at Rome *, not among the Proteſtant churches. Our own church has moſt expreſsly diſclaimed it. Speaking of CHRIST and his precious blood-ſhedding, ſhe adds; "Whereby alone we are "made partakers of the kingdom of heaven."

* The council of Trent, by her interpreter Andradius, thus expreſſes herſelf; Chriſtus obedientia ſua non meruit credentibus in ipſum ſalutem et vitam æternam: ſed hoc tantummodo meruit, quod propter ipſum infunditur nobis charitas inhærens; ut illa demum ſit, quæ homines Deo non tantum gratum, ſed pergratum, non tantum acceptum, ſed

"Is the obedience of CHRIST inſufficient to accom-"pliſh our juſtification?"——Here you would correct both the language, and the doctrine. The language: for you ſay, "Rather I would aſk, Is the death of "CHRIST inſufficient to purchaſe it?"—To purchaſe juſtification, you ſuppoſe, is more proper and expreſſive, than to accompliſh. As this may ſeem a ſtrife of words, I ſhall diſmiſs it without much ſolicitude. Only I would tranſiently obſerve, that to accompliſh, denotes more than to purchaſe. It denotes the conſtituent cauſe; what the ſchoolmen call, the matter of juſtification, or the very thing which effects it. If your favourite phraſe implies all this, let it have the pre-eminence.

Next, you correct the doctrine, by ſaying, "I would "rather aſk, Is the death of CHRIST inſufficient to purchaſe "juſtification?"—I anſwer, If you conſider the death of CHRIST, as excluſive of his obedience, it is inſufficient. If you do not, there is no great reaſon for your ſtarting a doubt, where we both are agreed. And indeed it is ſcarce worth my while to take notice of it. I will therefore return to the diſtinction, which you think proper to make, between accompliſhing and purchaſing juſtification.——Why, Sir, would you ſet aſide the former phraſe? Does it not imply, that which juſtifies? that very thing, which commends us to GOD? that very righteouſneſs, in which we ſtand accepted before him? Does not this way of expreſſing, guard moſt effectually againſt the errors of Popery, and exclude all coefficiency of faith, of works, or any thing elſe whatever?—I ſaid, the errors of Popery. For a Popiſh ſynod will allow, hat we are not juſtified without the righteouſneſs of CHRIST, by which he hath merited juſtification for us; but declares, at the ſame time, if any man ſhall ſay, we are formally righteous, by that very righteouſneſs, let him be accurſed.—According to this, which is no very good confeſſion, the righteouſneſs of CHRIST purchaſes, but does not accompliſh; it merits our juſtification, but does not conſtitute our juſtifying righteouſneſs. See, Sir, whither your refinements are leading you.

The ſaints in glory, ſays Aſpaſio, aſcribe the whole of their ſalvation to the blood of the LAMB. "So do I," replies Mr Weſley; "and yet I believe, he obtained for "all a poſſibility of ſalvation."—Is this objection pertinent? Does Aſpaſio's aſſertion contradict your belief? Does it not comprize, all that you avouch, and much more? Is it poſſible that Mr Weſley, who is ſuch a maſter of logic, ſhould argue in this manner? "The ſaints in "glory aſcribe all their ſalvation to CHRIST's blood; "therefore he did not obtain a poſſibility of ſalvation for all men." What a forced concluſion is this! What wild reaſoning is here! Such premiſes, and ſuch an inference, will probably incline the reader to thing of a ſun-beam and a clod, connected with bands of ſmoke.

If you was determined to make this paſſage faulty, you ſhould have oppoſed it with the following declaration of your faith; "Yet I believe, that CHRIST "obtained no more than a poſſibility of ſalvation for "any." Then you would have ſomething ſuited to your purpoſe; but not agreeable, either to ſound ſenſe, or ſound doctrine.—Not to ſound ſenſe. Your poſſibility of ſalvation is, if people perform the conditions. How then can they aſcribe the whole glory to CHRIST? At this rate, they do a piece of injuſtice to their own reſolution and diligence; as theſe by fulfilling the conditions, had a hand in obtaining the reward, theſe ought to have a ſhare in receiving the honour.——Not to ſound doctrine.——Aſpaſio believes much more than a poſſibility of ſalvation by JESUS CHRIST. He believes a full and complete ſalvation; according to that noble text, It is finiſhed. A ſalvation not to be acquired, but abſolutely given; according to that precious ſcripture, GOD hath given to us eternal life. Not upon ſome terms or pre-requiſites, but without any condition at all; according to that moſt gracious invitation, Whoſoever will, let him take of the water of life freely.—This I look upon as ſound doctrine. But will your notion of a conditional ſalvation, propoſed by a way of bargain, and granted upon terms, comport with this gift of grace?

No more than a poſſibility of ſalvation!——Yes, Sir, CHRIST obtained a great and a free ſalvation. Great; for it comprizes the pardon of all ſin, original and actual; a reſtoration to entire and unalterable favour; together with a title to everlaſting life and glory.——This is ſuch a proviſion for our happineſs, as becomes the immenſe goodneſs, and inconceivable majeſty of an incarnate GOD; ſuch as not only ſupplies our wants, and ſatisfies our deſires, but ſurpaſſes our very wiſhes; tranſporting us with wonder, and filling us with joy.—To accompliſh all this, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, nothing leſs could be ſufficient, than the active and paſſive righteouſneſs of HIM, who is gone into heaven, angels, and authorities, and powers being made ſubject unto him.—Since this matchleſs ranſom has been paid; ſince theſe grand conditions are performed; there is no obſtruction from the divine juſtice, or the divine truth. All that ineffable and eternal bleſſedneſs is now become free; is granted to ſinners, to rebels, to the moſt unworthy; they are allowed, yea, invited to receive it, to poſſeſs it, to rejoice in it as their own portion; and without the proviſo of any good thing in themſelves, purely on account of their SAVIOUR's all-ſufficient work.

I read in ſacred hiſtory of Eleazer the ſon of Dodo the Ahohite, one of the three mighty men with David; how he aroſe, and ſmote the Philiſtines, until his hand was weary, and his hand clave unto his ſword; and the LORD wrought a great victory that day; and the people returned after him only to ſpoil. And were not theſe mighty men typical, faintly typical of our almighty REDEEMER? Did not JESUS alſo ariſe, and work a great victory? Has he not triumphed glorioufly over ſin, and all our enemies? And what have we to do, but only to return, and divide the ſpoil, and ſhare the benefits of his conqueſt?——May we not boldly ſay? "My ſin is done "away, becauſe CHRIST has bore it on the curſed "tree. I ſtand accepted before GOD, becauſe "CHRIST has finiſhed the righteouſneſs, which ren-"ders me unblameable and unreproveable. I ſhall re-"ceive the HOLY GHOST, becauſe CHRIST is my "advocate; and prays the FATHER, that he will give "me another comforter. This ſacred comforter, by "ſhewing me the riches of CHRIST, will more and "more ſanctify my nature." To think and live in this manner, is to take the ſpoil after our victorious leader.

Let me cloſe and confirm this ſentiment, with a paſſage from that inimitable penman, the prophet Iſaiah; who, for his remarkably-clear views of CHRIST, may almoſt be admitted into the number of evangeliſts; and, for his exquiſitely-fine deſcriptions of CHRIST, greatly exceeds all orators and all poets. Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? This that is glorious in his apparel, travelling in the greatneſs of his ſtrength?——I that ſpeak in righteouſneſs, mighty to ſave.——Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat?——I have trodden the wine-preſs alone, and of the people there was none with me.

The prophet, like one thrown into a ſudden ſurprize, with a beautiful abruptneſs, cries out, Who is this? What extraordinry appearance diſcovers itſelf to my ſight? Is it a human, or a divine form, that I behold? He cometh from Edom the country, from Bozrah the capital, ſed peracceptum reddat ad vitam æternam. Vid. Chemnit. Exam. Conc. Trident. p. 146.

capital, of our profeſſed national enemies. Is he for us, or for our adverſaries?—The firſt queſtion ſeems to proceed from a diſtant and in diſtinct view. He then takes a nearer ſurvey, and deſcribes the wonderful perſonage with greater particularity. This that cometh with dyed garments, like ſome terrible and victorious warrior, that has ſcarcely ſheathed the ſword of ſlaughter; who is all encrimſoned, and ſtill reeking with blood of the ſlain.

The viſion becomes clearer and clearer. I ſee him (adds the rapturous prophet) glorious in his apparel. Highly graceful, as well as extremely awful. Bearing in his aſpect, in his whole perſon, in his very dreſs, the marks of tranſcendent dignity. Travelling in the greatneſs of his ſtrength. Not faint with toil, nor wearied with the fatigue of the dreadful action; but like one, that is indefatigable in his zeal, and irreſiſtible in his power; and therefore ſtill preſſing forwards, to new victories; ſtill going on, from conquering to conquer.

The majeſtic object is, all this while, advancing. At length, he approaches near enough, to hold a conference with this devout inquirer. One would naturally expect, that his ſpeech ſhould be like his aſpect, alarming and tremendous. But grace is on his tongue, and his lips drop balm. I that ſpeak in righteouſneſs: all whoſe words are faithfulneſs and truth; an immoveable foundation for the faith of my people. *That ſpeak of righteouſneſs: of that myſterious righteouſneſs, which is the delight of my FATHER, and the life of the world. To bring in which, is the deſign of my appearance on earth, and to reveal it is the office of my SPIRIT. By means of this righteouſneſs, I am mighty to ſave: to ſave thee; to ſave any loſt ſinner; to ſave them, as with the arm of omnipotence, beyond all that they can think, even to the very uttermoſt.

Here the prophet ſeems to be ſomewhat at a loſs, and takes leave to renew his inquiry. If thou art come, not to deſtroy men's lives, but to ſave; wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat? Theſe indicate, not deliverance, but deſtruction. Theſe are tokens, not of forbearing mercy, but of inexorable vengeance.—'Tis true, replies the illuſtrious hero, I have trodden in the wine-preſs; † I have cruſhed my foes; I have trampled them under my feet; and repentance was hid from my eyes. But thy enemies were the object of mine indignation. Sin, and death, and hell are the vanquiſhed adverſaries. It is their blood that is ſprinkled upon my garments, and that ſtains all my raiment.—This victory I have gained, by myſelf alone. Being infinitely too great in my power, to want an aſſociate; and infinitely too jealous of my honour to accept of any aſſiſtance. Of the people, whether in heaven or on earth, there was none with me; to afford the leaſt ſuccour, or to take the leaſt ſhare in the glorious work. The ſalvation of ſinners; their deliverance from wrath, and their redemption to GOD, is, in all its parts, my act, even mine, and mine only. Yours be all the benefit; mine all the glory.

The terms of acceptance for fallen man, were, a full ſatisfaction to the divine juſtice, and a complete conformity to the divine law. "This," ſays Mr Weſley to Aſpaſio, "you take for granted, but I cannot allow."——That Aſpaſio does not take theſe points for granted, I thought, even his enemies would confeſs. That he has attempted, at leaſt, to make good his opinion, all the world, beſides yourſelf, Sir, will acknowledge. What elſe is the deſign of dialogue the third and fourth? what elſe is aimed at, in dialogue the ſeventh, eighth, and ninth? The former treat largely of the full ſatisfaction given to divine juſtice. The latter treat ſtill more largely of the conformity demanded by the divine law, and yielded by the divine JESUS.

Theſe things, however, "you cannot allow."—Not allow a full ſatisfaction of divine juſtice to be neceſſary! Are you not then acceding to the Socinian? Not allow a complete conformity to the divine law, to be neceſſary! Are you not then warping to the Antinomian? See, Sir, how you approach the rocks, both on the right hand, and on the left. May the KEEPER of Iſrael preſerve yourſelf and your followers, from ſuffering ſhipwreck! —Every one, I think, muſt allow what you deny, who believes the divine juſtice to be infinite, and the divine law to be unalterable. A juſtice, that will admit of any ſatisfaction, leſs than complete, can never be deemed infinite. And if the divine law can reſt ſatisfied with an obedience that is defective, it is not ſo venerable as the law of the Medes and Perſians.

"The terms of acceptance for fallen man," you ſay, "are repentance and faith."—I muſt own, I don't much like the expreſſion terms, unleſs it be referred to the mediation of CHRIST. And you yourſelf, if you would act conſiſtently, ſhould not be over-fond of it, becauſe it is not ſcriptural. Though, for my own part, I have no quarrel againſt the word, becauſe it is not the exact phraſeology of ſcripture, but becauſe I diſlike the idea it conveys. Shall we treat with the DEITY, as free ſtates or ſovereign princes treat with each other? the one obtaining from the other, peace or ſome advantageous conceſſion, by complying with his terms?

To confirm your opinion, that "the terms of acceptance for fallen man, are repentance and faith," you produce the following text; Repent ye, and believe the goſpel.——Here you write, like a man of ſenſe; who knows what juſt diſputation means. You lay aſide your certainlies, your undoubtedlies, your unqueſtionablies; and urge a proof from ſcripture.—Whether you rightly underſtand, and duly apply this proof, muſt now be inquired.

Repent ye, and believe the goſpel. This may be the meaning of the exhortation. Repent; relinquiſh all your wrong notions, relating to the way and manner of finding acceptance with the DEITY. Believe the goſpel; which opens a moſt unexpected avenue, for the communication of this bleſſing; which brings you tidings of a ſalvation, fully procured by the incarnate GOD, and freely offered to the unworthy ſinner.—The word you know, is μετανοεῖτε. Which, in its primary ſignification, denotes not ſo much a reformation of conduct, as a change of ſentiment.

Suppoſe it to ſignify a reformation of conduct. The

* Vox רבר loqui conſtructa cum præfixa ב, notat paſſim, phraſi ſacra, loqui de re.

† Trodden the wine preſs.—I can hardly forbear taking notice of the great impropriety, with which this text and this metaphor are frequently uſed by our theological writers. They apply both to CHRIST, as bruiſed by his almighty FATHER; and bearing the weight of that indignation which was due to the ſins of mankind. Nothing is more common, than to make this text deſcriptive of his agony in the garden.—If indeed it had been ſaid, I am trodden in the wine-preſs, the image might not be improper. But when it is ſaid, I have trodden, nothing can be more unſuitable to a ſtate of humiliation and ſuffering. This phraſe evidently denotes conqueſt and triumph; enemies vanquiſhed and totally deſtroyed. It ſhould never therefore be applied to the agonizing, but to the triumphant SAVIOUR; not to JESUS proſtrate on the ground, but to JESUS making his foes his footſtool.

As I have taken leave to animadvert upon a common miſtake, I would alſo take liberty to pay merit its due honour; by recommending to my reader a poetical verſion of this paſſage, given us by Dr Lowth, in his very elegant work, entitled De ſacra poeſi Hebræorum. Where he underſtands the text in the ſenſe ſuggeſted above; and tranſlates it, in the very ſpirit of Virgil. As the lines are few, and the book may not be in the hands of all my readers, I will preſent them with a tranſcript.

——— Ille patris viris indutus et iram,
Dira rubens graditur, per ſtragem et fracta potentum
Agmina, prona ſolo; proſtratiſque hoſtibus ultor
Inſultat; ceu præla novo ſpumantia muſto
Exercens, ſalit attritas calcator in uvas,
Congeſtamque ſtruem ſubigit: cæde atra recenti
Crura madent, rorantque inſperſæ ſanguine veſtes.

Page 62.

meaning then may be as follows. Repent; forſake all your vices, and all your follies; mortify every evil temper, and renounce every evil way. In order to render this practicable, believe the goſpel; wherein a SAVIOUR is preached and diſplayed; who makes peace for ſuch offenders; reconciles them to GOD; and obtains eternal redemption for them. This will ſweetly withdraw your affections from iniquity, and ſweetly attach them to the bleſſed GOD. Whereas, without this powerful expedient, you will never be delivered from the pleaſing witchcraft of your luſts. Sin will always have dominion over you, ſo long as you are under the law, and not under grace.—Repentance, thus underſtood, is not the condition of obtaining ſalvation, but the fruit of ſalvation obtained.

Beſides, if repentance be a gift, it cannot be a term or condition. He muſt be a ſtranger to the import of language, and the common ideas of mankind, who will take upon him to affirm the latter; and he muſt be yet a greater ſtranger to the holy word of GOD, who will offer to deny the former.——CHRIST is exalted, ſaith the apoſtle, to give repentance. Not to require it, as a condition of bleſſedneſs; but to give it, as a moſt eminent bleſſing. Not require repentance of fallen man, who is not able to think a good thought; but give it, from his unſearchable riches; and work it, by his almighty power.

You ſay "the terms of acceptance for fallen man, "are, &c."—Methinks, I ſhould be glad to know, what you mean by fallen man. Do you mean (as you tell us, in your collection of ſermons) "one dead to GOD, "and all the things of GOD? having no more power "to perform the actions of a living Chriſtian, than a "dead body to perform the functions of a living man?" What terms, I beſeech you, can ſuch a one fulfil? Be they ever ſo difficult, or ever ſo eaſy, it maketh no difference. The hand ſtiff in death, is no more able to move a feather, than to remove a mountain.—Whatever, therefore, others may affirm, you, Sir, cannot talk of repentance, to be exerciſed by fallen man, until he is quickened and enabled by fellowſhip with CHRIST, the living and life-giving head. Unleſs you chuſe, either to contradict your own aſſertion, that fallen man is abſolutely dead to all good; or elſe think proper to maintain, that the dead may not only act, but perform ſome of the moſt excellent acts, and important offices.

You ſhould likewiſe, Sir, if you would write correctly and argue forcibly, have told us, what you mean by faith. Otherwiſe you may intend one thing, and I another, even while we both uſe the ſame word. In this caſe, our diſpute might be as endleſs, as it muſt be fruitleſs.

By faith I mean, what St John calls, a receiving of CHRIST; a receiving of him and his benefits, as they are freely given, in the word of grace and truth. If this, which is the apoſtolical, be a proper definition, then it ſeems not to come under the denomination of a condition. They muſt be exceſſive refiners indeed, who would call my receiving a rich preſent, the terms or conditions of poſſeſſing it; or would eſteem my eating at a plenteous feaſt, the terms and conditions of enjoying it. Is not this to ſubtilize, till ſound ſenſe is loſt?

Faith, according to St Paul, is a perſuaſion, that CHRIST loved me, and gave himſelf for me. Where is any trace or any hint of conditionality, in this deſcription? I don't hear the apoſtle ſaying, He loved me, provided I repent; he gave himſelf for me, in caſe I think this, or do that: but he gave himſelf for me, when I was ungodly, and had performed no conditions; when I was without ſtrength, and could perform no conditions.—Thus he gave himſelf for me, that I might have remiſſion of ſins, through his blood; and eternal life, through his righteouſneſs.—Believing theſe delightful truths, and receiving theſe heavenly privileges, I love my moſt adorable Benefactor; and abhor thoſe iniquities for which we wept, and groaned, and died. That love of CHRIST is vital holineſs: and this abhorrence of ſin, is practical repentance. And both are the fruits, therefore cannot be the conditions, of ſalvation by JESUS.

Some holy men and excellent writers, I confeſs, have not ſcrupled to call faith and repentance the conditions of our ſalvation. Yet I cannot prevail on myſelf to admire or approve the language. I fear, it tends to embarras the ſincere ſoul; to darken the luſtre of grace; and to afford too much occaſion for boaſting.

To embarraſs the ſincere ſoul——For, if I am ſaved on conditions, this will naturally divert my attention from the grand and all-ſufficient cauſe of juſtification, the righteouſneſs of CHRIST; which alone gives ſolid comfort. Inſtead of delighting myſelf in the LORD REDEEMER, I ſhall be engaged in an anxious concern about the ſuppoſed conditions. Whether I have performed them? Whether I have performed them aright? whether there may not be ſome latent defect, that ſpoils all, and renders my labour fruitleſs? The more ſerious our minds are, and the more tender our conſciences, the more ſhall we be liable to perplexity and diſquietude on this head.

It eclipſes the luſtre of grace.—Ye are ſaved by grace, ſays the oracle of heaven. But if ſalvation be upon conditions, it cannot be of grace. It muſt, in ſome meaſure at leaſt, be of works. Since it depends upon working the conditions, it is obtained by working the conditions; and the candidate has reaſon to look principally unto his performance of the conditions. They are to him, by incomparable degrees, the moſt important point. Becauſe, without their all-ſignificant interpoſition, every thing elſe is as nothing. Even GOD's everlaſting love, and CHRIST's everlaſting righteouſneſs, are, till the conditions are fulfilled, but ciphers without the initial figure.

It affords too much occaſion of boaſting.——May I not, in this caſe, thank my own application and induſtry; They, they exerted themſelves ſucceſsfully; and behold! the promiſed reward is mine. What then ſhould hinder me from ſacrificing unto my own net, and burning incenſe unto my own drag?—At this door the notion of merit will unavoidably creep in. Becauſe my performance of the condition is meritorious of the covenanted reward. So far meritorious, that the reward is my due. I may demand it, as a debt. And it will be an act of apparent injuſtice to withhold it.——But ſhall theſe things be ſaid unto the ALMIGHTY? Will theſe things redound to the praiſe of the glory of his grace? Do theſe things hide vanity from man; or conſiſt with a ſalvation, that is without money, or without price? Not quite ſo well, I believe, yourſelf will acknowledge, as the following lines:

Let the world their virtue boaſt,
Their works of righteouſneſs;
I, a wretch undone and loſt,
Am freely ſav'd by grace:
Other title I diſclaim,
This, only this, is all my plea;
I the chief of ſinners am,
But JESUS died for me.

"Fallen man," you ſay, "is juſtified, not by perfect "obedience, but by faith."——"Not by perfect obe-"dience." Ah, Sir! if you had remembered the immutability of GOD, and the ſpirituality of his law, you would not have challenged this expreſſion.——"But by faith." Here, 'tis true, you uſe the language of ſcripture. Nevertheleſs it behoves a watchman in Iſrael, to ſhew how the language of ſcripture may be abuſed. Faith, you allow, is imputed to us for righteouſneſs; therefore (you infer) not the righteouſneſs or perfect obedience of CHRIST. This if you mean any thing, or would ſpeak any thing to the purpose, must be your way of arguing. So you would set faith and CHRIST's righteousness at variance. The former shall exclude the latter from its office. Whereas, the former is only the pitcher at the fountain, while the latter is the very water of life; is that blessed, glorious, heavenly expedient, which, received by faith, justifies, sanctifies, saves.

According to your gospel, faith will say to the righteousness of the REDEEMER, "Depart hence. I have "no need of thee. I myself act as the justifying right-"eousness. I stand in the stead of perfect obedience, in order "to acceptance with GOD *."——To this may we not reply? Was faith then crucified for you? has faith magnified the divine law? or is it by means of faith, that not one jot or tittle of its precepts pass unfulfilled?

If faith, in this sense, is imputed for righteousness, how can you subscribe that emphatical article, which declares, "We are accounted righteous before GOD, "only for the merit of our LORD and SAVIOUR "JESUS CHRIST." Surely, Sir, you are accounted righteous, for the sake of that, whatever it be, which stands in the stead of perfect obedience. That, whatever it be, may claim the honour; and to that justice itself cannot but award the prize.

If your notion be true, the believer ought to have his own faith principally in view. Whatever presents me perfectly obedient before GOD, is my greatest good; is my choicest portion; the best foundation for my hope, my peace, my joy. To this, therefore, so long as I know my own interest, I must chiefly look. Whereas, look unto JESUS, is the direction of the HOLY GHOST. Look unto his perfect atonement, and complete righteousness, and be saved, is the grand unchangeable edict, issued from the throne of grace.

Perhaps, you will say, Are not the words of scripture expressly on my side? Faith is imputed for righteousness. True. But is the sense of scripture on your side? Suppose, I should undertake to prove, that David was purged from guilt, by the hyssop which groweth on the wall; this you would think a wild and an impracticable attempt. But should I not have the words of scripture expressly on my side? Purge me with hyssop and I shall be clean. Yet should I not have the least countenance imaginable from the spirit and sense of those sacred writings. Has the hyssop, a mean worthless shrub, any kind of fitness, to stand in the stead of the sacrificial blood, and make the atonement for sin? No more fitness has faith, to stand in the stead of perfect obedience; to act as our justifying righteousness; or procure our acceptance with GOD.

"What CHRIST has done."——Here Mr Wesley himself speaks of what CHRIST has done. He represents it by a very magnificent image. He lays it as the foundation of that first and most comprehensive blessing, justification. In this I most cordially agree with him. Hoping, that we shall unanimously join, to defend this important sentiment, against all opposition; and endeavour to display the REDEEMER's work, as well as his passion, in all its glorious excellency.

"What CHRIST has done is the foundation of our "justification, not the term or condition."——The prophet Isaiah had other notions of this matter; If thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed.—— If * is the hypothetic language; denotes a term; expresses a condition; on the performance of which, the MESSIAH should see his seed; should have a numberless multitude of sinners, pardoned and renewed; born again of the SPIRIT, and made heirs of salvation. The grand term, on which all these blessings depend, and by which they are made sure to believers, is, the pouring out of the MESSIAH's soul, as a sacrifice for their sins, and a ransom for their persons.

"The foundation, not the condition."——Methinks you should offer some reason for this distinction. Especially, since St Paul assures us, that CHRIST is, in the work of salvation, not this or that only, but he is ALL. Especially, since CHRIST himself declares, I am, in that grandest of all affairs, the redemption of sinners, the beginning and the ending. And well he may be so, since he is, as it follows in the text, the ALMIGHTY.

Your meaning, I presume, is, What CHRIST has done, is a foundation for the influence and significancy of our own doings. That they, under the notion of terms and conditions, may come for a share, and be his co-adjutors in the great work. This was the doctrine, established by the council of Trent; this is the doctrine, still maintained in the conclave of Rome; and is, perhaps, of all their abominations the most refined, yet not the least dishonourable to our SAVIOUR. It bears the greatest opposition to the truth of his gospel, and the freeness of his redemption.

I have heard it insinuated, that Mr Wesley is a Jesuit in disguise. This insinuation I rejected, as the grossest calumny; I abhorred, as falsehood itself. I acquit you, Sir, from the charge of being a Jesuit or a Papist. But no body, I apprehend, can acquit your principles from halting between Protestantism and Popery. They have stolen the unhallowed fire, and are infected with the leaven of Antichrist. You have unhappily adopted some specious Papistical tenets, and are listening to the mother of abominations, more than you are aware.

Amidst all your mistakes (and from mistakes who is exempt?) I verily believe, your principal aim is, the honour of CHRIST, and the edification of souls. Therefore I speak the more freely. Was you a bigot to selfishness, or a devotee to vain-glory, such liberty might be displeasing. But I am persuaded better things of Mr Wesley. He has publicly declared, that "wherein soever "he is mistaken, his mind is open to conviction; and "he sincerely desires to be better informed." This is written in the true spirit of a Christian. To this spirit I address myself. Begging of you, Sir, with the sincerity and tenderness of a brother, to consider these hints impartially; lest, being misled yourself, you mislead your thousands and ten thousands.

In the mean time, I hope, you will not take it amiss, if, to my affectionate entreaties, I add my earnest prayers: That you, Sir, and your people, may be in the number of those blessed men, unto whom GOD imputeth righteousness without works. Which I take to be the first and great evangelical privilege; as, I am very sure, it is the richest benefit, I know how to crave, either for you, or for your most, &c.

* These are Mr Wesley's own words, in his explication of this very doctrine. See his sermon on the righteousness of faith. Vol. I. p. 111.

* Is. liii. 10. תשים אם, Si posueris. Vocula אם valet conditionem, et recte vertitur per si. Patet enim clarissime, conditionem hic conjungi cum privilegio, præstita conditione obtinendo. VITRIN.

LETTER VII.

REV. SIR,

PERSONS skilled in the dissection of animal bodies, frequently mention comparative anatomy.—— May I borrow the term, and apply it to theology? I do then freely declare, that in case you censured Aspasio, for for points of divinity, comparatively small, you ſhould have no oppoſition nor any check from this pen.

Some people, for inſtance, are of opinion, that the belief of a parent is conſiderably beneficial to his children. That, when St Paul ſays to the anxious jailor, Believe on the LORD JESUS, and thou ſhalt be ſaved, and thy houſe; he promiſes ſome ſpecial good, that ſhould redound to the man's houſehold, from his own receival of CHRIST. It ſeems, indeed, that the apoſtle muſt intend ſomething of this nature; more than barely to ſay, thy family alſo, provided they follow thy example, ſhall obtain ſalvation with eternal glory. If this were the whole of his meaning, he need not have confined it to the jailor's domeſtics, but might have extended it to all the inhabitants of Philippi.

Such tenets, whether admitted or rejected, affect not the main point. Men may embrace which ſide of the queſtion they think proper, and yet be found in the faith of our LORD JESUS CHRIST. But errors, relating to that righteouſneſs, which is the one efficient cauſe of juſtification; in which alone GOD is well pleaſed, and all his perfections glorified; which is the only ſpring of ſolid peace, and true godlineſs; ſuch errors are extremely pernicious. Theſe we muſt withſtand with reſolution and zeal. We may not give place to their encroachment, no, not for an hour. The former may be compared to a fly, ſettled on the diſh; the latter are more like poiſon, mixed with our food. To diſlodge that, may not be amiſs. But to prevent, or expel, or antidote this, is abſolutely neceſſary. In the former number, perhaps, the reader will rank your obſervation, which follows. But as I have undertaken to follow you ſtep by ſtep, I muſt not diſregard it.

Aſpaſio, ſpeaking of David, expreſſes a high eſteem for that hero, king, and ſaint. Allowing, that his eſteem were carried a little too far; where would have been the great hurt, or the grievous offence? How, Sir, could this have led to "unſettled notions in religion *?"—I was inclined to anſwer your reflections, as the hero himſelf anſwered his cenſorious brother, Is there not a cauſe? Then paſſing on to another ſubject, as he, perfectly maſter of himſelf, and nobly ſuperior to the affront, turned to another perſon. But as you ſeem to have injured David, and not done juſtice to the truth, I ſhall hardly be excuſed, if I diſmiſs the matter, without ſome more particular notice.

GOD himſelf dignifies David with the moſt exalted of all characters, ſays Aſpaſio.—"Far, very far from "it," ſays Mr Weſley, "We have more exalted cha"racters than David's."—Where, Sir? Shew me, in any of the ſaints, or in any of the ſacred writers, a more devout, or a more divine ſpirit, than that which breathes in the penman of the Pſalms. For my own part, I know nothing ſuperior to it, in any author, or in any language. Neither can I concieve a more exalted character, than the character given of David, a man after GOD's own heart. If GOD be an unerring judge, if his approbation be the infallible ſtandard, this deſcription muſt expreſs the moſt conſummate human worth. Say whatever you will of a perſon, it does not, it cannot, exceed this moſt illuſtrious teſtimony.

"But this is ſaid of David in a particular reſpect."—Ay! notwithſtanding the HOLY SPIRIT has declared concerning him; a man after mine own heart, who ſhall perform all my will. If you was expounding this text, would you think it right to ſay? He ſhall perform all my will, that is, he ſhall ſerve me in ſome particular reſpect.—"It was not ſaid, with regard to "his whole character." No! not when the SPIRIT of inſpiration has borne this witneſs to David; His heart was perfect with the LORD his GOD. Could his heart be perfect, yet not influence his whole conduct?—"But "it was ſaid in the ſecond or third year of Saul's reign." Therefore it was not applicable to him, during the future years of his life. This is the inference you would draw. But can you really think it a juſt one? or would you call that perſon, a man after GOD's own heart, who is ſingularly pious in the days of his youth, but ſwerves and declines in his advanced age?

Notwithſtanding all theſe remonſtrances, you puſh matters to the utmoſt; as though it was a point of the laſt importance, to prove David an errant backſlider. With this view, you add; "But was he a man after "GOD's own heart, all his life, or in all particulars? "So far from it, that"——Stop, Sir, I beſeech you. And, before you ſpeak unadviſedly with your lips, hear what the LORD himſelf replies, to both your interrogatories; David did that which was right, in the eyes of the LORD, and turned not aſide from any thing that he commanded him, all the days of his life, ſave only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite. Surely, you was not aware, that ſuch things are written in the book of GOD. Otherwiſe, you would not have contradicted them, with ſo much boldneſs. I will, therefore, put the moſt charitable conſtruction upon your procedure, and ſay with the apoſtle; I wot, that through inadvertence you did it.

There is not a juſt man upon earth, that ſinneth not, is a text quoted by Aſpaſio. Upon which Mr Weſley obſerves; "Solomon might truly ſay ſo, before CHRIST "came."—According to this inſinuation, what Solomon ſaid in his Proverbs and other books, was ſaid only by a ſhort-ſighted mortal; who might adapt his inſtructions to the preſent œconomy; but was not able to plan a ſyſtem of morals for futurity. Whereas, I always ſuppoſed, that his writings were dictated by that infinitely-wiſe SPIRIT, before whom all times are preſent, and to whom all events are known. Agreeably to this ſuppoſition, Paul informs us, that whatſoever things were written aforetime, whether by Solomon or any other prophet, were written for our learning.—No; ſuggeſts Mr Weſley. Here is ſomething written which appertains not to us Chriſtians. We are above it.—Are you ſo? Your reaſon for theſe lofty apprehenſions? Why, "St John affirms, Whoſoever is born of GOD, ſinneth not."

True; he ſinneth not habitually; it is not his cuſtomary practice. Thus the paſſage is explained by another apoſtle; Sin, though it may make inſurrection, does not reign in his mortal body. Though it may aſſault him, yet it has not dominion over him.—

Again, he ſinneth not, is the ſame way of ſpeaking, and to be underſtood with the ſame limitation, as that text in Job, HE giveth not account of any of his matters. How, Sir, would you interpret theſe words? It is undeniably certain, that ſometimes GOD giveth account of his matters. He gave it to Abraham, when Sodom, and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, were to be deſtroyed with brimſtone and fire from heaven. You would therefore, I preſume, in ſome ſuch qualified ſenſe expound the paſſage; "He giveth not account; it is "not his uſual way. Not a cuſtomary procedure with "the ſupreme diſpoſer of things. He generally re"quireth his creatures to tranſact with him upon truſt; "to give themſelves up, with an implicit reſignation to "the veracity of his word, and the good-pleaſure of his "will."—The harmony of ſcripture, and the neceſſity of the caſe, call upon you to give the ſame expoſition of the text before us.

I ſaid, the neceſſity of the caſe. For you will pleaſe to obſerve, the thing affirmed, is affirmed in ſuch a manner, that it muſt be applied to every individual Chriſtian, and at the very inſtant of his commencing a true Chriſtian. The apoſtle ſays not, a ſaint of the the first rank; but whosoever. He says not, After such a one has been, for a considerable time, born of GOD; but whosoever is born, is but just entered upon the desirable state, sinneth not. The character belongs to the very weakest believer. The description is suited even to babes in CHRIST. To suppose, therefore, that it implies an entire freedom from sin, infirmity, and defect, is to suppose, that all the children of the regeneration are born in a state of manhood; or rather, are more than men, even while they are infants of a day.

* The reader will pleaſe to remember, that the pamphlet, which contains the remarks under conſideration, is entitled A Preſervative againſt unſettled notions in religion.

Our sense of the passage is free from this impropriety, yet gives no countenance to immortality. Whosoever is born of GOD sinneth not. He does not, he cannot sin, like the devil, or one actuated by the diabolical nature. This interpretation is rendered probable, by the apostle's antithesis; He that committeth sin is of the devil. It is rendered necessary, by the preceding remark, and by the experience of Christians.—The text, thus interpreted, is applicable to the babe in CHRIST, as well as to the adult. Though either of them may fall, thro' the violence or surprise of temptation; yet neither of them can live and die in allowed iniquity, whether of omission or commission. They cannot have a settled love to any known sin, nor can they commit it with the full consent of their will.

Solomon, when he uttered those humbling words *, had his eye upon what you somewhere call, "the inconceivable purity and spirituality of the sacred precepts;" upon that universal obedience which they require, in every the minutest instance.—That we do nothing, great or small, which they forbid; leave nothing undone, in heart or life, which they enjoin.——That we do all this, in the most perfect degree. Not only serving the LORD, but serving him with all our strength. Not only loving our neighbour, but loving him as our own soul. Ever exercising the utmost regularity of affection and desire; ever maintaining the utmost rectitude of temper and thought.—If you also, Sir, had your eye fixed upon the same law, as it delineates and demands this "inconceivable purity and spirituality;" you would not scruple to acquiesce in the wise man's confession, nor think much to adopt it as your own. You would acknowledge it calculated, not only for the Mosaic æra, and the meridian of Judea, but for all times and all places; till those new heavens, and that new earth appear, wherein dwelleth consummate righteousness.

In many things we offend all. "That St James does "not speak this of himself, or real Christians, will "clearly appear to all, who impartially consider the "context."—I wish, Sir, you had made this appear to me; even to him, whom you honour with this address. Then I should not have been obliged to ask, Of whom speaketh the apostle?——He says, My brethren. Does not this imply true believers, and real Christians?——He says, We teachers †. Does not this comprehend himself, and describe his office?—He adds, We all. If he himself, and real Christians, are not included in this most comprehensive clause; I would desire to know, in what terms they could possibly be comprised.

According to this interpretation, the arguing is just, and the conclusion forcible. As though he had said,—"My dear brethren, though you are truly converted to Christianity, yet do not unadvisedly engage in "the arduous and awful work of the ministry. Remembering, that we ministers of the gospel shall be "subject to a stricter judgment ‡ than Christians in ordinary life; and if, upon trial, we are found faithless, "shall receive a heavier condemnation ‡.——The danger, let me add, is very considerable; because such "is the frailty of our mortal state, that the very best "among us, and those conversant in sacred things, can"not always walk uprightly; but, in many instances, "we trip, we stumble, we offend."

Whereas, if neither the apostle himself nor real Christians be meant, I can see no propriety nor force in the reasoning. Nay, I can see no reasoning at all, though the illative particle for evidently requires it. Nothing but a most insipid and frivolous assertion; "For, "in many things, we that are not real Christians of"fend." Is this a discovery worthy of apostolical wisdom? Is this all that the inspired St James meant to declare? You and I could have told him and his people a great deal more. Whosoever is not a real Christian, offends, not in many things only, but in every thing. To such a one, nothing is pure. His mind and conscience are defiled: his whole life is sin.

We have examined this objection, as it stands in itself. Let us now take a view of it, as it may appear in its consequences.—In many things we offend all. "The "apostle speaks not of himself, nor of real Christians." What fine work would our adversaries make with the scriptures, if we should allow them Mr Wesley's liberty of interpretation! Tell a Pelagian, that all mankind is depraved. Prove the universal depravity, by that abasing text, All we, like sheep, have gone astray. How easily may he reply, All we does not mean all mankind? The prophet speaks not of himself, nor of virtuous persons, but only of profane people, and men of the baser sort. ——Tell an Arian, that our LORD JESUS CHRIST is very GOD. Confirm the glorious truth, by that most cogent text; In HIM dwells all the fulness of the GODHEAD. The heretic has nothing more to do, than, in Mr Wesley's manner, to answer, All fulness does not mean all the divine perfections, but only some pittance of portion of them.——Dear Sir, whenever you are disposed to criticise again, let me beseech you to consider a little the import of language, and the consequences of things.

Had the words been, In many things we offend, you might, by disregarding the context, have borrowed some slight seeming countenance for your criticism, from verse the ninth; where the apostle is supposed to personate the wicked, Therewith curse we man. But in the place under consideration, he enlarges the sentiment, and strengthens the language; though free from that particular crime, he was not free from this general charge. Here therefore he spares not himself; he takes shame to himself, and teaches the most upright of the human race, to plead guilty before their Judge. We the servants of GOD; we the ambassadors of CHRIST; we all *—not one excepted—in many things offend.—Where then could they, and O! where can you and I, look for our perfection, but only in our divinely-gracious SURETY, BRIDEGROOM, HEAD? There let us seek it, where some excellent lines (whose author you may probably know) have taught us to find it.

Now let me climb perfection's height,
And into nothing fall;
Be less than nothing in thy sight,
While CHRIST is all in all.

In the paragraph which begins, "O children of "Adam," you don't distinguish what the law is made to speak, according to a new scheme of divinity; and what it really does speak to true believers, on the principles of the gospel. Give me leave to rectify your mistakes, and to point out the manner in which you should have expressed yourself.

To rectify your mistakes—You suppose the law, upon Aspasio's plan, speaking to this effect. "O children "of Adam, you are no longer obliged to love the

* Eccl. vii. 20.

† The original is, not κυριοι, masters, but διδασκαλοι, teachers.

‡ ‡ Judgment, condemnation.—the word κριμα may be taken in both these significations.

* Ne seipsos quidem excipiunt apostoli. BENGEL. in loc.

"LORD your GOD with all your heart." Indeed you are. The obligation remains, and is unalterable. But it has been fully ſatisfied, as the condition of life and immortality, by the believer's glorious SURETY.—"Once I inſiſted on abſolute purity of heart. Now "I can diſpenſe with ſome degrees of evil deſire." No ſuch thing. Every degree of evil deſire I condemn with inexorable rigour. But every ſuch offence has been thus condemned, and thus puniſhed, in the fleſh of your crucified LORD.—"Since CHRIST has ful-"filled the law for you, you need not fulfil it." Rather, you need not fulfil it, in order to the juſtification of your perſons, or to obtain eternal life and glory. This, to you the greateſt of impoſſibilities, has been performed in your behalf, by a MEDIATOR and a REDEEMER, to whom nothing is impoſſible.—"I will connive at, yea accommodate my demands to your "weakneſs." Not this, but what is much better, I ſee no ſinful weakneſſes in you, becauſe they are all covered * with the reſplendent robe of your SAVIOUR's righteouſneſs; therefore I no longer curſe, but bleſs you, and ſign your title to everlaſting happineſs.—Thus the enmity of our nature is ſlain: thus the precepts, even the ſtricteſt precepts, become amiable and deſirable. We love the law, which, through our dear REDEEMER, is no longer againſt us, but on our ſide; is a meſſenger of peace, and bears witneſs to our completeneſs in CHRIST.

The manner in which you ſhould have expreſſed yourſelf—This is what the law ſpeaks, according to Aſpaſio's doctrine. "O believers in CHRIST, I am, like my divine "Author, conſummate and unchangeable. I did re-"quire, I do require, and ever ſhall require, perfect "love to GOD; perfect charity to your neighbour; "and perfect holineſs, both in heart and life. Never "abating one tittle of theſe my requirements, I ſhall "denounce the curſe upon every diſobedience; upon "the leaſt departure from abſolute perfection.—But "this is your comfort, believers, that the curſe is exe-"cuted upon your moſt holy SURETY. This is your "comfort, believers, that my precepts have been fully "obeyed by JESUS your SAVIOUR. As this was "done, in your nature, and in your ſtead, I am ſatis-"fied, and you are juſtified. Now, though I can ne-"ver diſpenſe with any fault, nor connive at any in-"firmity; yet I behold all your faults laid upon IM-"MANUEL: I behold all his righteouſneſs put upon "you; and on his account I acquit you, I accept you, "and pronounce you righteous †."

This is the language of the law to the faithful, as they are in CHRIST JESUS. This is the ſpirit of Aſpaſio's converſation with his friend Theron. The native tendency of this doctrine, and its powerful agency in producing true holineſs, are profeſſedly diſplayed in the tenth letter; and not obſcurely hinted in various other places. If you can prove, that it has a contrary tendency, you will prove, that the grace of GOD does no longer teach us to deny, but prompt us to commit ungodlineſs. An attempt, in which, with all my eſteem for your perſon, and deference to your abilities, I cannot with you GOD ſpeed.

"Does the righteouſneſs of GOD ever mean (as "you affirm) the merits of CHRIST?—Where do I affirm this, Sir? Be pleaſed to produce the paſſage. At leaſt refer us to the page.—Aſpaſio, in the place which offends you, ſpeaks of what CHRIST has done and ſuffered; of his active and paſſive obedience. The expreſſions you change into "the merits of "CHRIST;" which being an ambiguous phraſe, may ſerve to perplex the cauſe, rather than clear up the difficulty. Give me leave, therefore, to reſtore Aſpaſio's words, and to ſtate the queſtion fairly.

"Does the righteouſneſs of GOD ever ſignify the "active and paſſive obedience of CHRIST?" To this Mr Weſley replies, "I believe not once in all the "ſcripture."—Why then, Sir, do you not diſprove what Aſpaſio has advanced in ſupport of this interpretation? You believe one thing; he believes another. And there is this little difference in the ground you reſpectively go upon. He appeals to argument and ſcripture. You reſt the whole matter upon this ſingle bottom, "I believe ſo."

You proceed—"It" (that is, the righteouſneſs of GOD) "often means, and particularly in the epiſtle "to the Romans, GOD's method of juſtifying ſinners." —Suppoſe I ſhould ſay, in my turn, This phraſe never means, no, not in the epiſtle to the Romans, GOD's method of juſtifying ſinners; I ſhould then argue in your own way; being a ſhield ſuited to your ſword; juſt as good an argument to defend, as you have brought to deſtroy my opinion. What would the judicious reader ſay, on ſuch an occaſion? Would he not ſmile, and cry, "A goodly pair of diſputants "truly."

But let me aſk, Does the holineſs of GOD ſignify his method of ſanctifying ſinners? Does the wiſdom of GOD ſignify his method of making ſinners wiſe? This no mortal has ſuſpected; this you yourſelf will hardly venture to aſſert. Why then ſhould we take your word, when, without aſſigning the leaſt reaſon, you dictate and declare, "The righteouſneſs of GOD "means his method of juſtifying ſinners?"—You muſt pardon us, Sir, if we prefer St Peter's judgment; his judgment in that memorable paſſage, Who have obtained like precious faith in the righteouſneſs of our GOD, even of our SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST. This ſentence is a key to all thoſe texts in the New Teſtament, and many of thoſe in the Old, which mention the righteouſneſs of GOD. Here it neceſſarily ſignifies the righteouſneſs of CHRIST; becauſe none elſe is our GOD and SAVIOUR. Here it confeſſedly ſignifies the object of juſtifying faith. Which cannot be the eſſential righteouſneſs of an abſolute GOD, but muſt be the vicarious righteouſneſs of an incarnate GOD. And why ſhould you ſcruple to call the righteouſneſs of CHRIST, the righteouſneſs of GOD? ſince his blood is called the blood of GOD. His life, which he laid down for us, is called the life of GOD. And he himſelf, as the author of our ſalvation, is called JEHOVAH (or GOD ſelf-exiſtent and everlaſting) our righteouſneſs.

It is poſſible, you may produce ſome commentators of eminence, who coincide or have led the way, in this your interpretation. But may we not aſk them, as well as yourſelf, on what authority they proceed? —Is this the plain and natural ſignification of the words? No; but an apparent force upon their natural import.—Does this tend to fix and aſcertain the ſenſe of the paſſage? No; but it gives the paſſage ſuch a rambling turn, as will accommodate itſelf to the ſentiments of Arians or Socinians, Arminians or Papiſts.—Is this reconcileable with the tenor of ſcripture? He hath made HIM to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of GOD in him. Make a trial of your interpretation upon this diſtin-diſtinguiſhed text; ſee how it will accord with common ſenſe, or the analogy of faith. That we might be made the righteouſneſs of GOD; that is, "that "we might be made GOD's method of juſtifying "ſinners." Can you yourſelf, Sir, upon an impartial review, be pleaſed with ſuch interpretations of ſacred writ?

* Pſal. xxxii. 1. Bleſſed is he, whoſe iniquities are covered. Upon this text St Jerome very ingeniouſly, and very comfortably deſcants; Quod tegitur, non videtur; quod non videtur, non imputatur; quod non imputatur, non punietur. That which is covered, is not ſeen; that which is not ſeen, is not imputed; that which is not imputed, ſhall not be puniſhed.

† I think, it is no miſrepreſentation, to ſuppoſe the law ſpeaking, in this manner, to the believers.—Becauſe to them all things are become new. Conſequently, the voice of the law is new.—Becauſe all things are theirs. If ſo, the ſentence of the law is theirs. Not to overwhelm them with confuſion, but to make them joyful through hope.—Becauſe this is the language of the almighty LAWGIVER, to the redeemed of the LORD JESUS; and ſurely the law will not jar, but harmonize with its author, ſaying, How ſhall I curſe whom GOD hath not curſed? or how ſhall I defy, whom the LORD hath not defied?

How much more noble, and how much more comfortable is the eaſy and obvious ſenſe, which the words, in a moſt beautiful climax, afford! He made CHRIST, who was perfectly free from ſin, both in heart and life; God made him to be ſin, juſtly chargeable with it, and juſtly puniſhable for it. That we, who are full of ſin, both original and actual, might be made righteous—and not barely righteous, but (which is a much ſtronger expreſſion) righteouſneſs itſelf;——yea, that we might be what exceeds all parallel, and paſſes all underſtanding, *the righteouſneſs of God; might have made, that very righteouſneſs for our juſtification, which the God of all perfection, uniting himſelf to our nature, wrought, finiſhed, and infinitely ennobled.

Mr Samuel Clarke, in his annotations on this verſe, on Rom. i. 17. on Rom. x. 3. writes in the ſame vague and unſatisfactory manner as yourſelf. I could mention another celebrated commentator, who leans to this timid and trimming ſcheme.—I ſpeak thus freely, becauſe I look upon the article of juſtification through the righteouſneſs of our God and Saviour, to be the ſupreme diſtinguiſhing glory of Chriſtianity. Becauſe I conſider it as the richeſt, incomparably the richeſt privilege of the Chriſtian. To have a righteouſneſs,—a conſummate righteouſneſs,—the very righteouſneſs of the incarnate God,—dignified with all the perfections of the divine nature,—to have this righteouſneſs imputed for our juſtification! matchleſs, inconceivable bleſſing! This fills the believer's heart with inexpreſſible comfort and joy. This diſplays the grace of God, in the moſt charming and tranſporting light. This conſtitutes the moſt engaging motive to love, to holineſs, and to all willing obedience.

Let us not then treat of it, in ſuch diluting terms, or in ſuch a compromiſing ſtrain, as ſhall defeat the efficacy of the heavenly cordial, or deliver up the precious depoſitum to the enemies of the goſpel. Let us rather, by a clear and full manifeſtation of the truth, of this capital and leading truth eſpecially, commend ourſelves to every man's conſcience. Their humour may diſlike it, their prejudice may reject it; but their conſcience, whenever it awakes, and gains the aſcendant, will embrace it; will cleave to it; and rejoice in it.

But ſtay. Let me proceed cautiouſly; not triumph immaturely. You rally your forces, and prepare for a freſh attack. Aſpaſio tells his friend, that the righteouſneſs of God, ſignifies a righteouſneſs of the moſt ſupereminent dignity; ſuch as is worthy to be called by his name, and may juſtly challenge his acceptance. To this you reply, "I cannot allow it at all."—Aſpaſio ſupports his opinion by ſcripture, by reaſon, and by a very reſpectable authority. All which Mr Weſley would confront and overthrow, by that one irrefragable proof, "I cannot allow it at all."—Surely, ſaid I, upon reading ſuch controverſial triflings, delivered with the air of oracular reſponſes; ſurely this letter muſt have ſtolen its way into the world. It was deſigned as a preſervative for Mr Weſley's private ſocieties only. It could never be intended for public view, and general examination. Since every reader is treated, not as his judge, no, nor as his equal, but as his pupil; not as one, that is to be addreſſed with argument, and convinced by reaſoning, but as a tame diſciple, that is to acquieſce in the great preceptor's ſolemn "SAY SO."

To your next paragraph I have no material objection. I might indeed complain of an unfair quotation; but I ſhall only obſerve, that you would diſcard the expreſſion, imputation of righteouſneſs, and inſert in its ſtead, intereſt in CHRIST. You had not always, Sir, ſuch an averſion to the phraſe imputed: witneſs that ſtanza in one of your hymns;

Let faith and love combine
To guard your valiant breaſt;
The plate be righteouſneſs divine,
Imputed and impreſt.

However, in this place I am willing to gratify you; becauſe it will be difficult to ſhew, how a ſinner can have a real intereſt in CHRIST, in what he has done and what he has ſuffered, any other way than by imputation. I am willing to gratify you, provided you do not entertain that ſtrange conceit, of an incomplete intereſt, or an intereſt in half the REDEEMER; but look upon the holineſs of his nature, the obedience of his life, and the atonement of his death, as the one undivided ineffable treaſure, in which every believing ſinner is intereſted; as that which is the all-ſufficient cauſe of his juſtification; rendering acceptable, firſt his perſon, then his performances; and, at the laſt, introducing him, with dignity, and triumph, into everlaſting habitations.

Here I lay down my pen; unleſs you will permit me to relate a little piece of hiſtory, not foreign to your laſt ſentiment.——A certain general happened to obſerve a common ſoldier diſtinguiſhing himſelf, on the day of battle, with uncommon activity and courage; determined to reward merit where-ever it was found, he advanced the brave plebeian to a captain's poſt; who had not long enjoyed the honour, before he came to his benefactor, and, with a dejected countenance, begged leave to reſign his commiſſion. The general, ſurpriſed at ſuch an unexpected requeſt, aſked him the reaſon. Your officers, ſaid the petitioner, being gentlemen of family and education, think it beneath them to aſſociate or converſe with a ruſtic. So that now, I am abandoned on every ſide; and am leſs happy, ſince my preferment, than I was before this inſtance of your Highneſs's favour.——Is this the cauſe of your uneaſineſs? replied the general; then it ſhall be redreſſed, and very ſpeedily: to-morrow I review the army, and to-morrow your buſineſs ſhall be done.——Accordingly, when the troops were drawn up, and expected every moment to begin their exerciſe; the general calls the young hero from the ranks; leans his hands upon his ſhoulder; and, in this familiar endearing poſture, walks with him through all the lines.——The ſtratagem had its deſired effect. After ſuch a ſignal and public token of his prince's regard, the officers were deſirous of his acquaintance; and courted, rather than ſhunned, his company.

And will not the favour of the bleſſed JESUS, give us as great a diſtinction, and as high a recommendation, in the heavenly world? Will not the angelic hoſts reſpect and honour thoſe perſons, who appear waſhed in his blood; clothed with his righteouſneſs; and wearing the moſt illuſtrious tokens of his love, that he himſelf could poſſibly give?—In theſe tokens of his love may we and our readers be found! Then ſhall we meet one another with courage and comfort, at the great tribunal; with honour and joy, amidſt the angels of light; with everlaſting exultation and rapture, round the throne of the LAMB.

Under ſuch pleaſing hopes I take my leave at preſent, and remain your, &c.

* St Chryſoſtom expounds the important paſſage, in much the ſame manner. His words are worthy, not only to be copied in a note, but to be written on our hearts. Ποιος ταυτα λογος, ποιος ταυτα παρρησιας συνησειεν; Τον γαρ δικαιον, φησιν, εποιησεν αμαρτωλον, ινα τους αμαρτωλους ποιηση δικαιους. Μαλλον δε ουδ' ουτως ειπειν, αλλ' ο πολλω μειζον ην. Ου γαρ ειπεν, θνητον, αλλ' αυτην την ποιοτητα. Ου γαρ ειπεν, εποιησεν αμαρτωλον, αλλ' αμαρτιαν. Ινα γ' ημεις γενωμεθα, ουκ ειπε, αλλα δικαιοσυνη, και Θεου δικαιοσυνη. What words can expreſs, or what thoughts can conceive, the greatneſs of theſe things? He made the RIGHTEOUS ONE a ſinner, that he might make wretched ſinners righteous. This, though marvellouſly great, is not all. The word is not in the concrete, but in the abſtract. He made the JUST ONE, not a ſinner, but ſin; that we might be made, not righteous only,—but righteouſneſs itſelf,—yea, the righteouſneſs of GOD.

LETTER VIII.

REV. SIR,

YOU introduce the paragraph that comes next under our conſideration, by a very juſt diſtinction. Aſpaſio had obſerved, that a rebel may be forgiven, without being reſtored to the dignity of a ſon. To whith you reply; "A rebel againſt an earthly king may; but "not a rebel againſt GOD: in the very ſame moment "that GOD forgives, we are the ſons of GOD."—This is perfectly right. But hence to infer, that the converſation of our two friends is no better than "an idle diſ-"pute," is not very polite, and not at all concluſive. Becauſe remiſſion of the offence, and reſtoration to favour, may come in the ſame moment, and yet be different bleſſings. That afflicted patient, mentioned in the goſpel, had at the ſame inſtant his ears opened, and the ſtring of his tongue looſed. Were theſe effects, therefore, one and the ſame kind of healing?——Beſides, why are forgiveneſs and ſonſhip united in the divine donation? Becauſe the ſufferings of a ſinner, and the obedience of a ſon, were united in the divine REDEEMER. So that we muſt ſtill have our eye, our believing and adoring eye, upon the meritorious righteouſneſs of our LORD.

"Pardon and acceptance, though," &c. Here I ſee nothing but the crambe repetita.——"The words of Job," &c. Here I ſee nothing but the uſual argument, our maſter's ipſe dixit. Therefore we will paſs on to the next period.

Two texts of ſcripture are produced. You ſet aſide Aſpaſio's interpretation, to make way for one of your own. Which might have paſſed without ſuſpicion, if it had appeared in your ſermons, or been delivered from your pulpit; where a perſon may be content with the general ſenſe, without entering upon a critical nicety. But, by rejecting Aſpaſio's expoſition, you ſeem to intend a peculiar degree of accuracy. Let us then examine the paſſages with ſuch a view.——Grace reigneth through righteouſneſs unto eternal life; "that is, the free "love of GOD brings us, through juſtification and "ſanctification, to glory."

In this, I queſtion, Sir, whether you are exactly orthodox. You lead the reader to ſuppoſe, that ſanctification is as much the cauſe of glory as juſtification; that CHRIST's work, and our graces, have juſt the ſame weight; act in the very ſame capacity; have, at leaſt, a joint influence, in procuring eternal life. You ſhould rather have expreſſed yourſelf in ſome ſuch manner; "The free grace of GOD brings us, through the joyful "privilege of juſtification, firſt to ſanctification, or the "love of his bleſſed ſelf; then to glory, or the enjoy-"ment of his bleſſed ſelf."

Beſides, you neglect the ſignificancy of that beautiful and emphatical word, reigneth. On this much ſtreſs ought to be laid in reading the ſentence; therefore it ought not to be totally overlooked in explaining the ſentence. Grace is diſcovered in other inſtances; grace is exerciſed in other bleſſings: but by giving us eternal life; by giving it freely, even when we are undeſerving guilty creatures; this ever-amiable attribute reigneth. It is manifeſted with every grand and charming recommendation. It appears, like the illuſtrious Solomon, when ſeated on his inimitably-ſplendid throne of ivory and gold; or like the magnificent Ahaſuerus, when he ſhewed the riches of his glorious kingdom, and the honour of his excellent majeſty.

Another particular I cannot perſuade myſelf to admire. You change the word righteouſneſs into juſtification; inſtead of ſaying, "Brings us through righteouſ-"neſs;" you ſay, "Brings us through juſtification." By this language, you ſcarce diſtinguiſh yourſelf from any heretic. You may rank with the Arian, or with the Sectariſt of any denomination. They will, every one, allow the neceſſity of juſtification, in order to final felicity; but not the neceſſity of a righteouſneſs adequate to the demands of the law, as a foundation for this bleſſed hope.—You do juſt the ſame injury to CHRIST and his righteouſneſs, which obtain this inconceivable recompenſe of reward; as you would receive from a meſſenger, who carries a rich preſent to your friend, but will not acknowledge from whom it comes. It comes, he confeſſes, from ſome man; but obſtinately refuſes to ſay from Mr John Weſley. Whereas, Aſpaſio ſcruples not to own, nay, rejoices to declare, from whence the invaluable benefit of juſtification proceeds: Not from works of the law; no, nor from works of the SPIRIT; from nothing done by us, from nothing wrought in us; but wholly from the blood and obedience of JESUS CHRIST.

The next paſſage, on which you deſcant, is, That they may receive forgiveneſs, and a lot among the ſanctified. Thus you tranſlate the original. Aſpaſio, not affecting needleſs novelty, is content with the common verſion. That they may receive forgiveneſs of ſins, and inheritance among all them that are ſanctified, by faith that is in ME.—Why do you omit the word ſins? Forgiveneſs, I own, implies it. But the apoſtle chuſes to expreſs it. By which means, the ſentence becomes more full and emphatical. Grace is more highly honoured, and man more deeply abaſed.—I wonder alſo, why you ſhould prefer lot to inheritance, which is the uſual tranſlation. The latter word conveys a much more noble and pleaſing idea to the Engliſh reader, than the former.——Receive forgiveneſs of ſins; not earn it (let us mark this) by performing conditions, but receive it, as an abſolute gift. Juſt as Joſeph's brethren received the portions ſent them from the viceroy of Egypt's table.—Receive an inheritance; conſiſting of all ſpiritual bleſſings here, and a title to everlaſting bleſſedneſs hereafter. All which are beſtowed as freely, as the ſeveral portions of land in Canaan were, by Moſes and Joſhua, conſigned over to the tribes of Iſrael for a poſſeſſion.—Among thoſe that are ſanctified. If you ſhould inquire, how ſinners are ſanctified? The anſwer is added; by faith which is in ME. Not for faith, as your conditional ſcheme ſuppoſes; but by faith: by accepting the bleſſings mentioned; by looking upon them as our own; through the divine gift; and by living in the delightful enjoyment of them. Thus our hearts are won to GOD, and filled with his love. Thus they are weaned from vanity, and renewed in true holineſs.

Is the ſatisfaction made by CHRIST's death, ſufficient to obtain both our full pardon, and our final happineſs? Aſpaſio has anſwered this queſtion in the negative. He has confirmed his opinion, by the authority of ſcripture, and the teſtimony of reaſon. Mr Weſley thinks it enough to reply; "Unqueſtionably it is ſuffi-"cient, and neither of the texts you cite prove the con-"trary."——How eaſy, by this way of arguing, to overthrow any ſyſtem, and ſilence demonſtration itſelf!—But pray, Sir, be pleaſed to recollect yourſelf. Did you not, a little while ago, extol Aſpaſio as "unqueſ-"tionably right," becauſe he made the univerſal obedience of CHRIST, from his birth to his death, the one foundation of his hope? Yet here you condemn him, as "unqueſtionably wrong," becauſe he does not attribute all to CHRIST's death excluſively. Will Mr Weſley never have done with ſelf-contradiction? why will he give me ſuch repeated cauſe to complain,—Quo tendam vultus, &c.

If it was requiſite for Chriſt to be baptized, argues Aſpaſio, much more to fulfil the moral law.—"I can-"not not prove," replies Mr Wesley, "that either the one or the other was requisite, in order to his purchasing redemption for us." Why then do you admit his obedience to the moral law, as an essential part of the foundation of your hope? A tottering foundation methinks, which is laid in a doctrine you cannot prove.

But if you cannot prove it, may not others prove it for you? You are not called to prove this point, Sir, but only to disapprove what Aspasio has advanced in confirmation of it.——That it was requisite for our LORD to be baptized, he himself acknowledges. Speaking of that sacred rite, he says, Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. It becometh; was it not requisite for CHRIST, always to act the becoming part? in every circumstance to demean himself, according to the utmost decorum and highest dignity of character?—— "This was not requisite to purchase redemption for us." For what then was it requisite? Not to wash away any stain from the holy JESUS. Not to obtain any blessedness for the SON of the HIGHEST. Since, as the SON of the eternal GOD, he had an undoubted right to all the blessings of heaven and earth, of time and eternity.

"But it was not requisite, that he should fulfil the moral law."——No! Do you then establish the law? Are not you the Antinomian, who would have sinful man saved, yet the divine law not fulfilled, either by them or their SURETY? This is a strange way of magnifying the great standard of all righteousness. Rather, it is the sure way of dishonouring and debasing it.—— What says our LORD? I came, not to destroy the law, but to fulfil *. Did this signify, as some expository refiners suggest, only to vindicate and illustrate the law; to explain its highest meaning, and rescue it from the false glosses of the scribes; the business might have been done by the prophets and apostles. No occasion for the KING of heaven to appear in person. His ambassadors might have transacted the whole affair of vindication and explanation. But to fulfil every jot and tittle prescribed in its commands; to suffer all the vengeance and the whole curse denounced in its penalty; this was a work worthy of the SON of GOD,—practicable by none, but the SON of GOD;—and, being executed by HIM, is truly meritorious of pardon and life for poor sinners; of their restoration to the divine favour, and of their admission into the heavenly kingdom.

The moral law is inviolable in its nature, and of eternal obligation. This is a truth of great importance: with this is connected, and on this depends, the absolute necessity of a vicarious righteousness. I am no longer surprised, that you dispute against the latter, since you question or deny the former.—But consider, what our LORD says farther upon this subject, in the fifth of St Matthew, and the eighteenth verse. Perhaps, you will reply, "I have both considered it, and expounded it, in my sermons." You have; but in such a manner, as, I hope, you will live to retract. Thus you expound the awful text, and turn it into a piece of unmeaning tautology. "One jot or one tittle shall in no "wise pass, till heaven and earth pass; or, as it is expressed immediately after, till all (or rather all things) be "fulfilled, till the consummation of all things *." You would make ἕως ἂν παρέλθῃ ὁ οὐρανὸς καὶ ἡ γῆ, and ἕως ἂν πάντα γένηται, synonimous phrases, expressive of the same thing. Thus stands the passage, interpreted according to your criticism. "Till the consummation of all things, one "jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till "the consummation of all things." See! to what miserable subterfuges a man of learning is driven, in order to evade the force of a text, which militates strongly for the meritorious obedience of CHRIST.

How much more just, more noble, more useful, is the common exposition, and the obvious meaning? Which we may thus introduce—These are the terms of life and happiness to man. Whosoever falls short, GOD himself pronounces accursed. And will the UNCHANGEABLE go back from his purpose; make abatement in his demands; or come to a composition with his creatures? No verily. He is of one mind, and who can turn him †? It were easier for heaven and earth to pass ‡, for all nature to be unhinged, and the universe to drop into dissolution, than for one jot or tittle of this unalterable law to pass without a perfect accomplishment ‖ in every the minutest instance.

By CHRIST's sufferings alone the law was not satisfied, says Aspasio. "Yes, it was," replies Mr Wesley. ——Then all the indefatigable and important labours of his life, all his exemplary and shining graces, must be mere superfluities. At least, they could have no merit, but were necessary only by way of setting us an example.

The prophet was of another mind; The LORD is well pleased for his righteousness' sake. By this righteousness, not barely by his sufferings, he will magnify the law and make it honourable §.——The apostle was of another mind. GOD sent forth his SON, made of a woman, made under the law. What? only to bear its curse? only to undergo its penalty? not to fulfil its preceptive part? which is confessedly the principal part in every law; and to enforce which, all penalties are added.—You yourself ought to be of another mind. For your have already and truly observed, that pardon and acceptance always go together. "In the same mo-"ment that GOD forgives, we are the sons of "GOD." And wherefore? the reason is, because

* Sermons by JOHN WESLEY, vol. II. p. 173.

† Job xxiii. 13.

‡ Ἕως ἂν παρέλθῃ ὁ οὐρανὸς καὶ ἡ γῆ, a proverbial expression, to denote the utmost impossibility. See it explained Luke xvi. 17. In this connection, it signifies the absolute certainty of our LORD's declaration, both as to its truth and as to its accomplishment.—If I may borrow the language and the imagery of Horace, they will not unfitly express, what is affirmed concerning the law:

Si fractus illabatur orbis,
Immobilem ferient ruinæ.

‖ Ἕως ἂν πάντα γένηται. "The word all," says Mr Wesley, "does "not mean all the law, but all things in the universe." How forced a construction! How contrary to grammar! Since the law, and the things which it comprehends, are the immediate antecedent.—How much more properly and consistently has Dr Doddridge explained the passage! "Till all things, which the law "requires, or foretells, shall be effected. The translation here given, "is most literal, and most comprehensive. The law has its effect, "when its sanctions are executed, as well as when its precepts are "obeyed."—Let me add; in case of a violated law, then only it is fulfilled, or has its effect, when both the former and the latter respectively obtain their end.

§ Is. xliii. 21. I am sensible, there are expositors, who give a different turn to these noble words. But I had rather take the voice from heaven for my guide, than all the expositors in the world; even that voice, which declared concerning CHRIST, and his work, CHRIST and his righteousness, In these I am well pleased. Which is one of the most capital sayings in the Bible, and a clue to lead us into its whole meaning.

* Matth. v. 17. Some expositors would persuade us, that the word πληρωσαι signifies fully to explain. This sense I am far from discarding; but in this sense I can by no means acquiesce. It neither gives us the whole, nor the principal part of our LORD's meaning. Let us place the matter in a different light; then I believe the scantiness of the interpretation, and the impropriety of the notion, will appear unto all men.—We will suppose an ungodly person, who has learned from books, the spiritual and extensive import of the divine law. Having a ready utterance, he explains it clearly, properly, fully. Does any mortal say of this lip-practitioner, that he fulfils the law? No such thing. A system of precepts can never be fulfilled, without a due and punctual obedience. To open, to adjust, to enforce a set of injunctions, is as far from fulfilling them; as to give a description of a battle and a conquest, are different from fighting the enemy, and gaining the victory.

the ſufferings of a ſinner, and the obedience of a Son, went together in the REDEEMER. And without this union, the redemption of man had not been complete.

"The law required only the alternative, Obey or "die."——Some of your errors are leſs conſiderable; this I take to be a firſt-rate miſtake. According to this ſuppoſition, Cain and Judas, and all the damned are righteous. Becauſe they die; they bear the curſe; they ſuffer everlaſtingly; and thereby conform to one of the law's alternatives.——One of the law's alternatives? No, here I am wrong. It is one of your alternatives. The divine law knows no ſuch thing; no law on earth knows any ſuch thing. Sanctions and penalties annexed to a law, are never looked upon as equivalent to obedience, but only as preſervatives from diſobedience. In all the compaſs of your reading, have you ever met with a law, that makes ſuch propoſals to its ſubjects? "Conform to the regulations eſtabliſhed, and you ſhall "enjoy my privileges, you ſhall ſhare my honours. Or, "if you chuſe to violate all my wholeſome inſtitutions, "only ſubmit to the penalty, and you ſhall have an "equal right to the immunities and preferments."

"The law required no man to obey and die too."—But did it not require a tranſgreſſor to obey and die? If not, then tranſgreſſion robs the law of its right, and vacates all obligation to obedience.——Did it not require the SURETY for ſinful man, to obey and die? If the SURETY dies only, he only delivers from puniſhment; but this affords no claim to life, no title to a reward, unleſs you can produce ſome ſuch edict from the court of heaven, Suffer this, and thou ſhalt live. I find it written, In keeping thy commandments there is a great reward. No where do I read, In undergoing thy curſe, there is the ſame reward.——Whereas, when we join the active and paſſive obedience of our LORD, the peace-ſpeaking blood, with the life-giving righteouſneſs, both made infinitely meritorious, and infinitely efficacious, by the divine glory of his perſon; how full does our juſtification appear! How firm does it ſtand! It has all that the law can demand, both for our exemption from the curſe, and for our title to bliſs.

Before I take my leave of this topic, let me make one ſuppoſition, for which your way of thinking affords the juſter ground. Suppoſe our LORD JESUS CHRIST had yielded a perfect conformity to the precept, without ever ſubmitting to the penalty; would this have been ſufficient for the juſtification of a ſinner? Here is one of your alternatives performed. Upon the foot of your principles, therefore it would, it muſt have been ſufficient.——But this is ſo wild an opinion, ſo contrary to the whole current of ſcripture, that to produce it, is to refute it.

Where ſcripture aſcribes the whole of our ſalvation to the death of CHRIST, a part of his humiliation is put for the whole. To this Mr Weſley objects; "I can-"not allow it without proof."—I wiſh you would remember the golden rule, (of doing as you would be done by), and, ſince you inſiſt upon proof from others, not be ſo ſparing of it in your own cauſe: I wiſh likewiſe you would impartially conſider what Aſpaſio has advanced, upon the ſubject.——Has he not given you the proof you demand?—"No; he was obedient unto "death, is no proof at all."—But is that the only thing urged? If one argument is inadequate, muſt all be inconcluſive? Becauſe you have routed one detachment, have you therefore conquered the whole army? However let us ſee, whether this detachment, weak as you ſuppoſe it, may not be able to ſuſtain your attack.

Does not the ſcripture aſcribe the whole of your ſalvation to the death of CHRIST? To this queſtion Aſpaſio replies, This part of our LORD's meritorious humiliation is by a very uſual figure put for the whole.——The death of CHRIST includes not only his ſufferings, but his obedience.—The ſhedding of his blood was at once the grand inſtance of his ſufferings, and the finiſhing act of his obedience; in this view it is conſidered, and thus it is repreſented by his own ambaſſador, who ſpeaking of his divine Maſter, ſays, "He was obedient "unto death, even the death of the croſs."—"This," "you reply, "is no proof at all, as it does not neceſ-"ſarily imply any more, than that he died in obedience "to the FATHER."

How do ſome people love to cramp the enlarged, and debaſe the magnificent ſenſe of ſcripture! Surely this text implies; and not implies only, but forcibly expreſſes both the active and paſſive obedience of CHRIST. It is not ἀπεθανεν, he died; but γενομενος υπηκοος, he became obedient.—Can you ſee nothing of his active righteouſneſs in theſe words? For my part, I can ſee very little beſides. This is what the following clauſe confirms—Let common ſenſe be judge—Obedient, not barely in death, but unto death, like that expreſſion of JEHOVAH, by the prophet, Unto hoary hairs I will carry you. Does not this give us a retroſpect view of youth and manhood, as well as lead your attention forward to old age! In like manner, obedient unto death; does not this refer us to all the previous duties and virtues of a righteous walk while it leads us to the cloſing ſcene of all, a reſigned exit? Does it not moſt naturally mean, obedient through the whole courſe of life, even to the laſt all-completing inſtance, a voluntary ſubmiſſion to death?—How eaſy and obvious is this interpretation? how grand and graceful is this meaning!

I can no more admire your taſte (conſidered) as a critic, than I can admire your doctrine (conſidered) as a divine. Give me the expoſitions of ſcripture, which act, not like the nocturnal damp, but like the morning ſun; not ſhrivelling and contracting, but opening and expanding thoſe flowers of paradiſe, the truths of the goſpel, that they may diſplay all their charming beauties, and breathe out all their reviving odours. I think, upon the whole, we have very ſufficient cauſe to aſſent, and to abide by our aſſertion; that when the ſcripture aſcribes the whole of our ſalvation to the death of CHRIST, a part of his humiliation is put for the whole; and in thus ſpeaking, the HOLY SPIRIT copies after himſelf. For if the death inflicted on the firſt Adam included every evil conſequent upon the fall; the depravity, as well as the miſery of the creature; it was meet that the death to which the ſecond Adam ſubmitted, ſhould include every good needful for our recovery; the obedience as well as the ſufferings of the REDEEMER. It was meet that the price expreſſed by the ſame word, ſhould be as extenſive as the puniſhment.

"But how does it appear that he undertook this "before the foundation of the world?" At what time does Mr Weſley ſuppoſe, that CHRIST undertook the work? Not till ſin entered and man apoſtatized; Was it then an incidental (upſtart) expedient, fetched in to remedy ſome unforeſeen diſaſter? Was it a device, which owed its birth to ſome unexpected contingency, occaſioned by the perverſeneſs of the creature? Far, far from it.—It was the grand, original, all-comprehending plan, the way in which GOD, long before time commenced, decreed to manifeſt the glory of his grace, and the luſtre of all his perfections. The world was made as a proper theatre, on which to diſplay and execute this moſt magnificent ſcheme; and all the revolutions of human affairs, like ſo many under plots in the drama, are ſubſervient to the accompliſhment of this capital deſign.—"Known unto "GOD are all his works," determined by GOD are all his counſels, from the beginning of the world, more eſpecially this grandeſt of all the divine diſpenſations; ſations; this maſter-piece of his unſearchable wiſdom.

"But was this by a poſitive covenant between "CHRIST and the FATHER?" Aſpaſio proceeds to illuſtrate and confirm the doctrine of an everlaſting covenant between the almighty FATHER and his coequal SON. He produces ſeveral texts of ſcripture, to each of which you object as inſufficient for his purpoſe: each of your objections I ſhall anſwer, only by adding a ſhort comment, explanatory of their ſpirit and force —"This proves no previous contract;" that is, I deny it, and therefore it cannot prove your point. "Nei-"ther does this prove any ſuch thing." That is, I cannot or will not ſee the proof. And therefore there is none.——"That expreſſion does not neceſſarily imply "any more" than I pleaſe to allow.——"In the way or "method he had choſen;" of which I am the ſole complete judge, and my judgment ought to be deciſive in the caſe.——Thus would Mr Weſley have, not Aſpaſio only, but the public alſo, receive his dictates (tanquam a tripode) as abſolute oracles.——For here is only bare aſſertion, or bare denial, without any vouchers, but his own word; without any authority, but his own declaration.

In pſalm the xlth, the conditions of the covenant are circumſtantially recorded, which were the incarnation and obedience of the eternal SON. "A body haſt thou "prepared me—lo! I come to do thy will." Nay, "here is no mention of any covenant, nor any thing "from which it can be inferred." How many times ſhall I adjure thee, ſaid Ahab to Micaiah, that thou tell me nothing but that which is true? And how many times ſhall I entreat Mr Weſley to object nothing, without aſſigning ſome reaſon for his objection; at leaſt not to think of convincing my judgment, and converting me to his opinion by a bare ſay ſo.——But I have done—Perhaps I have treſpaſſed upon the patience of the reader, in expreſſing my diſappointment ſo frequently; perhaps I may alſo bear too hard upon Mr Weſley in aſking for proofs, when it may be no ſmall difficulty to produce them. To return—"Nay here is no mention of any "covenant, nor any thing from which it can be infer-"red."——That the word covenant is not mentioned, is very true; that there is no reference to any ſuch thing, is not ſo certain: let us conſider the whole paſſage.—— "Sacrifice and burnt-offering thou didſt not require." If ſacrifice and ſlain beaſts are not the object of the divine complacency, in what will the LORD delight? The next words declare, "A body haſt thou prepared me:" Since the law cannot be fulfilled without doing, nor juſtice ſatisfied without dying, "lo! I come," ſays the ſecond perſon in the TRINITY, "to undertake both: "ſince this undertaking muſt be accompliſhed by ONE "who is finite, that he may die; and infinite, that he "may conquer death; I will accompliſh it in the divine "and human nature. For this purpoſe a body haſt "thou prepared me; in this body lo! I come, willing-"ly and chearfully I come, to perform, to ſuſtain, to "fulfil all; and ſo to do thy great, thy gracious will." ——May we not rationally ſuppoſe this ſpoken by way of (reſtipulation, or) compliance with the FATHER's demands? that the matter is thereby brought to a ſolemn contract?

Dr Hammond thought this no irrational ſuppoſition; therefore gives us, upon the following words, a perfectly-correſponding comment. In the volume of the book it is written of me. "Which is no other than a "bill, or roll of contract between the FATHER and "CHRIST; wherein is ſuppoſed to be written the "agreement, preparatory to that great work of "CHRIST's incarnation, wherein he, undertaking to "fulfil the will of GOD, to perform all active, and alſo "all paſſive obedience, even unto death, had the pro-"miſe from GOD, that he ſhould become the author of "eternal ſalvation to all that obey him."

Thus ſays our learned countryman. And what ſays the bleſſed apoſtle? whoſe expoſition and application of the paſſage you ſeem to have forgotten, at leaſt, not to have thoroughly weighed. Having quoted the paſſage, argued from it, and diſplayed the benefits obtained by this all-ſufficient propitiation, he adduces a text from Jeremiah relating to this very ſubject, and explaining its nature: whereof the HOLY GHOST alſo is a witneſs; of what? of the juſtification and ſanctification of ſinners, both founded on, both effected by, the ſacrifice of the dying JESUS. Tranſactions, which both the prophet and the apoſtle conſider under the notion of a covenant, as is plain from the following quotation; "For after that he had ſaid before, This is the cove-"nant which I will make with them in thoſe days."—Hence it appears, that the author to the Hebrews ſaw ſomething in the words of the pſalmiſt, from which the doctrine of a covenant might be inferred.

Another copy of this grand treaty is recorded, Iſ. xlix. from the firſt to the ſixth verſe. "I have read them, "but cannot find a word about it in all thoſe verſes; "they contain neither more nor leſs than a prediction "of the ſalvation of the Gentiles." They contain a prediction, and ſomewhat more; they deſcribe the way whereby this moſt deſirable event ſhall be brought to paſs. This the LORD himſelf declares ſhall be by way of covenant; "I will give thee for a covenant to the "people."——This verſe we may look upon as a key to the preceding. It teaches us to conſider them as deſcriptive of the auguſt covenant; of its eſtabliſhment, its parties, and its terms. Indeed the verſes themſelves lead us to the ſame view; for what is a covenant? A contract, wherein a condition is preſcribed, a promiſe is made, and both are ratified by a mutual agreement.—— The condition is preſcribed in thoſe words, *Thou art my ſervant, O Iſrael, in whom I will be glorified. The promiſe is made in thoſe words, Thou ſhalt raiſe up the tribes of Jacob, reſtore the preſerved of Iſrael, and be my ſalvation unto the ends of the earth. The agreement is ſpecified or implied in thoſe words; (I have ſpent my ſtrength for nought, yet ſurely my judgment is with the LORD, and my work with my GOD.

The great Vitringa, after having expounded the whole clauſe, concludes in this manner: "Antequam ab his "verbis, ſenſu fœcundiſſimis, ſummam doctrinæ evan-"gelicæ complexis, diſcedam, monere velim, eadem "clariſſime deformare totum myſterium conventionis "pacis, inter Deum patrem et Meſſiam filium ejus, in "humana carne appariturum, initæ, perinde ac in locis "quæ ex aliis excerpo, Pſal. xl. 7. Zech. vii. 13. Pa-"ter ut Dominus, filio ut Meſſiæ, offert gloriam longe "ampliſſimam, mediationis et ſalvationis Judæorum et "Gentium, quæ gloria, omnium quæ mente concipi "poſſunt, eſt maxima, ſub lege ſive ſub conditione pro-"fundiſſimi obſequii ſervilis; eaque ſtipulatio utrinque "ratihabetur †."

If upon a ſtricter review, this prophecy be found

* Iſrael is the name of the church, often given to her in this prophecy. CHRIST and his church, by virtue of the union between them, have the ſame names. As ſhe is ſometimes called by his name, "The LORD our righteouſneſs;"—ſo he is here called by her name Iſrael. See Jer. xxxiii. 16.

† Vitring. in loc. Before I leave this paragraph, which is ſo rich in ſenſe, and contains the very ſubſtance of evangelical doctrine, I would obſerve, that it moſt clearly and exactly delineates the myſterious counſel of peace, planned between GOD the FATHER, and his divine SON. The FATHER as ſupreme LORD, offers to his SON the MESSIAH the higheſt glory, that which ſhall reſult from juſtifying, ſanctifying, and ſaving, with an everlaſting ſalvation, both Jews and Gentiles. This glory, the greateſt which thought can conceive, is propoſed on the terms, or under the condition of his deep humiliation, even to the ſtate and obedience of a ſervant. The whole paſſes into a ſolemn contract, and is ratified on either ſide.

Here our author ſubjoins an extract from משנה תורה a rabbinical treatiſe. Which is very remarkable; for ſuch a writer, ſinguto expreſs no ſuch thing as a covenant, I am very willing to give up the proof; ſo much the rather as it makes no part of Aſpaſio's diſcourſe, is only juſt mentioned in a note, and ſtands not in the main body, but only as a corps de reſerve.

By the covenant of works, man was bound to obey in his own perſon.——Here you take Aſpaſio up very ſhort, and reply, "So he is under the covenant of grace, "though not in order to juſtification."——This is the very thing he means. Nor could you eaſily have miſtaken his meaning, if you had only done him ſo ſmall a piece of juſtice as to read the whole paragraph; of which, ſince you ſeem either willingly, or through inadvertence, to be ignorant, I will beg leave to tranſcribe it: —"Between the covenant of works, and the covenant "of grace, this I apprehend is the difference. By the "former, man was indiſpenſably bound to obey in his "own perſon; by the latter, the obedience of his SU-"RETY is accepted inſtead of his own.——The righ-"teouſneſs required by both, is not ſincere, but complete; "not proportioned to the abilities of fallen man, but to "the purity of the law, and the majeſty of the LAW-"GIVER." You ſee the whole argument turns upon a complete righteouſneſs, ſuch as ſatisfies the law, and is an adequate ground for juſtification. This, I imagine, fallen man is not obliged, by the covenant of grace, to perform; if ſo, we ſhall be at a loſs to find any ſuch thing as grace; if ſo, we can have no hope of obtaining ſalvation with eternal glory. There will be too much reaſon for applying, to all mankind, thoſe awful words of the prophet; In the day thou mayſt make thy plant to grow, and in the morning thou mayſt make thy ſeed to flouriſh; but the harveſt ſhall be a heap, in the day of grief and deſperate ſorrow.

Bleſſed be GOD, the melancholy ſtrain is ſuperſeded. —Though the terms in the firſt covenant were a perfect obedience, though the terms once fixed continue unalterable; yet, in the new covenant, there is a change and ſubſtitution as to the performer, without any relaxation as to the performance. Inſtead of perſonal obedience, we are juſtified through the obedience of our MEDIATOR, We are made the righteouſneſs of GOD in him. That is, we are furniſhed with a plea, as prevalent for our juſtification and admiſſion into the divine favour, as if we had retained our innocence untainted; and, in every reſpect, conformed ourſelves to the righteouſneſs which the law of GOD requires *.——Thus the ſalvation of ſinners neither claſhes with the truth, nor interferes with the juſtice of the ſupreme LEGISLATOR.—On the contrary, it becomes a faithful and juſt procedure of the moſt high GOD, to juſtify him that believeth on JESUS.

The obedience of our Surety is accepted inſtead of our own. "This is neither a ſafe, nor a ſcriptural way "of ſpeaking."—That the obedience of CHRIST is accepted for our juſtification, is a doctrine warranted by ſcripture; it may therefore very juſtly be reckoned a ſcriptural way of ſpeaking. And if his obedience is accepted for this purpoſe, our own, was it ever ſo conſiderable, could come in for no ſhare of the work. Our own, though ever ſo gorgeouſly arrayed, muſt ſtand aſide, or be caſt into ſhades, juſt as the ſtars hide their diminiſhed, or rather extinguiſhed heads, when the ſun appears in his meridian ſplendour, becauſe the obedience of CHRIST is of infinite dignity and value. And infinite value is ſuch, as not only tranſcends all other ſervices, but renders them mere nothings in the compariſon. For this reaſon, the apoſtle counted all endowments but loſs for CHRIST, and the prophet repreſents all nations as nothing before GOD.

"I would ſimply ſay, We are accepted through the "Beloved."—If you rightly underſtood what is meant, when the apoſtle ſpeaks of being accepted in the BELOVED, you would have no fault to find with Aſpaſio's comment. St Paul means we are accepted, not by any obedience performed in our own perſons, but ſolely by the obedience of that infinitely-excellent, and infinitely-beloved ONE CHRIST JESUS, whoſe righteouſneſs being imputed to us, and put upon us, cauſes us not only to be pardoned, but to be highly eſteemed, dearly beloved, and bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings.

Here I cannot but obſerve, that you have changed the apoſtle's expreſſion. He ſays, "Accepted * in the "Beloved;" you ſay, "Accepted through the Belov-"ed." I am willing to believe this was an overſight, you had no ſiniſter deſign; but ſtill I think you ſhould take more heed to your pen, and not alter the inſpired word, leſt you blemiſh the language, or injure the ſenſe. Perhaps you will aſk, What difference is there between accepted through, and accepted in, the Beloved? I will illuſtrate the difference by a ſimilitude. A creditable houſekeeper gives a good character to a ſervant that leaves him, by virtue of which he is accepted, and admitted to ſome other valuable employ. This character is his introduction, yet this makes no addition to his real value. Acceptance through the Beloved, may import no more, than ſuch an admiſſion through ſuch a recommendation. Whereas, accepted in the Beloved, implies not only a recommendatory paſſport from CHRIST, but a real union with CHRIST, whereby we are incorporated into his ſacred body, and partake as truly of his righteouſneſs, as the members partake of the life which animates the head. By this our perſons are really ennobled; this imparts the higheſt dignity to our nature. We are not only recommended to, but rendered meet for, the favour, the complacency, the beatific preſence of GOD, being one with JESUS, and therefore loved even as JESUS himſelf is loved †.

The ſecond covenant was not made with Adam or any of his poſterity, but with CHRIST in thoſe words. "For any authority you have from theſe words, you "might as well have ſaid, it was made with the HOLY "GHOST."—No; CHRIST, not the HOLY GHOST, was the ſeed of the woman.—This is an anſwer much in your own ſtrain.—But let us conſider farther.

ſingularly juſt; one of the moſt curious, as well as valuable pieces of Jewiſh antiquities that ever fell in my way. I believe it will afford no unpleaſing entertainment, perhaps ſome ſpiritual benefit to the reader. For which cauſe I take leave to tranſcribe it.— "GOD began to enter into a covenant with the MESSIAH, and "ſaid, MESSIAH, my righteous one, the ſins of thy choſen peo-"ple are likely to bring thee into a ſtate of great toil and extreme "affliction; thy lips ſhall taſte gall, thy tongue ſhall cleave to the "roof of thy mouth, thy body ſhall be waſted with ſorrow and "ſighing. Is thy love to thy people inviolable? Art thou wil-"ling to reſcue them on theſe conditions? If thou undertakeſt "their recovery, well; if not, they are rejected from this mo-"ment, and periſh for ever.—To this MESSIAH replied, LORD "of eternity, I am pleaſed with the office, I accept theſe condi-"tions: and am willing to undergo all tribulation, that my people "may enjoy a reſurrection (to the life of grace and the life of "glory.)—Then ſaid the holy, bleſſed GOD, Be it ſo. Imme-"diately the MESSIAH took upon him our miſeries, as it is writ-"ten in the book of the prophet Iſaiah, He was oppreſſed and he "was afflicted."

* 2 Cor. v. 21. This is Dr Doddridge's interpretation of the paſſage; and it ſpeaks a noble, a joyful truth, only it does not expreſs the whole truth. The righteouſneſs of GOD is more than equivalent to untainted innocency; is more than tantamount to the moſt perfect human obedience. It is a righteouſneſs of infinite worth, far ſurpaſſing the integrity of Adam in paradiſe, or the ſanctity of angels in heaven. It is a gift, incomparably, yea, incomprehenſibly great, efficacious, glorious.

* Εχαριτωσεν ημας εν τω Ηγαπημενω.

† John xvii. 23. They in me, ſays our LORD. Therefore, on this account, or viewed in this relation, thou haſt loved them, as thou haſt loved me.

You

You allow, I presume, that the first covenant was made with Adam, as our public fœderal head: That all his posterity were included in it, being to stand or fall together with him: Herein, says the apostle, "Adam was "a figure of him that was to come." If so, the second covenant must be made with CHRIST, as our public fœderal head. He and all his seed are included in it; and as it was impossible for him to miscarry, they must be joint partakers of the benefits. Accordingly, he is styled the MEDIATOR of the new covenant, by whose most acceptable and prevailing interposition, all its blessings are obtained; he is styled the Surety of the covenant, engaging to pay the whole debt for poor insolvent creatures; the debt of penal suffering, and the debt of perfect obedience.——The Testator of the covenant, whose are its riches, and whose are its privileges, who has also of his unbounded goodness bequeathed them as so many inestimable legacies to indigent men. Methinks those are such charming truths, such divinely-comfortable doctrines, that you should consider them thoroughly before you oppose them, lest you do a greater act of unkindness to your readers, than that which is charged, though very injuriously, upon Job: Thou hast stripped the naked of their cloathing, and sent widows away empty. And when you are disposed to consider these points thoroughly, ask yourself this question: Is it possible to conceive that CHRIST should be the MEDIATOR, the Surety, the Testator of the covenant, if it was not made with him, and the execution of it undertaken by him?—Or, is it possible to suppose, that the all-glorious SON of GOD should be the MEDIATOR, the Surety, the Testator of the covenant, yet leave others to perform the conditions; which are incomparably the most important, interesting, and difficult parts of the transaction?

"These words were not spoken to CHRIST, but of "him." True, of him as given for a covenant of the people. "There is not the least intimation of any such "covenant." You will not deny that CHRIST is signified by the seed of the woman. It is said, He shall; a language expressing authority, and requiring conformity. As CHRIST is the supreme uncontrollable GOD, this could not be required; and would never have been said, without his actual consent: here then is implied his approbation of the office. It is farther said, The serpent shall bruise his heel.—He shall become incarnate, and after a life of much sorrow, and many tribulations, shall be put to a most tormenting death. Here is the condition of the covenant. It is added, He shall bruise the serpent's head; shall destroy the works of the devil, and repair the ruins of the fall; shall deliver from the wrath deserved, and recover the inheritance forfeited. Here is the recompence or reward of the covenant.

Should you ask, Is it supposable that Adam understood the words in this compass of meaning? Perhaps not. But if we do not understand them in a more exalted and extensive sense than our first father, what advantage do we reap from the full revelation of the gospel? The full revelation of the gospel pours as much light upon this, and other of the ancient oracles, as the experiments of our modern anatomists have poured upon the structure and œconomy of the human body. ——This grand original text, read with the comment of the New Testament, speaks all that Aspasio has suggested; all that our fallen state could want, or our very hearts can wish.

You have mustered up several objections, yet there is room for more; I will therefore for once act as your auxiliary, and turn against Aspasio. "He supposes the "covenant to be made with CHRIST. Whereas the "scripture represents the covenant as made with va-"rious men, particularly and personally, in various "ages."—True, it is recorded, that GOD made a covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, with Jacob, and with David the father of Solomon; but were they in a capacity to enter into covenant with their Maker; to stand for themselves, or be surety for others? I think not. The passages mean no more, than the LORD's manifesting in an especial manner, the grand covenant to them; ratifying and confirming their personal interest in it; and farther assuring them, that CHRIST, the great covenant-head, should be of themselves, and spring from their seed.

This accounts for that remarkable and singular mode of expression, which often occurs in scripture; I will make a covenant with them; or, This is my covenant with them. Yet there follows no mention of any conditions, only a promise of unconditional blessings; because the former have already been performed, and nothing remains but to confer the latter; so that the meaning of the divine Speaker is, I will admit them to an interest in this covenant, and make them partakers of its privileges.

I should now conclude, but Mr Wesley will not suffer me to quit the subject. He farther insists, "The words "manifestly contain, if not a covenant made with, a "promise made to Adam and all his posterity."—If not—He begins to hesitate in his assertion; to fluctuate in his opinion; and I could hope, to see his mistake.—— "The words contain a promise."—And have you never read, that the covenant of GOD, or the various renewals and ratifications of the covenant of grace, are styled covenants of promise? which consist of pure promises, and dispense free gifts?

Observe the tenor of the new covenant, as it stands ingrossed by the pen of inspiration. This is the covenant, which I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the LORD; I will put my laws into their mind, and on their hearts will I write them: and I will be to them a GOD, and they shall be to me a people. And they shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the LORD: for all shall know me, from the least of them, even unto the greatest of them. For I will be merciful unto their unrighteousnesses, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more. Where are your conditions in this draught? Where are any terms required of impotent man? Is it not all promise, from the beginning to the end? That repentance, and that faith, for whose conditionality you plead, are they not both comprehended in this heavenly deed? and comprehended under the form of blessings vouchsafed, not of tasks enjoined? Does the contract run in this manner? I require and command; or in this strain? I grant and bestow. The LORD says, I will put my laws; I will write them. The work shall not be laid on my creatures, but done by myself. They shall be my people, and I will remember their sins no more. What? provided they perform such and such duties. I read no such clause. I see no such proviso.—All is absolutely free; dependent on no performance of ours; but flowing from sovereign, supreme, self-influenced goodness.

Just such is that delightful declaration, I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good; but I will put my fear in their heart, that they shall not depart from me.—What you call conditions must be comprised in my fear. This is represented as a singular benefit, which GOD imparts; as a gracious temper, which GOD implants; and both as dependent, not on the fidelity of man, but on the power and veracity of GOD.——Another of your conditions, I presume, is perseverance unto the end. This, in the covenant of grace, is not enjoined, but secured; secured, not by a strict prohibition of apostasy, but by the omnipotent interposition of JEHOVAH. I will put my fear; so put my fear into their hearts, that they shall not depart from me; shall never draw back unto perdition.—Thus the covenant becomes not transient, but everlasting. Thus the promise is not precarious, but sure to all the seed.

There ſeems to be as great a difference betwe en this evangelical, and your legal method of ſtating the covenant; between ſuſpending the benefits on human endeavours, and grounding them on divine agency, as between hanging the anchor on the top of the maſt, and fixing it at the bottom of the ſea.

Let me add one more text, which now occurs to my thoughts, Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, ſaying unto Abraham, And in thy ſeed ſhall all the kindreds of the earth be bleſſed *. Here the covenant is firſt mentioned in general; then particularly ſpecified.——In thy ſeed ſhall all the kindreds of the earth—be laid under conditions? be obliged to execute terms? No; but ſhall be bleſſed; bleſſed with all bleſſings, temporal, ſpiritual, eternal.——In thy ſeed; —that is, in CHRIST,—without any regard to qualifications or deeds of their own; entirely by virtue of an intereſt in his conſummately-excellent actions, and conſummately-precious ſufferings.——Then the apoſtle ſingles out one ſpecial and diſtinguiſhed bleſſing of the covenant; a converſion from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan to the ſervice of GOD; or, as it is expreſſed in the following verſe, a turning from all iniquity. ——This is ſtill exhibited to our contemplation, as the fruit of the covenant of grace; as the thing for which it makes proviſion, not introductory to, but conſequent upon, our participation of it.

If therefore, in ſpeaking of holineſs and obedience, we repreſent them as the promiſes, rather than the demands of the covenant, we evidently follow the apoſtle's example. Were we to take the contrary courſe, we ſhould act as prudently as the ſportſman, who entering his horſe for a plate, chuſes to have him walk backwards, rather than run forwards: Would this increaſe his ſpeed? Would this help him to outſtrip his rivals? or enable him to win the prize?—Shall we, in order to avoid the charge of Antinomianiſm, ruſh into this abſurdity? I am perſuaded you could not wiſh to ſee ſo egregious a piece of folly, even in your enemy; much leſs in,

Your, &c.

* Acts iii. 25.

LETTER IX.

REV. SIR,

I Wiſh you would conſider with ſome attention, that emphatical memento of the apoſtle, Since ye knew the grace of GOD in truth. Here he intimates, that we may have a knowledge of grace, which is not genuine; not free from corrupt mixture, not true.—It may be ſo diſcoloured with error, or blended with ſo much of the law, as no longer to appear like itſelf.—The language of ſuch perſons, is ſomewhat like the language of the Iſraelites, after their return from captivity, who ſpoke neither the Hebrew, nor the Heatheniſh dialect; but expreſſed themſelves half in the ſpeech of Aſhdod, and half in the ſpeech of Zion.

It is true, ſays Aſpaſio, I cannot perform the conditions.—"It is not true," ſays Mr Weſley. This is pretty blunt, and pretty bold too; for it is, in effect, affirming, that a man dead in treſpaſſes and ſins is able to perform conditions. Mr Weſley is not aware, that "CHRIST "ſtrengthening us," is one of the benefits of the covenant, comprehended in theſe words, I will put my laws into their minds.

"The conditions of the new covenant are, Repent "and believe." It has been already ſhewn, that they are repreſented by the HOLY GHOST, not as conditions, but as bleſſings; not as conditions required, but as bleſſings beſtowed; not as conditions on which depends the accompliſhment of the covenant; but as happy fruits, or precious effects, of the covenant; made, and making good to ſinners, who are wholly without ſtrength.

'Tis equally true, ſays Aſpaſio, this is not required at my hands. "'Tis equally true," ſays Mr Weſley, "that "is abſolutely falſe."—This is, doubtleſs, a home-thruſt. —It behoves us to provide ſome armour of proof for our defence; and this the ſcripture furniſhes abundantly. It furniſhes us with more than robur et æs triplex. The ſcripture ſets forth juſtification, ſalvation, and all bleſſedneſs, as things perfectly free; detached from all works; dependant on no conditions, but the gifts of ſovereign goodneſs, and infinitely-rich grace.

Though you, Sir, treat Aſpaſio in ſo unceremonious a manner, we will be more complaiſant; you ſhall receive ſuch entertainment from us, as the king of Babylon's ambaſſadors received from Hezekiah. We will, on this occaſion, ſhew you the houſe of our precious things, the ſilver and the gold, the ſpices and the precious ointment, and if not all, yet ſome of the houſe of our armour *.

We are ſaved, that is, we have all the benefits of the new covenant—By grace—By grace ye are ſaved.——It is of grace, and no more of works.——Who hath ſaved us, not according to our works, but according to his purpoſe and grace *.

Freely—Being juſtified freely.——The things that are freely given to us of GOD.——Whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely †.

By way of gift—If thou kneweſt the gift of GOD.—— The gift of GOD is eternal life.—The free gift came upon all men, to juſtification of life ‡.

Without the law——The righteouſneſs of GOD without the law.——That we might be juſtified, not by the works of the law.——If the inheritance were of the law ‖.

Not by works—Not of works, but of him that calleth us. ——Not by works of righteouſneſs which we have done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us.——Not having mine own righteouſneſs, which is of the law §.

By righteouſneſs, not performed, but imputed—— Faith (in CHRIST, as our all) is imputed for righteouſneſs. ——GOD imputeth righteouſneſs without works.——To whom it (that is, the merit of a dying and riſing SAVIOUR) ſhall be imputed ¶.

Not by guiltleſs behaviour, but by remiſſion of ſins— Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered.—GOD was in CHRIST, reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them.——To give knowledge of ſalvation by the remiſſion of their ſins ⸸.

Not each by himſelf, but all by one—They ſhall reign in life, by one CHRIST JESUS. By the obedience of one, ſhall many be made righteous. By one offering, he hath perfected for ever thoſe that are ſanctified +.

By faith alone—Being juſtified by faith. A man is juſtified by faith, without the deeds of the law. Through him, all that believe are juſtified from all things ++.

Not on account of faith, as a condition performed; but on account of CHRIST, the pearl of ineſtimable price; which faith receives, applies, and uſes.—Who has by himſelf purged away our ſins, by himſelf finiſhed our tranſgreſſions, made reconciliation for our iniquities, and brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs =.

This is the doctrine of ſcripture. Becauſe it is of the greateſt importance, you ſee, with what care it is ſtated, and with what copiouſneſs diſplayed, with what zeal it is urged, and with what vigilance guard-

* 2 Kings xx. 13.

* Eph. ii. 5. Rom. x. 6. 2 Tim. i. 9. † Rom. iii. 34 1 Cor. ii. 12. Rev. xxii. 19. ‡ John iv. 10. Rom. vi. 23. v. 18. ‖ Rom. iii. 21. Gal. ii. 16. iii. 18. § Rom. ix. 11. Tit. iii. 5. Phil. iii. 9. ¶ Rom. iv. 5. 6. 23. 24. 25. ⸸ Pſal. xxxii. 1. 2 Cor. v. 19. Luke i. 77. + Rom. v. 17. 18. 19. Heb. x. 14. ++ Rom. v. 1. iii. 28. Acts xiii. 39. = Heb. i. 3. Dan. ix. 24.

ed.—

ed.—How ſolicitouſly the ſacred writers uſe every form of ſpeech that may exclude all human works; may ſet aſide all conditions and pre-requiſites, in order to ſuperſede all glorying, and aſcribe the whole of our juſtification to the free grace of GOD, and the ſole merits of CHRIST.

After all theſe teſtimonies of ſcripture, ſhall we ſtill maintain that the covenant of grace conſiſts of conditions; depends upon conditions; is ſuch as we cannot expect to have made good till certain conditions are, by us, duly and truly fulfilled? Dagon may as well ſtand in the preſence of the ark, as ſuch a notion in the face of theſe evangelical texts.

All, all is free to us ſinners, though it was not free to CHRIST our SAVIOUR.——He paid the price; he performed the conditions. If you would know what price was paid; what conditions were performed, and on what terms we inherit the bleſſing; you, Sir, may receive information from Mr John Weſley, who ſays in his comment, "All the bleſſings of the new covenant are "ſecured to us by the one offering of CHRIST."—— According to this commentator, they are not only procured for us, but ſecured to us. How could either of theſe be true,—much more, how could the latter be fact, —if the bleſſings, were ſuſpended on any performance or any acquiſition of ours? If I am not to enjoy them until I diſcharge this or that duty, they are not procured for me; if I am not to enjoy them unleſs I become poſſeſſed of this or that quality, they are not ſecured to me; not ſecured to me, as the eſtate is to an heir, even whilſt he is a minor, but only as the prize is to a racer, in caſe, by exerting his ſpeed and his ſtrength, he arrives firſt at the goal; which was never yet called ſecurity, but allowed to be mere uncertainty.

As to this point, others may receive information from the prophet Zechariah. By the blood of thy covenant, I have ſent forth thy priſoners out of the pit, wherein was no water. Thy priſoners*, thoſe wretched creatures, who were in a ſtate of guilt, and under the ſentence of death; ſubject to the tyranny of the devil, and liable to the damnation of hell. In this diſmal ſtate they were, as in a pit unfathomably deep; from which there ſeemed no poſſibility of eſcape, nor any method of deliverance: A pit, in which there is no water, nothing but abſolute miſery, without a gleam of hope, or a drop of comfort. I have ſent them forth into a place of liberty; where they obtain pardon, and enjoy peace, are ſatisfied with the plenteouſneſs of my houſe, and drink of my pleaſures as out of a river. All this, by the blood of thy covenant.—Blood was the righteous term, blood was the dreadful requirement, even that infinitely-precious blood of CHRIST, on which the covenant of our freedom was eſtabliſhed, and by which its rich bleſſings are procured. Which is called thy covenant †, O daughter of Zion, thou church of the firſt-born, becauſe it was made in thy name; made with thy divine Surety, and for thy unſpeakable good.

This is not only falſe, but "moſt dangerouſly falſe. "——If we allow this, Antinomianiſm comes in with "a full tide." Pray, Sir, what do you mean by Antinomianiſm? ſuch a contrariety to the law, as debaſes its dignity; deprives it of its proper honour and proper end ‡?

Surely then, not Aſpaſio's, but Mr Weſley's tenets, are chargeable with this kind of heterodoxy; ſince they would cauſe the law to be put off with a mite, when millions of talents are its due;—oblige it to be content with errant deficiency, when the moſt ſinleſs obedience, and the moſt exalted perfection are what it demands.

Do you mean by Antinomianiſm, ſuch a contrariety to the law, as diſregards its duties, and violates its precepts? Then the apoſtle Paul ſhall reply, The grace of GOD, which bringeth ſalvation, hath appeared unto all men; teaching us, that, denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly.——The grace of GOD, his infinitely-free favour, of which we have a ſpecimen in the preceding texts, which ſcorns to be ſhackled with conditions, or meanly dependent on human endeavours.——This grace, requiring nothing of the creature, but bringing ſalvation, ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, finiſhed by the incarnate CREATOR, and free for the chiefeſt of ſinners. This grace being revealed in the goſpel, being diſcerned by faith, and thus appearing in luſtre, and with power, to all men—to men of every rank, every age, every character; making no difference between the ſervant and his maſter, between the ruddy ſtripling and the hoary ſire; between the the vile proſtitute and the chaſte veſtal, but opening its inexhauſtible treaſures, to be received by one as well as the other—This grace does what? "Cauſe Antino-"mianiſm," or practical ungodlineſs, "to come in with "a full tide?" Quite the reverſe.—It repreſſes it like an immoveable barrier. It teaches us to deny *, to renounce ungodlineſs, all ungodlineſs; not only external groſs abominations, but worldly luſts alſo, every vitious inclination, and every irregular deſire. Farther, it teaches us to live ſoberly, with regard to ourſelves, righteouſly towards our neighbours, and godly to our great CREATOR.

The original word is particularly beautiful and ſignificant; it is not τασσει, preſcribeth, by way of rule, nor επιλασσει, enjoineth, by way of authority; but παιδευουσα, teacheth, by way of inſtruction, pointeth out the effectual method of obeying the precepts, and conforming to the rule. A tyrant may command his ſlave to write, or make a proficiency in writing. A kind tutor forms him to it, ſhews him how to do it, and renders, what otherwiſe would be an irkſome, perhaps an impracticable taſk, both eaſy and pleaſant.—So this grace, clearly manifeſted in the underſtanding, and cordially apprehended by the will, renders every duty of holineſs both practicable and pleaſant; it gives us a heart and a hand, and ability to exerciſe ourſelves unto univerſal godlineſs.

CHRIST has performed all that was conditionary for me, ſays Aſpaſio. "Has he repented and believed "for you?" ſays Mr Weſley; a queſtion already anſwered in the dialogues.—"No;" replies Mr Weſley, "not "anſwered, but evaded. He performed all that was "conditionary in the covenant of works, is nothing to "the purpoſe; for we are not talking of that, but of "the covenant of grace." Give me leave to tell you, Sir, that you are greatly miſtaken here; we are talking, at leaſt we ought to be talking, of the covenant of works, when we talk of the covenant which CHRIST came under. It was a covenant of works to him, which, by his execution of it, became a covenant of grace for us. He became anſwerable for our debt; the debt was exacted, without the leaſt abatement. In this reſpect, GOD ſpared not his own Son. And is not this the tenor, are not ſuch the effects of a covenant of works?

CHRIST is called the Surety of a better covenant; that is, a ſurety provided and admitted by a better covenant: in this peculiarity, infinitely momentous

* Zech. ix. 11.

† Thy covenant. The words are not addreſſed to CHRIST, but to his church. As the Hebrew תך being in the feminine gender intimates.

‡ The end of the commanding law is righteouſneſs, Rom. x. 4. The end of the violated law is puniſhment, Gal. iii. 10. Both theſe ends are anſwered by the interpoſition of an obedient and crucified REDEEMER, but on no other ſcheme, and in no other manner whatever.

* The word is αρνησαμενοι, which does not ſignify, to aboliſh totally, or to deſtroy utterly; but to diſavow and renounce, to refuſe admittance, or not to yield compliance. There may be, even in the regenerate, ſome remainders of ungodlineſs; but, influenced by grace, they will conſtantly turn a deaf ear to its ſolicitations, or reſolutely ſay nay to its demands.

and

and comfortable, the new covenant is better; becauſe it brings in a ſubſtitute, to diſcharge what was contracted under the old, which neither provided, nor allowed, nor knew any ſuch thing.——It is written, CHRIST was made under the law, therefore not under a covenant of grace. If you can ſhew me, in the conſtruction of the law, any hint of faith in the merits of another, or any mention of repentance unto life, I will retract my opinion, that CHRIST performed whatever was conditionary; I will do honour to thoſe genteel expreſſions, and ſubmit to thoſe cogent arguments, "'Tis not "true—'Tis nothing to the purpoſe—'Tis abſolutely "falſe."

"If CHRIST's perfect obedience be ours, we have "no more need of pardon than CHRIST himſelf. "The conſequence is good, you have ſtarted an objec- "tion which you cannot anſwer."——It is anſwered in the dialogues;—whether in a ſatisfactory, or inſufficient manner, the reader muſt determine.——But ſuppoſe we admit the conſequence; it implies no more than the apoſtle affirms—By one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified. Let me tranſcribe your own * explication of this paſſage.——"He hath done" (obſerve, you yourſelf ſpeak of CHRIST's doing, in this place only of CHRIST's doing; yet I would not be ſo injurious to your good ſenſe, as to imagine that you exclude his ſuffering) "all that was needful, in order to "their full reconciliation with GOD." This expoſition I approve, as far as it goes; only you have omitted one very weighty circumſtance, comprehended in the word "ever;" by this doing and ſuffering, believers are fully and perfectly reconciled, not for a day only, or for any particular time, but for ever. The pardon is irrevocable; the bleſſing unalienable. Not like the moon, which now waxes, and anon wanes; but like the ſun, which is always the ſame; ever ſhines with the ſame plenitude of rays; and needs only to appear, in order to appear unchangeably bright.

This reminds me of a more direct anſwer to your difficulty. The repeated pardon, which believers implore, is only a witneſs bearing to the truth, or a repeated manifeſtation of it to our conſciences.——Will you find fault with this doctrine? Might you not, for the very ſame reaſon, ſay, if the atonement of CHRIST's death was abſolutely perfect, there could be no need of his interceſſion at GOD's right hand? Yes, for the actual application of the great atonement, and the continual communication of its happy fruits, this interceſſion is neceſſary. So, though our juſtification is complete, though our ſins have all been laid upon our LORD, and are not to be done away by ſome duties of our own, but already done away by the ſacrifice of HIMSELF; yet the application of this bleſſing, the revelation of it to our hearts, is daily, hourly, inceſſantly needful. Therefore he ſaith, ſpeaking of his vineyard the church, I will water it every moment.——Whereby? in what manner? what ſpiritual bleſſings correſpond with watering the thirſty ſoil?—The diſcovery of complete pardon, of complete acceptance, of complete ſalvation in CHRIST. This will make the ſoul like a watered garden;—this will cauſe joy and holineſs to bloſſom as a roſe.

Both the branches of the law, the preceptive and the penal, in the caſe of guilt contracted, muſt be ſatisfied. "Not ſo."—If not, one of them muſt paſs unſatisfied and unfulfilled. Whereas, our LORD declares, that heaven and earth ſhall paſs away, ſooner than one jot or one tittle of the law ſhall fail of its accompliſhment. Will you undertake to prove, either that the preceptive, or elſe that the penal part of the law, does not conſtitute ſo much as one jot or one tittle of its contents? Then, and then only, your aſſertion may conſiſt with our LORD's declaration. This will be an undertaking as adventurous as your next is diſingenuous.

"Not ſo; CHRIST, by his death alone" (ſo our church teaches,) "fully ſatisfied for the ſins of the "whole world."—By his death alone, that is, in contradiſtinction to all human works, as efficient or adjutant cauſes: fully ſatisfied, that is, without having, and without needing the concurrence of any human ſatisfaction. —It is ſpoken in oppoſition to our endeavours, not to his own moſt glorious obedience.——But do you really want to be informed that our church means no ſuch thing, as you would inſinuate? Have you never heard her profeſs, and require to believe, what Aſpaſio maintains? If not, be pleaſed to read the quotations from her homilies, which he has produced, above, pag. 257 *. Read theſe, and I cannot but think, you have modeſty enough to bluſh at an attempt, to palm upon the public, ſuch an apparent miſrepreſentation of our venerable mother.

"The ſame great truth is manifeſtly taught in the "xxxiſt article."—What? That CHRIST, by his death alone, or by ſhedding his blood alone, without fulfilling the law perfectly, ſatisfied for the ſins of the world? Then the articles and the homilies moſt flatly contradict one another.—Upon this you aſk, "Is it therefore fair, is "it honeſt, for any one to plead the articles of our "church in defence of abſolute predeſtination?" Indeed, Sir, I know not what you mean by this interrogatory, or at what you aim. Does Aſpaſio plead the articles for any ſuch purpoſe? Not that he ſhould be afraid, in caſe there was an evident occaſion, to advance ſuch a plea, and perhaps might put Mr Weſley to greater difficulty than he is aware of, in order to elude the force of it.—But he does not in this place come within view of the point; nor ſo much as remotely hint at it. No, nor in any part of the two volumes, does he once touch upon abſolute predeſtination, much leſs does he plead the articles of our church in its defence. So that your inferential word "therefore," is a concluſion without premiſes.

Abſolute predeſtination is a phraſe not to be found in all the dialogues, or in any of the letters. But it is a phraſe which Mr Weſley thinks to be alarming and diſguſting, on which Mr Weſley has learned to ſay many horrible and ſhocking things; therefore be it right or wrong, be it true or falſe, Aſpaſio ſhall be charged with the obnoxious expreſſion.——When he mentions predeſtination, it is in the very words of ſcripture; without dwelling upon the ſubject; without reſting his cauſe upon it; without attempting either to explain or to eſtabliſh it. This he leaves, and ever will leave, to clearer heads and abler pens.——As to your "abſolute," this is not what Aſpaſio ſpeaks, but what Mr Weſley would make him ſpeak; a word, which in this connection he never uſed, nor ſo much as dreamed of uſing; for which reaſon, I call it, not bis,

* Explanatory notes in loc.

* As this book may poſſibly fall into the hands of ſome perſons, who have not the book, entitled Theron and Aſpaſio, I will, for their ſakes, tranſcribe one of the teſtimonies, to which we are referred.

In the homily concerning the ſalvation of mankind, we read the following words.—"The apoſtle toucheth three things, which "muſt go together in juſtification. On GOD's part, his great "mercy and grace. On CHRIST's part, the ſatisfaction of "GOD's juſtice, or the price of our redemption, by the offering "of his body, and ſhedding of his precious blood, with fulfilling "of the law perfectly. On our part, true and lively faith in "the merits of JESUS CHRIST, which yet is not ours, but by "GOD's working in us." You ſee, according to the judgment of our reformers, not only the offering of CHRIST's body, and the ſhedding of CHRIST's blood, but alſo his perfect fulfilling of the law, are the adequate price of our redemption. Yet Mr Weſley is pleaſed to exclude the latter, and ventures to affirm that he has the authority of our church for ſuch an opinion, and for ſuch a practice.

but

…ours.—May I not then retort your own queſtion? …l aſk, Is it fair, is it honeſt, to put into your friend's …uth words which he never uſed, and then exclaim …inſt them?

What follows in this paragraph is prodigious indeed. "Seeing the xviith article barely defines the term;" …at is, the church does not believe the doctrine, nor …quire any ſuch belief from her members? Why then …s ſhe ſelect it for one of the articles? why pronounce …greeable to GOD's word? why forbid diſputation …ainſt it? Pity, but we had been acquainted with this …e diſtinction when we were ſtudents at Oxford.—We …en declared our approbation of the academical ſta…tes; we engaged to obſerve them all, and confirmed …ur engagement with an oath.——But how eaſily …ight we have eluded the obligation, if, when called …pon for conformity and obedience, this ſalvo had come …to our heads; "The univerſity does not, in theſe ſta…tutes, ſet forth our duty, but barely defines the terms; …ſhe does not inſiſt upon a conformity, but only flou…riſhes a little upon terms, and leaves us to obey or …diſobey, as we ſhall feel ourſelves inclined."

"Barely defines the term, without either affirming …or denying the thing."——How! does ſhe not affirm …the thing, when ſhe ſtyles it an excellent benefit of GOD? …declares it to be full of ſweet, pleaſant, and unſpeakable …comfort to the godly? that it greatly eſtabliſhes and confirms …their faith of eternal ſalvation, and fervently kindles their …love towards GOD? "Not affirm the thing!"—when …ſhe expreſsly aſcribes ſuch fruits and conſequents to it! …This is not only affirming, but affirming with the higheſt …approbation, like proclaiming the king, and placing …the crown upon his head.

In one part of your Preſervative, you enumerate, and …very properly diſplay, what you call "the five benefits …of baptiſm."——Suppoſe a Quaker, upon reading …this paſſage, ſhould ſay, "Friend Weſley, thou barely …defineſt the term, thou neither affirmeſt nor denieſt …the thing.——This is no proof that thou thyſelf be…lieveſt a tittle of water-baptiſm, or wouldſt have thy …readers believe the reality of any ſuch ordinance." …Should the Quaker argue thus, he would argue juſt like …yourſelf. But I apprehend he would not be ſo boldly diſ…ingenuous, he would rather confeſs; Friend John doth …"certainly maintain and believe theſe things; but his …"opinion is miſtaken, and his arguments are inconclu…"ſive."—"The xxxiſt article totally overthrows pre…"deſtination, and razes it from the foundation." If ſo, …it makes one article contradict another; conſequently, …weakens the authority, and undermines the credibility …of them all. In this article are two points more particu…larly proper for our inquiry; The great ſalvation, and …the number of the ſaved.——I cannot but query, whether …you believe the former, or rightly underſtand the …latter?

The great ſalvation, expreſſed in the following words; "The offering of CHRIST once made, is that perfect …"redemption, propitiation, and ſatisfaction for all the …"ſins of the whole world, both original and actual." If I take theſe words as I am enjoined, in the literal and grammatical ſenſe, I muſt believe, that CHRIST engaged to ſatisfy offended juſtice, for every ſin which I have committed, or ſhall commit, throughout my whole life. My paſt ſins at that time had no more exiſtence, than my future ſins have at this hour; but both were equally laid upon my LORD.

Having undertaken this greateſt of all works, I muſt believe that he fully accompliſhed it; and actually ſatisfied for all my tranſgreſſions, of every kind and every date.——A poſſibility, or mere chance of being redeemed, can never be reckoned a perfect redemption; neither would our SAVIOUR have paid down a poſitive price for a precarious conditional good: much leſs would he have paid an immenſe, an infinite price, upon a bare uncertainty, whether it ſhould take an effect, or ever obtain its deſired end.——I believe therefore, that the ſatisfaction is made for me; that GOD has received the all-ſufficient atonement in behalf of all my provocations; and that there is no more ground of condemnation for me a vile ſinner, than there is room for the proſecution of an inſolvent, all whoſe debts are diſcharged, even to the very laſt mite.

The number of the ſaved, expreſſed in thoſe words——the ſins of the whole world. This I acknowledge to be the language of ſcripture; and I promiſe myſelf you will bear with me, while I offer my thoughts concerning the occaſion and the import of ſuch language.

In the antediluvian and patriarchal ages, the LORD JEHOVAH confined his favour to a few particular families. —When he formed his Iſrael into a common-wealth he choſe them to himſelf, and ſeparated them from all other nations. To them he gave his oracles, his ordinances, and his covenants; yea, he honoured and indulged them with his divine preſence: In this the Iſraelites gloried; they appropriated this privilege to themſelves, and held other people at a diſtance, looking upon them as ſtrangers, and without GOD in the world; hence that choſen ſeed ſpares not to ſay, "We are thine; thou "never bareſt rule over them; they were not called by "thy name."——At the commencement of the MESSIAH's kingdom, the LORD purpoſed to change the ſcene, and vary the diſpenſation, by admitting both Jews and Gentiles to an intereſt in the great ſalvation; as they were equally chargeable with ſin, and equally liable to the curſe, they ſhould now ſtand upon a level, be equally ſharers in that divine SAVIOUR, who ſubmits to be made ſin, and to be made a curſe for both alike. This the HOLY GHOST expreſsly and repeatedly promiſed, He (that is, the REDEEMER which is to come) ſhall ſpeak peace unto the Heathen; his dominion ſhall be from ſea even to ſea, and from the river even to the end of the earth.

Notwithſtanding ſuch prophecies, and ſuch promiſes, our LORD himſelf, when he entered upon his miniſtry, acted a diſcriminating part, and kept up the partition-wall; in purſuance of that declaration, I am not ſent, but unto the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael. When he ſent forth his diſciples to preach and to teach, he gave them alſo a command to ſhew the ſame partial regard; Go ye not into the way of the Gentiles. This conduct of our LORD, both under the Old Teſtament and the New, confirmed the Jews in their ſelf-flattering notion, that they were, and ever ſhould be, a favourite nation, and a peculiar people. The Gentiles, on the other hand, were no leſs diſcouraged: apprehending, that as they were, ſo they ever ſhould be, aliens from the common-wealth of Iſrael. But in order to convince the Jews of their miſtake, in claiming the bleſſing of Abraham to themſelves, and in order to aſſure the poor diſcarded Gentiles that they ſhould be fellow-heirs and of the ſame body; our LORD, in his laſt charge to his apoſtle, alters the ſtyle of his commiſſion, and enlarges the ſphere of their ſeveral departments. It is now no longer, Go not into the way of the Gentiles; but quite the reverſe, Go teach all nations, all the world, yea, and every creature; Whoſoever believeth, whether Jew or Gentile, ſhall be ſaved.

Still the Jews were hardly induced to give the right hand of fellowſhip to their brethren the Gentiles.—For St Peter cries, with ſome indignation; Not ſo, LORD. Still the Gentiles, hardly perſuaded that they ſhould be partakers of the grace, reaſoned againſt themſelves; The LORD hath utterly ſeparated me from his people. Therefore the LORD, to intercept all the deſponding objections of the latter, and to bring down the high diſdainful imaginations of the former, declares in a variety of places, that the difference no longer ſubſiſts, that CHRIST has thrown down the partition-wall, and laid all plain, and common, and free.——Though the giving of the law pertained to Israel only, the LORD JESUS gave himself a ransom for ALL PEOPLE. Though the paschal lamb extended its influence only to the circumcision, the LAMB of GOD is a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, even though it be not circumcised. And now GOD would have all men, whether bond or free, Jews or Gentiles, Greeks or Barbarians, to be saved, by coming unto the knowledge of the faith.

This account gives us the true cause, and points out the intended use, of such universal phrases. They are calculated to abate the pride of the Jews, to encourage the despised Gentiles; and by excluding none, they give encouragement for all to come, because, though every individual person will not be saved, yet whosoever cometh shall in no wise be cast out.——By this interpretation, the phrase is neither inconsistent with other texts, neither does our church contradict herself.

Upon the whole, you will please to observe, that I should never have touched upon this subject, had not your objections, far-fetched and forced as they are, given me a kind of challenge. And now I have touched upon the subject, it is not as a champion for the cause, but only to shew the weakness and inconsistency of your arguing, how little you avail yourself even on a point, where you think opposition vain, and your arm irresistible.

"Believers, who are notorious transgressors in themselves, have a sinless obedience in CHRIST;" this passage you select as faulty, I presume, because it is opposite to your favourite tenet, "perfection in personal "holiness."——By notorious, I mean acknowledged, confessed, indisputably such. If you are not such a transgressor, why do you daily confess yourself "a miserable "sinner?" Why do you acknowledge, that you are "tied and bound with the chain of your sins;" and declare before all men, that "there is no health in you?" All this Mr Wesley speaks with his lips, and, I would hope, believes in his heart. Yet all this does not amount "to a notorious transgressor." Pray then, good Sir, inform us, what sort of transgressor is described by all these expressions.

You cry out, "O syren song!" The psalmist would have taught you a better exclamation. If this is the case, let us rejoice with trembling.——Are we notorious transgressors in ourselves? The consciousness of this is the strongest motive to humility.——Have we a sinless obedience in CHRIST? The belief of this is an abundant source of joy. When you add, "Pleasing sound "to James Wheatly! Thomas Williams! James Reily!" I am quite ashamed of your meanness, and grieved at your uncharitable rashness. How unworthy is such a procedure, either of the gentleman, the Christian, or the man of sense! Unworthy the gentleman, to stigmatize by name, and expose to the most public infamy.——Unworthy the Christian, whose charity concealeth, rather than divulgeth and proclaimeth upon the housetops.—Unworthy the man of sense, who knows that the miscarriages of a professor are no argument against the soundness of a doctrine. If they were, would not your own principles totter? Nay, how could Christianity itself stand?

Elijah failed in his resignation, and even Moses himself spake unadvisedly with his lips. "It is true," says Mr Wesley. "But if you could likewise fix some blot "upon venerable Samuel, and beloved Daniel, it would "prove nothing." I have no desire to fix a blot; but if I find it in the most accomplished character, this proves the proposition, which Aspasio maintains; "That the "very best of men fall short; that the very best of "men will be found guilty, if tried by the righteous "law:——That the very best of men have nothing "more to plead for acceptance with the HIGH and "HOLY one, than the criminal, who yesterday "murdered his benefactor, to-morrow is to be executed "for his crime, and is now flying to the redemption "that is in CHRIST JESUS for the chief of sinners."

"No scripture teaches that the holiness of Christian "is to be measured by that of any few." I should be afraid to advance such a position, after having read the general exhortation, Be ye followers of them, who through faith and patience inherit the promises; and those more particular references to the ancient saints, comprised in the eleventh chapter to the Hebrews. Were not they Jews? Does not the apostle propose them as patterns for our imitation? Is not this his language, Let us act in conformity to their practice?—The spirit of CHRIST was in them; and "they obtained, (even from the supreme "JUDGE) a good report." Agreeably to this divine testimonial, we are directed to learn from Abel, a fiduciary dependence on the great atonement; and from Enoch, a life of communion with a reconciled GOD. The prophets are recommended to our contemplation as "examples of suffering affliction, and of patience." Elijah is set before us as an instance of persevering and successful prayer: and we are directed to walk in the steps of our father Abraham's faith. This was the counsel of an apostle to others; this was the aim of an apostle with regard to himself; therefore I think, it can never be unworthy of you, or unfit for the most advanced among your disciples. For my part, I shall reckon myself truly happy; I shall bless the day, wherein I was born; if I may but be enabled to follow the footsteps of these illustrious leaders, though — — non passibus æquis.

That Christians ought to rise above the level of the common Jews, I freely own. Mr Wesley's mistake seems to lie in confounding the common with the uncommon, in not discerning the difference between any and every; between some and all. Some Jews were blessed with extraordinary endowments; they had distinguished communications of the spirit of wisdom and holiness. They were as the "stones of a crown, lifted up as an ensign upon his "land." Their great achievements and eminent attainments are described in the aforementioned chapter, which may truly be styled the golden legend; great things impossible to flesh and blood, they both performed and suffered; such as characterize a saint of the highest rank.——To imitate these, is the duty of all Christians; to equal them, is the privilege of few.

Let me illustrate this sentiment; the reader, I apprehend, will hardly think it needs confirmation.——Every graduate in the university, much more every minister of the gospel, ought to exceed the schoolboy in learning and knowledge.—Yet there have been schoolboys with whom few ministers, and fewer graduates, will venture to compare themselves. A recent instance of this kind we have in the famous Baratier. This wonderful youth when he was but four years old, spoke French to his mother, Latin to his father, High Dutch to his maid. At the age of six, he explained the Hebrew text, as ready as if it had been his native German. When other lads are scarce able to read with fluency and propriety their mother tongue, he was not only acquainted with, but master of five several languages. In his eleventh year he published a learned Latin dissertation, and translated a book of travels out of Hebrew into French. While a mere boy he was qualified to dispute with professors of the sciences, was honoured with a seat at an ecclesiastical synod, and admitted to the degree of doctor in philosophy. Upon this narrative I shall only observe, that many of the Jews, whose names are immortalized in scripture, were, in faith, in godliness, and all that is exemplary, so many Baratiers.

"Do not the best of men frequently feel disorder in "their affections? Do they not often complain, When "I would do good, evil is present with me?" "I "believe believe not." What a proof is here! How well ſuited to its office! which is to control the current and overrule the evidence of ancient and modern conſent. But why don't you believe what Aſpaſio ſuppoſes? Is your diſbelief grounded on fact? Are you acquainted with any people, who feel no diſorder in their affections? who always do good in the completeſt manner? and never have evil preſent with them? If ſo, what are their names? where do they live? We would go many miles to ſee them. You have no averſion to the mention of names, when cenſure is the motive, and public diſgrace the effect; why ſhould you be ſo reluctant, when honour and diſtinguiſhed reſpect would be the conſequence?

Do they not ſay, We groan, being burdened with the workings of inbred corruption? "This is not the "meaning of the text. The whole context ſhews the "cauſe of that groaning was their longing to be with "CHRIST." You need not on this occaſion rummage the context, or take a journey to find what is at your door. The ſentence itſelf ſhews, as plainly as words can ſhew, the cauſe of their groaning. We groan, it is not ſaid becauſe we long to be with CHRIST. This might be a truth; but this is not the cauſe aſſigned. "We groan becauſe we are burdened. Burdened with what? Aſpaſio anſwers with a body of ſin and death, or with what the apoſtle himſelf ſtyles τὸ θνητὸν. This, whatever it means, was the load that encumbered them, oppreſſed them, and made them ſigh ardently for deliverance. Does not this ſignify all the infirmities and diſorders of the preſent mortal ſtate? Among which the ſad effects of inbred corruption, are none of the leaſt. Theſe gave thoſe magnanimous, but pious ſouls, more uneaſineſs than all other kinds of affliction whatever *. The cure of ſin will be perfected in heaven. "Nay, "ſurely in paradiſe."——Aſpaſio knows no difference between paradiſe and heaven. Paradiſe is the kingdom where CHRIST reigns; and is not this heaven? Paradiſe is the region where the tree of life grows; and is not this heaven? Heaven denotes the place; paradiſe deſcribes its nature, a place of conſummate bliſs and abſolute perfection, where is the fulneſs of joy and pleaſure for evermore.——However, if it can be proved, that they are different abodes, and imply different things †; then Aſpaſio would be underſtood to ſay, the cure of ſin is completed in paradiſe; or as ſoon as the believer drops his fleſh, and enters the inviſible world.

This (a perfect conformity to GOD) is a noble prerogative of the beatific viſion. "No;" ſays Mr Weſley. Though St John, one would think, had ſettled and aſcertained this point beyond all contradiction—We ſhall be like him, for we ſhall ſee him, as he is.——"We ſhall," which intimates, that at preſent we are not perfectly like him—"For," which denotes the efficient cauſe of this advancement and felicity; this complete transformation into the divine image—"We ſhall ſee him," no longer through a glaſs, but face to face. We ſhall receive the cleareſt manifeſtation of his ineffable holineſs and glory, which will have juſt the ſame effect upon our ſouls as the imprinted ſeal has upon the melting wax.

"It would then come too late. If ſin remains in us "till the day of judgment, it will remain in us for "ever." You ſuppoſe, that the beatific viſion is not enjoyed, till the day of judgment. But in this you ſeem to err, not knowing the ſcripture. I have a deſire, ſays the apoſtle, to be diſſolved.——And what is the conſequence, the immediate conſequence of diſſolution? To be with CHRIST; in his preſence; before his throne; and is not this the beatific viſion? Willing (ſays the ſame inſpired writer) to be abſent from the body, and preſent with the LORD.——Here is no hint of any intermediate ſtate, but the very moment in which the ſaints depart from their bodies, they are preſent with the LORD; and if with the LORD, then in the higheſt heavens; then at the fountain-head of felicity; then amidſt the beatific viſion.—To heaven Elijah was conveyed in his fiery chariot; and into heaven the firſt martyr was received by his compaſſionate SAVIOUR. Neither of them waited in ſome intervening manſion, as a kind of lobby to the heaven of heavens. This is the Popiſh notion, and very cloſely connected with the chimera of purgatory; ſo cloſely connected, that if you take away the former, the latter drops into nothing.—I am ſorry, your opinions, Sir, are ſo much like the errors of the man of ſin.

Our preſent bleſſedneſs does not conſiſt in being free from ſin. "I really think it does." Spoke like Mr Weſley. "I think," is ſtill the argumentum palmarium. "I think," is the heavy artillery, which is to demoliſh brigades at a blow; only here it is ſtrengthened and enforced by that emphatical word "really."—But if our preſent bleſſedneſs does really conſiſt in being free from ſin, where are your bleſſed perſons? We may truly ſay, Apparent rari nantes in gurgite waſto. VIRG.

No; this can hardly be ſaid. Virgil's deſcription is too full; inſtead of ſeeing a very few, here and there one, popping up their heads, in the great and wide ocean of the world, we are not able to find ſo much as an individual. Shew us one, only one of theſe angels in fleſh and blood, and it ſufficeth us. Whereas, if you perſiſt in maintaining your ſinleſs perfection, yet cannot produce a ſingle inſtance, to exemplify your notion, will you not give too juſt a handle for that ſarcaſtic reflection, uſed on another occaſion?

With witneſſes many this cauſe did abound,
With ſome that were hang'd, and ſome that were drown'd,
And ſome that were loſt, and ſome never found.

Theſe are Aſpaſio's words—"It (our preſent imperfec-
"tion) perpetually reminds us of a moſt important
"truth, that our preſent bleſſedneſs conſiſts, not in be"ing free from all ſin, but in having no ſin imputed
"to us." He took particular care to guard his meaning from miſconſtruction, by adding the word all: leſt this word, becauſe it is little of ſtature, ſhould be overlooked, he printed it in Italics. But all this precaution is thrown away upon Mr Weſley. He takes no notice of this ſame little word; nay, he ſhuts it entirely out of his quotation; as though he ſhould ſay, "Where is "the harm of clapping under the hatches ſuch a puny
"inſignificant monoſyllable? I would have it to know,
"I ſhall 'ere long turn adrift more plump and portly
"words than that."

Aſpaſio alſo took care to confirm his ſentiments by a reference to ſcripture; he ſupported himſelf by the authority of King David.—Mr Weſley having a little while ago laboured to depreciate, now ventures to contradict

* "We groan, being burdened, with a ſenſe of our ſpiritual infirmities, and with the working of inbred corruption." This Aſpaſio's interpretation. "We groan, being burdened with numberleſs infirmities, temptations, and ſins." This is Mr Weſley's interpretation, in his Expoſitory notes on the New Teſtament. Yet here he denies what there he affirms.—It is ſaid, I think of Iſhmael; His hand will be againſt every man. Mr Weſley goes a ſtep further. His hand is againſt himſelf, as well as againſt every body elſe.

† St Paul, I am aware, ſpeaks of heaven and ſpeaks of paradiſe, 2 Cor. xii. 2, 4. So does David ſpeak of riſing up into the hill of the LORD, and of ſtanding in his holy place.—But as the ſame thing, though variouſly expreſſed, is meant by the Pſalmiſt, I think we may not unreaſonably underſtand the apoſtle in the ſame manner. If they had been different habitations, methinks he would have mentioned paradiſe firſt, and then the third heavens. Otherwiſe he tells the ſtory but awkwardly; for he firſt mentions his arrival in the third heavens, and then at paradiſe; that is, according to Mr Weſley; firſt he was led into the preſence, and then introduced into the antechamber.

dict the royal pſalmiſt. Bleſſed (ſays the pſalmiſt) is the man—who is free from ſin? who is perfectly ſanctified? This is not the doctrine which the ſweet ſinger of Iſrael teaches; but bleſſed is he, whoſe tranſgreſſion is forgiven, whoſe ſin is covered. Deeply impreſſed, and quite charmed with the contemplation of this moſt ſubſtantial happineſs, the ſacred writer proclaims it; repeats it; yes, a third time he celebrates it; crying out with ardour of joy, Bleſſed is the man, unto whom the LORD imputeth no iniquity *. Neither that iniquity which was formerly committed, nor that which ſtill defiles †.) Bleſſed indeed! May I live under a firm perſuaſion of my own particular intereſt in this unſpeakable privilege? May I find it made good to my ſoul, at the univerſal judgment! Then let others take the kingdoms of this world, and all the glory of them.—And as for Aſpaſio, he may reckon his credit ſafe, and his opinion fully authoriſed, while he eſpouſes the doctrine, and uſes the very words of the unerring SPIRIT.

"If we are not free from ſin, we are not Chriſtian "believers."—What an aſſertion is here! Aſſertion, for I dare not call it a truth.—If it was, who then could be ſaved? Not one of a thouſand; not two of a million; no, nor Mr John Weſley himſelf, ſince out of his own mouth he ſtands condemned. He makes this acknowledgment concerning himſelf and his followers, "We "know by melancholy experience what it is to neglect "works of righteouſneſs." To corroborate his confeſſion, he adds, "We know and feel by melancholy "experience, what it is to ſwerve from our firſt love. "We feel by experience."—He is willing to run the hazard of tautology, rather than any ſhould ſuſpect the ſincerity and truth of his proteſtation.—And can you after ſuch a confeſſion, after ſuch a proteſtation, pretend to be free from ſin? Is all this which you know of yourſelf, and feel by experience, conſiſtent with a ſinleſs ſtate? Juſt as much as a lethargy is conſiſtent with the vigour of health, or a ſhameful flight with a glorious victory.—See, Sir, how you are entangled in your own net; how, without being chaſed by an enemy, you run yourſelf aground. Nor will all your dexterity, ſo long as you avow ſuch palpable inconſiſtencies, be able to ſet you clear.

You attempt to confirm your opinion by the apoſtle's declaration; Being made free from ſin.——But he and you mean different things by the ſame words.—He means being freed from the dominion of ſin.—This is agreeable to his own explanation; Sin (ου κυριευσει) ſhall not lord it over you;—it may aſſault you; it may baraſs you; it may gain ſome advantage over you; but it ſhall not obtain a final victory, nor play the tyrant over you. To the expedience and neceſſity of this freedom, if ever we would approve ourſelves diſciples of CHRIST, or Chriſtians indeed, I readily ſubſcribe:—whereas, you mean being free from the very remainders of ſin.—— "Having a purity" ('tis your own explanation) "free "from all mixture of its contrary, and a reſignation ex- "cluding every degree of ſelf-will." Againſt the exiſtence, or the poſſibility of this freedom, ſo long as we ſojourn in a body of fleſh, I enter my proteſt.

If we were perfect in piety, CHRIST's prieſtly office would be ſuperſeded. "No, we ſhould ſtill need his "Spirit, and conſequently his interceſſion." But were we perfect, we ſhould receive the Spirit without an interceſſor.—An interceſſor implies an alienation between the two parties; ſomething which, without the intervention of a third perſon, would create alienation.—The prieſtly office, whether of atoning, or of interceding, is founded on a ſtate of guilt; to this it bears an eſſential and invariable relation.——Does CHRIST exerciſe his prieſtly office in behalf of angels? No, becauſe they excel in ſtrength, and are perfect in holineſs. Will CHRIST exerciſe his prieſtly office, when all his ſaints are received into glory? No, becauſe then there will be an abſolute conſummation both in body and ſoul, both in righteouſneſs and happineſs, and the mediatorial kingdom be delivered up to the FATHER.——Did CHRIST exerciſe his prieſtly office before Adam fell? No, becauſe ſin had no exiſtence then, and then the language was, Let man be bleſſed; not, Deliver him from going down into the pit.

The objections laid to my charge in this paragraph, and the whole ſide of the leaf, proceed upon your favourite notion; perfection of holineſs, even while we continue in houſes of clay. As I look upon your foundation to be a mere deluſion, I muſt of courſe conclude all that you build upon it to be chimerical and deluſory; therefore, till you prove your ſuppoſition, I have no reaſon to concern myſelf with any of your conſequences deduced from it, or with any of your allegations relating to it. On one clauſe, however, let me beſtow a ſlight animadverſion.

Aſpaſio ſays, a ſenſe of remaining inbred corruption will reconcile us to death; Mr Weſley replies, "Indeed "it will not: nor will any thing do this like perfect "love."——Here I think you have miſſed the mark. Nothing can reconcile us to death but that which takes away its ſting; and this is done only by the atonement of CHRIST. Nothing can reconcile us to death but that which delivers us from its terror; and this is effected only by the ſacrifice of our great HIGH PRIEST, which has converted the king of terrors into a meſſenger of peace: nothing can reconcile us unto death, but that which makes it deſirable to depart, and gain to die; and this is owing, wholly owing to him who died for us, that whether we wake or ſleep, we ſhould live together with him.

Old Simeon found, that nothing could reconcile him to death, ſo much as a believing view of the LORD CHRIST. Seeing GOD made fleſh; ſeeing him as his own SAVIOUR, he was enabled not only to acquieſce in the ſummons, but to welcome it as a deliverance.——He was enabled to ſay with compoſure and complacency, LORD, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace—Not becauſe I am weary of this imperfect ſtate; not becauſe I am perfect in divine love; but becauſe mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation.——Though you may not like to imitate a Jew, I moſt heartily wiſh for myſelf, Let me die the death of this moſt venerable Hebrew, and let my latter end be like his!

If you ſtill perſiſt in your opinion, that nothing can reconcile you to diſſolution like the imagined perfection of your love, not the blood, by which the ſaints overcame; not the righteouſneſs, by which they reign in life; not the grace and power, which have ſwallowed up death in victory; I muſt then caution you to take heed leſt you croſs, or attempt to croſs the river, in the boat of vain confidence. You have abridged, if I miſtake not, the Pilgrim's Progreſs, therefore can be at no loſs to underſtand my meaning.

One clauſe, I ſaid,—but I correct myſelf.—There is another, ſo very extraordinary, that you might juſtly charge me with inattention little ſhort of ſtupidity, if I ſhould paſs it over without notice. Theſe are the words,—"If we were perfect in piety, (St John's word "is perfect in love,) we ſhould ſtill be encompaſſed "with infirmities, and liable to miſtakes, from which "words or actions might follow, even though the heart "was all love, which were not exactly right."

This is ſtrange! wondrous ſtrange indeed! Perfect, yet "encompaſſed with infirmities!" Perfect, "yet "doing actions, and ſpeaking words not exactly "right!" You are as ſingular in your idea, as you are ſtrenuous for the doctrine of perfection.——I know no any Proteſtant writer that pretends to maintain the latter

* Pſal. xxxii. 1, 2. Should any objection ariſe from the next ſentence, the reader may ſee it anticipated, and ſuperſeded, in Theron and Aſpaſio, page 177. of this edition.

† Pſal. xv. 3.

yourself only excepted; and as to the former, I think it could never enter into the head of any thing living, but Mr Wesley only. Perfect, "yet encompassed with infirmities," as just as sound divinity, as true, as addicted to lying, is sound morality.

This is not the worst property of your notion of perfection, that it is absurd and self-contradictory. A sentiment may be absurd, yet not very pernicious. But this is an error of the most malignant kind. This was at the bottom of the Pharisees pride, and spirited them on to seek justification by the works of the law. They knew full well, that their obedience was not complete, it did not come up to their sacred and exalted standard; but they had learned to soften and extenuate their disobedience, into matters "not exactly right." This is the cause, why people professing Christianity, see no form or comeliness in CHRIST, so as to desire him, with desires that cannot be uttered. 'Tis true they are not perfect, they often offend;—but then the offences are only human infirmities; words and actions "not exactly right." With this, which is indeed "the syren song," they lull their souls into an insensibility of their ruined state, and a disregard of the all-sufficient REDEEMER.

Cursed (says the law) is every one, that continueth not in all things, whether they be great or small.—And will you regard that as a mere infirmity, and consistent with perfection, on which the divine law denounces a curse, which the divine law threatens with all misery here, and with everlasting vengeance hereafter? The apostle would probably chastise the author or abetter of such a conceit, in the following manner: "Wilt thou "know, O vain man, that what thou calleft a matter "not exactly right," is most horribly odious in the eye of GOD's infinite purity; deserves eternal death in the estimate of his infinite justice; and could never "have been pardoned but by the atoning death of his "infinitely-majestic Son!"

"Encompassed with infirmities, yet the heart all love! "Words and actions not exactly right, yet the man all "perfection!" These are all paradoxes which I never saw equalled, only in the writings of some high-flown Papists. Mr Wesley's words are not far from a translation; they are, to a nicety, the sense of those very offensive passages which I meet with in a couple of Popish zealots. Andradius, interpreter of the council of Trent, writes thus; "* Venialia peccata tam sunt minuta et "levia, ut non adverlentur perfectioni charitatis, nec "impedire possunt perfectam aut absolutam obedien-"tiam." ——Lindanus, another champion for the same bad cause, expresses himself in a more elegant, but in no less shocking a manner. "† Levicula vitiola lap-"suum quotidianorum, aspergines et nævulæ sunt: "quæ per se non maculant et contaminant, sed "quasi pulvisculo leviter aspergunt vitam Christianam: "ut nihilominus tamen per se sint perfecta, et undique "immaculata renatorem opera in hac vita."——If Mr Wesley pleases to consider these passages, I hope, he will be induced to alter his phrase, and rectify his notions. —If he pleases to translate these passages, his followers may have an opportunity of seeing, how nearly he approaches to some of the worst errors of Popery; and may hence be admonished not to imbibe, without due examination, his doctrines; nor submit, with an implicit credulity, to his dictates.

The charges of the law are all answered.—At this sentence Mr Wesley is highly offended. As the lion is said to lash himself into rage, so my objector stirs himself up into a graceful indignation; stirs himself, for there is nothing in the passage, or in the context to awaken such a flame of zeal. If Mr Wesley had understood Aspasio, according to the whole tenor of his discourse, there would have been no room for bringing Count Zinzendorf upon the carpet, nor for making that injurious conclusion, Then neither GOD nor man can claim any obedience to the law.—This is what Aspasio means: The claims of the law, as a covenant of works;—the claims of the law, as being the condition of life and glory;—the claims of the law, as requiring perfect obedience on pain of eternal death; these claims are all satisfied by our most blessed and gracious SURETY. —If not, they are still incumbent upon us, and upon every child of man. A burden this, which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear, which, heavier than the sands of the sea, would have sunk us all into the nethermost hell. This doctrine, therefore, is not "Antinomianism without a mask;" but it is the doctrine of righteousness without works *, and of justification without the deeds of the law †.

"Then neither GOD nor man can claim any obe-"dience to the law." Yes, GOD Almighty may, and GOD Almighty does claim our obedience to the law; as a rule of life, he requires a conformity to its precepts, as to the image of himself; he demands a performance of its duties, as the means of bringing glory to his name, and paying submission to his authority. And none will be so readily disposed, none will be so effectually enabled, to obey the whole law, as those who see themselves made righteous by the obedience of CHRIST, who are thereby delivered from that tremendous curse, denounced on all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men.

Aspasio thus exhorts his friend,—Let me desire you to imagine, rather may the blessed SPIRIT enable you to believe, that your sins are expiated, through the death of JESUS CHRIST; that a righteousness is given you, by virtue of which you may have free and welcome access to GOD.—"This is not "scriptural language," says Mr Wesley. Therefore it cannot be sound doctrine, is his way of arguing. Harmless enough I must own. But what follows is not quite so modest. "I would simply say," and surely what I would say, must be unexceptionably right. This is the conclusion we are to make; otherwise what you alledge, is of no weight at all. "I would simply "say, By him we have access to the FATHER." This is, beyond all objection, proper. It is taken from the apostle, and it includes what Aspasio expresses.—— The apostle's language is the ingot of gold, Aspasio's sentiment is a thread drawn, or a leaf beaten from it. Methinks, before I dismiss this topic, I would desire you to turn back a moment, and reconsider what you have affirmed.—Your sins are expiated, is not this scriptural language?—What else meaneth that expression of the apostle? Εις το ιλασκεσθαι τας αμαρτιας του λαου "To "make expiation for the sins of the people ‡." A righteousness is given you, is not this the scriptural way of speaking? "They who receive the gift of "righteousness, shall reign in life."—"By which you "have free access to GOD;" is not this both the dialect, and the doctrine of the HOLY GHOST? "We "have access with confidence (not through our punc-"tual performance of any conditions, but) through "the faith of him;" by a fiducial reliance on our

* Venial sins are so minute and trivial, that they do not oppose the perfection of our love, nor can they hinder our obedience from being absolutely perfect.

† The little trifling faults which are owing to our daily slips or mistakes, or like specks, or almost imperceptible moles upon the body, which of themselves do not stain or defile; but as it were, with small particles of fine dust, lightly sprinkle the Christian life; so that nevertheless the works of the regenerate may be of themselves perfect, and in all respects immaculate, even in this life.

* Rom. iv. 6. † Rom. iii. 28.

‡ Heb. ii. 17. Εις το ιλασκεσθαι.—Ad expiandum, ut eas expiaret peccata populi, quibus expiatis, Deus nobis redditus est propitius.

LORD's moſt precious obedience, blood, and merit.

"I have ſeen ſuch terrible effects of this unſcriptural "way of ſpeaking."——Here I fancy you ſlip into a little miſtake; you forgot the diſtinction between the uſe, and the abuſe of a doctrine, a diſtinction which you can eaſily make on other occaſions. You have doubtleſs ſeen people, who uſe the moſt ſcriptural way of ſpeaking, yet act unſuitably to their language; what reflections aroſe in your mind, and what inference did you draw upon obſerving ſuch an inconſiſtency? You ſaid perhaps, "Their voice is Jacob's voice; but their "hands are the hands of Eſau.—Hence it appears, that "they are hypocrites.—They pretend one thing, and "are really another."—Make the ſame reflection, and draw the ſame inference, when you hear people talking of imputed righteouſneſs, yet ſee them looſing the reins to ungodlineſs; then you will be conſiſtent with yourſelf, and with truth; aſcribing the terrible effects, not to the wholeſome doctrine, but to the vitiated mind.

Where ſin abounded, &c.—Mr Weſley rejects Aſpaſio's interpretation of this text, and offers one of his own; one, which he had given us a little while ago; and now ſerves a ſecond time, without any conſiderable variation, at our table.——I ſhall only refer the reader to page 400, where he will find this text conſidered, and Mr Weſley's expoſition canvaſſed.

In this and the two following paragraphs you find fault with the phraſe imputed; yet you ſay, "Concern-"ing the thing there is no queſtion." You would diſcard that particular form of expreſſion; yet you add, "As to the doctrine we are agreed." Then, according to your own confeſſion, all theſe your objections are a mere ſtrife of words. Surely ſuch a man as Mr Weſley ſhould know how to make a better uſe of pen, ink, and paper, than to litigate about letters and ſyllables.—If I thought myſelf contending only about the moſt preciſely proper form of expreſſing the ſame thing, I ſhould be aſhamed of my employ, and would this inſtant lay down my pen; whereas I apprehend, that we are not agreed as to doctrine, that there is a material and very wide difference between us.——My opinion, or rather, my faith is, that our LORD's obedience to the moral law in profeſſed ſubmiſſion to its authority, and in exact conformity to its precepts; his performance of all holy duties, and his exerciſe of all heavenly graces, that all this is a moſt eſſential and diſtinguiſhed part of his merit, that this is of higher dignity and greater value than the whole world, and all the righteouſneſs in it. That the divine law is hereby more ſignally honoured, than it could have been honoured by the uninterrupted obedience of Adam and all his poſterity.—That GOD's juſtice, holineſs, truth, receive greater glory from theſe unparallelled acts of duty, than from all the ſervices of angels and men in their ſeveral wonderful orders; that this active righteouſneſs, together with his moſt meritorious ſufferings, are the ground and cauſe of my acceptance with GOD, are the very thing which procures and effects my juſtification, making me not barely acquitted from guilt, but truly righteous, yea, perfectly righteous, and that before the GOD of infinite penetration and purity.—This is a view of the doctrine, incomparably magnificent and inexpreſſibly comfortable. If you agree with your friend in all theſe particulars, ſpeak and write conformably to ſuch agreement; then you will never again hear from him in this manner, neither will he receive any more ſuch favours from you as the letter now under conſideration; then we ſhall be perfectly joined together "in the ſame mind, and in the "ſame judgment."

Alas! this union, I fear, is not ſo eaſily to be effected.——Mr Weſley ſtill inſiſts, and ſtill urges, "The au-"thority of our church (which Aſpaſio pleads) and of "thoſe eminent divines (whoſe teſtimony Aſpaſio al-"leges), does not touch thoſe particular forms of ex-"preſſion."——Juſtification through imputed righteouſneſs, or being made righteous through the obedience of CHRIST, I ſuppoſe are the forms of expreſſion intended. Theſe it ſeems, none of the quotations confirm, eſtabliſh, no, nor touch, in Mr Weſley's opinion at leaſt; but I am inclined to hope, that the generality of readers will be of a different perſuaſion, and allow that the quotations and the expreſſions touch and reſemble one another, as much as the wings of the cherubim in the ancient ſanctuary *.

"Does not touch." No! not yet? Then we muſt have recourſe to ſome other authority; and ſuch a one I have at hand as you would hardly venture, or even wiſh to gainſay; I mean the authority of John Weſley, M. A. who declares, in his expoſition of the New Teſtament—"This is fully conſiſtent with our being juſti-"fied by the imputation of the righteouſneſs of "CHRIST." Now I ſhall only remonſtrate, in imitation of the apoſtle; "If thou thyſelf uſeſt this phraſe, "why wouldſt thou compel others to lay it aſide? Or, "why art thou diſpleaſed with others, for a practice "which thou alloweſt in thyſelf?"

Surely you will not ſay, imputation of righteouſneſs is quite a different thing from imputed righteouſneſs.—Does not the former evidently include the latter? Can there be a proclamation of pardon, without a pardon proclaimed? Can there be the purchaſe of an eſtate, without an eſtate purchaſed? or the imputation of righteouſneſs, without a righteouſneſs imputed! If others ſhould affect ſubtile and ſelf-deluding evaſions, Mr Weſley cannot, Mr Weſley muſt not, he has precluded himſelf; nay, he has, with his own mouth, given a verdict againſt himſelf. Is it not recorded in thoſe lines, ſubjoined to your character of a methodiſt?

Let faith and love combine
To guard your valiant breaſt;
The plate be righteouſneſs divine,
Imputed and impreſt.

This imputed righteouſneſs was once a delightful theme; your ſong in the houſe of your pilgrimage. Why is it now a burthenſome ſtone, which you would fain ſhake off from yourſelf and others? Are you become rich in yourſelf, and increaſed with goods of your own acquiring? We know full well for what reaſon the phraſe and the doctrine are rejected, exploded, and reproached by the Romiſh ſuperſtition, becauſe they diſplay, in the brighteſt light, the beauty of FREE GRACE. They hold the door againſt all kind of human merit; they cut off every the moſt diſtant pretenſion for glorying in man, and refer all the honour of ſalvation to JESUS CHRIST alone. Admit juſtification through the imputed righteouſneſs of CHRIST, and the grand bulwark, or the main pillar of Popery, falls to the ground; while a ſolid foundation is laid for that triumph and gratitude, expreſſed in the inſpired hymn, Let us be glad and rejoice exceedingly, but give the honour (all the honour) to HIM †.

The righteouſneſs of GOD, ſignifies the righteouſneſs which GOD-man wrought out. "No;" ſays Mr Weſley. Your reaſon, Sir, for this negative? A child may deny; a man of judgment will diſprove.—Does not Mr Weſley diſprove, when he adds? "It "ſignifies GOD's method of juſtifying ſinners."——Juſt as forcibly as the "Jews diſproved the Meſſiah-"ſhip of JESUS of Nazareth, when they cried, "Thou the MESSIAH! No; thou art a Samaritan, "and haſt a devil." What they alleged wanted a proof, altogether as much as what they denied.—

* Both the cherubims were of one meaſure, and one ſize: and their wings touched one another in the midſt of the houſe, 1 Kings vi. 25. 27.

† Rev. xix. 7.

What

What Mr Weſley here alleges is a thread-bare objection, already conſidered, and already confuted. Yet, ſince it relates to a point of the utmoſt moment, and that which is the main hinge of our controverſy, I ſhall not be deemed officious, if, as the ſhot has been once again diſcharged, I once again lift up my ſhield againſt it.

"The righteouſneſs of GOD ſignifies GOD's me-"thod of juſtifying ſinners." We have already ſhewn, how low an interpretation this is; how inſipid in itſelf, and incompatible with the current language of ſcripture: on the other hand, how ſublime and conſolatory is the ſenſe which Aſpaſio gives! A righteouſneſs, which GOD HIMSELF has proved without any co-operation from his creatures:—The righteouſneſs of that moſt exalted, yet moſt condeſcending SAVIOUR, who is GOD and man in one CHRIST; a righteouſneſs, dignified with all the perfections of the GODHEAD, therefore worthy to be the comfort, the joy, the never-ceaſing boaſt of his people; and ſufficient, infinitely ſufficient, to ſave even the moſt vile, the moſt baſe, the moſt deſperately ruined ſinners.

This is a righteouſneſs, as much ſuperior to all human attainments, to all angelic accompliſhments, as the heaven of heavens is higher than a clod of the valleys.——This is a righteouſneſs which could never have entered into the heart of man or angel to conceive, but will be the cauſe of their admiration, and the ſubject of their wonder to endleſs ages.——This ſenſe fully accounts for thoſe rapturous expreſſions of the prophet, when ſpeaking of the all-ſurpaſſing gift, he thus addreſſes his fellow-ſinners; Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; ſhout, O daughter of Jeruſalem; behold, thy King cometh unto thee:—he is righteous, and having ſalvation. He is completely righteous in his nature, has fulfilled all righteouſneſs in his life and death, and has thereby obtained for thee, a full pardon, a finiſhed ſalvation, a ſure title to eternal glory.——This accounts for thoſe more rapturous expreſſions of the ſacred writers, when, in the fervour of their gratitude, they call upon the whole creation to celebrate the goodneſs of the incarnate JEHOVAH.—Sing, O ye heavens, for the LORD hath done it; ſhout, ye lower parts of the earth: break forth into ſinging, ye mountains; O foreſt, and every tree therein, for the LORD hath (in his own perſon, by his own obedience and ſufferings) redeemed Jacob, and glorified (not human abilities, not human works, but) himſelf, and his own righteouſneſs, in the reſtoration of Iſrael *.

In ſhort, this is a righteouſneſs, which exalts GOD's juſtice; which magnifies the law, diſplays all his awful and amiable attributes in their fulleſt luſtre.——To contrive it, was unſearchable wiſdom; to beſtow it, is invaluable treaſure.——It anſwers, in the completeſt manner, all the grand and gracious purpoſes both of GOD's glory and of man's ſalvation. True goſpel

* Iſ. xliv. 23. Should any one ſay, Is this the ſenſe of the prophet? I aſk, Is not this the fulleſt, grandeſt, divineſt ſenſe? Is it not a ſenſe perfectly true? Is it not warranted by the goſpel-revelation? Is it not demanded by that declaration of our SAVIOUR; They (the ancient ſcriptures) teſtify of me? Some writers, I am aware, interpret this and other ſimilar paſſages, without taking in the unſpeakable bleſſings of CHRIST and his grace. But theſe interpreters ſeem to act a very injudicious, and no leſs unfaithful part.—I will ſuppoſe them expounding and illuſtrating that great command of creating power, Let the earth bring forth graſs, and the herb yielding ſeed.—Will they model their expoſition, or fetch their illuſtration from what appears on the ground in the barren month of December? Surely, if they have any taſte or judgment, they will form their comment, by the fertility, the plenty, the unbounded luxuriancy of April and May. There is much the ſame difference between the righteouſneſs of an incarnate SAVIOUR and all other gifts of divine goodneſs, as there is between the vegetable productions of the vernal, and the almoſt total ſterility of the wintry months.

this! glad tidings indeed! an expedient for our recovery greater than our hearts could wiſh. We may truly ſay, while meditating on this gift of conſummate righteouſneſs; Where ſin has abounded, grace has much more abounded. The bricks are fallen down, but the moſt glorious repairer of our breaches has built with hewn ſtone. Well might the apoſtle, having this ſupremely-excellent righteouſneſs in his view, look down with the moſt ſovereign contempt upon every other (cauſe of) confidence; upon every other object of truſt; and reckon them droſs and dung.——Well might he declare that he would never be aſhamed of the goſpel, in which is this tranſcendently-noble righteouſneſs, in all its magnificence, riches, and glory.

Do you think me rather too warm upon the ſubject? Let me once again remit you to St Chryſoſtom; read his expoſition of that charming ſentence, The righteouſneſs of GOD, Πολυς, &c. This venerable father of the church ſpeaks the thing as it is. He does not mingle our wine with water, but gives us the genuine truth, and triumphs becauſe of the truth.

The doctrine of an imputed righteouſneſs ſeems to have been typically taught, by the remarkable manner of clothing our firſt parents. All they could do for their own recovery, was like the patched and beggarly mantle of fig-leaves; this they relinquiſh, and GOD himſelf furniſhes them with apparel; animals are ſlain, not for food, but ſacrifice; and the naked criminals are arrayed with the ſkins of thoſe ſlaughtered beaſts.——The victims figured the expiation made by CHRIST's death, the cloathing typified the imputation of his righteouſneſs. "That does not appear," cries Mr Weſley. Aſpaſio has produced an authority from the famous Milton. I could reinforce it by another from the elegant Witſius. If you are not ſatisfied with either, or both theſe teſtimonies, I will give you a reaſon for the ſentiment.—The victims moſt properly ſhadowed forth the expiation of guilt, by the Redeemer's blood; becauſe it is the peculiar end of ſacrifice, to make atonement for ſins; the cloathing moſt pertinently denoted the Saviour's righteouſneſs, which is deſcribed, both by the prophet and the apoſtle under this very image—He hath covered me with the robe of righteouſneſs, ſays the prophet Iſaiah. The fine linen which arrays the bride of the Lamb, is the perfect righteouſneſs of the ſaints *,—ſays the beloved diſciple. It is like a royal veſture, or a rich ſuit of apparel, upon all them that believe, adds the apoſtle Paul. The impartial reader, I promiſe myſelf, will allow theſe paſſages, if not to be abſolutely deciſive, yet to have ſomewhat more weight, than that atom in your ſcale, "This does not appear." As for ſanctification, this may very reaſonably rank among the effects of being cleanſed by the blood, and adorned with the righteouſneſs of CHRIST. Theſe bleſſings produce peace of conſcience, and love of GOD. Juſt as commodious cloathing produces warmth, and promotes health.—— And what is love of GOD, but holineſs of heart in the ſeed, and holineſs of life in the fruit?

As this (the nature of true holineſs) is a matter of the laſt importance; is a point, on which multitudes, I fear, are miſtaken; I will leave it uppermoſt in your thoughts, in the reader's, and in thoſe of, Rev. Sir, your, &c.

* Rev. xix. 8. Τα δικαιωματα, being in the plural number, I think may be tranſlated, juſtitia omnibus numeris abſoluta. A righteouſneſs of all kinds, and all degrees, or comprehending every kind, and defective in no degree.—Would you ſee the beauty of this fine linen, or the wardrobe in which it is depoſited, conſult Iſ. xlv. 24. Theron and Aſpaſio, above, page 262. where the paſſage is explained, with copiouſneſs and particularity; O! that it was alſo explained with a propriety and energy ſuitable to its eminent importance!

LETTER X.

REV. SIR,

WE are now entering upon a new province. Our buſineſs will be chiefly of the philological kind. We ſhall treat principally of words. But as they are the words which the HOLY GHOST teacheth, they are like the combs erected in yonder hive. Not empty ſyllables, made only for ſound; but rich with divine ſenſe, and full of the honey of the goſpel, replete with the manna of heaven.——May this pen be, to the reader, like Jonathan's rod, when, dipt in the delicious juice, it enlightened his eyes, refreſhed his ſpirits, and cheared his heart!

"Almoſt every text," you are pleaſed to affirm, "quoted in this and the following letter, in ſupport of "that particular form of expreſſion, (imputed righte-"ouſneſs,) is diſtorted above meaſure from the plain, "obvious meaning, which is pointed out by the con-"text."—Let us examine theſe abuſed and diſtorted texts, in order to diſcover, from whence the misfortune happened; how the violence was done; whether by Mr Weſley's pen, or by Aſpaſio's tongue.

The firſt is from the book of Job. Which, as it is greatly vetterable for its antiquity, and ſingularly to be regarded for its importance, I ſhall beg leave to conſider at large.—A ſinner is deſcribed, lying under a dangerous ſickneſs; and brought, by the force of his diſeaſe, to the brink of the grave; by the multitude of his ſins, to the very borders of hell. In this deplorable condition, If there be a meſſenger with him, an interpreter, one of a thouſand, to ſhew unto man his uprightneſs; then he is gracious unto him, and ſaith, Deliver him from going down into the pit; I have found a ranſom *.

If there be with him a meſſenger of the living GOD; a faithful ambaſſador of CHRIST, who may adminiſter ſpiritual aſſiſtance to the poor afflicted creature.——An interpreter, who knows how to open the ſcriptures, and rightly to divide the word of truth; who is a preacher of righteouſneſs, and can properly apply the word of grace.——This is not every one's talent; nor within the compaſs of every man's abilities. He is one of a thouſand, to whom GOD hath given the tongue of the learned; enabling him to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon, and ſuit the condition of each reſpective patient.—To ſhew unto man his uprightneſs; that is, ſays Mr Weſley, "to "convince him of GOD's juſtice, in ſo puniſhing him."

But is this the inſtruction, which ſuch a diſtreſſed ſufferer wants? Is this the word of reconciliation, which every true miniſter, in ancient times, did preach, and in latter times does preach? Or is there any need of a choice inſtructor,—one ſkilled in the counſel of GOD, to teach what the common dictates of reaſon demonſtrate?—In this interpretation, I can neither diſcern the true critic, nor the clear reaſoner, nor the ſound divine.

Not the true critic. He would acknowledge, that the antecedent in this clauſe הוא, is not GOD, but man. To man therefore, if we regard grammatical propriety, the pronoun his muſt be referred.——Not the clear reaſoner; he would obſerve the emphaſis of the word then †. Implying ſome diſcovery, or ſome conviction, in conſequence of which, deliverance from death enſues, or with which it is connected. Can this be a diſcovery or a conviction of GOD's juſtice, in puniſhing him? No verily.——Much leſs therefore can I diſcern the ſound divine. He knows, and affirms conſtantly, that this is the conſequence of the MESSIAH's righteouſneſs alone; which, being imputed to the ſinner, becomes, for the bleſſed purpoſe of juſtification unto life, his *.

So that Aſpaſio ſeems to have the import of language, and the ſcope of the context, both on his ſide. And I may venture to add, he has the conſolatory genius of the goſpel, yet more ſtrongly pleading for his interpretation. It muſt yield but cold comfort, to tell a poor wretch, confined to the bed of languiſhing, and alarmed with apprehenſions of eternal vengeance; but cold comfort muſt it yield, to tell ſuch a one, that he has deſerved all this miſery, and is juſtly puniſhed. Whereas, to inform him of a righteouſneſs, ſufficient to do away all his tranſgreſſions; ſufficient to reconcile him, and render him acceptable, even to the chaſtiſing GOD; ſufficient to obtain his deliverance, very probably from death, moſt aſſuredly from hell; this is a reviving report indeed. This will make the bones, which ſin and miſery had broken, to rejoice.

Then, the ſinner and the ſufferer, attentive to this inſtruction, and applying this righteouſneſs, is made partaker of pardon. GOD, the ſovereign LORD of life and death, is gracious unto him; and ſaith, in the greatneſs of his ſtrength, as well as in the multitude of his mercies, Deliver him from going down into the pit of corruption, as a pledge of his deliverance from the pit of perdition. For I have found a ranſom, ſatisfactory to my law, and to my juſtice. I have received an atonement in behalf of this once obnoxious, now reconciled tranſgreſſor.

He ſhall receive the bleſſing from the LORD, and righteouſneſs.——This you will render holineſs. But have you no Hebrew lexicon to inform you, that the word which ſignifies holineſs, is very different from the expreſſion uſed by the pſalmiſt? He ſays צדקה, whereas holineſs is expreſſed by קדש.——Beſides, have you not obſerved, that your interpretation would betray the pſalmiſt into apparent tautology? He had, in the preceding verſes, diſplayed the duties of practical godlineſs, and the graces of inherent holineſs. The

* "The uprightneſs," ſays Mr Caryl, "chiefly intended here "is the righteouſneſs of CHRIST, in and by which we are recon-"ciled to and made one with GOD. We never ſee where our "uprightneſs is, till we ſee there is nothing that makes us ſtand "upright in the court of heaven, but only CHRIST our righte-"ouſneſs.——This is the great duty of the meſſengers and inter-"preters of CHRIST, to declare to man this righteouſneſs for his "uprightneſs. And that hence it is (as Elihu ſpeaks) that GOD "is and will be gracious unto him."

Mr Caryl, in expounding the book of Job, has acquitted himſelf like a maſter in Iſrael. His thoughts are beautiful and animated. His criticiſms are correct and judicious. His language, conſidering the time in which he wrote, is remarkably pure and ſtrong. His doctrines are truly edifying, becauſe, generally ſpeaking, they are evangelical.—What is a very neceſſary, but very difficult taſk, in explaining this part of ſcripture, the connection of the ſentiment is diſcovered, the bearings and dependencies of the argument are pointed out; and the tranſitions from one paſſage to another, ſhewn to be, not wild and diſorderly, but juſt, regular and graceful.

The only fault attending this work, is prolixity. I wiſh ſome ſkilful hand would, by rendering it leſs copious, render it more uſeful. I cannot but think, it might be a profitable employ for young ſtudents in divinity, to exerciſe themſelves in abridging Mr Caryl, Dr Owen upon the Hebrews, Mr Charnock upon the attributes, or ſome ſuch valuable, but voluminous authors. Theſe, and many other works of the ſame luxuriant growth, would, if put into the alembic, afford us the very ſpirit of the goſpel, and the richeſt cordials for our ſouls.

perſo

* Job xxxiii. 23, 24. I have the rather choſen to lay this whole paſſage before the reader, becauſe a new interpretation is given to the word meſſenger. Here, it is ſuppoſed to denote a faithful and ſkilful miniſter of the goſpel. In the dialogues it is ſuppoſed to deſcribe our LORD JESUS CHRIST himſelf. I ſcarcely know, which ſenſe to prefer. Perhaps, both may be included, the author, as well as the inſtrument, of comfort to the ſick and ſinful man.——However, the point in debate between Mr Weſley and Aſpaſio, is not affected by the different application of this word. His uprightneſs, according to either expoſition, may ſignify the MESSIAH's obedience and ſufferings; muſt ſignify theſe things; provided theſe are the only juſtifying righteouſneſs of a ſinner; the only way of obtaining the divine favour, and removing every evil.

† Verſe 24.

ſon he deſcribes, poſſeſſes the latter, and practiſes the former. To ſay, therefore, he ſhall receive holineſs, when he has it already, would not ſuit David's correctneſs; however it may ſuit Mr Weſley's fancy, or Mr Weſley's deſign.——In this clauſe, the evangelical moraliſt touches upon another particular, which enters, as an eſſential part, into the character of a godly man; even the righteouſneſs which is of faith; denoted by the bleſſing of pardon, and the gift of righteouſneſs. Take away this, and there is no acceptance with GOD. Take away this, and the gates, mentioned in the cloſe of the pſalm, are unalterably ſhut. Unleſs we are furniſhed with this paſſport, the everlaſting doors never lift up their heads.——If you exclude this peculiarity, the deſcription is very imperfect, and the picture extremely deficient. Whereas, this adds the finiſhing touch, and gives true perfection to both.

Several paſſages are quoted, in which the word צדקה occurs. Sometimes you would have it ſignify mercy; ſometimes juſtification; ſometimes ſpotleſs holineſs. But what proof do I find, for eſtabliſhing any of theſe ſignifications; which differ ſo much from one another, and ſtill more from the truth? Nothing but the cuſtomary argument, "ſo it unqueſtionably means."—Now you muſt unqueſtionably know, at leaſt every novice in the language knows, that the genuine and native ſenſe of צדקה is righteouſneſs. The word expreſſive of mercy, is חסד; neither in ſenſe nor ſound alike.—As to juſtification, the phraſe never denotes that bleſſed effect, but the divine and meritorious cauſe which produces it.

Shall I, in this inquiry, appeal to the beſt lexicons, the moſt approved tranſlations, or the ableſt interpreters? No, I will refer you to the deciſion of an interpreter, who is ſuperior to all lexicons and all tranſlations; I mean, the author of the epiſtle to the Hebrews. He tranſlates this very word, as it enters into the name of Melchiſedec. And he tranſlates it, not mercy, not juſtification, no, nor ſpotleſs holineſs, but righteouſneſs; even that righteouſneſs, whoſe fruit is peace with GOD, and peace in our own conſcience. Now, will you play the critic upon this inſpired writer? and ſay, Unqueſtionably it means, not what the apoſtle has determined; not what Aſpaſio, ſupported by his authority, has adopted; but what I think fit to dictate?

An oppoſer of our LORD's imputed righteouſneſs, who had more diſcretion or more ſubtilty than Mr Weſley, would have argued in this manner. "The original word, I muſt confeſs, ought to be tranſlated "righteouſneſs. This is undoubtedly the principal and "leading ſignification of the term. But then the circumſtances and the context oblige us to underſtand "it, in the notion of mercy, of ſpotleſs holineſs, or of "any thing elſe that ſerves our purpoſe."——This would be more modeſt and more plauſible, though not more juſt and ſolid, than your confident aſſertion.

Suppoſe we ſhould admit this pretence, what does the critic gain thereby? Muſt he not have recourſe to that noble and comfortable doctrine, for which we plead? Let the word be tranſlated mercy. Why is mercy ſhewn to ſinners? Is it not on account of the righteouſneſs of their SURETY? Let it be tranſlated goodneſs. Wherefore is goodneſs exerciſed to rebellious men? Is it not becauſe of the ſatisfaction made by their crucified LORD? Render it whatever you pleaſe, provided it conveys the idea of favour vouchſafed, or of the benefits conferred, it muſt terminate, ſtill terminate, in that grand central point, the incarnation, obedience, and death of IMMANUEL.

Zion ſhall be redeemed with judgment—"After ſevere "puniſhment," you ſay,—The Hebrew prepoſition, ſignifying after, is אחר. I find no trace of any ſuch word in my edition of the Bible. You may as well render or interpret the paſſage, in the midſt. And then, if ſome other critic ſhould be inclined to tranſlate it, before or round about; we ſhould have a large compaſs of meaning; but where would preciſion and exactneſs be found?---But why is Zion to be redeemed after ſevere puniſhment? Has her puniſhment any influence or ſway in the work of her redemption? Does the puniſhment of man pave the way for the ſalvation of GOD? Are ſinners to wait for pardon and reconciliation, till they have been ſeverely puniſhed? This is very diſcouraging doctrine; and, bleſſed be GOD, it is abſolutely without foundation. The goſpel ſays, To day, even to day, ſinners, if ye will hear his voice, ye ſhall enter into reſt. You need not tarry till you have been ſeverely chaſtiſed; but this inſtant believe in the LORD JESUS, and you ſhall be ſaved. The LORD JESUS has been wounded and bruiſed in your ſtead. He has received all the puniſhment which you have deſerved. Yea, as a ranſomer, he has paid double, as a victim, he has ſuffered double *, for all your ſins.——Conſidering theſe things, I am ſtill diſpoſed to abide by Aſpaſio's plain and obvious interpretation; not to go out of my way, in queſt of the pricking brier and grieving thorn, when I meet with roſes and lilies in the common road.

In the LORD have I righteouſneſs. This will not ſatisfy our critic. It muſt be through the LORD.——What piddling criticiſm is this, even in caſe it was true, and anſwered ſome ſpecious end! But it is by no means true. Every body knows, that the prefix ב ſignifies in; and every body but Mr Weſley would bluſh to aſſert the contrary. Neither does it anſwer any valuable end, but the reverſe. It degrades the exalted ſenſe, and impoveriſhes the rich bleſſing. To have righteouſneſs in the LORD, is abundantly more expreſſive of glorious grace, than barely to have righteouſneſs through the LORD. Mordecai had riches and honours through Ahaſuerus, and his royal favour; Eſther had riches and honours in Ahaſuerus, as her royal huſband; he by being a courtier, ſhe by being a conſort to the moſt magnificent monarch in the world.

If Mr Weſley piddled in the foregoing, he flaſhes in the following paſſage. He aſſures us that צדקה means ſpotleſs holineſs. This is really a bold ſtroke in criticiſm. But, like many other bold enterpriſes, it is likely to prove, not a birth, but an abortion.——צדקה ſpotleſs! You might as well have rendered it toothleſs. It has no more to do with the idea of ſpotleſs, than it has to do with the idea of an ivory tooth, or a poliſhed toothpick. Literally tranſlated, it ſignifies ages, and may denote the perpetuity of this righteouſneſs, and of its beneficial effects. It was from the beginning, it is at this day, and it will be even unto the end, mighty to ſave. It is the one refuge and hope of ſinners, in every age of the world, and under every diſpenſation of religion. Through all the changes of time it has been, and thro' the unchangeable eternity it will be their chief joy, and their crown of rejoicing.

What righteouſneſs ſhall give us peace at the laſt day, inherent or imputed? To this queſtion Aſpaſio has replied, in a very explicit manner, by preſenting us with a pertinent extract from Biſhop Hall, and by commenting upon a moſt important prophecy of Iſaiah, in both which, all human righteouſneſs is ſet aſide, and our peace is derived entirely from the glorious SHILOH †; from him, who made peace by the blood of his croſs, and whoſe name is THE PRINCE OF PEACE; having this heavenly bleſſing, and the right of conferring it, as the peculiar privilege, or unſhared prerogative of his crown.

Mr Weſley is pleaſed to deny this doctrine, and to aſſociate

* Iſ. xl. 2.

† Gen. xlix. 10. שילה Schilo, Nomen Meſſiæ peculiare, tranquillatorem deſignans. That is, the maker of peace, and the author of tranquillity, for rebellious and wretched men.

associate with the Papists *, in ascribing our peace (and if our peace, then our salvation) "partly to inherent, partly to imputed righteousness." But does our church so? Hear her own words. "We do not "presume to come to this thy table, O merciful LORD, "trusting in our own righteousnesses;" much less then will she dare to approach his judgment-seat, trusting in any such thing.—Does the apostle Paul do so? Hear his own protestation, That I may be found in CHRIST, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law; which consists of my personal obedience, and inherent holiness: but having this, as the source of my peace, and the strength of my salvation, the righteousness which is of GOD by faith; even that inconceiveably-precious righteousness, which GOD my SAVIOUR wrought, and which a sinner by faith receives.—Did Mr Wesley himself always do so? Let those lines bear witness; of which neither the poet nor the divine need be ashamed.

My righteous servant, and my SON,
Shall each believing sinner clear;
And all who stoop t' abjure their own,
Shall in his righteousness appear.

Will that righteousness give you peace, which you abjure? Or, is it pious, is it prudent, is it consistent, to trust in a righteousness, which you absolutely renounce? That which you abjure (a stronger word could not be used) you consider, not barely as despicable, but as utterly abominable. Whereas, that which gives you peace at the awful tribunal, must not only be excellent, but incomparably excellent and valuable.—See, my friend, how thine own mouth condemneth thee, and not I: yea, thine own lips testify against thee †. O! that you may return to your first sentiments, and to your first love ‡! and no longer expose yourself and your doctrine, to be a by-word among the people. If you persist in such palpable inconsistencies, who can forbear taking up that taunting proverb, A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways?

* The doctrine of the Papists, avowed by a writer of their own, is; "Our confidence and hope in the day of judgment dependeth, "not only upon our apprehension of CHRIST's merits by faith, "but also upon our conformity to CHRIST, in charity and good "works." The reader may see this presumption rebuked, and this error refuted, in Dr FULK's annotations on the Rhemish Testament. 1 John iv. 17.

† Job xv. 6.

‡ That Mr Wesley may not be ashamed to retract a mistaken sentiment, I will break the ice, and lead the way. If it be shameful to renounce error, and sacrifice all to truth, I do very willingly take this shame to myself.—In a copy of verses, which I formerly wrote, sacred to the memory of a generous benefactor, I remember the following lines.

Our wants reliev'd by thy indulgent care,
Shall give thee courage at the dreadful bar,
And stud the crown thou shalt for ever wear.

These lines, in whatever hands they are lodged, and whatever else, of a like kind, may have dropt from my pen, I now publicly disclaim. They are the very reverse of my present belief. In which I hope to persevere, so long as I have any being.

Far be it from me to suppose, that any work of mine should, in order to create my peace, or cherish my confidence, be coupled with CHRIST's most holy act. I speak the words of our church, and I speak the sense of the prophet. I will trust, and not be afraid. Wherefore? Because I am inherently holy? Rather, because GOD is my salvation. GOD manifest in the flesh, has finished my transgression, and made an end of my sin. And in this most magnificently gracious work will I rejoice.——I speak agreeably to the declaration of the HOLY GHOST. Fear not, for thou shalt not be ashamed, neither shalt thou be confounded. Why? because thy inherent goodness shall prevent thy confusion? No; but on a footing, infinitely more solid; for a reason, infinitely more satisfactory. Because thy MAKER is thy husband. The consequence of which is, all thy debts and deficiencies are upon him; all his consummate righteousness is upon thee.

But stop. A passage from St John is introduced, to support this opinion. "CHRIST died for us, and lives "in us, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment." ——That CHRIST died for us, and lives in us, I readily acknowledge. But where do you find any of the apostles, from these premises, drawing your conclusion? St John, whom you quote, has no such logic. His inference is deduced from a very different topic. You give us a fragment of the apostle's words; why don't you exhibit the golden bowl complete? We shall then quickly perceive, that it contains a more sweet and salutary draught, than you have provided for our refreshment.

Εν τουτω τετελειωται η αγαπη μεθ' ημων, ινα παρρησιαν εχωμεν εν τη ημερα της κρισεως.
Which we translate, Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment *. As you are fond of criticising upon the original scriptures, here you might have done it justly and honourably. Here you might have altered and reformed our translation; while every capable judge would have owned your service to be seasonable and important. The true sense of μεθ' ημων, is with us, or with regard to us. That is, GOD's love celebrated with inimitable † energy and beauty in the preceding verse; GOD's love towards us is herein made perfect; this is its grand and crowning effect, that we should have, not a bare hope, but an unappalled boldness at the day of judgment.

As though he had said, GOD, having reconciled us to himself, by the blood of his SON;—having renewed us after his own image, by his blessed SPIRIT, testifying of CHRIST in our hearts;——having carried us through all the dangers of life, and raised our bodies from the dust of death; he crowns and consummates all these most indulgent acts of his grace, by giving us an undaunted and triumphant confidence, at the day of universal audit.——According to this interpretation, your own text is against your opinion; and refers this joyful assurance, not to our love of GOD, but to his love of us; not to inherent righteousness, but to free grace ‡.

Aspasio thus translates St Peter's words; Who have obtained like precious faith in the righteousness of our GOD and our SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST ‖. Mr Wesley gives us to understand, that this translation is wrong. It should be faith through—and not through the righteousness, but through the mercy of our GOD and SAVIOUR.——He will not allow the Greek preposition εν to signify in; though I can prove it to have been in peaceable possession of this signification, for more than two thousand years. And the substantive δικαιοσυνη must not denote righteousness, though it pleads, as a warrant for this weighty sense, the incontestable authority of St Paul. Give me leave to tell you, Sir, that I can produce a multitude of proofs, to overthrow your first puny alteration; but produce, if you can, a single passage from the whole New

* 1 John iv. 17.

† Ο Θεος αγαπη εστι, God is love. This I call inimitable. Nothing can be more simple, yet nothing is more sublime. For my part, I know not how to attempt an illustration of the noble sentiment. It strikes the mind, as light strikes the eye. No art can make this more bright; and no paraphrase can make that more delicate, more majestic, more affecting.——How flat some of the finest things said by the ancient philosophers; how flat they read, when compared with this animated stroke of divine eloquence, the reader, if he pleases may see in CONTEMPLATIONS ON THE STARRY HEAVENS.

‡ Should it be said, in case you thus interpret the first part of the text, how will it connect with what follows? Perfectly well. —And none need wonder, that we shall appear with such boldness at his coming; since they cannot but observe, that as he is, so are we in this world. We are actuated by his SPIRIT; we resemble him in all our conversation; and hence it is evident, that we are one with him.

‖ 2 Pet. i. 1. Τοις ισοτιμον ημιν λαχουσι πιστιν εν δικαιοσυνη του Θεου ημων και σωτηρος ημων Ιησου Χριστου.

Testament,

Teſtament *, to uphold your laſt daring innovation.

Here I cannot but obſerve, you abandon your favourite commentator Bengelius; of whoſe merit and excellence you ſpeak ſo highly and ſo juſtly. He ſays, in his notes upon the place, The righteouſneſs of GOD our SAVIOUR, is the righteouſneſs of CHRIST; which faith apprehends, and which is oppoſed to a man's own righteouſneſs.——What is more ſurpriſing, you depart from your own comment; nay, you expreſsly contradict your own comment. To edify the readers of your expoſition, you inform and aſſure them, that this phraſe ſignifies "both the active and paſſive righte-" ouſneſs" of CHRIST. To gainſay what Aſpaſio has advanced, you more than inſinuate, that it ſignifies no ſuch thing, but only "the mercy of our LORD."—— Nay, to corroborate the true ſenſe, and determine the words invariably to the active and paſſive righteouſneſs of CHRIST, you add, "It is this alone, by which the "juſtice of GOD is ſatisfied." If then Mr Weſley would reconcile what he writes in his expoſitory notes, with what he writes in his animadverſions on Aſpaſio, he muſt maintain, that by the mercy of GOD alone, his juſtice is ſatisfied.

I will not exclaim, on this occaſion, as you have too freely and not very genteelly done, in your letter to Mr Law, "Exquiſite nonſenſe †!" But this I may venture to ſay, Contradiction, didſt thou ever know ſo truſty a friend, or ſo faithful a devotee? Many people are ready enough to contradict others. But it ſeems all one to this gentleman, whether it be another or himſelf, ſo he may but contradict.

Permit me, for a moment, ſeriouſly to expoſtulate the caſe. Why ſhould you be ſo averſe to the righteouſneſs of our GOD and SAVIOUR? Why ſhould you ranſack all the ſtores of your learning and knowledge; nay, deſcend to unwarrantable criticiſms, and quite unworthy your ſuperior abilities, in order to exclude this moſt glorious truth from the Bible? in order to exterminate this moſt precious privilege from the church? Attempt, if you think proper, to pluck the ſun from the firmament, to hide the light from our eyes, and withdraw the air from our lungs. But do not attempt to rob us of what is far more valuable than all theſe bleſſings, by depriving us of this ineſtimable treaſure, the righteouſneſs of CHRIST.——Which, being a righteouſneſs immaculate, all-ſurpaſſing, divine, ſwallows up and annihilates our guilt; as the immenſe waves of the ocean would ſwallow up and annihilate the drop of ink, that now hangs on the point of my pen.——Which, being a righteouſneſs immaculate, all-ſurpaſſing, divine, will preſent us before our GOD, and before his angels, without ſpot and blemiſh; in robes more beautiful than the colours of that reſplendent bow, which is bended on the ſkirts of yonder cloud.

Therein is revealed the righteouſneſs of GOD;—"GOD's "method of juſtifying ſinners." See this interpretation examined, and this objection anſwered before.

We eſtabliſh the law, as we expect no ſalvation, without a perfect conformity to it ‡,—namely, by CHRIST. "Is not this a mere quibble?" ſays Mr Weſley.—Quite the reverſe. It is no low conceit, but an exceeding ſerious and momentous truth. It is no play upon the ſound of words, but expreſſes a doctrine of great ſolidity, and of the laſt importance. Tell me, ye that cavil at this method of eſtabliſhing the law, by what other expedient you propoſe to effect it?—By your paſt conduct? That, you muſt acknowledge, has been more or leſs a violation of the law.——By the preſent obedience? That, you cannot deny, falls ſhort of the ſublime requirements of the law.—By your future behaviour? Well, I will ſuppoſe, that, in ſome future period, you reach the very ſummit of perfection. Still the law will have much to complain of, and will lay much to your charge. You have not magnified it by a holy nature. You have not preſented it with the conſummate righteouſneſs of your whole heart, and your whole converſation. You have not begun, from the firſt moment of your exiſtence, and perſevered in this perfect conformity, to the laſt breath you drew. In this caſe, either the law muſt recede from its moſt righteous demands, and the immutable GOD muſt compromiſe matters with his creatures, or elſe you can never enter into life. Unleſs you renounce all ſuch impotent attempts, and arrogant conceits; talk no more of "prac-" tiſing it, in its full extent," but betake yourſelf to CHRIST, who is the end of the law *, for accompliſhing that righteouſneſs, which its precepts demand, but which the frailty of man cannot perform.

Thus we eſtabliſh the law, as the conſummate ſtandard of righteouſneſs; as the original condition of life; and as that moſt venerable ſyſtem, with which, as well as with its divine Author, there is no variableneſs or ſhadow of changing.——And does this method of ſecuring the dignity of the law, hinder or diſcourage a dutiful obſervance of its commands? If not, your objection derived from that well-known text, Without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the LORD, is ——telum imbelle ſine ictu.

If this be the moſt rational, and the moſt ſure way of producing the love of GOD, which is the very eſſence of true holineſs, then your objection recoils, and falls upon the head of your own cauſe.——Can there be a more powerful, a more endearing motive to love the LORD my GOD, than a perſuaſion of his ineffable love to me, in giving his dear SON, ſo to fulfil, ſo to ſatisfy the law on my behalf, that I am thereby delivered from all my offences; am veſted with a perfect righteouſneſs; and on the foot of juſtice, as well as mercy, ſtand entitled to eternal life?

"Though I believe, that CHRIST hath lived "and died for me, yet I would ſpeak very tenderly "and ſparingly of the former."——How widely then does your practice differ from the apoſtle's? We believe, and therefore have ſpoken, confidently and inceſſantly, in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon. No, ſays Mr Weſley, "We believe, and therefore we ſpeak tenderly and "ſparingly,"——If you believe, that CHRIST has lived for you, and fulfilled all righteouſneſs in your

* The righteouſneſs of GOD, the righteouſneſs of GOD our SAVIOUR, never denotes, in all the apoſtolical writings, the attribute of mercy. If it denotes, and Mr Weſley can make it appear, I will confeſs myſelf miſtaken, and thank him for correcting my error.

† Mr Weſley, in the abridgment of his letter to Mr Law, inſerted in the Preſervative from unſettled notions, has expunged this and ſome other indecently-harſh expreſſions. In ſo doing, he has done well. Since the contemptuous and the reproachful, even when really deſerved, can have no tendency to confirm our argument, but to provoke reſentment. They are not the moſt promiſing means of joining us together, in the ſame mind and the ſame judgment; but rather the ſure way, to widen the breach, and increaſe animoſity.

‡ The reader is deſired to peruſe Aſpaſio's own words, above, page 268. There his ſentiments are more fully explained; but the paſſage is not tranſcribed, on purpoſe to avoid increaſing the ſize of this piece; which already ſwells to a larger bulk than the writer propoſed.

* Rom. x. 8. CHRISTUS, ſaith Bengelius, eſt τέλος νόμου εἰς δικαιοσύνην παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι, juſtitiam et vitam, quam lex oſtendit, ſed dare nequit, tribuens. CHRIST is the end of the law. How? By bringing in that righteouſneſs, and giving that life, which the law ſhews, and ſhews the want of, but neither itſelf gives, nor can enable us to acquire.

CHRISTUS, ſaith St Auguſtine, eſt legis finis, interficiens et perficiens. The ceremonial law he has ſlain, and taken out of the way. The moral law he has fulfilled for us, and we in him. Inaſmuch as, through faith in his name, his obedience becometh ours.

ſtead,

ſtead, ſurely you ſhould give him the honour of this wonderful loving-kindneſs, and both preach, and talk, and ſing of his goodneſs. It ſhould be as a fire ſhut up in your bones; and you ſhould ſpeak, that yourſelf may be refreſhed, and you LORD may be glorified.

But you "fear dreadful conſequences." What? where the divine holineſs fears none? and the divine preſcience ſees none? Are you then more deep-ſighted, to diſcern theſe diſtant evils, than omniſcience?—Methinks, I would not have ſpoken thus, unleſs I had been wiſer than the SPIRIT of inſpiration.——Do you not, by cheriſhing and avowing ſuch apprehenſions, find fault with the glorious goſpel, in which this righteouſneſs is revealed? revealed, as its moſt eminent article, and moſt diſtinguiſhing peculiarity?—A doctrine taught, and a bleſſing granted, and both from heaven! yet not fit to be diſplayed, inculcated, and inſiſted on? What a contemptible idea muſt this give of our holy religion, and of our holy revelation, to an inquiring infidel?

"I would never ſpeak of them (the active and paſ-"ſive righteouſneſs of CHRIST) ſeparately."—This inſinuates, what Aſpaſio diſavows; and what you cannot hint, without apparent injuſtice to his ſentiments.—"I would ſpeak of it (the former) as ſparingly as do "the ſcriptures."—Here you appeal to thoſe writings, which muſt either condemn your conduct, or their own propriety. At your leiſure conſider the caſe, and you will find the dilemma unavoidable.—In the mean time, be ſo candid as to read a ſhort note, inſerted in Theron and Aſpaſio, above, page 273. where you may ſee, that the ſcriptures are far from ſpeaking ſparingly on this point. It is their favourite and fundamental topic. It runs through them, as a golden woof through a warp of ſilver; or as the vital blood through the animal ſtructure.——And whatever you, Sir, may be inclined to do, I hope, no lover of CHRIST will be perſuaded to ſecrete this invaluable truth of the goſpel. Shall ſuch a truth ſkulk in a corner, or ſpeak only in a whiſper? No; let us proclaim it upon the houſe-tops; and wiſh, that the joyful ſound may reach the very ends of the earth.

The gift of righteouſneſs muſt ſignify a righteouſneſs not their own.——Aſpaſio's expreſſion is, not originally their own. Originally he ſaid, with a view of hinting, that, in ſome other ſenſe, it was and is their own; their own, by way of imputation, though not by way of operation. This word, in order to make the ſentence appear abſurd, Mr Weſley drops. But whether ſuch a practice be free from guile, or what the apoſtle calls cunning craftineſs, let the impartial reader judge.

Aſpaſio's interpretation of the phraſe, authenticated by the language of ſcripture, Mr Weſley ſets aſide; and introduces another, whoſe only recommendation to the public is, "I come from Mr Weſley's pen."—Do you ſo? then we will allow you all proper regard. But becauſe you come from Mr Weſley's pen, muſt you therefore diſplace propriety, and ſupplant truth? make an inſpired writer argue incorrectly, nay, jar with himſelf? This is rather too much for you to aſſume, even though you came recommended by a greater name.

"The gift of righteouſneſs, ſignifies the righteouſ-"neſs or holineſs which GOD gives to and works in "them." Let us obſerve the apoſtle's aim, and the proceſs of his reaſoning.—His aim is to illuſtrate the manner of our juſtification. For this purpoſe, he forms a contraſt between Adam's tranſgreſſion, and CHRIST's obedience. Adam's tranſgreſſion, which he himſelf committed, ruins all that ſpring from him. This is the leading propoſition. Now, if the ſacred diſputant knows how to reaſon accurately, or to draw a concluſion juſtly, the concluſion muſt be to this effect; ſo likewiſe CHRIST's obedience which he himſelf performed, recovers all who believe in him. Through Adam's diſobedience, without the conſideration of their own miſdoings, the former are made ſinners; through CHRIST's obedience, without the conſideration of their own good qualities, the latter are made righteous.—Though I am far, very far from diſeſteeming the holineſs wrought in us, yet what place has it here? In the article of juſtification it is utterly excluded. It has no ſhare in the accompliſhment of that great work; and every attentive reader will ſee, that it enters not into the apoſtle's preſent argumentation.—Beſides, if the gift of righteouſneſs ſignifies the holineſs wrought in us, then we ſhall reign in life, by means of a perſonal, not of an imputed righteouſneſs, by means of an imperfect, not of a complete obedience.—Then all the people of GOD will be juſtified, not by the obedience of ONE, but each by his own, ſeverally and diſtinctly. Which is contrary, not only to a ſingle, but to many expreſs paſſages of this very chapter.

I ſaid, "every attentive reader will ſee."——Some perhaps may ſay within themſelves, Is not this ſpoken in Mr Weſley's manner? the looſe preſumptive way of arguing, which you blame in him?—To which it is anſwered, I am far from reſting my point upon this preſumptive proof: it is not the pillar which ſupports my cauſe; but only a feſtoon which adorns my pillar.—However, was it accompanied with no proofs ſatisfactory to others; it muſt to Mr Weſley, whom I ſuppoſe one of the attentive readers, have the force of demonſtration. Hear his own words, in his comment on this very portion of ſcripture. "As the ſin of Adam, "without the ſins which we afterwards committed, "brought us death: ſo the righteouſneſs of CHRIST, "without the good works which we afterwards per-"form, brings us life*."—It is a righteouſneſs without the good works which we afterwards perform: therefore it is a righteouſneſs, not originally our own, but another's. It is not that which GOD works in us, but prior to it, and independent on it. If Aſpaſio had ſuborned an evidence, and put words into his mouth, he could not have deviſed a more direct and full confirmation of his doctrine, than this volunteer witneſs depoſeth.——I thank you, Sir, for giving me ſo valuable an explanation of the gift of righteouſneſs, and its bleſſed effects. I thank you likewiſe for furniſhing Aſpaſio with ſo inconteſtable a vindication againſt the objections of the author of The Preſervative.

The obedience of ONE, ſo highly extolled by the apoſtle, is CHRIST's actual performance of the whole law.——This you deny. I wiſh you had favoured me with your reaſons for this denial; but my wiſhes of this kind are conſtantly diſappointed. However, I will follow our LORD's direction, and do unto others, even as I would they ſhould do unto me. I will give you a reaſon for my own or Aſpaſio's interpretation.——The apoſtle is treating of Adam's actual breach of the law. If ſo, the proper antitheſis muſt be CHRIST's actual performance of the law.——In the following verſes he explains himſelf. Let them be the comment on our text, and the gift of righteouſneſs means, the righteouſneſs of ONE; the obedience of ONE. This righteouſneſs we have in JESUS CHRIST our LORD; all other is inherent in ourſelves. Juſtification by this righteouſneſs, is alone conſiſtent with free grace; juſtification by any other, is (inconſiſtent with it, is) ſubverſive of it.

Farther, as you are a critic in the Greek, you need not be informed, that St Paul uſes three ſeveral words, words, δικαίωμα, δικαίωσις, δικαίωσιν, ὑπακοη. Now can you shew any passage, in which all these words are used to signify sufferings or death? Nay, can you shew me any single passage, in which any one of them occurs in this signification? If you cannot, what shadow of authority have you, for putting this construction upon the words, in the present case? what shadow of authority for saying, with that unlimited confidence, CHRIST's "dying for man, is certainly the chief part, if not the whole which is meant by that expression *?"—If you attend to the tenor of the apostle's argument, or inquire into the import of his language, perhaps you will see cause, not only to alter, but even to reverse, this your positive assertion.

* Here Mr Weſley ſpeaks in perfect agreement with St Chryſoſtom; Ο Χριστος τοις εξ αυτου, καθοτι και δικαιοπραγησαι, εσχον παρεχων την δικαιοσυνην.

Let me subjoin an extract from St Chrysostom, suited to this and the preceding paragraph; and worthy of our serious consideration. From which it will appear, that Aspasio is by no means singular in his sentiments, but speaks the doctrine of the ancient church. Τυπος ην Ιησου Χριστου ο Αδαμ· πως τυπος, φησιν; ὁτι ωσπερ εκεινος τοις εξ αυτου, καιτοι μηδεπω φαγοντας απο του ξυλου, γεγονε αιτιος θανατου δια την βρωσιν εισαχθεις εις ὁ Χριστος τοις εξ αυτου, καιτοιγε δικαιοπραγησασι, γεγονε προξενος δικαιοσυνης· την δια του σταυρου φησιν ημιν εχαρισατο· διο τελος αυτου και καλουσι ΕΝΟΣ ἑνεκεν, και στενοχωρει τελος εις μεσον φερει λεγων, Ωσπερ δι' ΕΝΟΣ ανθρωπου η αμαρτια εις τον κοσμον εισηλθε, και δια της του ΕΝΟΣ παραπτωματος οι πολλοι απεθανον· και, Ουχ ως δι' ΕΝΟΣ αμαρτησαντος, το δωρημα· και, Το κριμα εξ ΕΝΟΣ εις κατακριμα· και παλιν, Ει γαρ τω του ΕΝΟΣ παραπτωματι ὁ θανατος εβασιλευσε δια του ενος· και, Αρα ουν ως δι' ΕΝΟΣ παραπτωματος και εις παντας ανθρωπους το ΕΝΟΣ ανθρωπου αμαρτωλους κατεσταθησαν οι πολλοι· και ΕΝΟΣ, η ὁλη λεγει σπερματος, πως; ἑνος καλεσθωσαι τον Χριστον; δυναιτο αν τις λεγειν πως, ἑνος παρακουσαντος τον Αδαμ, πολλους αμαρτωλους κατεστησεν ὁ θεος.

That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us. That is, by our representative, and in our nature.——— "Amazing!" cries Mr Wesley. But why amazing? Is not this the common import of the most common actions? Do not you and I make laws in and by our representatives in parliament? May not every debtor, when his surety has given full satisfaction to the creditor, say, I have satisfied, I have paid, in my bondsman?

* The obedience of one, St Chrysostom expounds by, ἑνος καλεσθωσαι. Would Mr Wesley venture to affirm, that dying well, not living well, is certainly the chief thing signified in καλοποιησαντος? A pretty daring criticism this! Does not the word rather signify, a course of well-doing; terminated (if you please) in, not constituted by, a correspondent death?

† προξενος, an expressive word; it seems to denote such a procuring of righteousness for sinners, as corresponds with the provision made, by some hospitable householder, for the strangers who are come to be his guests. In which they bear no part, either of the expence, or of the trouble! προξενος και τελος. Hujus rei fuit tibi auctor; hanc rem tibi comparo. Steph. Thesaur. in voc.

‡ Chrysost. tom. III. page 71. 72. Edit. Savil. "Adam is a "type of CHRIST. How? In this respect; as the former was "the cause of death to all his descendents, though they did not "(like him) eat of the forbidden fruit; so CHRIST is the cause "(προξενος) author, procurer of righteousness to all his seed, tho' "they have not (like him) been personally obedient; even of that "righteousness, which he finished for us on the cross. For this "reason,—to ascertain and appropriate the honour of this righteousness to CHRIST; as a work, not wrought by us, nor wrought in us, but completed for us on the cursed tree.—He insists and dwells upon that very observable circumstance, One. He iterates and reiterates the emphatical word ONE. He introduces it again and again, and can hardly prevail upon himself to discontinue the repetition. As by one man sin entered into the world——— Through the offence of one many be dead—Not as it was by one that sinned, so is the free gift——The judgment was by one to condemnation—By one man's offence death reigned by one——— "As by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men unto "condemnation—As by the disobedience of one many were "made sinners.—Thus does the apostle again and again introduce the word ONE, and can hardly prevail on himself to discontinue the repetition. That if a Jew should ask, How can "the world be saved by the well-doing of one, or by the obedience "of CHRIST? You may be able to reply on his own principles, "How could the world be condemned by the evil-doing of one, "or by the disobedience of Adam?"

To invalidate this interpretation, you alledge, that the apostle "is not speaking here of the cause of our "justification, but the fruits of it. Among all the excellent things, which, in your studies and in your travels, you have learned; have you never learned, that between saying and proving there is a wide difference? Never did I meet with a person, who seemed so totally ignorant of this very obvious truth.—Well; we must take your word, without proof; but I hope, not without examination. "The apostle is speaking of the fruit." Is then the fulfilling of the law, the fruit of justification? This is the first time, I apprehend, that any such thing was deliberately affirmed. It is the cause, the adequate, the immediate, and indeed the only proper cause of justification. But the fruits are peace of conscience, and love of GOD; the spirit of adoption, and the hope of glory.

Shew me, Sir, where δικαιωμα, in conjunction with του νομου, signifies the fruits of justification; and not those demands of the law, which must necessarily be satisfied before justification can take place.——Especially, when the phrase is corroborated by that other strong expression, πληρωθη. An expression used by our LORD concerning himself, and the design of his coming into the world. Applicable to him alone, who is the end of the law for righteousness; and descriptive of that obedience, by which alone the law is magnified.

This sense, says Aspasio, agrees with the tenor of the apostle's arguing. "Not here;" replies Mr Wesley.——— Let us then consider the aim, and trace the progress of the apostle's reasoning. He is clearing up and confirming that great privilege of the gospel, There is no condemnation to them that are in JESUS CHRIST. This, you will allow, is not the fruit of justification, but justification itself. As this wants no argument to confirm it, let us proceed in our attention to the sacred writer. There is no condemnation to those who are true believers in JESUS CHRIST; who, in consequence of this belief, walk not after the flesh, but after the SPIRIT.

Perhaps, some man will say, How can this be? since even true believers fall short. Nay, they offend, and therefore must be liable to the curse.——For this reason, they are delivered from condemnation; because the law of the SPIRIT of life in CHRIST JESUS, that new dispensation, introduced in the room of the old law, promises the privilege of pardon, and the gift of the SPIRIT; in which things the true life and real happiness of mankind consist: promises both freely, without any works, purely on account of the righteousness which is in CHRIST JESUS. And hereby this new, gracious, blessed dispensation, hath made me free from the law; which convinced me of sin; condemned me for sin; and bound me over unto death.

These are glad tidings, doubtless; but are they not attended with two inconveniences? Does not this procedure deprive the law of its due honour, and screen the sinner from his deserved punishment?—By no means. For that which was an absolute impossibility, on account of the strictness of the law, and the weakness of human nature, GOD, to whom nothing is impossible, has most wonderfully accomplished; by sending his own SON, in the likeness of sinful flesh; to live among sinners; to come under their obligations, and perform the obedience demanded from them; by sending him also to be a sacrifice for sin; to be charged with its guilt, and undergo its punishment. By this grand expedient, he has provided for the honour and perfect accomplishment of the law. He has also condemned and punished sin, with the utmost severity: And

And both these in the flesh; in that very nature which was guilty, disabled, ruined.

Should you farther ask, Wherefore is all this? To lay the surest foundation, or make the most complete provision for our justification. That the righteousness of the law, both its righteous sentence and its righteous precepts, whatever either of suffering or of obedience it required from transgressors, being fulfilled in CHRIST, might be fulfilled in us; as it was all done in our name; and as he and we are one; one in civil estimation, for he is our Representative; one in legal estimation, for he is our Surety; one in social estimation, for he is our Bridegroom. For which cause, his righteous acts are ours, and his atoning death is ours.

There was a time, when you embraced these sentiments; when you had such views of things; when such language came out of your mouth, which even now stands upon record, under your own hand. See your "Principles of a Methodist." If you have forgotten them, permit me to remind you of them. "CHRIST," you say, "is now the righteousness of all them that "truly believe in him. He for them paid the ransom "by his death; he for them fulfilled the law in his life. "So that now, in him and by him, every believer may "be called a fulfiller of the law."——Since you pronounce my sense of the apostle's words unnatural, I adopt, I espouse yours *; and so much the more readily, as it will puzzle sagacity itself, to discern a difference between them.

"I totally deny the criticism on δικαιοσυνη and δικαιωμα." Then be so good as to suggest a better. Or, if this should be somewhat difficult, at least favour us with a reason for this your total denial. Not a word of either. Strange! that a man of ordinary discernment, should offer to obtrude upon the public such a multitude of naked, unsupported, magisterial assertions! should ever be able to persuade himself, that a positive air will pass for demonstration, or supply the place of argument! If this be to demonstrate, if this be to confute, the idiot is as capable of both as the philosopher.——May I not cry out, in your own strain? O how deep an aversion to the imputed righteousness of CHRIST does this Arminian scheme discover! since it will make a man gainsay, when he knows not why, or wherefore.

St Paul declares, that the Gentiles who followed not after righteousness, had attained unto righteousness. Upon which Aspasio observes, that the righteousness here mentioned, could not be any personal righteousness. To which Mr Wesley replies, "It was." And to render his reply quite irresistible, a perfect thunderbolt in argumentation; he adds, "Certainly it was."——How, Sir! did they attain personal righteousness without seeking after it! Are you becoming a Calvinist? you that had rather be an Atheist? Could the zealot of Geneva go greater lengths?—Aspasio will not deny, that these Gentiles were sanctified, as well as justified; but he will venture to affirm, that no degree of sanctification can make the persons righteous, who are once become sinners.—— CHRIST, like Elijah, first casts his mantle over them; and then, like Elisha, they forsake all and follow him.

The righteousness which the Gentiles attained, could not be a personal righteousness. "Certainly it was."——Then it was the righteousness of the law; whereas, the righteousness which they attained, is expressly said to be the righteousness of faith.——Then it was a righteousness consisting of good works and godly tempers. Whereas, their righteousness consisted in believing according to the apostle's own explanation. With the heart man believeth unto righteousness. Then it was the righteousness of man. Personal righteousness and implanted holiness pass, in the scriptures, under that denomination. Whereas, these Gentiles submitted themselves to the righteousness of GOD.——If what these Gentiles attained had been a personal righteousness, it would have been no stumbling-block to the Jews. Even they would have fallen in with such a system of religion, as should ascribe righteousness and salvation to their own duties and their own deeds.

You say, "It was implanted, as well as imputed." Here then, you acknowledge an imputed righteousness. You yourself use the phrase. You affirm it to be, if not the whole, part, at least, of the apostle's doctrine. I wish you had been of this mind when you began your letter. Then you would not have conjured me, by all that is venerable and important, to discontinue an expression, which conveys—your own—the apostle's meaning—and the meaning of the HOLY GHOST.

You join imputed and implanted righteousness. So, in case this address to yourself should pass through the printer's hand, would I join a handsome type and pertinent reasoning. Yet, I apprehend, when you sit down to examine the essay, you will regard only the latter.—What you associate, you associate properly. The first is the trunk, the last is one of the branches which spring from it; but the apostle seems, in the place before us, to be considering the first only. The last he reserves for some future occasion.——He is speaking of the righteousness, by which we are saved; and that is solely the imputed righteousness of CHRIST.—He is speaking of the righteousness, which was an eye-sore and an offence to the self-conceited Jews; and this was only the imputed righteousness of CHRIST.—He is speaking of a righteousness, contradistinguished to that righteousness which is described by he that doth these things; and this can be nothing else, but the imputed righteousness of CHRIST.——Therefore, though love of GOD, and conformity to his image; though the pure heart and the devout affection; are the inseparable concomitants, or rather the genuine produce of imputed righteousness; yet here they come not under consideration. To force them into this passage, is to make them appear out of due season. Such an exposition may bespeak a zealous officiousness, not a distinguishing judgment; because it confounds the order of the apostle's plan; it defeats the design of his argument, if it does not introduce self-contradiction into his arguing.

This righteousness came upon the Gentiles, as the former and latter rain upon the earth. To them was fulfilled the word spoken by the prophet Isaiah; Let the skies pour down righteousness. As the earth engendereth not the rain; has not the least influence in forming, or the least agency in procuring the refreshing showers; but only receiveth them, as the mere gift of Providence; so these Gentiles had not the least influence in effecting, nor the least agency in procuring this righteousness.—When the good news came into their territories, they were totally destitute of it; they were utterly unconcerned about it; they knew nothing at all concerning it. But seeing it revealed in the gospel; seeing it displayed, as the work of GOD, and hearing it offered, as the gift of GOD, they were not disobedient to the heavenly invitation. They believed the report, they accepted the blessing, and relied upon it for life and salvation.——Then, as the rain coming down and the snow from heaven, returneth not thither again, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud; that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: so, this inestimable truth being admitted into the soul, CHRIST, and his righteousness, being received to dwell in the heart *; all the powers

* Should Mr Wesley say, Though I used these words, I never intended them for a comment on this passage.—If you did not, I imagine, the compilers of our homilies, from whom they are taken, did. At least they regarded this text as a foundation, a warrant, a proof of their doctrine.

* Eph. iii. 17.

of

of intellectual nature, or what St Paul call the inner man, are exhilarated, quickened, and fructified. They bud as the roſe, and bloſſom as the lily; they bring forth the fruits of inward love, of outward obedience, of univerſal godlineſs.

For inſtruction in righteouſneſs, in the righteouſneſs of CHRIST. "Was there ever ſuch a comment before?" May I not anſwer, in your own words, Was there ever ſuch a method of confutation uſed before?——But you add, "The plain meaning is, for training up in holineſs "of heart and of life." I wiſh you had thought of introducing this interpretation, by the following ſhort preface, "I take it for granted." You would then have been ſure of ſaying one truth.—But if this does not appear plain to me, as you ſee it did not to Aſpaſio, methinks, you ſhould lend me your ſpectacles, or favour me with your reaſons.

If you pleaſe to examine the paſſage, you will find holineſs of heart and life, comprehended in one of the preceding expreſſions. Προς επανορθωσιν ſignifies, For reſtoration of the man to a ſtate of moral uprightneſs; which muſt include a renovation of the mind, and a reformation of the conduct. After this comes, very properly, and without any tautology, very needfully, and to the exceeding comfort of the ſinner, another moſt valuable property of the ſcriptures. They inſtruct the reader in the Chriſtian righteouſneſs; in the juſtifying righteouſneſs; in that myſterious, but incomparably-precious righteouſneſs, which no other book in the world diſplays, mentions, or ſo much as hints. Yet, without which, we could never ſtand in the judgment, never find acceptance with GOD, nor be admitted into the realms of glory.——If you reject this ſenſe, the apoſtle's character of the ſacred volumes is very defective; it leaves out what is their ſupreme excellence, and moſt diſtinguiſhing peculiarity; what is firſt, and above all other things neceſſary for our fallen race.——A traveller undertakes to give an account of ſome celebrated picture-gallery. He deſcribes the dimenſions of the ſtructure, the form of the windows, the ornaments of the roof; but he quite forgets, at leaſt, he totally omits, the article of the paintings. Is this a maſterly execution of his deſign? is this ſatisfactory to the hearer's curioſity?

He ſhall convince the world of righteouſneſs——"That "I am not a ſinner, but innocent and holy." How flat and jejune is this expoſition! Nothing can be more ſo, to my taſte.——"Innocent and holy!" Is this all the SPIRIT witneſſes, concerning the moſt adorable and infinitely-deſerving SON of GOD? Does this come up to the inconceivable dignity of his perſon, and the immenſely-glorious perfection of his work? Is this ſufficient to comfort the conſcience, ſmitten with a ſenſe of moſt damnable guilt, and alarmed with the terrors of eternal vengeance?

The whole clauſe contains a platform or ſummary of evangelical truth; of that all-important truth, which miniſters are to teach and preach; which the HOLY SPIRIT will own and accompany with his influence; and which is thereby made the power of God to the ſalvation of the hearers.—He ſhall convince the world of ſin, of the guilty and miſerable ſtate, in which all mankind are plunged by nature; and in which every individual perſon continues, ſo long as he is deſtitute of an intereſt in CHRIST, ſo long as he believeth not in HIM who died upon the croſs, and is gone to the FATHER.——Of righteouſneſs; he ſhall reveal the REDEEMER's moſt perfect and magnificent righteouſneſs in their hearts. That righteouſneſs, which ſatisfies the juſtice of the MOST HIGH, and brings complete redemption to tranſgreſſors. Teſtifying, not barely, that he is innocent; ſuch was Adam in Paradiſe: not barely that he is holy; ſuch are angels in heaven. Shall the eternal CREATOR, even after his humiliation unto death, have no higher a teſtimony than a ſet of mere creatures? Yes, verily; the HOLY GHOST will convince the world, that CHRIST's righteouſneſs is the grand and capital bleſſing, which the prophets foretold; and which not only fulfils, but magnifies the law. That it is the righteouſneſs, the very righteouſneſs of the incarnate JEHOVAH; and therefore renders every ſoul, to whom it is imputed, unblameable, unreprovable, complete. Glorious office this! worthy to be the object of the almighty COMFORTER's agency! in performing which, he adminiſters ſtrong conſolation.——Then he ſhall convince of judgment; ſhall condemn and caſt out the prince of this world, introducing a moſt happy change into the heart and life; ſhall begin and carry on the work of grace, ſanctification, obedience; and all, through the joyful knowledge, together with the perſonal appropriation, of this juſtifying righteouſneſs.

That we might be made the righteouſneſs of GOD in him. Which cannot be intrinſically, but muſt be imputatively.—This interpretation Aſpaſio eſtabliſhes, attempts, at leaſt, to eſtabliſh from the tenor of the context, from the apoſtle's antitheſis, and from ſeveral venerable names. But what are all theſe to Mr Weſley? No more than the arrow and the ſpear to leviathan. Nay, not ſo much. That ſcaly monſter eſteemeth iron as ſtraw, and braſs as rotten wood. But Mr Weſley, caſed in his own ſelf-ſufficiency, eſteemeth all the aforementioned evidences as mere nothings. He totally diſregards them. Reaſon, grammar, precedents, are eclipſed by his bare negative, and vaniſh into an inſignificancy, not worthy of notice.

When Aſpaſio, ſupported by ſuch great authority, ſays, This cannot be intrinſically, but muſt be imputatively; Mr Weſley, ſupported by his greater ſelf, replies, "Both the one and the other."——But does he duly advert to the apoſtle's ſubject, or follow the clue of the context? The ſubject is reconciliation to GOD, juſtification before GOD, or that, whatever it be, which is implied in not imputing treſpaſſes. The context intimates, that intrinſic holineſs is not yet taken into conſideration, but is reſerved for the next chapter. There the apoſtle exhorts the Corinthians, not to receive this infinitely-rich grace of free juſtification, in vain; but to ſhew its efficacy, to ſhew its excellency, and recommend it to the unbelieving world, by an unblameable converſation, giving no offence in any thing.

Juſtification then is the only point which the apoſtle, in this paſſage, conſiders; and juſtification is the fruit of imputed righteouſneſs ſolely, not of inherent righteouſneſs in any degree. This we muſt allow, unleſs we prefer the impoſitions of Trent, before the confeſſion of our church. "Faith ſays unto us, It is not I "that take away your ſins, but CHRIST only; and to "him only I ſend you for that purpoſe, forſaking there-"in all your good words, thoughts, and works, and "only putting your truſt in CHRIST." Thus ſpeaks, and thus teaches, our reformed church.—"If any one "ſay, that man is juſtified only by the imputation of "CHRIST's righteouſneſs, or only by the remiſſion of "ſins, without the co-operation of inherent grace and "holy love, let him be accurſed *." Thus dogmatizes, and thus anathematizes, that mother of falſehoods.—Chuſe now your ſide. For my part, I renounce and abjure the proud and iniquitous decree. If you perſiſt in your preſent opinion, there will be an apparent harmony between yourſelf and Rome, but an eſſential difference between yourſelf and Aſpaſio.

"GOD, through him, firſt accounts, and then makes "us righteous." How? Does GOD account us righteous, before he makes us ſo? Then his judgment is not according to truth. Then he reckons us to be righteous,

* Si quis dixerit, hominem juſtificari, vel ſola imputatione juſtitiæ, vel ſola remiſſione peccatorum, excluſa gratia et charitate, anathema ſit. Seſſ. vi. can. 11.

righteous, when we are really otherwise. Is not this the language of your doctrine? this the unavoidable conſequence of your notion? But how harſh, if not horrid, does it ſound in every ear? Is not this abſolutely irreconcileable with our ideas of the ſupreme BEING, and equally incompatible with the dictates of ſcripture? There we are taught that GOD juſtifieth the ungodly.—Mark the words. The ungodly are the objects of the divine juſtification. But can he account the ungodly righteous? Impoſſible!—How then does he act? He firſt makes them righteous *.——After what manner? By imputing to them the righteouſneſs of his dear SON. —Then he pronounces them righteous, and moſt truly. He treats them as righteous, and moſt juſtly. In ſhort, then he abſolves them from guilt; adopts them for his children; and makes them heirs of his eternal kingdom. ——In the grand tranſaction, thus regulated, mercy and truth meet together. All proceeds in the moſt harmonious and beautiful conſiſtency, with the ſeveral attributes of GOD; with his whole revealed will; and with all his righteous law.

"The righteouſneſs which is of GOD by faith, is both "imputed and inherent."——Then it is like interweaving linen and woollen; the motley mixture forbidden to the Iſraelites. Or rather, like weaving a thread of the fineſt gold, with a hempen cord, or a ſpider's web.—— The righteouſneſs which is of GOD, is perfect, conſummate, everlaſting. Not ſo inherent righteouſneſs, your own ſelf being judge, and your own pen being witneſs.——In the righteouſneſs which is of GOD, the apoſtle deſires to be found, before the great and terrible tribunal of the LORD. His own righteouſneſs, or the righteouſneſs which is inherent, he abandons, as abſolutely improper for this great purpoſe; being no more fitted to give him boldneſs at the day of judgment, than dung and filth are fit to introduce a perſon, with credit and dignity, to court.——The righteouſneſs which is of GOD is unknown to reaſon; is revealed from heaven; and without the works of the law. Whereas, the righteouſneſs inherent, is diſcoverable by reaſon; was known to the Heathens; and conſiſts in a conformity of heart and life to the precepts of the law. ——By the latter, we act, we obey, and offer our ſpiritual ſacrifices unto GOD. By the former, we work nothing; we render nothing unto GOD, but only receive of his grace.

They are, therefore, not the ſame, but totally diſtinct. To blend and confound them, betrays unſkilfulneſs in the word of righteouſneſs; derogates from the honour of CHRIST, and tends to cheriſh a legal frame, or, what the ſcripture calls, a ſpirit of bondage.——If you would approve yourſelf a workman, that need not be aſhamed, rightly dividing the word of truth, thus you ſhould ſpeak, and thus you ſhould write; the righteouſneſs of GOD is always imputed. But, being imputed, it produces the righteouſneſs inherent. Being juſtified by the former, ſaved from hell, and rendered meet for heaven; we are ſanctified alſo, and diſpoſed to love the LORD, who has dealt ſo bountifully with us; and if to love, then to worſhip him, to ſerve him, to imitate him.

My faith fixes on both the meritorious life and atoning death of CHRIST. "Here we clearly agree."—— How can you clearly agree, either with Aſpaſio, or with yourſelf, or with common ſenſe?——How with Aſpaſio? Since you queſtion, in direct contrariety to his ſentiments, whether the death of CHRIST be not the whole of what St Paul ſtyles the obedience of ONE.—How with yourſelf? For did you not declare, a little while ago, that fallen man "is not juſtified by "perfect obedience?" Is not CHRIST's meritorious life perfect obedience? If your faith fixes on this perfect obedience, is it not for the purpoſe of juſtification?—How with common ſenſe? Since you ſuppoſe, that the "ſcripture aſcribes the whole of our ſalvation to the "death of CHRIST," ſo entirely aſcribes it to the death of CHRIST, that "there was no need of his fulfilling "the moral law, in order to purchaſe redemption for "us;" what reaſon, or ſhadow of reaſon can you have, to fix upon what we call the merit of his life? If what you ſuppoſe and affirm be true, there was no kind of meritorious efficacy in his life. His life and all his labours were, in this reſpect, a mere ſuperfluity. Salvation might have been obtained, and redemption purchaſed, without their concurrence. Therefore to fix upon them, is to fix upon a phantom, and to reſt your hopes upon a thing of nought.

But ſtay. Am I not repeating the miſconduct, which proved ſo fatal to the famous Earl of Warwick and his forces? At the battle of Gladmore, while the ſcale of victory hung in ſuſpenſe, they ſaw a conſiderable body of troops advancing. Suppoſing them to be enemies, the bowmen made a general diſcharge, and galled them with their arrows. But they ſoon perceived their miſtake; that they had been oppoſing their friends, and annoying their allies. Perhaps, by this time, you are become my ally. You may have ſeen your errors; may have corrected your notions; ſaying, in ratification of both, "We agree."

That is, "I would no longer exclude the meritorious obedience of CHRIST. But this, together with "his atoning death, I look upon as the only cauſe of "my juſtification.——This I call his righteouſneſs; "and this, being imputed to me, becomes my plea, "my portion, and rational foundation for my everlaſting felicity.——This I receive by faith; which I now "look upon, not as conſtituting any part of my recommendation, but only as receptive of the fulneſs laid up "for me in CHRIST.——Though the law of works ſaith, Do and live; I am now made ſenſible, that the "law of faith ſays, Be verily perſuaded, that CHRIST "is ſufficient for thy acceptance, without any doing of "thy own at all.——Since CHRIST is given to me "in the ſacred record, given to me as a ſinner, to be "received without any conditions, I joyfully accept the "gift. I am ſatisfied with his doing and ſuffering; "they are divinely excellent, and infinitely ſufficient; "I neither wiſh for, nor think of any thing more, to "obtain my complete ſalvation.—This way of ſalvation "effectually excludes boaſting; and at the ſame time "produces thoſe deſirable effects,—that love of GOD; "that delight in his perfections; that conformity to his "will; which the law of works requires in vain."

If this is what you mean by "We agree," I would ſeal and ratify the agreement, with the laſt wiſh, and the laſt words of the celebrated Father Paul, Eſto perpetua. Be this the caſe, and you ſhall have not only the right hand of fellowſhip, but the right hand of preeminence.—Only I crave one favour in return. Diſmiſs thoſe injurious inſinuations, which cauſe your readers to ſuſpect, that Aſpaſio conſiders the meritorious life of CHRIST, ſeparate from his atoning death. Whereas, he affirms them to be inſeparable, like the correſpondence of motion between the two eyes. Try if you can make one of your eyes move to the right, while the other wheels off to the left. When you have done this, then, and not till then, may you have ſome reaſonable pretence for theſe your ſuggeſtions.

Alas! quanta de ſpe deſidi! I find my hopes were too ſanguine. We are not come to the deſired coalition. In this very paragraph, you begin to fly off. By talking of imputed righteouſneſs, you tell us, "We are expoſed to an exceeding great hazard; "the

* Agreeably to this, our church ſpeaks: In juſtification, of unjuſt we are made juſt before GOD; and adds, This is the ſtrong rock and foundation of the Chriſtian religion. Hom. of juſtif. part 2.

"the hazard of living and dying without holineſs."—Pray, Sir, have you ſeen a little piece written upon this ſubject by the Rev. Mr Witherſpoon? If you have not, let me recommend it to your peruſal. In caſe you are ignorant of that powerful influence, which juſtification through the righteouſneſs of CHRIST has upon ſanctification and true holineſs, from this treatiſe you may learn ſome valuable knowledge. In caſe the author of this treatiſe is miſtaken, in maintaining the indiſſoluble connection of juſtification with true godlineſs; and the never-failing efficacy of the REDEEMER's righteouſneſs, to bring forth willing obedience in the believer; you may have an opportunity of rectifying his ſentiments. You may give us, in your next publication, a preſervative, not only againſt unſettled, but againſt unſound notions in religion.

Theron, ſpeaking of gems, ſays, when nicely poliſhed, and prodigal of their luſtre, they ſtand candidates for a ſeat on the virtuous fair-one's breaſt.—This diſpleaſes Mr Weſley. Would he then have gems placed on the vitious or laſcivious breaſt? Or would he have them put to no uſe at all, but buried in darkneſs? Did the ALMIGHTY pour ſuch brilliancy upon them, only that they might be conſigned over to obſcurity? Did he not rather array them with luſtre and with charms, that they might diſplay ſomething of his own brightneſs; incite his rational creatures to admire his tranſcendent excellency, and teach his faithful people to apprehend the emphaſis of that animating promiſe, They ſhall be mine, in the day that I make up my jewels.

"I can't reconcile this with St Paul. He ſays, not "with pearls; by a parity of reaſon, not with dia-"monds."——Do you rightly underſtand St Paul? Don't you dwindle his manly and noble idea, into a meanneſs and littleneſs of ſenſe? ſuch as befits the ſuperſtitious and contracted ſpirit of a hermit, rather than the generous and exalted temper of a believer; who ſtands faſt in the liberty, wherewith CHRIST hath made him free?—Our LORD ſays not, they that are ſplendidly apparelled, are apparelled unſuitably to Chriſtianity, or in a manner inconſiſtent with the fear of GOD; but they are in kings courts, and their dreſs is adapted to their ſtation. Neither does St Paul forbid the uſe of pearls, or coſtly array, when a perſon's circumſtances will afford them, and his ſituation in life may require them. He rather cautions againſt the abuſe, againſt looking upon theſe glittering things, as any part of their true dignity, on which they value themſelves, or by which they would be recommended to others. The word is not ενδυσασθαι, put on *, nor φορειν, wear †, but κοσμειν, adorn——"Let them not place their excellency in ſuch mean "diſtinctions; no, nor covet to diſtinguiſh themſelves "by theſe ſuperficial decorations; but rather by the "ſubſtantial ornaments of real godlineſs, and good "works; which will render both them and their reli-"gion truly amiable."

The apoſtle Peter obſerves the ſame propriety of ſpeech, and the ſame correctneſs of ſentiment. Whoſe adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of wearing of gold, or plaiting the hair, or putting on of apparel.——Was this an abſolute prohibition of the ſeveral particulars mentioned, it would forbid all kind of cloathing, or the putting on of any apparel. Take the paſſage in your rigorous ſenſe, and it concludes as forcibly againſt garments, as againſt ornaments; we muſt even go naked, and lay aſide our cloaths, as well as our gems. Whereas, underſtood according to the natural ſignification of the words (ου το κοσμειν, not ου το ενδυειν) it conveys a very important, and a very ſeaſonable exhortation; "Chriſtians, ſcorn to borrow your recommendations "from the needle, the loom, or the toy-ſhop. This "may be the faſhion of a vain world. But let your "embelliſhments, or that which beautifies and diſtin-"guiſhes your character, be of a ſuperior nature. Let "it be internal; not ſuch as the ſheep have wore, or "the ſilk-worms ſpun; but ſuch as is peculiar to the "immortal mind, or the hidden man of the heart. Let it "be ſubſtantial; not ſuch as the moth corrodes, or ſuch "as periſhes in uſing; but that which is not corruptible; "which being planted on earth, will be tranſplanted "into heaven, and being ſown in time, will flouriſh to "eternity.—Let it be that adorning, whoſe excellency "is unqueſtionable, and whoſe praiſe is of GOD, even the "ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit; which will render "you, not indeed like the grandees of the earth, but "like the SON of the HIGHEST; ſhewing that you "are united to him; intereſted in him; and partakers "of his divine nature."

"In all things, I perceive, you are too favourable, both "to the deſire of the fleſh, and the deſire of the eye."——I rather think, Mr Weſley is too cenſorious of others, and too indulgent to himſelf. Why may not Theron wear his richly-emboſſed gold watch, and his lady uſe her golden buckle ſet with diamonds, as well as you and I wear a ſilver buckle *, or make uſe of our ſilver watch? Why may not an earl or a counteſs † put on their robes, ſumptuous with embroidery, or their coronet, glittering with jewels, as inoffenſively, as you and I put on a beaver-hat, or trail after us a prunella gown?—There is no neceſſity for this our ſprueneſs. A fuſtian jacket would keep our backs warm, and a flannel cap our heads, as well as our more elegant array.—Methinks, therefore, we ſhould either abſtain from all needleſs finery in our own dreſs, or elſe forbear to cenſure it in others. Rather, we ſhould all, in our reſpective ſtations, and according to our reſpective circumſtances, uſe theſe things as not abuſing them; remembering, that the faſhion of this world paſſeth away. Looking therefore for that city of the living GOD, whoſe builder and maker is GOD, whoſe wall is of jaſper, whoſe buildings are of pure gold, and whoſe foundations are garniſhed with all manner of precious ſtones; but whoſe external ſplendor is infinitely ſurpaſſed by the glory of GOD, which lightens it, and by the preſence of the LAMB, which is the light thereof.——When we are bleſſed with clear apprehenſions of this ineffable glory——which ſhall be revealed; when we live under a delightful perſuaſion, that GOD hath given to us this eternal life; gems will have but little luſtre in our eye, and leſs and leſs allurements for our heart. All the pomp of this tranſient world will appear to us, as the palace of Verſailles, or the gardens of Stowe, would appear to ſome ſuperior being; who, from an exalted ſtand in æther, ſhould contemplate the terraqueous globe; and at one view take in its vaſt dimenſions, its prodigious revolutions, and its moſt copious furniture.

"You are a gentle caſuiſt as to every ſelf-indul-"gence, which a plentiful fortune can furniſh."——I would conſider the end for which theſe things were created, and point out and enforce their proper improvements. They were created, not to tantalize, but to treat us; not to enſnare, but to gratify us. Then they are properly improved, when we enjoy them with moderation, and render them inſtruments of uſe-

* Mark vi. 9. † Matth. xi. 8.

* That Mr Weſley may not ſuſpect I am pleading for ſelf-indulgence, I will give him my word, that I have never wore my ſilver buckles, ſince I was in mourning for his Royal Highneſs. Neither ſhall I have one uneaſy thought, if I never put them on again.

† Should it be ſaid, the perſons to whom St Peter wrote, were in mean circumſtances; therefore ſuch grandees are out of the queſtion. I anſwer, The perſons for whom St Peter wrote, were all Chriſtians to the very end of the world. Among theſe, though there may not be many grand, nor many noble, yet, bleſſed be GOD, there are ſome. And when theſe go to receive their celeſtial crown, we truſt, it will be ſaid,

——Une ablata non deficit alter
Aureus.

fulneſs; when they are regarded as pregnant tokens of our CREATOR's love, and act as endearing incitements of our gratitude.——What you call my caſuiſtry, is built upon a maxim, which will never be controverted; Every creature of GOD is good, if received with thankſgiving. It is nothing elſe, but an attempt to diſplay what is affirmed in the former clauſe, and to enforce what is preſcribed in the latter.

In the ſixth letter, in the ninth, and in other parts, Theron enumerates ſome of the fineſt productions, and moſt choice accommodations which the earth, the air, the ſeas afford.——In imitation of the apoſtle, who in one ſentence expreſſes abundantly more, than my three volumes contain; HE giveth us all things richly to enjoy. ——In imitation of the pſalmiſt alſo, who, in ſeveral of his hymns, eſpecially in Pſalm civ. celebrates the profuſe munificence of JEHOVAH; profuſe, even in temporal bleſſings, and with regard to our animal nature.——Does our nature call for ſomething to ſupport it? Here is bread, which ſtrengthens man's heart, and is the ſtaff of his life. Does our nature go farther, and covet ſomething to pleaſe it? Here is wine, that maketh glad the heart of man: regaling his palate, and exhilarating his ſpirits. Is our nature yet more craving, and deſirous of ſomething to beautify it? Here is oil, that maketh the face to ſhine; that the countenance may appear both chearful and amiable; that gaiety may ſparkle in the eye, while beauty glows in the cheek.——Now I cannot perſuade myſelf, nor is all Mr Weſley's rhetoric powerful enough to convince me, that it is any diſcredit or any error to follow ſuch examples.

"But I mention the exquiſite reliſh of turbot, and the "deliciouſneſs of ſturgeon. And are not ſuch obſerva-"tions beneath the dignity of a miniſter of CHRIST?" Mr Weſley does not obſerve from whom theſe remarks proceed. Not from Aſpaſio, but Theron. To make him ſpeak like a miniſter of CHRIST, or like a Chriſtian of the firſt rank, would be entirely out of character. It would have betrayed an utter ignorance, or a total diſregard of Horace's rule;

Reddere perſonæ ſcit convenientia cuique.

However, I am willing to take all upon myſelf, and be reſponſible for the obnoxious ſentiments. I would only aſk, Is any thing ſpoken of, which the ALMIGHTY has not made? and ſhall I think it beneath my dignity, to magnify the work of his hands? Is any thing ſpoken of, which the ALMIGHTY has not beſtowed? and ſhall I think it a diminution of my character, to acknowledge the various gifts of his bounty? Has GOD moſt high thought it worthy of his infinite majeſty, to endue the creatures with ſuch pleaſing qualities, as render them a delicious entertainment to our appetites? and ſhall I reckon it a mean unbecoming employ, to bear witneſs to this condeſcending indulgence of the DEITY?—— Particularity in recounting benefits, is ſeldom deemed a fault. It comes under no ſuch denomination, in my ſyſtem of ethics. If Mr Weſley has a better, in which neglect and inſenſibility are ranked among the virtues, I muſt undoubtedly, upon thoſe principles, drop my plea. Where they are commendable, my conduct muſt be inexcuſable; and if inexcuſable, I fear, irreclaimable. For I ſhall never be aſhamed to take a fiſh, a fowl, or a fruit in my hand, and ſay, "A preſent this from our "all-bountiful CREATOR! See its beauty, taſte its "ſweetneſs, admire its excellency, and love and adore "the great Benefactor. To us he hath freely granted "theſe, and other delights; though he himſelf, in the "days of his fleſh, had gall to eat, and vinegar to "drink."

"But the mentioning theſe in ſuch a manner, is a "ſtrong encouragement of luxury and ſenſuality." ——If, to enumerate a few of theſe dainties*, be a ſtrong encouragement to luxury, how much more, to create them all, and clothe them with ſuch inviting properties, and recommend them by ſuch delicate attractives?—But "the mentioning them in ſuch a man-"ner." What! Is this an encouragement to ſenſuality? to mention them, as ſo many inſtances of divine beneficence, and ſo many motives to human gratitude? This, methinks, is the way to prevent the abuſe of our animal enjoyments, and to correct their pernicious tendency. This is the way to endear their adorable GIVER, and render them incentives to love. And the love of GOD is a better guard againſt luxury, a better preſervative from ſenſuality, than all the rigid rules of the cloyſter or monaſtery.

Upon the whole, however well affected Mr Weſley may be to our civil, he ſeems to be a kind of mal-content with regard to our ſpiritual liberties; thoſe I mean, which are conſigned over to us in the Magna Charta of the goſpel.

We have liberty, through JESUS CHRIST, to uſe not one only, but every creature of GOD; and to uſe them in a ſanctified manner, ſo that they ſhall not ſenſualize our affections, but refine and exalt them, by knitting our hearts more inſeparably to their munificent CREATOR. According to that clauſe in the heavenly deed, All things are yours. This you would curtail and diminiſh.

We have liberty to look upon ourſelves as juſtified before GOD, without any works of our own; made perfectly righteous in his ſight, without any perſonal obedience whatever; entirely through our Repreſentative and Surety, what he has ſuffered in our name and in our ſtead. According to thoſe gracious declarations, In the LORD have I righteouſneſs; and, By the obedience of ONE ſhall many be made righteous. This you would ſuperſede and aboliſh.

We have liberty to claim and receive this unſpeakable privilege, without performing any conditions, or ſeeking any pre-requiſites; having no other qualification, than that of being loſt ſinners, and needing no other warrant than the divine grant, made and recorded in the word of the goſpel. According to that moſt generous invitation, Come, buy wine and buy milk, without money and without price. According to that moſt gratuitous conceſſion, Whoever will, let him take of the water of life freely. This you would clog and embarraſs.

We have liberty, through our LORD's atonement, to look upon ourſelves as made free from all guilt; to conſider our ſins, as abſolutely blotted out, never to appear again, either to our utter condemnation, or to our leaſt confuſion.

The three firſt articles of the charge, I think, are made clear, too clear and undeniable, in the courſe of the preceding letters. Should you challenge me to prove the laſt, I refer you to your aſſize-ſermon. There you tell us, that the ſins of true believers, as well as of unbelievers, will be brought to light, and expoſed before the whole world, at the day of univerſal judgment.

Here, I muſt do you the juſtice to acknowledge, that you have not, as in your epiſtolary animadverſions on Aſpaſio, required your audience to aſſent, merely becauſe you affirm. You attempt to eſtabliſh your opinion by the authority of Soſoman; GOD ſhall bring every work into judgment, with every ſecret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil. But you ſeem to forget, that the ſins of the believer are τα μη οντα, things that are not. CHRIST has blotted out, as a thick cloud, our tranſgreſſions; yea, as a thin cloud, our ſins *.—Conſider them as moral ſtains, or

* The ſcripture calls them, royal dainties, Gen. xlix. 20.

* If. xliv. 22. סך Nubes. עב Nubecula. Thus Houbigant tranſlates the words; and, I think, very juſtly. The firſt ſeems to denote an immenſe arrangement of clouds, covering the ſky. The ſecond ſignifies a looſe detached fragment, floating in the upper regions. The firſt fixed like a vault; the laſt ſailing like a ſkiff. This ſenſe diverſifies the prophet's imagery; and, causes of defilement; they are washed away by the blood of JESUS. And surely the blood of GOD must have as powerful an effect on our souls as the waters of Jordan had upon Naaman's body *.—Consider them as contracting guilt, or deserving punishment; they are vacated; they are disannulled; and, like the scape-goat, dismissed into the pathless inaccessible wilderness, when sought for, they shall not be found.——Consider them in either of these respects, or under any other character, and they are, not only covered or secreted, but abolished. Just as the darkness of the night is abolished, by the splendor of this clear, serene, delightful morning.

Bring to our sight, if you can, the millstone that is cast into the depths of the sea. Restore, to its former consistence, the cloud that is dissolved in rain; or find one dreg of filthiness in the new-fallen snow. Then may those iniquities be brought again into notice, which have been done away by the High Priest of our profession; which have been expiated by the perfect, most effectual, and glorious oblation of himself.—His people, when rising from the bed of death, will have no more conscience of sin in themselves. They are fully and for ever free from the accusation of others; so free, that sin shall not so much as be mentioned unto them; no, nor even remembered by the LORD their GOD any more. They are made holy, unblameable, and unreprovable in his sight. And they shall be presented, at the great day, without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing.

Thus may we, and thus may our readers, be presented! so shall we meet each other with comfort at the awful tribunal, with joy amidst the angels of light, and with everlasting transport around the throne of the LAMB.——To promote this blessed event, is the sole aim of these remonstrances, and the unfeigned desire of, and, instead of tautology, presents us with a beautiful gradation.

Rev. Sir, Your, &c.

* 2 Kings v. 14.

LETTER XI.

Rev. Sir,

MY last concluded with a sketch of our Christian liberty, extracted from the charter of the gospel. We have liberty——to use all the creatures, and in a sanctified manner—to consider ourselves, as made perfectly righteous, through the obedience of CHRIST—to receive this grand prerogative, without performing any conditions—to look upon all our sins, as totally and finally done away, through the blood of JESUS.

Perhaps you will ask, Where is your liberty from the power of sin? Does not this come within the extent of your charter? Most certainly. You injure our doctrine if you deny it: we are undone irreparably, if we cannot continue destitute of it. Every other immunity, without this crowning privilege, would be like the magnificent palace and the beautiful gardens of Pharaoh; while swarms of locusts filled them with their loathed intrusion.

But observe, Sir; freedom from the dominion of sin, is the result of all the preceding blessings. By revealing these in our hearts, and CHRIST the author of them, the HOLY SPIRIT acts as the SPIRIT of liberty.—You are a philosopher; you understand the theory of light. From the association of various rays, or the mixture of many parent-colours, springs that first of elements, and best of material gifts, light. So, from the union, and united enjoyment of all those heavenly treasures, springs that most desirable liberty, the liberty of righteousness.—This is that truth which makes us free.—This is that knowledge, by which we are renewed after the image of HIM that created us. And these are the exceeding precious promises, by which we are partakers of the divine nature. Hence we are taught to love the LORD our GOD, and to take delight in his adorable perfections. By this means, they look with a smiling aspect upon us, and are unspeakably amiable to us. Under such views, we say of sin, we say of all our evil and corrupt affections, Do not I hate them, O LORD, that hate thee? and am I not grieved with those that rise up against thee? I hate them with a perfect hatred; I count them mine enemies.

Our SAVIOUR's obedience. This phrase disgusts Mr Wesley. Therefore he cries, "O say, with the good old "Puritans, our SAVIOUR's death and merits."—Aspasio speaks with St Paul, By the obedience of one.—He speaks with St Peter, Faith in the righteousness of our GOD and SAVIOUR.——He speaks with the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah, In the LORD have I righteousness; and, JEHOVAH is our righteousness.——Having these precedents, he need not be very solicitous, who else is for him, or who is against him.

Though not very solicitous about this matter, he is somewhat surprized at your vehement address; that you should exhort him so earnestly to "speak with "the good old puritans." Has not your Printer committed a mistake? Did not the clause stand thus in your manuscript? "With my good friends the Arminians." They indeed disapprove this expression; because it is, when rightly understood, a dagger in the heart of their cause.—But as to the Puritans, they are, one and all, on the contrary side. Their language is a perfect union with Aspasio's. They glory in the meritorious obedience of their great MEDIATOR. They extol his imputed righteousness in almost every page, and pour contempt upon all other works, compared with.

What will not an author affirm, who ventures to assert, or insinuate that the Puritan writers disuse this manner of speaking? For my part, I know not any set of writers in the world, so eminently remarkable for this very doctrine and this very diction. I said, in a former letter, we would inquire into this particular; but the inquiry is quite unnecessary. It would be like Uriel's searching for the sun, while he stands in its orb, and is surrounded with its lustre.

"We swarm with Antinomians."——And we must swarm with persons, whose hearts are enmity against the law of GOD, so long as your tenets find acceptance. Who can delight in a law, which neither has been, nor can be fulfilled by them? which bears witness against them, and is the ministration of death unto them? testifying, like the hand-writing on Belshazzar's wall, Thou art weighed in the balances, and found wanting:—Whereas, when we see it fully satisfied on our behalf, by our SURETY's obedience; no longer denouncing a curse, but pronouncing us blessed; not pursuing us, like the avenger of blood, but opening a city of refuge for the safety of our souls; we shall then be reconciled to its constitution and design; we shall then take pleasure in its precepts and prohibitions. We shall say with the psalmist, LORD, what love have I unto thy law! all the day long is my study in it.

My mouth shall shew forth thy righteousness and thy salvation—"Thy mercy which brings my salvation," says Mr Wesley, in opposition to the sense assigned by Aspasio. Which sense has been vindicated already. I shall therefore not renew my arguments, but only express my wonder.

As Mr Wesley is a minister of the gospel, I wonder, that he should studiously set aside, what is the peculiarity rity and glory of the evangelical revelation. "Mercy "which brings ſalvation," is what an unenlightened Jew might have preached; nay, what a more ignorant Heathen might have taught. But ſalvation through a divine righteouſneſs, as the adequate and meritorious cauſe thereof, is the diſtinguiſhing doctrine and the ſovereign excellency of the goſpel.

As Mr Weſley is a ſinner, I wonder, he ſhould chuſe to weaken the foundation of his own and our hope.—Why mercy alone? Is it not better to put our truſt in mercy, erecting its throne on a propitiation, and thence holding forth the golden ſceptre? By the obedience of IMMANUEL, the law is ſatisfied, as to its penalty; is fulfilled, as to its precept; and is, in every reſpect, unſpeakably magnified. This ſhews us the inexhauſtible fountain of mercy unſealed, and every obſtruction to its free and copious flow removed.

As Mr Weſley is zealous for the honour of GOD, I wonder, he ſhould not prefer that method of ſalvation, by which every divine attribute is moſt abundantly glorified. This is not done, by expecting pardon and acceptance from mercy alone; but by expecting and receiving them, through our REDEEMER's righteouſneſs and blood. Then we have a diſplay, not only of infinite love, but of inflexible juſtice, and incomprehenſible wiſdom. Here they mingle their beams, and ſhine forth with united and eternal ſplendour.

Conſidering theſe things, I am ſtill inclined to embrace Aſpaſio's interpretation of this, and ſuch like paſſages of ſcripture, wherein ſalvation is aſcribed to divine mercy, exerciſed through the obedience and death of CHRIST, which gives as great a heightening to the bleſſing, as the atmoſphere gives to the rays of light, or as the light itſelf imparts to the ſcenes of creation.

Thoſe divine treaſures which ſpring from the imputation of CHRIST's righteouſneſs. "Not a word of his atoning blood."——I wiſh, you would turn back to Aſpaſio's definition of this phraſe, as it is laid down at the beginning of the conference, to be the groundwork of all the dialogues, and of all the letters. You will then perceive, that there is not a word of this kind, but CHRIST's atoning blood is included in it. Without this, his righteouſneſs had not been perfect. Without this, his righteouſneſs could not be imputed.——Some people have a treacherous memory, and really forget things. Others have a perverſe mind, and reſolve not to regard them. Which of theſe is Mr Weſley's caſe, I preſume not to ſay, let his own conſcience determine.

'Tis true, we "love to ſpeak of the righteouſneſs of "CHRIST." Yet not becauſe "it affords a fairer ex-"cuſe for our own unrighteouſneſs." For indeed it affords no excuſe at all. On the contrary, it renders unrighteouſneſs quite inexcuſable, becauſe it yields new and nobler motives to all holy obedience.—But we love to ſpeak of the righteouſneſs of CHRIST, becauſe it is the moſt comprehenſive expreſſion, and the grandeſt theme in the world.—The moſt comprehenſive expreſſion; as it denotes all that he has done and ſuffered, both his meritorious life, and his atoning blood.—The grandeſt theme. Conſider all thoſe bleſſings, which have been vouchſafed to GOD's people, before our SAVIOUR appeared on earth; add all the bleſſings which will be vouchſafed, until the conſummation of all things; conſider all that good, which is compriſed in a deliverance from the nethermoſt hell; together with all that bliſs which is contained in the pleaſures and glories of the heavenly ſtate. All theſe to be enjoyed through a boundleſs eternity, and by multitudes of redeemed ſinners, numberleſs as the ſands upon the ſea-ſhore. Then aſk, What is the procuring cauſe of all? whence do theſe ineſtimable benefits proceed?—From the righteouſneſs, the ſole righteouſneſs of JESUS CHRIST.——Is it not then worthy to be uppermoſt in our thoughts, and foremoſt on our tongues? Might not the very ſtones cry out, and reproach our inſenſibility, if we did not dare to talk of this divinely-precious righteouſneſs?

Faith is a perſuaſion, that CHRIST has ſhed his blood for me, and fulfilled all righteouſneſs in my ſtead. "I can by no means ſubſcribe to this definition."——You might very ſafely ſubſcribe to this definition, if you would ſuffer St Peter to ſpeak his genuine ſentiments. Deſcribing the faith of the primitive Chriſtians, he calls it πιστιν δικαιοσυνην, Faith in the righteouſneſs. He ſays nothing of the atoning blood; but does he therefore exclude it? He ſpeaks of nothing but the juſtifying righteouſneſs; and will you totally diſcard it? It is the central point in his faith, and ſhall it have no place in yours?——Righteouſneſs, he aſſures us, was the object of the believer's faith, even the righteouſneſs of our GOD and SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST. But how could this be the object of their faith, if it was not fulfilled in their ſtead? Or how could they truly believe in this righteouſneſs, if they did not regard it, as performed for them, and imputed to them?

"There are hundreds, yea thouſands of true believ-"ers, who never once thought, one way or the other, "of CHRIST's fulfilling all righteouſneſs in their "ſtead."—Then their faith is like the ſight of the perſon, who ſaw men as trees walking. He ſaw them indeed, but very dimly, indiſtinctly, confuſedly; and it is a pity but they were more thoroughly inſtructed unto the kingdom of GOD.—Not one of thoſe thouſands, provided he fixes his hope wholly upon the merits of CHRIST, would reject this delightful truth, if it was offered, with ſcriptural evidence, to his underſtanding. Reject it! No ſurely. He would joyfully embrace it, if offered, with that ſingle, but undeniable evidence; CHRIST was made ſin for us, though he knew no ſin, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of GOD in him.

"You perſonally know many, who to this hour have "no idea of CHRIST's righteouſneſs." Surely then it behoves you, as a lover of ſouls, and as an ambaſſador of CHRIST, to teach them the way of GOD more perfectly *. So doing, you will be employed much more ſuitably to your function, and much more profitably to your brethren, than in your preſent attempt. By which, you would weaken the hands, and defeat the deſigns of thoſe, who endeavour to ſpread abroad the ſavour of this knowledge, in every place; and who, notwithſtanding all that you perſonally know, muſt unalterably perſiſt in their method. Which is, to regulate their definition of faith, not by the ſtate of your ſuppoſed believers, but by the expreſs declaration of the unerring word. And from this, they have authority to maintain, that faith in the imputed righteouſneſs of CHRIST, is a fundamental principle to every believer, who underſtands upon what foundation he is ſaved.

Theſe your acquaintance, though they have no idea of CHRIST's righteouſneſs, yet "have each "of them a divine evidence and conviction, CHRIST "loved me, and gave himſelf for me." In this caſe, don't you take rather too much upon you? Have you then the apoſtolical gift of diſcerning ſpirits? If not, it will be impoſſible for you to know the man, excluſive of yourſelf, who is certainly poſſeſſed of this divine evidence. You may form a charitable judgment or a prevailing hope; which ſeems to be the utmoſt you can warrantably claim with regard to others. And while you entertain this hope, we ſhall allow it to indicate the benevolence of your heart; but cannot admit it as a proof of your point, That people may be full of faith and love, yet have no idea of CHRIST's righteouſneſs.——We would alſo caution you to take heed, leſt,

* Mr Weſley cannot ſay; What! Teach a doctrine, which I diſapprove? ſince he himſelf has allowed it, has approved it, has ſet his ſeal to it, again and again, in the courſe of theſe his remarks.

through

through an immoderate fondneſs for increaſing the number of your converts, you are led to deceive yourſelf and others; regiſtering thoſe as real believers, whom the LORD hath not regiſtered. By this means, you may be confirmed in your unſcriptural notion, that the righteous fall away, and the faithful apoſtatize.——Whereas, they who fall away, were righteous only in appearance; and they who apoſtatize, were no otherwiſe than profeſſionally faithful. What you ſee drop from the ſky, is not a ſtar, but a meteor only.

Faith is the hand which receives all that is laid up in CHRIST.—Aſpaſio expreſſes himſelf thus; CHRIST is a ſtore-houſe of all good. Whatever is neceſſary to remove our guilt, whatever is expedient for renewing our nature, whatever is proper to fit us for the eternal fruition of GOD, all this is laid up in CHRIST. And all this is received by faith, for our application, uſe, and enjoyment.——To this Mr Weſley ſubjoins a word of objection; but not in due ſeaſon. Aſpaſio is diſplaying the efficacy of faith; Mr Weſley's argument is levelled againſt the indefectibility of faith. However, as it is your favourite objection, it ſhall not be treated as an intruder. "If we make ſhipwreck of the faith, how much ſoever is laid up in CHRIST, from that hour we receive nothing."

Have you never heard of the anſwer, which the Spartan ſtates returned to an inſolent and barbarous embaſſy from Philip of Macedon? You may read it in the book you are cenſuring; and may receive it as a reply to this, and your other ſurmiſes of this nature. It was all comprized in that ſingle monoſyllable IF.—A mere profeſſor may make ſhipwreck of the doctrine of faith; a true believer does not make ſhipwreck of the grace of faith. No, nor ever will, unleſs CHRIST's interceſſion be made of none effect; I have prayed, that ſuch faith fail not.

§10. Anſwered already, in number 311.

Aſpaſio, deſcribing the dreadful nature of the command given to Abraham, ſays, Thy hands muſt lift the deadly weapon; thy hands muſt point it to the beloved breaſt; thy own hands muſt urge its way, through the gulhing veins and the ſhivering fleſh, till it be plunged in the throbbing heart.——"Are not theſe deſcriptions far too ſtrong?" This is ſubmitted to the judgment of the reader. I would only obſerve, that the more ſtrongly the horrors of the tremendous deed are repreſented, the more ſtriking will the difficulty of the duty appear; conſequently the more efficacious and triumphant the power of faith.——"May not theſe "deſcriptions occaſion unprofitable reaſonings in many "readers?" What unprofitable reaſonings may be occaſioned, I do not pretend to gueſs. But the juſt and natural reflection, ariſing from the conſideration of ſuch a circumſtance, is; "What has faith wrought! It purifies and exalts the affections. It invigorates and "ennobles the ſoul; makes it bold to undertake, and "ſtrong to execute, every great and heroic work. I "ſee, therefore, it is not in vain, that the ſcripture ſo "frequently inculcates faith; lays ſo remarkable a ſtreſs "upon faith; and places it in the very front of all "Chriſtian duties." This is the victory that overcometh the world, overcometh ſelf, overcometh all things.

"How could he (Abraham) juſtify it to the world? "Not at all."——True; not to the unbelieving world. They will argue, as Mr Weſley on another occaſion, "What! ſtab his ſon, his beſt-beloved, his only ſon to the heart? Could the GOD of goodneſs command ſuch a piece of barbarity? Impoſſible! I could ſooner be a Deiſt, yea an Atheiſt, than I could believe this. It is leſs abſurd to deny the very being of a GOD, than to make him an almighty tyrant."——But to the believing world, who fear the LORD, and hearken to the voice of his ſervants, Abraham's conduct will never ſtand in need of a vindication. By them it will be highly extolled, and greatly admired. It will be an undeniable demonſtration of the reality and ſincerity of his faith; of its very ſuperior elevation, and invincible ſtrength.

You take the direct and certain way to obtain ſubſtantial comfort. The righteouſneſs of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, after which you inquire, about which you are ſolicitous, is a never-failing ſource of conſolation. Thus Aſpaſio writes to Theron.——"What! "without the atonement?" cries Mr Weſley. To which he adds, in a following paragraph; "So the "death of CHRIST is not ſo much as named." This puts me in mind of an objection, no very formidable one, made againſt that introductory exhortation to the common prayer, Dearly beloved brethren. So then, ſaid a candid examiner, women have no part in your worſhip. They are not ſo much as named. But I forbear. If you are not aſhamed of repeating, I am aſhamed of refuting, ſo frequently refuting ſuch an empty cavil. And, I believe, the reader is tired with us both.

§16. I have no great objection to your alteration of Aſpaſio's comment. Suppoſe, we compromiſe matters, and conſider the oil poured on Aaron's head, and emptying itſelf from Zechariah's olive-tree, as typical both of the merits and the SPIRIT of CHRIST; which, like light and heat in the ſun, are indiſſolubly connected; or, to make uſe of a ſacred illuſtration, are like the living creatures and the wheels in Ezekiel's viſion. When the living creatures went, the wheels went by them. When the living creatures were lift up from the earth, the wheels were lift up. Whitherſoever the former were to go, the latter went alſo.——For the ſake of obliging Mr Weſley, I call this is a compromiſe. But if he can prevail on himſelf to read the paraphraſe on the two paſſages, without prepoſſeſſion, he will find this affectation of ſenſes anticipated by Aſpaſio.

"Has the law any demand, ſays Aſpaſio? It muſt go to CHRIST for ſatisfaction. From which you draw this injurious conſequence, "Then I am not obliged to "love my neighbour. CHRIST has ſatisfied the de"mand of the law for me." This objection has already received an anſwer.

I ſhall therefore content myſelf with ſhewing, why I call your concluſion injurious. Becauſe, like the deaf adder, it ſtoppeth the ear againſt my own explication of my own phraſe. A note is added, on purpoſe to limit its ſenſe, and obviate your miſrepreſentation. This you totally diſregard, and argue as if no ſuch precaution was uſed.—The note informs you, that the law—the commanding law is ſatisfied with nothing leſs than perfect obedience, and the broken law inflicts upon tranſgreſſion puniſhment. Now, if it muſt not, for ſatisfaction to both theſe demands, go to CHRIST our divine huſband, where will it obtain any ſuch thing? Who is able to give it, among all the children of Adam?

However, leſt we offend, needleſsly offend any reader, I promiſe, that, in caſe the providence of GOD and the favour of the Public call for a new edition, Aſpaſio ſhall alter his language. Thus the paragraph ſhall ſtand; "Does the law demand perfect purity of nature, "and perfect obedience of life? It muſt go to HIM "for ſatisfaction. Do we want grace, and glory, and "every good gift? We may look to HIM for a ſupply; "to HIM, in whom it hath pleaſed the FATHER, that all "fulneſs ſhould dwell."

For all his people—With this phraſe Mr Weſley is chagrined. This he will not ſuffer to paſs without animadverſion. Though he muſt know, if prejudice has not blinded his underſtanding, that it is pure ſcripture. Why does he not ſhew the ſame diſſatisfaction with the angel that appeared unto Joſeph, and with Zechariah the Baptiſt's father? The former of whom ſays, He ſhall ſave his people from their ſins. The latter declares, He ſhall give knowledge of ſalvation unto his people, by the remiſſion of their ſins. Why does he not put the ſame queſtion unto them, and draw the ſame inference upon them? "But what "becomes of all other people?"—Sometimes Mr Weſley is ſo attached to the ſcriptures, that nothing will pleaſe him, but ſcriptural expreſſions. Here he is ſo wedded to ſelf-opinion, that even ſcriptural expreſſions will not paſs current, when they ſeem to thwart his own notions.

For all his people—From this expreſſion, though uſed by a prophet, authorized by an angel, and to be found in many places of ſcripture, Mr Weſley deduces ſome very offenſive and dreadful conſequences; ſo dreadful, that he "would ſooner be a Turk, a Deiſt, "yea an Atheiſt, than he could believe them."—My dear Sir, let me give you a word of friendly advice, Before you turn Turk, or Deiſt, or Atheiſt—ſee, that you firſt become an honeſt man. They will all diſown you, if you go over to their party, deſtitute of common honeſty.

Methinks, I hear you ſaying, with ſome emotion, What do mean by this advice? or what relation has this to the ſubject of our preſent inquiry?——A pretty near relation. Out of zeal to demoliſh the doctrine of election, you ſcruple not to overleap the bounds of integrity and truth.——Myſterious ſtill! I know not what you aim at.——Then be pleaſed to review a paſſage, in your book on original ſin, where you have thought proper to make a quotation from my dialogues. It relates to that great doctrine of the goſpel, CHRIST becoming the repreſentative and federal head of ſinners. Upon this occaſion Aſpaſio ſays, "As Adam was "a public perſon, and acted in the ſtead of all mankind; "ſo CHRIST was a public perſon, and acted in behalf of all his people. As Adam was the firſt general "repreſentative of this kind, CHRIST was the ſecond "and laſt." Here you ſubſtitute the word mankind, inſtead of this kind; and thereby lead the reader to ſuppoſe, that Aſpaſio conſiders our glorious Repreſentative, as ſtanding in this capacity to the whole human race; than which nothing can be more injurious to the ſenſe of his words.

I at firſt thought it might poſſibly be the effect of inadvertency. But could a perſon of Mr Weſley's diſcernment allow himſelf to nod over a paſſage, which he knew to be of a critical and controverted import?—— Perhaps, it might be the printer's fault; an error of the preſs. I would willingly have admitted one of theſe extenuating circumſtances, till I came to the bottom of the page; where, to my great aſtoniſhment, I found the following words, incloſed within the marks of the ſame quotation, and aſcribed to Aſpaſio. "All theſe expreſ"ſions demonſtrate, that Adam" (as well as CHRIST) "was a repreſentative of all mankind." Then I could no longer forbear crying out, There is treachery, Ahaziah! A falſe quotation, not made only, but repeated, cannot be owing to negligence, but muſt proceed from deſign. And this, I ſhould think, can never be defended, no, nor with a good grace excuſed, by Mr Weſley's moſt devoted admirers. A ſtudious alteration of our words, and an evident perverſion of their meaning, are defenſible by no arguments, are excuſable on no occaſion.

Quite inexcuſable this practice. And is not your language equally offenſive? Is not your concluſion very precipitate? when you ſuppoſe Aſpaſio, though uſing the words of ſcripture, yet repreſenting GOD as "an almighty tyrant?"——Surely you had better forbear ſuch horrid and ſhocking expreſſions. Eſpecially, as you cannot deny, that many paſſages in ſcripture ſeem at leaſt to countenance this obnoxious tenet. As you very well know, that many perſons, eminent for their learning and exemplary in their lives, have written in defence of it, and bled for the confirmation of it. As we have proofs more than a few, that you are far from being infallible in your judgment; yea, far from being invariable in your opinion. Witneſs your former notions of matrimony: witneſs the character you formerly gave of the Moravian brethren; and the eſteem which you once had for the Myſtics, and their writings. —Conſidering yourſelf, therefore, it would better become you to be diffident on ſuch a ſubject, and ſay, "That which I know not, LORD, teach thou me." And I imagine, it can never become you, on any ſubject whatever, to break out into ſuch language, as ought not to be named among Chriſtians; ought to have no place but in the bottomleſs pit.—This is an admonition, which, while I ſuggeſt to you, Sir, I charge on myſelf.

The three following paragraphs relate to a doctrine, which you are fond to attack, and which Aſpaſio ſtudiouſly declines. It conſtitutes no part of his plan. It forms not ſo much as the out-works. Be it demoliſhed or eſtabliſhed, the grand privilege, and the invaluable bleſſing, of juſtification, through the righteouſneſs of CHRIST, remains unſhaken, ſtands immoveable.—In applying this to ourſelves, we proceed neither upon univerſal nor particular redemption, but only upon the divine grant, and the divine invitation. We aſſure ourſelves of preſent and eternal ſalvation, through this perfect righteouſneſs, not as perſons elected, but as perſons warranted by the word of GOD; bound by the command of GOD, and led by the SPIRIT of GOD.—— Therefore, while you are encountering this doctrine, I would be looking unto JESUS; be viewing the glory of my LORD; contemplating HIS perfection, and my own completeneſs in HIM.

If I divert, for a moment, from this delightful object, it is only to touch upon one of your remonſtrances.— You ſuppoſe, that according to the Calviniſtic ſcheme, GOD denies what is neceſſary for preſent comfort and final acceptance, even to ſome who ſincerely ſeek it. This is contrary to ſcripture, and no leſs contrary to the doctrine of your opponents. However, to confirm yourſelf, in this miſapprehenſion, you aſk, "Would you deny it to any, if it were in your "power?"——To ſhew the error of ſuch a ſentiment, and the fallacy of ſuch reaſoning, I ſhall juſt mention a recent melancholy fact.

News is brought, that the Prince George man of war, Admiral Broderick's own ſhip, is burnt, and ſunk, and above four hundred ſouls that were on board, are periſhed. Six hours the flames prevailed; while every means was uſed to preſerve the ſhip and crew; but all to no purpoſe. In the mean time, ſhrieks and groans, bitter moanings, and piercing cries, were heard from every quarter. Raving, deſpair, and even madneſs preſented themſelves, in a variety of forms. Some ran to and fro diſtracted with terror, not knowing what they did, or what they ſhould do. Others jumped overboard, from all parts; and, to avoid the purſuit of one death, leaped into the jaws of another. Thoſe unhappy wretches, who could not ſwim, were obliged to remain upon the wreck, though flakes of fire fell on their bodies. Soon the maſts went away, and killed numbers. Thoſe who were not killed, thought themſelves happy, to get upon the floating timber. Nor yet were they ſafe; for the fire, having communicated itſelf to the guns, which were loaded and ſhotted, they ſwept multitudes from this their laſt refuge.—What ſay you, Sir, to this diſmal narrative? Does not your heart bleed? Would you have ſtood by, and denied your ſuccour, if it had been in your power to help? Would not you have done your utmoſt, to prevent the fatal cataſtrophe? Yet the LORD ſaw this extreme diſtreſs. He heard their piteous moans. He was able to ſave them, yet withdrew his aſſiſtance. Now, becauſe you would gladly have ſuccoured them if you could, and GOD ALMIGHTY could, but would not ſend them aid; will you therefore conclude, that you are above your LORD, and that your loving-kindneſs is greater than his? I will not offer to charge any ſuch conſe-quence upon you. I am perſuaded you abhor the thought.

"The wedding-garment here means holineſs."—— Thus ſaying, you depart from Bengelius, for whom you profeſs ſo high a regard. Bengelius, overlooks your expoſition, and gives his vote for Aſpaſio's. Hæc veſtis eſt juſtitia CHRISTI. Awed by ſo venerable an authority, you have not ventured to exclude this ſenſe from your comment. You have admitted it into your expoſitory notes, yet will not allow Aſpaſio to admit it into his diſcourſe with Theron. Theſe are your words; "The wedding garment, that is, the righteouſneſs of "CHRIST, firſt imputed, then implanted." Which, by the way, is not perfectly accurate, nor according to the language of the goſpel. The goſpel diſtinguiſhes between the righteouſneſs of CHRIST, and our own righteouſneſs. That which is imputed, goes under the former, that which is implanted, under the latter denomination.

However, let us conſider the circumſtances of the caſe, and we ſhall find, that our common favourite Bengelius has probability and reaſon on his ſide. The gueſts mentioned in this parable, conſiſted of poor outcaſts, collected from the highways and hedges. Now we cannot ſuppoſe, that people in ſuch a condition, and coming at a minute's warning, ſhould be able to furniſh themſelves with a dreſs of their own, ſuitable to the grand occaſion. Here then perſonal holineſs is put out of the queſtion.—But we muſt ſuppoſe, (which is conformable to the Eaſtern cuſtoms) that the king had ordered his ſervants, to accommodate each gueſt from the royal wardrobe. That each might have this additional token of his ſovereign's favour, and all might be arrayed in a manner becoming the magnificent ſolemnity. This exactly correſponds with the nature of imputed righteouſneſs.

Farther, the banquet, you will readily allow, is the pardon of ſin, and peace with GOD, the divine SPIRIT, and eternal life. From all which, uniting their happy influence, true holineſs ſprings. To ſay, that holineſs is the wedding-garment, neceſſary for our introduction to this banquet, ſavours of abſurdity; like ſaying holineſs is neceſſary to holineſs.—It is abſolute legality; for it makes the performance of all duties, the way to the REDEEMER's grace.——It implies an impoſſibility; the ſinner, that can exerciſe holineſs, before he receives CHRIST and his SPIRIT, is like the dead man, who ariſes and walks, before he is reſtored to life.

The grand end which GOD propoſes in all his favourable diſpenſations to fallen man, is to demonſtrate the ſovereignty of his grace. "Not ſo."——Do you mean, Aſpaſio has not ſpoken ſo? that you have miſrepreſented his ſenſe? have clipped and diſfigured his coin? If this is your meaning, you ſpeak an undoubted truth. His words are, "To demonſtrate the ſove-"reignty, and advance the glory of his grace." Why did you ſuppreſs the laſt clauſe? Was you afraid it would ſupply the deficiency, which you charge on Aſpaſio, and expreſs the idea of imparting happineſs? If ſo, your fears are juſt enough.——Why did you not take into conſideration thoſe texts of ſcripture, with which Aſpaſio confirms his tenet? Ought you not to have overthrown thoſe teſtimonies, before you deny his doctrine? Otherwiſe, you oppoſe your own authority, to the deciſion of a prophet and of an apoſtle.

"Not ſo," proceeds Mr Weſley. "To impart happi-"neſs to his creatures, is his grand end herein."—— The devout prophet ſpeaks otherwiſe; I have created him for my glory. The wiſe moraliſt ſpeaks otherwiſe; The LORD hath created all things for himſelf. The holy apoſtle ſpeaks otherwiſe; To the praiſe of the glory of his grace. From which, and from innumerable other places of ſcripture, from the reaſon of the thing, and from the very nature of the SUPREME BEING, it appears, that the primary leading aim, in all GOD's works, and all GOD's diſpenſations, is his own glory. The felicity of his creatures, though not ſeparated from it, though evidently included in it, is ſtill ſubordinate to it. And ſurely it is very meet and right ſo to be. Can there be a nobler end, or more worthy of an infinitely-wiſe agent, than the diſplay of thoſe ſublime perfections, for which, and through which, and to which, are all things? Could GOD make any other being the principal end of his acting, he would undeify himſelf, and give his glory to another. Does any creature imagine his own happineſs to be a higher end than the divine glory? He thereby uſurps the GODHEAD, making, as far as in him lies, JEHOVAH the ſubject, and himſelf the ſovereign.

"Barely to demonſtrate his ſovereignty." The word barely is not uſed by Aſpaſio. But it gives another ſpecimen of Mr Weſley's integrity, in ſtating truth, and doing juſtice to his opponents.——It is not ſaid, the ſole, but the grand end. Therefore, would any unprejudiced perſon conclude, there muſt be ſome other, though inferior purpoſe? No, ſays Mr Weſley; hence I infer, that it was barely to demonſtrate his ſovereignty. Do you ſo? Then your inference is of a piece with the quotation, that as valid, as this is faithful.

"Barely to demonſtrate his ſovereignty," is a principal action fit for the great Turk, not for the moſt high GOD. Such a fraudulent quotation I have not often ſeen, no, not in the Critical Reviewers. To mark the ſentence with commas, and thereby aſſign it to Aſpaſio, is really a maſter-piece, eſpecially, after you have thruſt in the word barely, and lopped off the word grace. You have treated the paſſage worſe than Nahaſh king of Ammon treated the ambaſſadors of David. They were aſhamed to ſhew their faces, under ſuch marks of abuſe and diſgrace. I am no leſs aſhamed of the clauſe, as you have mangled and diſguiſed it. But reſtore it to its true ſtate; let it wear its native aſpect; then ſee what is blameable, or what is offenſive in it.

The grand end which GOD purpoſes in all his favourable diſpenſations to fallen man, is, to demonſtrate the ſovereignty, and advance the glory of his grace.—— The glory, that it may appear rich, unbounded, and infinitely ſurpaſſing all we can wiſh or imagine.——The ſovereignty, that it may appear free, undeſerved, and abſolutely independent on any goodneſs in the creature.—That ſinners may receive it, without waiting for any amiable qualities, or performing any recommending conditions.——That, when received, it may ſtop the mouth of boaſting; may cut off all pretenſions of perſonal merit; and teach every tongue to ſay, Not unto us, O LORD, not unto us, but unto thy name, be the praiſe.

And ſhould we not greatly rejoice in this method of the divine procedure? That the LORD orders all things relating to our ſalvation, to the praiſe of the glory of his grace? Can any thing be more honourable to our nature, or more tranſporting to our ſouls? Can any thing ſo firmly eſtabliſh, or ſo highly exalt our hopes? Angels, principalities, and powers; all intellectual creatures, in all ages, and all worlds; are to look unto us, unto us men they are to look, for the moſt conſummate diſplay of GOD's grace. Our exaltation and felicity are to be the mirror, in which the wondering cherubim and ſeraphim will contemplate the ſuperabundant goodneſs of JEHOVAH. How great muſt that honour and that happineſs be, which are intended to exhibit the fulleſt, faireſt, brighteſt view of GOD's infinitely-glorious grace! How ſure muſt that honour and happineſs be, which are ſo intimately connected with the glory of the omnipotent King! which can no more fail of their accompliſhment, than than the amiable attributes of GODHEAD can be ſtripped of their luſtre!

GOD is a boundleſs ocean of good. "Nay that ocean "is far from boundleſs, if it wholly paſſes by nine "tenths of mankind."——What, if it had paſſed by all mankind, as it certainly did all the devils, would it have been the leſs boundleſs on that account? I wiſh, methinks, you would ſtudy the evil of ſin more, and not ſo frequently obtrude upon us a ſubject, of which neither you nor I ſeem to be maſters. Then we ſhould neither have hard thoughts of GOD, nor high thoughts of ourſelves.

You cannot ſuppoſe, GOD would enter into a freſh covenant, with an inſolvent and attainted creature *.—Theſe are Aſpaſio's words. To which Mr Weſley replies; "I both ſuppoſe and know he did." Satis cum inperſo. Then be pleaſed, Sir, to ſhew us, where the Almighty entered into a covenant with fallen Adam; for of him we are ſpeaking. Produce the original deed; at leaſt favour us with a tranſcript. And we will take your word, when it is backed with ſuch authority.

GOD made the new covenant with CHRIST, and charged him with the performance of the conditions. "I deny both theſe aſſertions." And what is your reaſon for this denial? Is it deduced from ſcripture? Nothing like it. Is it founded on the nature of things? No attempt is made towards it. But you yourſelf affirm, that theſe aſſertions "are the central point, where-"in Calviniſm and Antinomianiſm meet." Or, in other words, they tend to eſtabliſh what you diſlike, and to overthrow what you have taught. This is all the cauſe which you aſſign for your denial. I cannot but wiſh, that, whenever I engage in controverſy, my adverſary may be furniſhed with ſuch arguments.

You deny the aſſertions now. But don't you forget what you allowed and maintained a little while ago; when you yourſelf, adopting a paſſage from Theron and Aſpaſio, called CHRIST "a fœderal head?"——Pray, what is a fœderal head, but a perſon with whom a covenant is made, in behalf of himſelf and others?——Here your judgment was according to truth. Fit, perfectly fit for ſuch an office is CHRIST; whoſe life is all his own, who is able to merit, and mighty to ſave.—But abſolutely unfit for it, utterly incapable of it, is fallen man; whoſe life is forfeited, whoſe moral ability is loſt, and whoſe very nature is enmity againſt GOD.

"I have made a covenant with my choſen —"Name-"ly, with David my ſervant." True; with David as in CHRIST, or rather as a type of CHRIST. You cannot be ignorant, that CHRIST is called by this very name. The LORD, ſpeaking by the prophet Ezekiel, ſays, I will ſet up one ſhepherd over them, and he ſhall feed them, even my ſervant David.——Was David beloved *?—CHRIST was incomparably more ſo.——Was David GOD's choſen one? CHRIST was ſo likewiſe, and in a far ſublimer ſenſe, and for infinitely more momentous purpoſes.——Was David GOD's ſervant? So was JESUS CHRIST; and, by his ſervices, brought unſpeakably greater honour to the LORD his GOD, than all kings on earth, and all the princes of heaven.—Several parts of this pſalm muſt be applied to CHRIST; and, if ſeveral of them muſt, the principal of them may and ought.

He will waſh you in the blood which atones, and inveſt you with the righteouſneſs which juſtifies.—"Why ſhould you thus put aſunder continually what "GOD has joined?" How difficult is it to pleaſe Mr Weſley! When Aſpaſio ſpoke of CHRIST's righteouſneſs, without particularly mentioning his blood, you ſaid it was better to mention them both together; it behoved us never to name the former, without the latter. Yet here, when both are mentioned, and the particular uſe of each is ſpecified, you complain of his putting aſunder what GOD has joined; which, in truth, is no disjoining, but an illuſtration and amplification of the unſearchable riches of CHRIST.

GOD himſelf, at the laſt day, pronounces them righteous, becauſe they are intereſted in the obedience of the REDEEMER. "Rather, becauſe they are waſhed "in his blood, and renewed by his SPIRIT." GOD will juſtify them in the laſt day, in the very ſame way whereby he juſtified them in this world; namely, becauſe they are intereſted in the obedience of the REDEEMER. As for their renewal by the SPIRIT, though it will then be perfect, yet it will be no cauſe of their acquittal, but the privilege of thoſe who are acquitted.—A proof of this, at leaſt an atteſtation of it, the world has received from your own pen. "For neither our "own inward nor outward righteouſneſs is the ground "of our juſtification. Holineſs of heart, as well as ho-"lineſs of life, is not the cauſe, but the effect of it.—"The ſole cauſe of our acceptance with GOD, is the "righteouſneſs and death of CHRIST, who fulfilled "GOD's law, and died in our ſtead." Excellent ſentiments! In theſe may I ever abide! to theſe may you alſo return!

* Inſolvent and attainted creature, Mr Weſley has changed into "a rebel."

* Beloved. This is the meaning of דוד David's name.

The practical improvement of the doctrine of a ſinner's juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, taken from a little piece, entitled, A DISCOURSE UPON JUSTIFICATION; printed at London in 1740, which Mr HERVEY highly eſteemed, and warmly recommended.

Being no improper ſupplement to the doctrine contained in THERON and ASPASIO, and ASPASIO VINDICATED.

1. SINCE the juſtification of a ſinner is by the complete obedience of Jeſus Chriſt, imputed to him, and received by faith, unto ſuch great and glorious effects; we may hence learn, what reaſon we have to admire that infinity of wiſdom, which ſhines forth in the contrivance of this wonder; and to adore that immenſity of grace, which is diſplayed in this glorious proviſion made for the favourites of heaven! When the beloved John was favoured with a viſionary ſight of the woman-bride, the Lamb's wife, as clothed with Chriſt, the Sun of Righteouſneſs, and ſhining forth in the reſplendent rays of her Bridegroom's glory; he ſays, he ſaw a WONDER, Rev. xii. 1. And a wonder it is indeed; ſo great, that it calls for the admiration, both of men, and of angels. This is one of thoſe glorious things, that by the goſpel is revealed unto us, which the angels deſire to look into, 1 Pet. i. 12. And while ſinful men have the forgiveneſs of their ſins through Chriſt's blood, and the acceptation of their perſons in him, the Beloved, according to the riches of the Father's grace, wherein he has abounded towards them, in all wiſdom and prudence; it becomes them to admire and adore the ſame, and to cry out, with the apoſtle, O the depths of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! Eph. i. 6. 7. 8. Rom. xi. 33. That the obedience of the Son of God, should be made our righteousness, the righteousness of a sinner, to his complete justification before God, is such a project of infinite wisdom, such a provision of infinite grace, for the salvation of God's chosen, that every way becomes the great JEHOVAH! and will be the endless wonder of men and angels!

which

2. Since the justification of a sinner is wholly by the righteousness of another, which is a way of life above nature, above being discovered by nature's light, and seen by nature's eye, or discovered by the light of the law, and discerned by natural reason; we may learn hence, what an absolute necessity there is of a supernatural revelation thereof, in order to the soul's receiving of this righteousness, and so of the grace of justification thereby. This is one of those things that God has prepared for his people, that never entered into the heart of the natural man to conceive of, which he has neither known, nor can understand; and therefore deems it foolishness, or a foolish thing, for any to think they shall be justified by the obedience of Christ, exclusive of all their own works. But the people of God receive not the Spirit which is of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that they may know the things which are freely given them of God. And this, of the free gift of righteousness, is revealed unto them by his Spirit, though it is one of those deep things of God, which are hidden from the natural man; which are impossible to be known by any, but heaven-born souls, under a special revelation from above, 1 Cor. ii. 9. &c.

3. Since the justification of a sinner is by the obedience of Christ alone; we may hence learn, how greatly important the knowledge thereof is! The knowledge of this righteousness must needs be of the utmost importance, since ignorance of it, and non-submission to it, (which always go together), leave the soul in an unrighteous state, Rom. ix. 31, 32. and x. 3. All those miserable souls, who are ignorant of Christ's righteousness, go about to establish their own righteousness; and, alas! the bed is shorter, than that a man can stretch himself upon it, and the covering narrower, than that he can wrap himself in it, Is. xxviii. 20. There is no true rest for a sinner, from the works of its own hands; no covering for a naked soul, from the fig-leaves of its own righteousness, though ever so artfully sewed together. Our Lord told his disciples, that except their righteousness did exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, they should in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven, Matth. v. 20. These Scribes and Pharisees were the zealous, the religious men of that age, the strict observers of Moses's law, that trusted in themselves, that they were righteous, by their own legal performances, and thought to get to heaven by means thereof. But our Lord declares, that none shall ever come there, but those who have a better righteousness, a righteousness that exceeds a Pharisaical righteousness, i. e. such a righteousness that every way answers to all the extensive requirements of the law, in heart, lip, and life; and this is no other than the righteousness of Christ, imputed to poor sinners, or made theirs by imputation; in which, being completely justified, according to law and justice, they shall, as righteous persons, be admitted into the kingdom of heaven, or into the glory of the heavenly state; while all those who trust in their own righteousness, and think they have done many wonderful works, which they dare plead for acceptance with God, shall be sent away from Christ, into eternal misery, with a Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity, Matth. vii. 22.

And as our Lord, in this his sermon upon the mount, had been expounding the law of God, in its spirituality, as extending to the heart, as well as life; and asserting the necessity of keeping the commandments, in the same extensive manner that the law required, in order to make a person righteous; so, in the conclusion thereof, he says, Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, who built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house: and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock, ver. 24, 25. These sayings of our Lord contain the substance of the moral law, and the doing of them unto righteousness before God, is by believing; as faith lays hold on Christ, who has obeyed the law perfectly, as the representative of his people: on which account, they may be said to have done, or fulfilled, the law in him; his obedience being imputed unto them, for their complete justification before God. As the surety's payment, among men, is accounted to the debtor, and is the same, in the eye of the law, and as effectual for his full discharge, as if he himself had paid the debt. And he that thus doth the law, or these sayings of Christ, he likens him unto a wise man, who built his house upon a rock. It is a piece of natural wisdom, to lay a good foundation for a stately structure; and the most firm that any house can be built on, is that of a rock. And he that is spiritually wise, wise unto salvation, lays the whole stress of it, and builds all his hope of life, upon Christ, the Rock of ages; in which it appears, that he is wise indeed. For as in nature, a house that is built upon a rock, will stand the storm: so the soul that is built upon Christ, shall never be removed: The rain may descend, the floods come, and the winds beat; afflictions, temptations, and trials of all kinds, may beat vehemently against that soul; but shall never destroy its salvation, nor make it ashamed of its hope. No; Christ, the Rock of immutability, will hold it unshaken, in a state of salvation, through life, through death, at judgment, and for ever. Such a soul stands, as immoveable, in the grace of justification, and life, as the rock itself, on which it is founded. Because I live, saith our Lord, ye shall live also, John xiv. 19. Christ's life is the life of that soul, that depends upon him alone, for all its justification, and eternal salvation. And therefore the wisdom of faith is great indeed! in that it foresees the storm, and thus provides against it.

But he, saith our Lord, that heareth these sayings of mine, and doth them not, (i. e. that heareth the law's requirements, and endeavours to obey the same, for righteousness before God, and so doth them not; because his obedience cannot come up to that perfection which the law requires), shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell, and great was the fall of it, ver. 26. 27. Oh, the folly of that poor sinner, who lays the stress of his salvation, and builds his hope of life, upon his own righteousness! For this sandy foundation cannot endure the storms of divine wrath, which shall be revealed from heaven against all unrighteousness of men; nor secure the soul from being driven away, by the tempest of God's anger, and the floods of his indignation, into the abyss of eternal misery. The house fell, that was thus built upon the sand, and great was the fall of it! Oh, what a miserable disappointment will it be to that soul, that goes down to the chambers of eternal death, with this lie of his own righteousness in his right hand; from which he had all along hoped for eternal life! when this way that seemed right to him in his own eyes, as if it would lead him to everlasting life, (by his depending thereon), shall end in eternal death! The hope of the hypocrite (or of him that trusts in himself, that he is righteous, by his own external performances, when yet his heart is far from that conformity to God, which the law requires), shall perish at the giving up of the ghost. His hope (i. e. his salvation hoped for) shall, then, be cut off. He shall lean upon his house, (i. e. his own righteousness, which he had raised up, in his imagination, to shelter him from the storm of divine vengeance,) but it shall not stand; he shall hold it fast, but it shall not endure, Job viii. 13, 14, 15. No, this house of his shall be as soon destroyed, by the storm of God's indignation, as a spider's web is swept down, by the besom that comes against it; and the miserable soul, that trusted herein, shall be driven away into eternal perdition. Thus an error in the foundation will prove fatal to the building; and therefore the knowledge of Christ, as the alone way of a sinner's justification, and life, must need be of the highest importance; since no other refuge can stand the storm, but Christ, as THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS, this glorious hiding-place, which God has prepared for poor sinners, whither they may run, and be for ever safe. And as for those who live and die in ignorance of, and non-submission to the righteousness of Christ, they will certainly die in their sins, and perish for ever. They will all be found filthy, at the day of judgment, that have not been enabled to believe in Christ's blood, for cleansing from all sin; they will all be found unjust, at that awful day, that have not believed in the Redeemer's righteousness, for their justification before God; and so must remain for ever. For concerning them, it will then be said, He that is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is unjust, let him be unjust still; i. e. let him abide so, to an endless eternity. But,

4. Since there is but one way for a sinner to be justified before God, and that is by the obedience of Christ alone; this informs us, what great folly those persons are guilty of, who press poor sinners to obey the law, to make themselves righteous in the sight of God, when there is no law given that can give life unto them; and how dangerous it is for souls, to sit under such a ministry, that naturally misleads them; since while the blind leads the blind, both fall into the ditch. If there had been a law given that could have given life, says the apostle, verily righteousness should have been by the law, Gal. iii. 21. But as there is no law given that can give life to a sinner; it is a vain, foolish thing, to press such a soul, to get a righteousness by his own performances, which was never appointed of God, nor can be attained by man. No; the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise (of life) by faith of Jesus Christ (as a sinner's righteousness) might be given to them that believe, ver. 22. And those who receive it not in this way, shall never attain it in any other, but must go without it for ever. The labour of the foolish, says the wise man, wearieth every one of them, because he knoweth not how to go to the city, Eccles. x. 15. A man may labour all his days, to make himself righteous before God, by his own performances, and to make his peace with him, by his legal repentance, and humiliation for sin; and yet lose all his labour at last, and so weary himself in vain, being never able to reach that city, that eternal rest, which God has prepared for his people; because he knoweth not Christ, the only way that leads thither; and so walks not by faith, in him, as such. All men by nature are ignorant of Christ's righteousness, as it is God's way of justifying and saving a sinner; and it is dangerous for souls, to sit under such a ministry, that presseth doing, and persuades them their safety lies there, instead of believing. For how shall they believe, saith the apostle, in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent? Rom. x. 14, 15. How shall poor souls believe in Christ for justification, when they have never heard of his righteousness, which is the proper object of faith? And how shall they hear, without a preacher of that gospel that declares it? And how shall they preach the gospel to others, who have never seen that salvation it reveals for sinners, by the righteousness of Christ, themselves? How shall they declare the glory and efficacy thereof to others, that have never seen, nor experienced it themselves? And how does it appear, that they are sent by Christ, to preach the gospel, who neither know, nor proclaim his righteousness, for the justification of a sinner, which is such a main doctrine thereof? Have we not reason to fear, that many of those who are called ministers of the gospel, are rather preachers of Moses, than of Christ? and that their ministry rather tends to lead souls to the bondage and death of the law, than to the liberty and life of the gospel? But how beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, that bring glad tidings of good things! that publish that peace with God, which was made for sinners alone, by the blood of Christ's cross; and is possessed only by faith in him! that proclaim the glad tidings of those good things, which God has prepared, to be enjoyed by sinners, through the justifying righteousness of his Son! And how great is the privilege of those souls, who sit under a gospel-ministry; since this is the means appointed of God, to work faith in them, and to bring salvation to them! Once more,

5. Since the justification of a sinner is by the righteousness of Christ, imputed to him, and received by faith alone; we may hence learn, how great the obligation of the justified ones is, to live to the glory of that grace, which has so freely and fully justified them, in and through Christ, unto eternal life by him! When the apostle had asserted the justification and salvation of God's people, both Jews and Gentiles, to be wholly of his free mercy, in and through Christ, Rom. xi. 32. and admired the riches of his wisdom, which was so brightly displayed in the dispensations of his mercy towards them, ver. 33. he thus concludes his discourse, ver. 36. For of him, and through him, and to him are all things; to whom be glory for ever, Amen. 'Tis as if he should say, Since all things, relating to the justification and salvation of God's people, are of him, and through him, it is meet that the glory of all should, by them, be given to him. And therefore when he applies this doctrine of God's free mercy in Christ, to them who had obtained it, he thus addresseth them, chap. xii. 1. I beseech you therefore, brethren by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. I beseech [you,] says he, you that have obtained mercy, [therefore,] or, since it is God's design, to glorify his mercy, in the salvation of sinners, that you give him the glory of it; [by the mercies of God,] those mercies of God, which you are partakers of, in the forgiveness of all your sins, and in the justification of your persons, [that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God,] that ye continually offer up yourselves, as a whole burnt-offering, in the flames of love, unto him that hath loved you, in all holy and acceptable obedience, to the glory of that God, who has thus had mercy upon you; [which is your reasonable service.] For it is a most reasonable thing, or a thing for which there is the highest reason, that you should ever serve the Lord, to the glory of that grace, by which you are freely justified, and shall be eternally glorified. And thus, the apostle Peter, 1 Pet. ii. 9. But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, (who are washed from all your sins in Christ's blood, and clothed with his righteousness,) an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light. And you know, says the apostle Paul, how we exhorted and comforted, and charged every one of you (i. e. of you, justified, saved ones,) that ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory, 1 Thess. ii. 11, 12. And in short, as it was God's design to get himself glory, in the justification of sinners, by the righteousness of Jesus Christ; so the display thereof, throughout the whole gospel, lays them under the highest obligation to live to his praise. Does God the Father

Father impute the obedience of his Son to poor ſinners? did God the Son obey in life and in death for them? and does God the Spirit reveal and apply this righteouſneſs to them; and enable them to receive the ſame, as a free gift of grace, unto their eternal life in glory? What thanks, what praiſe, is due to God, in each of his glorious perſons, for this abundant grace! And let the language of the juſtified ones, in heart, lip, and life, in all kind of holy obedience, both now and always be, Thanks be unto God, for the grace of JUSTIFICATION! for this his unſpeakable GIFT! 2 Cor. ix. 15. Amen! Hallelujah!

A

DEFENCE

OF

THERON AND ASPASIO,

AGAINST THE

Objections contained in a late Treatiſe, entitled, Letters on THERON and ASPASIO.

TO WHICH IS PREFIXED,

A ſeries of LETTERS from MR HERVEY, to the Author, authenticating this Defence with his entire approbation, and manifeſting it to be the only one that can be preſented to the Public with that authority.

PREFACE.

THE intention of prefixing Mr Hervey's letters to this reply, is, in fact, to recommend it to the attention of the public, as ſuch a farther explication and defence of Theron and Aſpaſio, as was quite agreeable to his own judgment; ſuch as (in ſubſtance) would have appeared in the world, in his elegant and entertaining manner of addreſs, had it pleaſed the Sovereign Diſpoſer of all events to have continued him in life, and ſuch as the preſent ſituation of his writings require.

It has been already remarked, in the public intimation of printing Mr Hervey's letters, that "when writers of diſtinguiſhed "ſuperiority have gained our admiration and applauſe, we are "fond of penetrating into their more retired apartments, and "aſſociating with them in the ſequeſtered walks of private life." A curioſity of this nature cannot be more uſefully gratified; we cannot be uſhered into Mr Hervey's company to better purpoſe, than to hear him declare what he himſelf counted moſt valuable in all his writings; that which was his main deſign, and to which he would have his readers continually advert; thoſe ſentiments, which (as he expreſſes it in one of his letters) "I wiſh to have "written on my heart; ſuch as I wiſh to ſpeak and teach while I "live; and in my writings (if my writings ſurvive me) to teſtify "when I am dead." More eſpecially, if what he ſo eſteemed is the doctrine of our Lord and his apoſtles, otherwiſe Mr Hervey's eſteem will be but of ſmall account.

It ſeems the more neceſſary that he ſhould be thus made to ſpeak for himſelf, ſince ſome who have diſtinguiſhed themſelves as his peculiar friends, and as very angry with Mr Sandeman in his behalf, and are at the ſame time very likely to be no friends to his defence. The reaſon is, whatever may be the motive for their profeſſed regard, they have for many years paſt, and do unto this day, manifeſt great ignorance, if not great enmity, in reſpect of the principles which formed and influenced Mr Hervey's faith and practice; and on which he ventured his eternal concerns; ſtigmatizing, or, I ſhould rather ſay, honouring them, with the ſame kind of reproaches as the ancient oppoſers of Chriſtianity caſt upon our Lord and his diſciples. Perhaps it may awaken the attention of ſome to inquire of the unerring oracles, What is truth? when they find, by theſe letters, that there is no dependence to be placed elſewhere; and that thoſe in whom they have truſted as ſpiritual guides, applaud, or cenſure, with very little judgment, or with a worſe deſign.

After all, I am not ſo ſanguine in my expectation, as to think that by this, or any other method, the deſpiſed truth of the goſpel will prevail with many, againſt the ſtream of the reputed devout and highly eſteemed of this world. We muſt remember the treatment which our Lord and his diſciples met with; and as the world is not better now than it was in thoſe days, we have little reaſon to expect better ſucceſs.

Mr Hervey began to find he had been in a miſtake in this reſpect, and would have publicly acknowledged as much, had he lived but a few months longer. He began to be acquainted with that true grace of God, which is contrary to the courſe of this world, in its devoutest form, for upwards of twelve years before our correſpondence commenced. He was willing to recommend it to their conſideration, and (if poſſible) make it appear lovely to their view. He dreſſed it up with all the beauties of eloquence, and all the winning arts of perſuaſion. He concealed whatever he thought might give his readers diſguſt, and even entreated his friend to conceal their correſpondence for the preſent, leſt the power of prejudice (raiſed by his profeſſed friends) ſhould prevent them from looking into his books: and all this in hopes to prevail, and give the deſpiſed goſpel of Jeſus a recommending appearance in their eyes. But alas! he died before he had accompliſhed this deſign; and perhaps, had he lived to the age of Methuſelah, he would never have brought it to paſs. So that we can only look upon this as his fervent deſire, that the important truth, in which he had found all he wanted, ſhould be as great a bleſſing to others as it had been to him. He gained a return of compliment for his favourable ſentiments and kind behaviour, but it was in vain for him to expect to prevail any farther.

of

His notion was, as he himſelf expreſſes it, that "the taſte "of the preſent age is ſomewhat like the humour of children, "their milk muſt be ſugared, their wine ſpiced, and their ne"ceſſary food garniſhed with flowers and enriched with ſweet"meats." His deſire that what he called his principal point might be, if poſſible, made thus palatable, engaged him in ſeveral correſpondencies, ſuited to the embelliſhment of his works; his ſuperiority, as a writer, cauſed many to covet an acquaintance and friendſhip with him; and his tender and complaiſant behaviour, even to thoſe who differed, gave ſome of them hopes of prevailing with him, or by him, to advance their own various and oppoſite ſentiments. Filled with theſe hopes, their behaviour towards him was accordingly reſpectful; which, together with his retired ſituation in life, prevented him, in a great meaſure, from diſcerning their enmity to his principles. Taking it for granted they meant as they ſpake, he judged them aiming to promote the ſame important cauſe. Had this been fact, they would have ſtill merited the regard he paid them; their profeſſed zeal would have been commendable, had it been ſubſervient to the true grace of God for which he pleaded; but bears as different an aſpect when their enmity and oppoſition thereto is diſcovered; even as Paul's moſt hardened wickedneſs, was to the piety and zeal of his Phariſaic ſtate.

No ſooner was he dead than conſultations were on foot, tending to bury his principles as well as him. His private letters were publicly advertiſed for, in order to be printed; which, by the uſe made of them, ſeems not done with any deſign to eſtabliſh the truths he contended for, but to pick out, if poſſible, ſomething to their diſadvantage; and, what is ſtill more unworthy, to eſtabliſh their own characters in ſuch attempts on the encomiums he had at one time or other beſtowed on them, for want of ſeeing them properly; for want of knowing that their ruling principle was a fixed enmity to that goſpel which was his ſole delight. Beſides this, ſeveral reports were ſpread, detrimental to the important truth he had ſo contended for. And knowing that all and every one of them could be fully diſproved by Mr Hervey's own hand-writing, I counted it my duty to print the defence, and to publiſh the letters to the author, to authenticate it with Mr Hervey's approbation. Though I was apprehenſive, at the ſame time, it might carry the appearance of oſtentation, to ſuch as did not know what was in hand, and ſo could not be ſenſible that the ſupport of the important truth, which ſhines through all his works, depended, in ſome meaſure, on the publication of theſe letters.

Notwithſtanding all this, the perſons concerned in the publication of two volumes, under the title of The letters of the late Rev. Mr James Hervey, have exerted themſelves, with uncommon boldneſs, in diſfiguring his principles; and, at the ſame time, introduce their own. This is evidently manifeſt from ſeveral notes annexed to theſe letters*. In theſe volumes they have inſinuated that the author of the defence of Theron and Aſpaſio was "on the Antinomian ſide of the queſtion, and that "Mr Hervey by no means approved of his ſentiments." Upon this there immediately appeared in the Gazetteer, Aug. 22. and London Chronicle, Aug. 26. a letter to the editor and publiſher of theſe volumes, ſignifying the ſhocking appearance of ſlander and detraction in volumes under the name of a man ſo averſe to ſuch proceedings; and proving, from Mr Hervey's own words, the moſt apparent falſehood in their aſſertions; there being no letter in the whole two volumes, ſo expreſſive of fameneſs of ſentiment, as the letters to the author of the defence of Theron and Aſpaſio; and concluding with theſe words, "The "ſecret ſtabs that are given to characters, by modern pretenders "to piety, would make a court of juſtice bluſh. And I am "perſuaded the real friends to Mr Hervey's memory, or writ"ings, will not be pleaſed to find his name made ſubſervient "to ſuch baſe purpoſes." The proceedings are a little more open, in the Gentleman's Magazine for Auguſt; where we are told, that Mr Hervey himſelf "is by no means free of the "charge of ſtretching the principles of Calvin into Antinomian"iſm," p. 379. It is very evident Mr Hervey concerned himſelf with no Calviniſtical or Arminian diſputes. In one of his letters ſpeaking of Mr W——y's conduct, he ſays, "I am ſome"times apprehenſive that he would draw me into a diſpute "about particular redemption. I know he can ſay ſtartling and "horrid things on this ſubject; and this, perhaps, might be the "moſt effectual method to prejudice people againſt my prin"cipal point."

As to the charge of Antinomianiſm, unleſs the particular errors are pointed out, (which may as well be done without the aſſiſtance of reproachful names), it is no more than a very vague uncertain ſound, made uſe of by ſome leaders in the various claſſes of religious people as a political bugbear, whereby they diſguiſe and diſfigure the party they intend to reproach*. It is a term not confined to any dictionary-interpretation, but admits of a variety of definitions, according to the various ſentiments of the perſons who uſe it, from the moſt profeſſed preachers of Chriſt, down to the Monthly Reviewers, who eſteem no better of any that concern themſelves with the name of Jeſus, farther than what becomes a decent complaiſance to the profeſſion of their country. Theſe gentlemen can read the Bible as well as theſe volumes, "without the leaſt intellectual im"provement" in the doctrine of Chriſt; and can alſo give a ſolid reaſon for it, viz. that they have no taſte for this kind of reading; it is very diſagreeable to them. They judge, "that one "virtuous deſign promoted, one good action done, or one bad "habit ſubdued, is worth more than all ſuch trifling conſidera"tions" as the death and reſurrection of Jeſus. The ſcripture-language concerning ſalvation only by Chriſt muſt be Antinomianiſm in their eſteem. They expect to be ſaved in doing well; and the ſcripture aſſures them, that if they do well, they ſhall be accepted. Our Saviour declares, he never came to interrupt ſuch people in their good intentions; but to ſave the loſt, and worthleſs, ſuch as ought to periſh, according to every rule of equity; and the real goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt will ever prove fooliſhneſs, a ſtone of ſtumbling, and rock of offence, to any but theſe ſort of people.

Any one who has read the letters on Theron and Aſpaſio, or ever ſeen Mr Hervey's ſentiments of that author, will eaſily perceive that a reply to that performance was abſolutely neceſſary, or elſe, as he obſerves in one of his letters, "what is "not confuted by argument, is confirmed by ſilence!" It was

* When theſe religious politicians have raiſed an alarm, Beware of the Antinomians! the ignorant multitude are upon the inquiry to know, what this dreadful thing called Antinomianiſm is; they are told a hundred bugbear tales of monſters in human ſhape: when they inquire farther who are Antinomians, meaning who are the perſons ſo abandoned as to hold ſuch dreadful opinions or practices, they have nothing more to do, than to place the name upon whom they pleaſe; and it follows of courſe, by this artful ſhift, that the credulous and deceived multitude believe the perſons, ſo pointed out, to be guilty of whatever has been charged under that name. Were it not for this piece of artifice, they might perhaps be obliged, honeſtly and fairly, to point out the particular errors of thoſe they diſlike and accuſe; and, in ſo doing, might manifeſt, that they themſelves know not what they ſay, nor whereof they affirm.

Mr Hervey has very properly exhibited ſuch vain declaimers in the following note:

"This puts me in mind of what Theodorus replied to Philocles; who "was often inſinuating, that he preached licentious doctrine; becauſe "he enlarged, with peculiar aſſiduity, upon faith in JESUS CHRIST; "and frequently choſe ſuch texts as, Believe in the Lord Jeſus, and thou "ſhalt be ſaved."

"I preach ſalvation by JESUS CHRIST; and give me leave to aſk, "whether you know what ſalvation by CHRIST means? Philocles "pauſed; he begun to bluſh; would have eluded the queſtion, and de"clined an anſwer. No, ſaid Theodorus, you muſt permit me to inſiſt "upon a reply. Becauſe, if it be a right one, it will juſtify me and my "conduct: if it be a wrong one, it will prove, that you blame you know "not what; and have more reaſon to inform yourſelf, than to cenſure "others.

"This diſconcerted him ſtill more. Upon which Theodorus proceed"ed: Salvation by CHRIST means, not only a deliverance from the "guilt, but alſo from the power of ſin. He gave himſelf for us, that "he might redeem us from all iniquity; redeem us from our vain converſation, as well as deliver us from the wrath to come.—Go now, Phi"locles, and tell the world, that by teaching theſe doctrines, I promote "the cauſe of licentiouſneſs. And you will be juſt as rational, juſt as "candid, juſt as true, as if you ſhould affirm, that the firemen, by playing "the engine, and pouring in water, burnt your houſe to the ground, "and laid your furniture in aſhes." Note, vol. II. dial. x. p. 357.

* Alſo theſe notes are thrown out of this edition of our author's works.

alſo

ble necessary, if possible, that this defence should be by himself, or by his approbation; and also that the public should be ascertained of this, that so it may be considered as a proper and necessary supplement to his volumes. As these particulars can be so plainly discovered by the letters prefixed, it is well that Mr Hervey was so open in his declarations.

As to our debate with Mr Sandeman, it seems to stand as follows:

The turning-point from despair to good hope, he observes, is the hinge of the controversy; and this point is with Mr Sandeman the finished work of Christ, as it is fully sufficient to vindicate the divine justice in saving the most guilty. All the hope he has by this, is represented by the hope a man has from hearing of the plentiful importation of corn in the time of famine; while it yet remains a hazard whether he shall ever obtain any; and his expectation to obtain, is by labouring in painful desire and fear till crowned with enjoyment.

Aspasio's turning-point is the finished work of Christ, revealed in the gracious declarations of the gospel, not only as supporting the divine justice in saving the most guilty, but also as the sufficient object of the sinner's immediate trust and confidence, agreeable to the repeated divine assurances that such shall not be confounded or disappointed. And the works and labour of love Aspasio pleads for, are works of love to God thus manifested and trusted in.

Aspasio's former opponents have objected to this immediate trust of a sinner upon Christ alone for everlasting life, by pleading for what they have conceived to be previously necessary, under the names of faith, repentance, sanctification begun, &c.

Mr Sandeman has undertook to prove, that all true sanctification, conversion, faith, &c. springs solely from the truth of Christ's sufficiency for the most guilty, without any addition whatever, as the central point of divine revelation, and that all other religion is not any part of Christianity; not any part of that doctrine which came from heaven; but only the vain efforts of the natural man to lower the divine character of the infinitely righteous and just God, and quiet his guilty conscience with a righteousness insufficient, or, in other words, a righteousness stained with sin; and that the names of conversion, faith, sanctification, applied to this kind of religion, are only fitted to deceive; and supposing our appropriation or trust to be a denial of this sufficiency of Christ alone, he opposes that also. This then is what we are concerned to defend.

To this purpose I have endeavoured to shew, that, in trusting to the sufficient righteousness of Christ alone for everlasting life, to keep clear of the charge of denying the sufficient righteousness, and of adding or mixing another righteousness with it. We may rather ask, How does it appear that any man believes it to be sufficient, when he dare not trust his soul upon it, but waits in painful desire and fear, to discover himself possessed of the distinguishing qualities of a believer? And as he carefully separates what he believes, from all foundation of hope or confidence therein for everlasting life, he appears to us involved in the absurdity of hoping for eternal life by Christ, because he discovers himself without any foundation of hope, either in himself, or in the gospel he believes.

He may say, "he trusts to be saved by what Christ has done, "if saved at all;" but that very if signifies, that he does not trust upon what Christ has done, but is waiting to discover something else as a more proper ground of his confidence. And what is that something else, but the difference he discovers betwixt himself and other sinners? So that after all our flourishes against self-dependence and Pharisaic doctrine, if we are not upon our guard, we shall be at last settled on no other foundation.

Mr Sandeman, in endeavouring to prove that his view of the gospel "quiets the guilty conscience of a man as soon as he "knows it," acknowledges with us, that the gospel is designed for that end; but fails in his attempt to make out, that the guilty conscience of that man is quieted who discovers no foundation in what he believes, to trust in Christ's righteousness for everlasting life. He supposes, that the uneasiness and dread of conscience arises only from the appearing impossibility of a just God being a Saviour; from whence he infers, that the revelation of a righteousness removing this seeming impossibility, brings the rest and peace the scripture speaks of; without revealing any ground for trust and confidence in that righteousness. But this supposition is not true; few or none are troubled with such apprehensions, nor does the scripture address men as though they were. It is self-evident, that the cause of our dread is an apprehension of our want of a righteousness acceptable to the divine purity; and what relieves must be our having such a righteousness either in ourselves, or by God's free gift. This Mr S——n himself seems to acknowledge, when he talks of "labouring in painful desire and fear," as the effect of his cramped view of the gospel. For why is this the effect? but because what he believes does not afford the proper satisfaction.

Mr Sandeman's jealousy is, lest we, by pleading thus for a sinner's trust and confidence on Christ, should lead man into a self-dependence on his doing something to relieve himself from his dreadful circumstances, instead of being supported only by what Christ has already done. But how easy is it to perceive, that no man is or can be supported by what Christ has already done, but he that discovers it the object of his trust and confidence for everlasting life; and that so to depend on Christ, and what he has done, is the very opposite of all self-dependence, and inconsistent with our depending on our doing any thing either present or future?

It is true, a man that is at an entire uncertainty without any dependence whatever, is as clear of self-dependence, as he is of dependence on what Christ has done. So a man that neither eats nor drinks, is as much out of danger of dying with gluttony and excess, as he is of being poisoned with unwholesome food. But how long can a man live thus? And how long can a man support without having some dependence or other for his soul? It is as natural for the mind of man to depend on something against the fears of hereafter, as it is for his body to gravitate or sink till it meets with a proper support. Hence we find, that those who depend not on the truth, depend on some falsehood or other which they suppose to be true; and when a man is beat off from one false dependence, he is sinking to despair till he finds another, or is relieved by the real truth. And that truth which relieves, must reveal a foundation of dependence for everlasting life; to attempt to rest short of this, is to attempt to build a castle in the air. The discovery, that "God may, if he pleases, have mercy upon me as I at present stand," although it tends to remove the Pharisaic wish or want to know that I am distinguished from others, yet leaves me unsupported as to original and real dread of conscience arising from my personal deficiency. And as such slight the divine warrant for the sinner's trust and confidence in Christ's sufficient righteousness, they naturally sink to the hope of eternal life, not by what Christ has done, or what the gospel declares, but a hope that they are the sheep of Christ who hear his voice, which is in fact only a hope in themselves.

The generality of mankind are but little concerned about the truth of the foundation of their peace of conscience: so they have got some hope, it is enough; they do not care to be disturbed from it with such a controversy as this; especially if they can but conceit themselves holy, or feel themselves happy; not considering, that if their hope is founded on falsehood, their whole religion is a deceit: But they who are taught of God, are not led by fond conjectures; they will not be satisfied with any other reason of their hope than the voice of that God who speaks in the conscience; and Christ the Saviour of the guilty given to be trusted in, is the only foundation that God has laid in Zion.

I have only to add, that the manner in which the subject is treated, that is, by short remarks on the passages we are concerned with, was the way in which the subject was treated for Mr Hervey's view; and as I could think of no shorter method of defence, it is so presented to the public.

LETTERS

FROM

MR HERVEY

TO

THE AUTHOR.

Dear SIR,

LAST night I received your kind letter *; and this morning I have but a moment's space, in which to acknowledge it. However, I cannot neglect the first opportunity.——Are you the author that has given us an abridgment of Mr Marshall? Truly, I think, you have well bestowed your labour, and well executed your work. I wish you had not given yourself the trouble of sending me the book, because I have it, and highly prize it.—The abridgment I mean.

I should be very glad if you would read that dialogue you mention with a critical attention, if you would point out the places where you think I am confused in my apprehensions, injudicious in method, or weak in argument. As you have so thoroughly studied the point, and so often taught the doctrine you must easily see where the essay lies most open to objection, and where the point might receive additional strength.—You would oblige me, if you would do this with the utmost impartiality and freedom; and, I hope, you would do service to the truth as it is in JESUS. Several persons, I find, are dissatisfied with my opinion on this head. Do, Sir, review dialogue xvi, and favour me with your free remarks, and friendly improvements. Whatever of this kind is done, I beg may be done speedily; because a new edition is in the press, and the printers will soon come to that part.—When I hear from you again, I will speak my sentiments with relation to your well-calculated design of an evangelical library †. At present I have leisure only to assure you, that I am,

Dear SIR,

Your affectionate friend in JESUS CHRIST,

Weston, April 15. JAMES HERVEY.

Dear SIR,

I Received your present by the coach; I thank you for it; and I am much pleased with it.—The doctrine ‡ which you approve in my essay, and have clearly displayed and fully proved in your own writings, is not relished by every body; no, not by many pious people. I take the liberty to send you a couple of letters containing objections ‖. I wish you would be so kind as to consider them, and in your concise way, which I much admire, to make your remarks upon them.—One of the letters, in case it exactly coincided with my sentiments, I should think too diffuse and prolix. I love to have the force and spirit of a subject contracted into a small compass, and exhibited to our minds in one clear and easy view. Long discourses, and protracted arguments, dissipate the attention and overwhelm the memory.—I think you are very happy in expressing yourself with a brevity that is striking, yet perspicuous.

I am not shaken in my own opinion by these attacks; but I should be glad to deliver it more clearly, and establish it more firmly in another edition. If you can spare a little time from your own labours, I hope you will gratify me in this request; and I trust HE, whom you serve, will make it a blessing to me and to others.

I would beg of you to return these letters, and (if the LORD should enable you) with free observations on the MOST MATERIAL points, as soon as POSSIBLE; because our new edition goes on apace, and will soon come to dialogue xvi. I have some thoughts of enlarging it a little, and dividing it into two dialogues. At present it is rather too long to be read at once.

I heartily wish you success in your projected work. I assure

* When I perceived by his first edition of Theron and Aspasio, that he had so publicly disowned the truths for which I had incurred the displeasure of many of his professed friends and admirers, I wrote to him, signifying my fellowship with him in the despised truth.

† An intended collection of the most evangelical pieces from the beginning of the reformation down to the present day. And as nothing was designed but the marrow of each performance, so he judged it might be comprized in six volumes, and desired that an abridgment of Theron and Aspasio might have a place in one volume of it.

‡ This was a summary of doctrine, extracted from Theron and Aspasio, in Aspasio's own words.

‖ These objections were adding no revealed truth to our minds, but on the contrary were only attempting to overthrow the solid foundation laid for the hope, confidence, and salvation of guilty sinners; that which makes the gospel glad tidings indeed to such. They allowed, that the free and unconditional nature of the divine declarations concerning Christ, as an object of trust and confidence, was the only foundation upon which trust or confidence could be established; but then they immediately contradicted this freeness of the divine grant, by clogging it with the prerequisites of seriousness, sensibility of need, real desires, and in short every qualification that human pride could presume upon the divine favour with, provided no Saviour had ever been revealed: Whereas the man taught of God is made sensible, that no qualification in him is to be a stepping-stone to the Redeemer's righteousness. His real desire is daily to live by that righteousness, not by his own; and he is serious in this matter as being of the greatest importance, counting all things but loss and dung, that he may win Christ, and be found in him, not having on his own righteousness which is of the law. They allowed the gospel-declarations contained what might be compared "to a free welcome to an entertainment, by a friend's invitation;" but denied that this gave them leave to believe that this entertainment was theirs; and only served as an inducement for them to do something, called reception, in order to found a title. They were answered, it was not theirs as a property in their disposal to give away, or trifle with: but theirs to partake of, it certainly was, by virtue of the invitation. And this partaking of Christ, and salvation in him, could be neither more nor less, than living by him in virtue of these declarations, instead of seeking a title by inherent qualifications; which would be, in fact, living by our own righteousness, and not by him. That if they allowed he was free for us to trust in, then the trust and confidence we pleaded for was vindicated as no presumption, but rather an obedience to our divinely-gracious Benefactor. The difference between Mr Hervey and them, lay in their different sentiments about what was the truth of the gospel: what they counted gospel, left them to seek for a something in themselves under the name of faith, on account of which they might conclude themselves saved persons. What Mr Hervey counted gospel, was the revelation of the divine righteousness to the most guilty, warranting their immediate trust and confidence therein; assuring them such confidence should not be disappointed. It is easy to perceive, that such confidence must be essential to the real belief of such doctrine; as, on the other hand, no assurance or confidence can be essential to the belief of that doctrine which leaves me to seek for my ground of confidence in a something more than what Christ has already done, and God has so freely presented to me. Mr Hervey's view was not to establish a standard for the hope of salvation of this kind, as depending upon our inherent qualifications, whether called convictions, faith, repentance, or by any other name; but rather to establish an important, comfortable, precious truth, concerning an open door of access to God by what Christ has done, and salvation in him, granted to the most guilty, on a supposition that every mouth is stopped, and all the world (in every pretension or plea unto righteousness) become perfectly on a level before him. This truth he apprehended was, when received, the conviction and faith of every true believer, and the foundation of immediate trust and confidence, and as such was necessary and essential to solid peace of conscience, and true holiness of heart and life; yet, at the same time, entirely opposite to the peace and holiness of men of the Pharisaic spirit. In short, we seemed to be only upon the old apostolic or reformation dispute still, viz. whether we are to be justified by faith in Christ without works? or whether we are first to find some righteousness in ourselves?

you,

you: it is my opinion, that such a work, if well executed, will be one of the most valuable services to the present age. You will, I hope, be too hasty. Mr W—— has huddled over his performance in a most precipitate, and therefore most imperfect, manner. One would think his aim was, not to select the best and noblest passages, but to reprint those which came first to hand.—If I live to see another edition of Theron and Aspasio published, I will desire your acceptance of a set; and I hope it will be improved and enriched with your observations: which will be a favour acknowledged by,

Dear SIR,

Your affectionate friend in JESUS CHRIST,

JAMES HERVEY.

P. S. Pray don't spare my own performance; but freely animadvert upon Aspasio. I am sensible he sometimes speaks unguardedly, and sometimes seems inconsistent with himself.

Weston-Favell, Apr. 22. 1755.

Dear SIR,

I Received your last valuable letter, and sincerely thank you for the judicious observations it contained.—Your other letter also, which conveyed an answer to ——, came safe to hand.—How is it, dear Sir, that godly * people are so averse to this doctrine †? I have another letter from ——, containing remarks upon, and objections to, Mr Marshall. I would transmit it to you by this conveyance, but I remember you have already work upon your hands. In my next it shall wait upon you. My only aim, I trust, is to find out the truth as it is in JESUS; which, at present, I am convinced is with you. There is so much clearness and simplicity in your doctrine, it is so suitable to the goodness of GOD, and so eminently conducive to the comfort, recovery, and happiness of a sinner, that I cannot be persuaded to relinquish it.—I should be glad to maintain it in a convincing, yet the most inoffensive manner. I propose to allot two dialogues for this very important subject. How, in what form and order would you advise me to proceed? Pray don't scruple to express yourself with all possible freedom. Direct and correct, as a friend and fellow-labourer ‡, &c.

Dear SIR,

LAST night I received the favour of your two packets; and, I assure you, a real favour I esteem them. Your answers are so clear, so consistent, so comfortable; they very much tend to establish my mind.—I find by your experience, the "account "I mean of GOD's dealings with your soul," that you have incurred (but surely without any just cause) the displeasure of many. Now, as this is the case, my dear Sir, let us act prudently; be wise as serpents. Don't you think, I beg of you, that I am ashamed of your friendship. GOD forbid! But as I have some concern, and you have a greater zeal for these precious doctrines, let us use the most probable means to spread them. You know the power of prejudice is great; is almost incredible. Many people, were they to know, that you and I have been laying our counsels together, perhaps would never look into my book. We seem now to have a favourable opportunity of diffusing these sacred and delightful truths ||. My books have been well spoken of in three of the London Magazines successively; and there is printing a new edition. The LORD JESUS, the WONDERFUL COUNSELLOR, direct us in this truly-important affair.—I will now, relying on his unerring SPIRIT, set about preparing the xviith dialogue for the press; and I should be very desirous to have it pass under your examination before it is launched into the world. You will give me leave to expect an answer; and let me know from time to time, where a letter may find you, sent by,

Dear SIR,

Your obliged and affectionate brother in JESUS CHRIST,

Weston, May 8. J. HERVEY.

Dear SIR,

I Have been so poorly in my health, and so much engaged in company, that I could not possibly get the inclosed ready before this time: which is the cause, the only cause, of my deferring my thanks for your last favour.

As to the doctrine under consideration, I have given a favourable and attentive ear to all that is said against it; and yet the more it is attacked, the more I am convinced of its truth. The LORD JESUS enable me to deliver and testify, with clearness of sentiment, and meekness of temper, what I am persuaded in my own conscience, is the true gospel of grace!—The inclosed paper contains some of the alterations which I propose to make. Another sheet will comprise the remainder. Let me desire you, dear Sir, to examine them, and remark upon them, as freely and impartially as you have done upon other papers. Pray treat me with a kind severity. Whatever sentence or expression appears wrong, I beg of you, animadvert, correct, spare it not. I assure you, I can bear to be told, (by your friendly pen at least,) this is not evangelical; here you contradict yourself; this is redundant, and that ambiguous.—Please to make little marks of reference in the MS. and pen down your observations on a separate paper.

I think to drop my first design of dividing the essay into two dialogues, and answering the various objections. That I intend to postpone for the present; and would print no more than is needful to explain, establish, and guard the tenet.—I think to add in a note, a friendly invitation to any serious and ingenuous person on the other side of the question, to debate and sift this very important point; professing, that if it can be proved erroneous, I will retract and renounce it, not only without reluctance, but with pleasure and thankfulness. Truth, the truth of the gospel, is my pearl; where-ever I find it, thither (without respect to names or persons) would I resort, and there would I abide. May that gracious promise be fulfilled to us in our searches, "The LORD "shall guide thee continually!"—I hope to send you, very soon, the residue, and am,

Dear SIR,

Your obliged and affectionate friend in CHRIST JESUS,

Weston, May 31, 1755. J. HERVEY.

Dear SIR,

LAST night I was favoured with your second letter, and sincerely thank you for the freedom you have used, and the corrections you have made.—Herewith I send the remainder of dialogue xvi. those parts, I mean, that are to undergo some alteration. I wish you could borrow the larger edition; to that the numeral references are made, as from that the new edition is printing.—I hope you will be so kind as to examine this MS. also with a friendly severity. Spare no sentiment or expression, I beseech you, that so much as seems contrary to the sound words of our LORD JESUS CHRIST. If you see any thing that may conveniently be omitted, I wish you would inclose it in a parenthesis; for, I fear, the dialogue will be too long, and overwhelm the attention.

I am sorry that I am so straitened in time, and can say no more; my servant waits, and if I delay him any longer, will be too late to dispatch some necessary business for the family. Be pleased to favour me with your observations as soon as possible, because the printers will, if they are delayed much long-

* Mr Hervey here uses the word godly in the common signification of it, as distinguishing the religious from those who profess no religion; but, in the scripture-sense of the word, it is confined to those whose religion is formed by the belief and love of that truth which came from God for the hope of the guilty.

† These godly people he mentions mistook him continually, by apprehending all he said in the light of the properly-qualified faith; whereas his apprehension was totally in the light of free salvation to the guilty, as the ground of immediate confidence: and as they could make no hesitation about confiding in the Lord, if (as they termed it) their evidences were clear; so he made no hesitation about confiding in the Lord as a guilty sinner; the divine declarations to the guilty answering to him as the foundation of his confidence, as their evidences would to them if they could conceive them to be clear; and as his confidence only arose from the truth believed, it stood in so near a connection with it, that he accounted it essential to it: as, on the other hand, their confidence depending upon what they found in themselves, as distinguishing characteristics of God's children, could only have existence when and while they could thus conceive of themselves.

‡ The remainder of this letter is lost.

|| How evidently does Mr Sandeman appear to be mistaken, in calling this the popular doctrine, or in judging that Mr Hervey had gained a public esteem on the account of it?

* Some of these recommendations were not to the advantage of the truth which it was his main design to communicate: of this Mr Sandeman has not failed to take notice; and it must be acknowledged, that a resentment of the offices of such a friend might not have been improper. But the same reasons which he had for desiring the silence of one friend for the present, may be justly supposed the reason he shewed no resentment to the officiousness of the other.

er, be tempted to impatience. I should be glad if you would make Weston in your way, when you return from Norwich. May the LORD JESUS strengthen your judgment, make you of quick understanding, and enable you to detect every thing, in my poor essay, that is not agreeable to his word!—I am in doubt whether this letter should be directed to you at London, or Norwich.—A mistake in this particular may cause a longer delay in the affair. The all-seeing GOD guide me in every thing! I chuse London, and hope it will come to your hand before you set out. I am,

Dear SIR,

Your obliged and truly-affectionate friend in CHRIST JESUS,

Weston, June 12. J. HERVEY.

Dear SIR,

I Should be very glad, and much obliged, if you could give me your company in your return from Norwich, that we may thoroughly canvass, and carefully examine the important subject of our correspondence. I have ordered the printers to keep their types, composed for this part of my work, standing; and to proceed with the remainder, before this is worked off. So that I hope to have the whole, in proof-sheets, to lay before you in one review, provided you could favour me with your company pretty soon.

A celebrated divine from abroad writes thus, in a private letter to his friend; in which he speaks the very sentiments of my heart, and, I apprehend, of yours also:

"I apprehend, Mr Hervey's definition of faith will expose him "most to the generality of divines, both of the church of England "and dissenters; though it is a very good one, when well ex- "plained. The persuasion or assurance which is in the very na- "ture of faith, must be carefully distinguished from that which "has, in a manner, appropriated the name of assurance to itself; "I mean that exercise of spiritual sense following upon saving "faith, whereby a believer sees, and, upon good grounds, con- "cludes himself to be in a state of grace and salvation, and that he "has an actual interest in CHRIST, and his whole purchase, "even eternal life. The foundation of this assurance of sense, is "that believer's experience and feeling of what the HOLY "GHOST has already wrought in his soul, and it runs into "this conclusion; I find the fruits of the SPIRIT planted in my "soul; I am a new creature; I love the LORD JESUS in sin- "cerity *; and it is one of the greatest burdens of my life, that I "have no love suited to so glorious a one †. From all which, I "am sure, GOD has given me CHRIST, pardoned my sins, I "am in a state of grace, and must go to glory. But the ground "and foundation of that particular persuasion and assurance, "which is in the nature of saving faith, is the glorious authority "and faithfulness of GOD in the gospel record, promise, and of- "fer; and it rises no higher than this, that GOD offers, and "thereby, as he is true and faithful, gives CHRIST, with all his "fulness, to me, to be believed on, and trusted in, for life and eter- "nal salvation ‡. So that I not only safely and warrantably may, "but am obliged ‖ to receive, apply, and make use of JESUS "CHRIST as my own Saviour, by resting on him, and trust- "ing to him as such. JEHOVAH's great gift, offer, and pro- "mise, gives every sinner a sufficient warrant to do this, and are "a strong immoveable foundation for this persuasion or assurance "of faith. Nor can any other solid satisfying answer be given to "a broken-hearted humbled creature §, who puts away from "himself the gracious promises and offers of the gospel upon this "ill-grounded imagination, that they do not belong to him. To "whom it always may, and ought to be answered, that they do "belong to him, in the sense I have mentioned."

This extract is, I think, the precise explanation of our doctrine. If you find any expression, not exactly suited to your opinion, please to observe it. I am,

Dear SIR,

Your affectionate and obliged brother in CHRIST,

Weston, July 6, 1755. J. HERVEY.

* It must be remembered, that they who love the Lord Jesus, love him that came to save, not the righteous, but the guilty; not the qualified, but the lost.

† This manner of expression, which this friend never learned from the scriptures, but catched (as I suppose) through common custom, favours too much of the leaven of the Pharisees. The Christian, conscious to himself that he is guilty, makes no account of the degrees of imperfect love, but lives solely and entirely by the righteousness revealed for the hope of the guilty: and what he lives by, he loves; not as a talk proportioned by the worthiness of the object, but as an affection arising from the truth believed.

‡ This is well expressed, and evidently distinguishes his meaning of the word offer, from the offer of a bargain to any who will come up to the terms. He evidently means the real grant of the blessings, as when money, food, and clothing, are offered to the poor, famished, or naked.

‖ They who hear and understand this gospel-grace, find it their bounden duty, as well as their happy privilege, and heart's inclination, no more to seek to live by their own, but to live entirely by the divine righteousness.

§ If this gentleman, by a broken-hearted humbled creature, means some that seem thereby those qualified for mercy than the rest, he would differ from us widely; but if (as I apprehend) he only means those whose cri-

---

Dear Mr CUDWORTH,

LAST night I received your favour, and, according to your request, have written to my excellent friend, without delaying a single post. The LORD JESUS accompany my conciliatory offices with his heavenly blessing!

I hope you had a good journey, and are well in health, and joyful through faith.—We shall be glad to hear, that —— bore his journey comfortably, and is returned home more and more established in the love of his blessed LORD.

I hope you do not forget me and my family, my people, and my work at the press.—May the good LORD prosper you, and your labours of life!

I am much straitened for time, and can add no more at present, but that

I am yours, most cordially,

Aug. 4. J. HERVEY.

Dear Mr CUDWORTH,

MR W——d has been with me, and went away last week. We had much talk concerning you. I told him what I thought of your conversation and doctrine. What I could urge seemed to make no impression. I assure you, my esteem for you is not diminished. I am more and more persuaded, that your method of stating that grand and precious doctrine—the doctrine of faith in CHRIST—is the truth of the gospel. Your company, whenever you come this way, will be truly acceptable to all my family.

I wish you would inform me of the mistakes which you apprehend to be in Dr Crisp's sermons. I have the new edition; intend to read them very attentively; and should be glad of your cautionary hints.

Pray let me hear from you soon; and believe me to be,

Dear SIR,

Your cordial and faithful friend,

Weston, Sept. 9. J. HERVEY.

Dear Mr CUDWORTH,

I Received your welcome letter from London. I should have answered it much sooner, but I had quite forgot where to direct. The direction was given in the first letter you ever wrote to me, which, consisting only of kind and friendly expressions, I suffered to perish, as I do all letters of that kind. Your other epistolary favours I carefully preserve.—I have waited and waited one day after another, in hopes of seeing you at Weston, in your return to Norwich; and have been uneasy in myself, lest you should think I neglect your correspondence. Indeed I do not. Neither do I forget my promise. I have a set of the new edition, reserved on purpose for you; to be delivered into your own hand, if you call upon me. Or I will order a set to be left you in London, where-ever you shall appoint.

I sincerely thank you for the copy of your letter. The sentiments are such as I wish to have written on my heart; such as I wish to speak and teach, while I live; and in my writings (if my writings survive me) to testify when I am dead. May minal remorse renders them absolutely destitute of every other hope than by Christ alone, we are of one mind.

¶ One of the most evangelical-appearing objections against this grant of Christ to be believed on, is, "That, according to this doctrine, the free "gift does not secure their reigning in life on whom it is bestowed; because "they may rise to damnation for all that abundance of the gift." To which it may be answered, That gift, though to sinners indefinitely, that they may live by it, yet is a non-entity to every one till he hears it, and no conveyance of righteousness to any man that does not believe it, according to that which is spoken. And on the other hand, where a man does really believe it, he unfeignedly lives by it; and there grace reigns through righteousness to eternal life, over all who are thus begotten again.

the

the good LORD bear witneſs to ſuch doctrine, by making it healing to the conſcience, and fruitful in the converſation.

Your treatiſe of marks and evidences I will attentively read. If any thing occurs, which ſeems to need explication or alteration, I will moſt freely communicate it.

Pray let me hear from you ſoon. Inform me how you go on with Mr ——. Depend upon it, I will do you all the ſervice that lies in my power. Not merely becauſe you are a friend, whom I eſteem, but alſo becauſe I am perſuaded, you work the work of the LORD JESUS.—To whoſe tender love I commend yourſelf and your labours; and am,

Dear SIR,

Your truly-affectionate friend,

Weſton, Oct. 9. JAMES HERVEY.

My dear friend,

YOUR welcome letter is now in my hand. I thank you for the remarks it contains. The LORD make us of quick underſtanding in the fear of the LORD!

I have read the treatiſe concerning marks and evidences. I am going, as ſoon as I have diſpatched this letter, to read it again. If to do the heart good be a ſign of its value, I can very confidently bear this teſtimony to its worth. It refreſhes my ſpirit and comforts my ſoul. I hope, when republiſhed, it will be attended with this bleſſed effect to multitudes of readers *.—I believe it would be adviſeable to ſend it abroad without a name, and commit it wholly to the diſpoſal of him, who is head over all things to the church.

Did you ever ſee a little treatiſe written by one Mr Beart, formerly paſtor of a church in the place where you now reſide? It is ſtyled A vindication of the eternal law and everlaſting goſpel: It is but very lately that it came to my hands. It appears to me a truly valuable piece.—I forgot to deſire, that you would preſent my moſt cordial ſalutations to Mr ——. It is not for want of eſteem that I do not write to him, but from want of health, and a multiplicity of engagements. I ſhould be very glad, if he would communicate with all freedom, any remarks that he himſelf has made, or has heard from others, relating to Theron and Aſpaſio.

Mr —— called upon me, about ten days ago, in his return to London. He ſtaid only to make a haſty breakfaſt, ſo that I had very little converſation with him. I hope the GOD of power, and the GOD of peace, will unite our hearts in the love of the ſpirit, and unite our hands in the work of the LORD.

There is no ſtage goes from Northampton to Suffolk. I believe I may convey a parcel by the Cambridge carrier. I will inquire of him, when he comes this way; and if it is a practicable thing, you ſhall have the books by his next return.

We ſhall be all glad to entertain you at Weſton, and my beſt prayers will always accompany your labours in the LORD.——I ſend a frank, leſt your ſtock ſhould be exhauſted.—Write to me ſoon, and pray for me ever, who am,

Dear SIR,

Your affectionate brother in CHRIST,

Weſton, Nov. 8. 1755. J. HERVEY.

My dear friend,

I Sent, laſt week, by the Cambridge carrier, a ſet of my books. He promiſed me to deliver them to the Bury carrier; and, I hope, by this time, they have reached your hands.—Whenever you peep upon them, pray be ſo kind as to note down any expreſſions or ſentiments, that are not THOROUGHLY evangelical. I ſhall be pleaſed with them, and thankful for them, even though I ſhould not have, through the want of a new edition, an opportunity of inſerting them in my volumes.

I have been thinking of your propoſal to republiſh your treatiſe on marks and evidences. Suppoſe you tranſmit it, detached from any other piece, under a frank to me. Suppoſe I ſend it to an underſtanding and ſagacious friend; and learn his ſentiments, and get his critical obſervations on it. By this means, you will ſee what is likely to give offence, or meet with objection; and may, perhaps, be enabled ſo to form your arguments, ſo to draw up your forces, as to prevent or baffle any attack. If you approve of this ſcheme, ſend me a copy of the piece; tear off the title-page, and I will immediately convey it to a friend, who lives at a great diſtance from London, who knows nothing of the author, and will give me his opinion, without favour or diſaffection.

Leſt you ſhould not be furniſhed with a frank, I ſend the incloſed.—My ſiſter is gone from home; my mother is in health, and will always be glad of ſuch converſation as yours; which will be equally agreeable to,

Dear SIR,

Your affectionate friend and brother in CHRIST JESUS,

Weſton, Nov. 25. 1755. J. HERVEY.

My dear friend,

I Received, with pleaſure and gratitude, your letter and its contents. Would have made my acknowledgments immediately; but waited a poſt or two, in hopes of tranſmitting to you ſome remarks on your treatiſe. But my friend has not ſent them. As ſoon as they come, they ſhall be forwarded to you.

I am very much pleaſed with your explanation of, In the LORD have I righteouſneſs. "I a ſinner, not a new or ſanctified creature." This is encouraging; this is delightful; it is like a door opened in the ark for me, even for me to enter. Bleſſed be GOD for ſuch truths! Such truths make the goſpel glad tidings indeed to my ſoul! They are the very thing which I want; and the only thing which can give me comfort, or do me good *.

When people inquire, whether ſanctification is an evidence of juſtification? I ſuppoſe, by ſanctification, they mean what St Paul calls the fruit of the SPIRIT; love of GOD, charity to man, meekneſs, temperance †, &c. Now, may we not allow theſe to be proper evidences of faith, but maintain that the appropriating faith, or the faith of perſuaſion ‡, is the appointed means of producing them? The life which I live in the fleſh, the life of holineſs, uſefulneſs, and comfort, I live by the faith of the SON of GOD. What this faith is, he explains in the next ſentence; by viewing the SON of GOD, as loving me, and giving himſelf for me.—Pray favour me with your opinion of 1 John iii. 19. This ſeems one of the texts, leaſt reconcileable with our doctrine ||.

I have a long letter from a new hand, wrote very fair, and drawn up in an elaborate manner, in oppoſition to my account of faith, and to ſeveral parts of dialogue xvi. It conſiſts of five ſheets, wrote on every ſide; too large I apprehend to come under a frank, otherwiſe I would tranſmit it to you for

* If Mr Hervey may be believed, nothing was more offenſive to him, than thoſe encomiums on his piety, which only ſerve to render his confeſſion of himſelf hypocritical, and his doctrine falſe. In all his thoughts, in all his practice, he found himſelf a ſinner; and in nothing more ſo, than in entertaining any good conceit of himſelf, or his own ſtate, by compariſon with other men. God had taught him he had no rule to meaſure by, but the perfect law, or will of heaven; and every ſingle deviation ſerved to render his plea of righteouſneſs vain, to claſs him among the reſt of mankind-ſinners, and ſubject him to eternal vengeance. In the view of theſe circumſtances, mercy revealed in Chriſt Jeſus to the guilty, was a precious joyful ſound, which he heard and lived by. Had he heard any one deſcribe the holy, heavenly, pious Mr Hervey, he would have replied, You have deſcribed a man that will never enter heaven: but in the guilty Mr Hervey, living only by the divine righteouſneſs, you find the man that is taught of God.

To love the divine righteouſneſs provided for the guilty as ſuch; to love God thus characterized as juſt, and the juſtifier of the ungodly, by the righteouſneſs of his Son; to love them that are of this truth, for the truth's ſake dwelleth in them, is, according to ſcripture-account, the diſtinguiſhing holineſs of truth, whereby the children of God are manifeſted from the children of the devil; and the works of love to this righteouſneſs, are the only works that will be openly rewarded and acknowledged in the great day. It is alſo evident, from ſcripture and experience, that men may compaſs ſea and land to make a proſelyte, may give all their goods to feed the poor, and even their bodies to be burned, yet want this charity; they may do all this, and at the ſame time manifeſt themſelves to be the children of them who crucified Jeſus, by their conduct towards the real goſpel, and the diſciples of it.

† They ſhould mean ſo; and the fruit of love, &c. which is evidently from this operation of the divine truth we plead for, is undoubtedly a confirming evidence of its having become our faith, and of its divine efficacy in working by love.

‡ By appropriating faith, he means the confidence ariſing from the belief of the truth, of righteouſneſs and ſalvation freely preſented to the guilty in Chriſt Jeſus, as their immediate ground of confidence; which he alſo ſtyles the faith of perſuaſion, to diſtinguiſh it from that which is deſcribed, not by what we are perſuaded of, but as a hidden, holy principle, diſcoverable only by the good qualifications which diſtinguiſh us from others.

|| Hereby we (the children of the truth, by loving one another for the truth's ſake alone, not in word and in tongue, but in deed and in truth) know [perceive, or have an additional confirming knowledge] that we are of the truth, when we prove, by the fixture of our hearts your perusal. And I hope to see you 'ere long; then we may examine it together.

* This treatiſe, ſo uſeful to my worthy friend, was one of the moſt offenſive pieces to my opponents; which very plainly manifeſts, that whatever compliments and pretenſions of regard might be paid to Mr Hervey, they differed exceedingly in taſte and judgment of ſpiritual things.

I am glad to hear that you are acquitted with Mr ——, and that he is so well acquainted with the truth as it is in JESUS. The LORD enable him, and raise up many more ministers, to spread abroad the joyful sound.—When you give me your company, do not forget to bring with you the evangelical piece on the work of the SPIRIT in bringing a soul to CHRIST.

There is one passage in dialogue xvi. which, I think, is very injudiciously inserted, and is really a mistake. The note, page 303. I observed it a good while ago, and expunged it from my copy; and my new opposer has not spared to animadvert upon it. What need have we to pray for that divine GUIDE, who leads into all truth! May this divine GUIDE dwell in us, and walk in us, be our counsellor and comforter even unto death!—Dear Mr Cudworth, I hope, will not forget in his prayers the weakest of ministers, and the weakest of believers,—but his

Affectionate brother in CHRIST,

Weston, Jan. 26, 1756. J. HERVEY.

My dear friend,

I Received your valuable remarks, and sincerely thank you for them. May our divine MASTER enable us, both to discern and to display the truth as it is in JESUS.

I am much pleased, and thoroughly satisfied, with your explanation of Acts ii. 39 *. The proposals seem to me clear, pertinent, and weighty. If I am able to make any slight correction in the style, it shall be transmitted in my next. I would now only ask, how far you have proceeded in the work? I think you should by all means get the greater part (the whole, I would rather say) completed, before you begin to publish. If this is not done, many unforeseen accidents may arise, which will probably straiten you in point of time, and oblige you to be precipitate in your preparations for the press. And I am inclined to query, whether it is not a piece of justice we owe to the public, not to engage them in purchasing a piece, till it is put beyond the power of common casualties to render it imperfect.—Pray, therefore, let me know what progress you have made. I could wish to have it judiciously executed, and not performed in that confused, inaccurate, slovenly manner, which must be a continual discredit to Mr W——'s Christian library.

I rejoice to find, that the gospel of our salvation is spreading. May it have a free course and an extensive circuit! till the fountain becomes a river, and the river widens into a sea!

before him, saying with Peter, Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that we love thee: For if our hearts condemn us, that we love not those who are of this truth, or that our love to them is not for this truth's sake, whatever pretensions we may make to the faith, and of comfort, joy, holiness, &c. yet God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things; therefore cannot be deceived by our pretended regard to him and his truth, while we love not them who are of this truth. But, beloved, if our hearts condemn us not, (if the law of the New Testament, Jer. xxxi. 33. to believe on Christ, or live by his righteousness, and love one another for this truth's sake, is written on our hearts,) then have we confidence towards God.

* Acts ii. 39. The persons mentioned, were pricked in their hearts at hearing that God had made that same Jesus, whom they had crucified, both Lord and Christ, and said, Men and brethren, what shall we do? We don't find that Peter had been preaching to them any such doctrine as that, "If "they were much affected with their sins, and wounded at heart with a "godly sorrow for them, they had an interest in the promise of life and sal-"vation." This would have been only introducing the Pharisaic distinction, which our Saviour constantly opposed. On the contrary, when Peter declared, that God had made that same Jesus, who opposed such distinctions in the Pharisees, and was rejected on that account, that God had made him both Lord and Christ, they were confounded. All their pretensions to righteousness, and acceptance with God, forsook them. They were pricked in their hearts at these tidings and cried out, Men and brethren, what shall we do? If Jesus is Lord and Christ, what will become of us? Then Peter exhorted to the assurance we plead for, in these words, Repent, and be baptized in the name of Jesus, for the remission of sins; (for the words thus circumstanced bear evidently this sense:) "Your case is undoubtedly des-perate; you have been to this moment God's enemies; even so far have you carried your opposition, as with wicked hands to crucify and slay the Lord's Christ, sent for your deliverance. Nevertheless, in this man's name is preached unto you remission of sins: therefore repent of your wickedness in opposing him; submit to him as your free given righteousness and salvation; be baptized in his name for the remission of your sins, and live from henceforth by him, as your proper righteousness; assuring yourselves of remission of sins by him alone; and you shall receive the promised gift of the Holy Ghost as it has come upon us: For the promise is to you and to your children." And with many other words did he exhort them, saying, (by flying to this same Jesus as your proper refuge,) Save yourselves from this outward generation. Then they that gladly received his word, out of the mixed multitude, were baptized; and the same day were added about three thousand souls.—— From the whole thus considered, there is nothing to contradict the call and promise of God directed to sinners as such; but, on the contrary, a foundation for calling upon the most guilty to live immediately by the Redeemer's righteousness.

The inclosed came a little while ago.—My friend is very severe. It will give you an opportunity of exercising forbearance and gentleness. He knows nothing at all of the author. When your other affairs will allow leisure, please to return the letter with your observations; which will oblige, and, I trust, edify,

Dear SIR,

Your affectionate friend,

Weston, Apr. 21. 1756. J. HERVEY.

Dear Mr CUDWORTH,

I Have only time to beg of you, if you have the letter of remarks on Mr Marshall's book, to return it to me as soon as you can. If there are any observations that are just, and such as animadvert upon passages truly exceptionable, be so kind as to give me your opinion on them. The reason of my desiring this is, a prospect of a new edition of Marshall.—A bookseller is inclined to print one, and sell it at half a crown price; I believe encouraged thereto by my recommendation of it. The recommendation has been printed in our Northampton news-paper, and immediately there was a demand for twenty-three of your abridgments. But the printer could not procure enough to supply the demand. Mr K—— desires you would send a fresh supply to him.

In the greatest haste, but with great sincerity and affection,

Yours,

May 27. JAMES HERVEY.

My dear friend,

THIS comes to inform you, that Mr —— has begun an edition of Marshall; in much the same size, and exactly the same letter, as Theron and Aspasio. If you have any thing to observe, pray let me have it with as much speed as you can make. If you have Mr ——'s objections, examine them attentively; and, I hope, you will be enabled to obviate what is material. I should be glad if you could, after you have digested your notes, give me your company, that we might talk them over. Now is the time, in all probability, to make Marshall a well-known spreading book.—I hope the LORD will enlighten your understanding; fructify your invention; strengthen your judgment; and enable you to write "sound words, such as cannot be condemned."—I am,

Very affectionately yours,

Weston, June 17. J. HERVEY.

My dear friend,

YEsterday I received your letter, and am much obliged to you for it. Pray do not mention Mr ——'s name, nor shew his letter. I hope to adhere to the truths of the gospel; but yet I would endeavour to live in harmony, of affection and friendly intercourse at least, with those who differ.—I cannot think, that Mr —— could have any knowledge of the author of the discourse against marks and evidences.—I would read your treatise over again, with my best attention. For, I assure you, it always does me good. I will also compare it with your remarks on Mr ——; which, in my opinion, are solid and satisfactory: I am sure they are encouraging and comfortable.

When Marshall was advertised in our news-paper, the gentleman that inserted my recommendation, added this note to explain one sentence.—"By uncommon road, 'tis presumed, the recommender means the very evangelical nature, and remarkably-instructive method of the directions laid down by Mr Marshall (than whom no man, perhaps, was ever better acquainted with the human heart) for the effectual practice of holiness, as likewise somewhat of obscurity, which is confessedly in his 3d and 4th direction."

I apprehend, the obscurity of chapter 3. and 4. arises, not from any improper manner of treating the subjects, but from the mysterious * nature of the subjects themselves.—I will write to the bookseller to suspend his procedure of the press, till he hears farther. But let this hasten you, my dear friend, in communicating what you have to observe. I should be glad to have our common favourite, as clear and unexceptionable as possible, &c. &c. †.

* Mysterious, because contrary to our natural notions, the natural man not receiving the things of the Spirit of God.

† The remainder of this letter is lost.

My

My dear friend,

THE cauſe of my writing is this, Mr —— is upon the point of publiſhing a new edition of Marſhall. I have given him the incloſed letter, to introduce it into the world; but was deſirous to have you peruſe it and correct it, before it goes to the preſs. Be ſo kind, therefore, as to examine it ſtrictly; and where-ever you think it ſhould be altered, uſe it with the freedom of a friend. The more rigour, the more kindneſs.

I ſend a frank to be the vehicle of your obſervations, together with the printed half-ſheet.

As ſoon as I have finiſhed what you mention, it ſhall be tranſmitted. Though I would fain ſee one of the books completely abridged, before any propoſals or advertiſements appear. It is a matter of great importance, pray let it be executed with care and correctneſs. May the Keeper of Iſrael protect you in your journeys, and the Light of the world guide you in your work!

affectionately yours,

Weſton, Oct. 6. 1756. J. HERVEY.

My dear friend,

MR —— told Mr W——d that I offered to write a preface to your remarks on his ſermons. I told Mr W——d the whole of the affair. That you informed me of your deſign, and what I anſwered. That I deſired it might be conducted in a tender and reſpectful manner. That the title ſhould be more friendly and benign. That you read what you propoſed to ſay concerning my mentioning of Marſhall; which I obſerved was inexpreſſive. If you ſaid any thing, I thought it ſhould be more weighty and ſignificant. This was all the concern I had in the affair.

—That I had promiſed, not offered (for I don't remember I ever did ſuch a thing in my life) to write a recommendatory introduction to the work, which you have in hand. That it was at your requeſt, but with the real approbation of my judgment; for I apprehended, that your deſign when well executed, would be a valuable preſent to the world.

This comes by a gentleman who knows you. Let me hear what Mr —— ſays about the affair. And remember to give me a direction where to write to you. You date from Margaret-ſtreet; but this I ſuppoſe is not particular enough. I can add no more, leſt the bearer ſhould be gone. Only I wiſh you much ſucceſs in preaching CHRIST.

Yours affectionately,

Weſton, Dec. 24. 1756. J. HERVEY.

My dear friend,

I Received your parcel containing ſeveral copies of The Friendly Attempt, &c.* My thanks ſhould have been returned ſooner; but I have been under that indiſpoſition and languor of ſpirit, which renders me unfit for every thing.

I think there is rather too much aſperity in the cloſe; and I wiſh that expreſſion "refined idolatry," had been a little ſoftened. This I mention only to yourſelf, and to give you a ſpecimen of that openneſs and freedom, which I would have take place in all our perſonal and epiſtolary intercourſes.

I have read your manuſcript again and again, with my beſt attention, and with much delight†. I have made here and there a ſmall alteration with regard to the language, only to render the ſenſe ſomewhat more perſpicuous, not to vary the peculiar caſt of your diction.—I heartily concur in receiving and embracing theſe doctrines. I think them to be truths of very great importance, and ſhall be truly glad to ſee them in print, that they may be ſpread and be univerſally known.

If I ſhould be enabled to finiſh a fourth volume of dialogues, I propoſe to have one conference on the aſſurance of faith‡; to ſtate it more clearly, and to eſtabliſh it more ſtrongly. In this, I ſhall be glad to borrow ſeveral of your thoughts, and will make my acknowledgments accordingly; declaring, at the ſame time, my opinion of the piece, which lends me ſuch valuable aſſiſtance.

Preſent my moſt affectionate ſalutations to —— ——. I received his obliging letter; I moſt ſincerely wiſh him ſucceſs, in diſplaying the unſearchable riches of grace, and the infinitely-glorious righteouſneſs of CHRIST. I hope he will not be diſpleaſed with my ſilence. It proceeds from no diſreſpect, but from a multiplicity of engagements, and a poor pittance of ſtrength, utterly inſufficient to fulfil them.—Pleaſe to thank —— for his very encouraging and comfortable letter. I wiſh, when he is at leiſure, he would favour me with another on this ſubject, how holineſs ſprings from faith, or a view of ſanctification as the effect of juſtification.

* A friendly attempt to remove ſome fundamental miſtakes in the Rev. Mr W——d's ſermons.

† Aphoriſms on the aſſurance of faith. The ſubſtance of them originally was what Mr Hervey takes notice of in his letter, dated Oct. 9. 1755. Afterward Mr Hervey deſired me to draw up the ſubſtance of the whole that had been canvaſſed, in as conciſe a manner as poſſible, for his own uſe. This, ſome time after, I propoſed for printing, and is the manuſcript here mentioned.

‡ Or in other words, the confidence that is founded on the truth we believe concerning Chriſt given to be believed on, or confided in.

When ſhall I ſee you?—If —— writes to me on the ſubject you mention, he ſhall have a ſpeedy anſwer.—You need not ſend me the twelve queries, becauſe they have been tranſmitted me from Scotland. But ceaſe not to ſend up your prayers and ſupplications in behalf of your truly-affectionate friend,

J. HERVEY.

My dear friend,

I Have, with attention and delight, read over your pamphlet. A ſlight alteration or two, relating to the language, I have made. But I deſire you will follow the determination of your own judgment.—As ſoon as they are printed, ſend me a quarter of a hundred; not as a preſent, but as a purchaſe.

The LORD has lately viſited me with a dangerous fever; which confined me to my room many days, and excluded me from the pulpit ſeveral Sundays. I am ſtill extremely weak in body. Pray that I may be ſtrong in the faith of our LORD JESUS CHRIST.—In his moſt precious and everlaſting righteouſneſs, I remain,

Affectionately yours,

J. HERVEY.

P. S. Send me a dozen of your Aphoriſms, when they are publiſhed.

My dear friend,

ONE principal cauſe of my long ſilence, I do aſſure you, was my ignorance of the place of your reſidence in London. I knew not, till Mr ——, yeſterday, gave me a direction where to write to you.

I thank you for your laſt packet. But you muſt give me leave to inſiſt upon paying for the contents, when I have the pleaſure of your company, which I want much. Can't you make Weſton in your way, and contrive to ſpend a couple of days with me? I cannot be ſatisfied with a ſhorter ſtay.—I have much to ſay to you; but as I will hope to ſee you, and converſe face to face, I ſhall not attempt to communicate my thoughts by ink and pen.

I have juſt publiſhed three ſermons. If you will call upon Mr R——'s, in St Paul's church-yard, or ſend a meſſenger with the note ſubjoined to this letter, he will deliver two of my pieces. Let me beg of you to peruſe them, with your pen in your hand; and to tranſmit whatever obſervations may occur.—I have ſome remarks upon your Aphoriſms, which you ſhall ſee, when you give me your company.—Have you ſeen a couple of volumes, lately publiſhed, and entitled, Letters on Theron and Aſpaſio? You come in for a ſhare of chaſtiſement. What is your opinion in general of this performance? As to particular paſſages, we will poſtpone the examination of them, till GOD's providence grants us a perſonal interview*. Do you know who is, or who is ſuppoſed to be the author of this piece?

May the work of the LORD JESUS proſper in your heart, your tongue, your pen, and in thoſe of your truly

Affectionate friend,

Weſton, Sept. 8. 1757. J. HERVEY.

Dear Mr CUDWORTH,

I Received your letter, and return you my very ſincere thanks for your remarks†. I only wiſh that there had been more of them.

I hope it will not be long, before you give me your company at Weſton. Then we will examine the three dialogues, as they appear in their new form; and will conſider, and determine, concerning their publication‡; or rather will beſeech the

* The reſult of this conſideration, and of my after correſpondence with Mr Sandeman, at Mr Hervey's requeſt, ſee in the defence of Theron and Aſpaſio.

† Remarks on Theron and Aſpaſio, conſidered with regard to the objections raiſed by the author of the letters.

‡ The publication of the 15th, 16th, and 17th dialogues corrected with regard to the objections of Mr Sandeman.

only

only wise GOD our SAVIOUR to over-rule and guide our determination. Contrive to stay some time with me.

Try if you can get me Taylor's book; or any of those which you shewed me: Neonomianism unmasked, if you can light on, purchase for me.—I wish you growing consolation in CHRIST, deliverance from all your troubles, and abundant success in spreading abroad the savour of our REDEEMER's name. In whom I am,

Dear SIR,

Your true and affectionate friend and brother,

Weston, Feb. 22, 1758. J. HERVEY.

Dear Mr CUDWORTH,

YESTERDAY your favour came to hand. I hope to see you at Weston 'ere long, and then I will deliver the letters * into your own hand.—I have sent you a couple of franks. If you want more, when I see you, I will endeavour to supply you.—I am glad you are debating the important point with Mr Sandeman. He seems to be an acute person; and if there is a flaw in our cause, he will be likely to discover it. But, as far as I can judge, he has found no such thing hitherto.

May the GOD of grace and truth be with you; and enable you to understand and defend the first; to experience and abundantly enjoy the last.

Please to present my very affectionate respects to your worthy kinsman Mr ——, and recommend to his prayer, and remember in your own,

Dear SIR,

Your brother in CHRIST,

Weston, March 1, 1758. J. HERVEY.

Dear Mr CUDWORTH,

THIS comes to desire you will inform me how I may direct a large letter to you; which I will send, as soon as your answer is received. It is a manuscript †, which wants your examination, and it is of some importance. Therefore I am somewhat solicitous, that it may not miscarry.

Yours affectionately,

Weston, July 15, 1758. J. HERVEY.

P. S. You may direct your letter, to stop at Northampton.—Don't use any of your franks. You will have greater occasion for them. Or, if your stock is spent, let me know.

Dear Mr CUDWORTH,

THIS day I received your letter, with the two MS. sheets inclosed. Accept my thanks for your remarks, and let me beg of you to examine the two sheets, which are now sent. I will take your advice with regard to Mr B ——, and follow your hint, concerning your own work.—I apprehend there will be about ten such sheets; and that the piece will make a two-shilling pamphlet. I must entreat you to get time for the revisal of all; which shall be sent you, as you shall be able to dispatch the work. I am,

Dear SIR,

Most cordially yours,

July 27, 1758. J. HERVEY.

My dear friend,

LAST week I sent you two sheets of the manuscript, now I send two more for your revisal. If you see a fair opportunity of contracting, please to make use of it; for, I fear, the piece will be too long. Inclose, what you think may be omitted in a parenthesis, by a pencil.—Pray examine rigorously, by which you will very much oblige

Your truly affectionate,

Weston, Aug. 2, 1758. J. HERVEY.

My dear friend,

HERE I inclose two sheets more. They are very long. But I hope you will get time to revise them. Your last packet I received, and am much obliged for your remarks.—I apprehend the piece will make a two-shilling pamphlet. If you could suggest or insert any thing to make it edifying and useful, I should be glad. Would it not be proper to print Mr W——y's letter, and prefix it to my answer?—Have you left your own two books for me at my brother's? If you have not, please to leave them at Mr J. R——'s in St Paul's church-yard. I am,

Dear SIR,

Cordially yours in CHRIST JESUS,

Weston, Aug. 9, 1758. J. HERVEY.

P. S. I suppose about three sheets more will finish the work.

My dear friend,

HERE are two more sheets. The last I received, with your valuable remarks. Pray bestow the same attention on these. Two more, or less, will finish the essay; then I will discontinue writing, and employ myself in reading, especially in reading Luther's comment *. Can't you procure for me Taylor's book? I am,

Dear SIR,

Affectionately yours,

Aug. 16. J. HERVEY.

My dear friend,

I Received in due time your last letter. Should have sent the conclusion of my manuscript, but it has been lent out, and is not yet returned.

I shall be glad to see your correspondence with Mr Sandeman.—The inclosed is a copy of a letter, which I sent some years ago, to two malefactors under sentence of death.—It is got into a good many hands. Some would have me print it. I wish you would be so kind as to revise it, and give me your opinion.—People say, there is not enough said concerning the spiritual change, or the new heart.

My next shall bring you a little piece of mine, which, without my knowledge, has passed the press.—I have lately been in great want of franks. But now I have got a recruit.

I have been very ill this week, but had strength enough to read in your book. I was much edified by Mr Simpson's sermons. Pray, are his whole works to be procured? and are they of the same spirit with the sermons which you have given us? If so, I should desire to see, to possess them all.

I am,

Very affectionately yours,

Weston, Sept. 23, 1758. J. HERVEY.

My dear friend,

EXCUSE me for keeping your MS. † so long, I have been extremely ill. This morning I have been up for four hours, and in all that time not able to look into a book, or hold up my head.

I fully assent to your opinion. Think you have proved the warrant for a sinner's application of CHRIST very satisfactorily.—If I live, I should much desire a copy of this your correspondence, when you have revised and finished it. Or do you intend to print it?

Have you got some complete sets of all your works? If you have, I wish you would lodge about four of them at Mr R——n's. Let them be only in sheets. And when you have given me notice, that they are deposited with him, I will order him to pay you a guinea for them. I promised a worthy clergyman a set, some days ago.

Yours affectionately,

Weston, Dec. 2. J. HERVEY.

Dear Mr CUDWORTH,

I AM so weak, I am scarcely able to write my name ‡.

Dec. 15, 1758. J. HERVEY.

---

* Letters of correspondence between me and Mr Sandeman.

† This was an answer to Mr John Wesley's objections against Theron and Aspasio, and is so valuable a defence of imputed righteousness, that its publication is much to be desired.—It has been since published by Mr Hervey's brother, and may be seen in the immediately preceding part of this work.

‡ Hearing how dangerously ill Mr Hervey was, I wrote to remind him of leaving something under his hand in regard to his writings, as he knew the situation of them now required it; and this was all the answer he could give me.

A

A DEFENCE OF THERON and ASPASIO, AGAINST THE

Objections contained in a late Treatiſe, entitled, Letters on THERON and ASPASIO.

THE ſum and ſubſtance of the doctrine pleaded for by Aſpaſio, is, "That God hath ſo given "eternal life in his Son, to guilty ſinners, as "that they are fully warranted to receive "Chriſt, or aſſure themſelves of ſalvation by him alone, "without waiting for any inward motions, feelings, or "deſires, as any way requiſite in order to ſuch a recep-"tion or aſſurance."

This doctrine has been hitherto oppoſed under the notion, (1.) That ſome inward motions, feelings, or deſires, were ſome way requiſite in order thereto. That theſe inward motions, feelings, or deſires, were the faith or reception of Chriſt ſpoken of in the ſcripture; or at leaſt the indications of it; and muſt be diſcerned in us, in that light, before there can be any well-grounded aſſurance of ſalvation by him. (2.) That if we are called directly to live by Chriſt, or appropriate him, he is ours and we are ſafe, whether we appropriate him or no. (3.) That it is aſſuring ourſelves of what, for ought we know, is abſolutely falſe. (4.) That the wicked, the preſumptuous, and the hypocrites, may, and do often, thus aſſure themſelves. (5.) That there is nothing in faith, thus underſtood or exerted, which is a proper ſpring and cauſe of good works, by which it is in itſelf different from a falſe faith. (6.) That it is contrary to all ſelf-examination, and aſſurance thereby. And, (7.) That ſuch doctrine is a great diſcouragement to weak ſouls.

In anſwer to all this, we have aſſerted, (1.) That the divine revelation concerning Jeſus is addreſſed to ſinners, the world, the loſt, and that without being directed to wait for any inward motions, feelings, or deſires: remiſſion of ſins and eternal life in Chriſt, are ſaid to be preſented or given to them, and they are immediately called to believe on him as ſo granted. That the inward motions, feelings, or deſires, correſpondent to theſe goſpel-declarations, are motions, deſires, &c. to live by Chriſt alone, immediately, without waiting for any thing previous thereto. And that this voice of God, in theſe declarations of the goſpel, was a ſufficient authority for the whole we plead for, without waiting for any inward motions or excellencies in us to add thereto. (2.) That it is very abſurd, to infer, that Chriſt being given for us to feed upon, or live by, that there is therefore no need to live by him. Nor is it (3.) aſſuring ourſelves of what may be falſe; the divine declaration having ſecured this, that they which believe on him ſhall not be confounded; nor does any man thus live by Chriſt alone, but he who is choſen to ſalvation by the belief of the truth. Notwithſtanding many deceive themſelves, profeſſing great confidence, but it is in ſome undue mixture or addition of their own to what God hath ſpoken. And, (4.) that it is here the preſumptuous and the hypocrite do err and deſtroy themſelves, and not in believing according to that which is ſpoken. (5.) That good works are works of love to God, thus manifeſted, and therefore it is the only principle of good works on this account. We love him becauſe he firſt loved us. So that it differs from a falſe faith, as the belief of a truth differs from the belief of a falſehood; and as an apprehenſion of the divine favour begets love and obedience rather than an apprehenſion of wrath. (6.) That a proper ſelf-examination is therefore, whether we thus live by Chriſt alone, or whether we are waiting for ſomething more? And, (7) that it is far from diſcouraging the chiefeſt ſinners, to let them know, that God hath given to them eternal life in his Son, although it very poſſibly may, and ought to diſcourage every one from ſeeking relief in themſelves, while the divine declarations point us ſo plainly to the ſalvation given in Chriſt Jeſus to the guilty.

We have now to engage with another kind of an opponent, one that tells us, "That on account of our thus pleading for aſſurance of ſalvation, by receiving or appropriating Chriſt as given to us, we are alſo to be claſſed with the popular preachers, in as much as we alſo lead the guilty as they do, to ſeek after ſome inward motions, feelings, or deſires, as ſome way requiſite, in order to acceptance with God, not underſtanding how God can appear juſt to an unrighteous perſon, in juſtifying him as he at preſent ſtands, without ſome motion in his will, &c. That the whole doctrine of the popular preachers is deviſed for producing, animating, and directing this motion, that ſo the anxious hearer may find, about himſelf, ſome diſtinguiſhing reaſon why the Deity may regard him more than others. That the work finiſhed by Jeſus Chriſt in his death, proved by his reſurrection, is all-ſufficient to juſtify the guilty. That the whole benefit of this event, is conveyed to men, only, by the apoſtolic report concerning it.—And that this whole benefit is no more than a poſſibility of ſalvation, depending upon the divine ſovereignty. That every one who underſtands this report to be true, or is perſuaded that the event actually happened, as teſtified by the apoſtles, is juſtified, and finds relief to his guilty conſcience, i. e. the relief of the above mentioned poſſibility. That ſuch are relieved, not by finding any favourable ſymptoms about their own heart, but by finding their report to be true. That all the divine power which operates on the minds of men, either to give the firſt relief to their conſciences, or to influence them in every part of their obedience, is perſuaſive power, or the forcible conviction of truth. That our primary notion of the divine character, can give no comfort to the guilty, but, on the contrary, make them miſerable by a ſenſe of fear and ſhame. That when a man knows how God may be juſt, in juſtifying him as he at preſent ſtands, he finds relief from the aforementioned diſquieting fear."

To this we reply in general, That we agree to the greater part, to almoſt all theſe aſſertions, as moſt valuable truths, and ſtand corrected by ſome of them, particularly, where-ever we have too charitably ſuppoſed or admitted a belief of the report, contrary to the ſcripture-declaration, They that know thy name will put their truſt in thee *; and thereby have been ſometimes † led to fall in with the multitude, who make light of the belief of the report, as a common thing; whereas, to know the real truth of the goſpel, in diſtinction from every corrupting and contradictory falſehood, is the peculiar teaching of God; and every one that has ſo heard and learned of the Father, comes to CHRIST. We agree, that "our primary notion of the divine character makes the "guilty miſerable, by a ſenſe of fear and ſhame." But we deny, that relief from the fear is obtained without being as certain that we have righteouſneſs, as we are that we have guilt. The divine declaration of Chriſt, given to be believed on, affords a foundation for this certainty; and contains, therefore, more than ſuch a poſſibility as is above mentioned. We alſo deny the charge, that we lead the guilty, as the popular preachers do, to ſeek after ſome inward motions, feelings, or deſires, as ſome way requiſite, in order to acceptance with God. For notwithſtanding the righteouſneſs appropriated relates to acceptance with God, the appropriation we plead for, relates only to the conſciouſneſs, knowledge, and enjoyment of that righteouſneſs whereby the guilty are juſtified. And we affirm, that to receive a gift, is no prerequiſite or condition, as ſuch receiving has no exiſtence without the thing received; and to be ſo enriched, is not to be enriched by our act of receiving, or what we do, but only what we receive. But as Mr Sandeman's attack well deſerves a more particular defence, we conſider it as follows.

"Has our favourite author then at leaſt ſo far loſt "ſight of the imputed righteouſneſs, as to mix another "with it? Has he ſo embarraſſed, or rather ſhut up our "acceſs to the divine righteouſneſs, as to hold forth a "preliminary humane one, as ſome way expedient, or "rather neceſſary, to our enjoying the comforts and be"nefits of it?" Letters on Theron and Aſpaſio, p. 4. ‡

No, far from it; but as the pinching point in the conſcience is not, that there is no ſuch righteouſneſs in being as pleaſeth God; but that WE have no ſuch righteouſneſs; ſo, we underſtand the comfort and benefit of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to be, that it is a ſufficient righteouſneſs to OUR behalf. And we who plead for the divine grant of this righteouſneſs to ſinners, as ſuch, very evidently maintain, that there is no preliminary righteouſneſs neceſſary to ſuch a concluſion.

"I ſpeak of thoſe teachers, who, having largely in"ſiſted on the corruption of humane nature, concluded "the whole world guilty before God, eloquently ſet "forth the neceſſity of an atonement, zealouſly main"tained the ſcripture-doctrine concerning the perſon "and work of Chriſt; yet, after all, leave us as much "in the dark as to our comfort, as if Jeſus Chriſt had "never appeared; and mark out as inſuperable a taſk "for us, as if he had not finiſhed his work." p. 8. 9.

This charge may be very properly exhibited againſt thoſe teachers who leave us as much in the dark as they found us, unleſs we can find out ſomething within ourſelves to diſtinguiſh us from other ſinners. But Aſpaſio's doctrine brings Chriſt near to guilty ſinners, as ſuch, for their immediate enjoyment. Take and have, receive and poſſeſs, relates only to perſonal enjoyment, is no taſk, no entitling condition; the appropriation being fully warranted by the truth believed, and effected by the belief of it.

"While, with great aſſiduity and earneſtneſs, they "are buſied in deſcribing to us, animating us with va"rious encouragements, and furniſhing us with manifold inſtructions, how to perform that ſtrange ſome"thing which is to make out our connection with "Chriſt, and bring his righteouſneſs home to us." p. 9.

We ſay, Chriſt's righteouſneſs is "brought home to "us," in the goſpel-declaration; without the neceſſity of any intervening righteouſneſs to warrant us to call it ours. We only receive what is freely given; that is all the ſtrange ſomething we have pleaded for; and that not for our acceptance with God in virtue of our act, but only to know and enjoy that righteouſneſs as ours on account of which alone we are accepted.

"Setting them to work to do ſomething under what"ever name, to make up their peace with God." Ibid.

Not ſo with us, who receive and live by Chriſt's righteouſneſs, with which God hath declared himſelf already well pleaſed.

"Every doctrine which teaches us to do or endea"vour any thing toward our acceptance with God, "ſtands oppoſed to the doctrine of the apoſtles." p. 11.

But the doctrine we plead for, teaches us to live by what Chriſt has already done, as being given to us for that purpoſe. To ſay that I muſt do, or endeavour any thing that I may be accepted, is a contradiction to that believing on Chriſt we plead for; which is, in fact, neither more nor leſs, than living upon him as our whole, only, and complete ſalvation; and will, on that account, bear the teſt of the apoſtle's word, To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly &c. As this faith cannot be ſeparated from the truth believed, nor the truth believed from Chriſt the ſubject of that truth, ſo to be juſtified by faith, by Chriſt, or by his blood, is the ſame thing. Nor can any doing for acceptance be charged upon this believing on Chriſt, while its native language is, In the Lord have I righteouſneſs.

* Palæmon's main argument is, "If the work finiſh"ed by Jeſus Chriſt is alone ſufficient to juſtification, "then no appropriation or reception is neceſſary there"to." We reply, that that alone is ſufficient; therefore reception or appropriation belongs to our conſcious poſſeſſion and enjoyment of the juſtifying righteouſneſs, to the manifeſtation of our juſtification by it, and to the influence of it in our lives and converſations.

Palæmon thinks he does not deny the ſufficiency of Chriſt, when he connects faith and ſalvation together, and maintains, that all who believe this ſufficiency will be ſaved, and all who believe it not, will periſh.

He admits, that a work of God is neceſſary in the juſtified, that is, to beget faith, to beget in them a perſuaſion of the ſufficiency of the juſtifying righteouſneſs.

He judges this cannot be a contradiction to the one thing needful alone, becauſe it is wholly a perſuaſion of the ſufficiency of that alone, without more. In what light then are we to conſider this farther work of God, in perſuading us of the ſufficiency of this righteouſneſs? Not as an addition to the ſufficient righteouſneſs, but only as relative to the knowledge of it. He is juſtified by believing only as he is juſtified by what he believes.

Neither does he think he denies the ſufficient righteouſneſs, when he maintains faith, love, and ſelf-denied obedience, as neceſſary to demonſtrate his portion in this righteouſneſs, or that he is a juſtified perſon. Becauſe in theſe acts, or in this obedience, he is not doing ſomething to be juſtified, but proceeding in the way "of painful deſire and fear," in order to know himſelf to be juſtified.

Hence it is apparent, that he muſt be obliged to allow, that although the work finiſhed by Chriſt on the croſs, is the ſole requiſite to juſtification; yet, in this view,

* Mr Hervey had begun a correction of his three laſt dialogues in this view, as mentioned in the letter, p. 443.

† Sometimes, for the force of truth frequently prevailed againſt this miſtake, before Mr Sandeman's performance appeared.

‡ N. B. Mr Sandeman's words are included with the commas, the other paragraphs are the reply.

* The name the author of the letters has choſen for himſelf, as Mr Hervey is to be underſtood by Aſpaſio.

ſomething

ſomething more is neceſſary to the knowledge of his intereſt in this righteouſneſs, or of his juſtification by it. And that to maintain this, is no contradiction to the ſole requiſite, but a procedure upon it. What he is obliged to plead for himſelf, he muſt alſo allow to us: and the difference between us is not in regard of the ſole requiſite, but our preſent enjoyment of it, or the knowledge of our juſtification by this alone. He ſays, with the multitude, "in the way of painful deſire and fear," till we come to the knowledge of the difference God has made between us and others; we ſay, by the free grant of the goſpel, to the abſolutely guilty without difference.

"The doctrine of the apoſtles, inſtead of directing "us what to do, ſets before us all that the moſt diſ-"quieted conſcience can require, in order to accept-"ance with God, as already done and finiſhed by "Jeſus Chriſt." p. 11.

A diſquieted conſcience requires a righteouſneſs pleaſing to God in its own behalf. No righteouſneſs will quiet my conſcience, unleſs I conſider it as a righteouſneſs for me. The righteouſneſs which pleaſeth God, is already done and finiſhed by Jeſus Chriſt. Palæmon conſiders this righteouſneſs as reſpecting himſelf, only as far as he diſcovers his own faith, love, and ſelf denied obedience. We conſider it as given to the abſolutely guilty, warranting ſuch to live by it, as ſo given to them for that purpoſe.

Palæmon's notion, that God hath appointed no way, but by our works, to be aſſured of ſalvation by Chriſt alone, renders his doing, endeavouring, ſtriving, &c. ſcarcely different in any thing from doing that we may live. There are few ſo weak as to think they can alter God's mind or purpoſe by their performances. But not knowing what he has purpoſed, they do, that they may obtain ſatisfaction in their minds about their ſalvation; and Palæmon's doing ſeems to be wholly of this ſort, that is, in fact, for peace with God, and not from it.

"What Chriſt has done, is that which pleaſeth "God; what he hath done, is that which quiets the "guilty conſcience of man as ſoon as he knows it." Ibid.

As ſoon as he knows it reſpects him a guilty ſinner. If the fear of the guilty conſcience, conſiſted only in an uncertainty of there being any righteouſneſs which pleaſeth God in the behalf of the elect, or the qualified, then the guilty conſcience would be quieted as ſoon as it is evident there is ſuch a righteouſneſs. But this is not the caſe; the fear of the guilty conſcience is a dread of God, becauſe I have no ſuch righteouſneſs; becauſe I have no righteouſneſs, upon which I can be aſſured he is pleaſed with me. And this guilty conſcience cannot be quieted, unleſs I diſcover the righteouſneſs which pleaſeth God in my own behalf.

As we conceive the report of the goſpel of ſufficient righteouſneſs, freely given in Jeſus, ſuits the guilty conſcience thus underſtood; ſo we agree, that whenever we hear of this proviſion of divine grace, we have no occaſion for any other queſtion but this, "Is it true or "not? If we find it true, we are happy;" and it is Palæmon, and not we, that ſtands in need of another righteouſneſs to quiet the guilty conſcience.

Palæmon conſiders "the work of Chriſt as a ſuf-"ficient foundation whereon to reſt the whole "weight of our acceptance with God," p. 12. while at the ſame time he aſſerts, that his own part or lot in this righteouſneſs "is not ſo eaſily ſettled;" p. 13. but that he muſt wait, and work for it in the way of "painful deſire and fear, till he is at laſt "crowned with enjoyment," in a clear diſcovery of his having faith, love, and ſelf-denied obedience, p. 419. We judge ourſelves not left to this uncertainty; and that, without the diſcovery of any ſuch difference betwixt us and other men, we are allowed to receive, enjoy, and live upon Jeſus Chriſt, as freely given to ſinners in the goſpel. Even as thoſe who are invited to an entertainment, are freely allowed to partake of what is ſet before them. Palæmon's view of the goſpel-report, ſets him at a diſtance from enjoyment, or leaves him in uncertainty, till his obedience manifeſts a difference betwixt him and others. Our view is of the ſufficient righteouſneſs, brought quite home, ſo that our firſt act is to live by it, that in the ſtrength thereof we may be influenced by love to him that firſt loved us.

It is true, the ſcripture "no where aſcertains that "Chriſt died for me in particular." But it allows, invites, and commands me a guilty ſinner, without more, to believe on him, live by him, &c. phraſes evidently expreſſive of the appropriation, truſt, or confidence we plead for.

Our author ſays, "That Chriſt died, that he gave his "life a ranſom for many, is, indeed, a truth fully aſcer-"tained in the ſcriptures,—for the relief of the ſhip-"wrecked and deſperate." But can it relieve any farther than it reſpects ourſelves? And if the goſpel-declaration concerning this righteouſneſs doth not reſpect us any farther than as we apprehend we may be of the elect, or that we have their qualifications, how does it relieve the ſhipwrecked and the deſperate? It rather relieves the elect and the qualified. This point ſeems to be Mr Sandeman's myſtery, and he guards the inquiry with ſomething like, Hence ye profane! "The world (ſays he) will always be objecting thus." A plain acknowledgment, I think, that that is the queſtion to be anſwered, or the guilty conſcience cannot be relieved; and a vindication of our view of the goſpel-report, as furniſhing us with the gracious anſwer.

"The ſcripture often affirms the final perdition of "many, not merely hearers of the goſpel, but who have "heard and received it with joy." Ibid.

This is an objection againſt depending on any thing I at preſent feel, but not againſt complying with the divine invitation to live by the ſufficient righteouſneſs of the Son of God; an objection againſt the certainty which ariſes from inherent qualifications, but not againſt that which proceeds ſolely on the divine invitation and faithfulneſs.

"Many ſhall ſeek to enter in, and ſhall not be able." "Ibid.

Becauſe they ſeek not by faith (by the truth of the goſpel), but as it were by the works of the law.

"Notwithſtanding their great confidence about their "acquaintance with Chriſt, and their intereſt in him, "and their experience of his preſence with them! he "will at laſt ſay unto them, I never knew you, depart from "me." Ibid.

The confidence of thoſe condemned, is evidently, not a confidence built upon the finiſhed work of Chriſt, given to them, or the divine faithfulneſs pledged to ſinners in the goſpel-report; but a confidence on their own attainments and experience, wherein they judged themſelves peculiarly entitled to the heavenly admiſſion.

Let who will be condemned, it is allowed by Mr Sandeman, that every believer of the ſufficiency of the work of Chriſt, to juſtify the ungodly, is juſtified. And it is very evident that whoever lives by that, as ſufficient for him, believes that ſufficiency, and is really ſaved by what he believes, though ten thouſand profeſſors periſh.

"When they are condemned then as hypocrites and "unbelievers, they are not condemned for want of Aſ-"paſio's faith; and that for theſe two reaſons; the firſt "is, it was never true that Chriſt died for them; the ſe-"cond is, they were not faulty in this reſpect, for the "ſacred text deſcribes them as rather too confident about "their intereſt in Chriſt." p. 14.

As to the firſt, it is not Aſpaſio's faith that Chriſt died for them, whether they believe it or no; and as to the ſecond, they may be condemned for neglecting or rejecting the goſpel-grant of a Saviour to the guilty; which is the truth Aſpaſio pleads for, and, at the

the same time, too confident upon their imagined attainments on which they found their hopes.

"The gospel proposes nothing to be believed by us, "but what is infallibly true, whether we believe it or "not." Ibid.

But it proposes something to be immediately received and enjoyed by us, without performing any entitling condition whatever. We plead for such a persuasion as is the reception of a gift; and what we thus receive, or assure ourselves of, depends for its truth (or infallible certainty) on the veracity and faithfulness of God, who has promised such shall not be confounded. We agree, that a persuasion of a proposition, true in itself, must be grounded on the evidence of that truth. But this is not the case, when we are commanded to believe on, or trust in the Lord.

"The gospel, which foretells the final perdition of so "many of its hearers, so many seriously and zealously "exercised about it, can never warrant us, to persuade "every one who hears it, that Christ died for him." Ibid.

The gospel, which foretells the final perdition of so many of its hearers, at the same time warrants every hearer to live by the righteousness it reveals; and assures them of eternal salvation who thus believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, or live by his righteousness alone, without more.

"Unless we shall say, that Christ died for every "individual of mankind, and consequently, that none "of mankind owe their salvation wholly to his death." Ibid.

They owe their salvation, and ascribe their salvation, wholly to his death, who live, and found all their hopes on that alone. Besides, our appropriation relates only to our conscious possession or enjoyment of that which justifies, and therefore is no more liable to the above-mentioned objection, than Palæmon's working to the same end, in a way of painful desire and fear, till he is crowned with enjoyment. If a man receives 10,000 l. as a gift, does the act exist without the gift? And is it the act that enriches him, or the riches he receives? We on both sides plead for the conscious enjoyment of the divine righteousness. He, that we enjoy from our consciousness of our acts of obedience, &c. We, by a discovery of the sufficient righteousness granted indefinitely to the guilty, in such a manner, as warrants each one's particular application. Who stands freest from the doctrine of self-dependence, I leave others to judge.

In the second letter, our author wishes Aspasio's faith had been "equally precious with the apostolic." page 18. As the difference between his faith and ours is, that we believe the righteousness which pleaseth God, is given to us guilty sinners immediately, to live by as our own, which he does not; his faith does not in that respect appear to be more precious, or more apostolic.

It is true, "the apostles never taught men to make "one step of advance towards God, on the prospect "that God would condescend and come down the rest "of the infinite distance to meet them." page 23.

And this may be a suitable argument against those who spend their time in offering Christ upon certain terms or conditions to be performed by the sinner.—— But this is far from being the case in what we plead for. Christ, or his righteousness, does not meet our believing application, but is the object of it, the thing applied. It is Christ, and his righteousness, that is immediately received, applied, or accounted ours, as being freely given or granted in the gospel-report. So that our appropriation terminates in its object, and can no more exist without Christ, than eating can without food. Is it proper to say, that in eating, a man makes only a step of advance towards his food, on the prospect that the food shall meet him? Just as improper to apply such representations to the appropriation pleaded for.

The apostles called men to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, in such a manner of address, as is inconsistent with intending thereby only such convictions as are purely passive; only such as force themselves upon the mind by the evidence of their truth. The apostolic language is, Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, Acts ii. 38. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation, 40. And again, Repent ye therefore, and be converted, chap. iii. 19. And again, To him gave all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in him, shall receive remission of sins, chap. x. 43. And again, Be it known unto you, therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sin. And by him all that believe are justified, chap. xiii. 38, 39. And again, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, &c. chap. xvi. 31. In all these instances, there is something exhorted to, called believing on, or in Christ; being baptized in his name for remission of sins; repenting, and being converted; something more than passive conviction, and, at the same time, something consistent with the alone sufficiency of Christ's righteousness, which can be neither more nor less, than the appropriation, trust, or confidence we plead for.

That "the promises of the gospel are made only to "believers," will never invalidate our plea for appropriation, while it remains true, that the grant of Christ, and the salvation in him, is made to sinners; and in receiving the grant, they evidently commence those to whom the promises are made; that is, those who believe on Christ according to the apostolic exhortation. And to sinners, thus immediately believing on Christ, the promises are made; first, to encourage such to draw near and live with confidence on the sufficient righteousness; secondly, to give them a certainty dependent upon the divine faithfulness, and animating thereby to the most ready and willing obedience.

To say no one must account the righteousness of Christ, as belonging to him, in any sense, until he discovers himself a true believer, as it excludes the application we plead for, so in its room it introduces all the pernicious consequences this author professes to avoid in his accusation of Aspasio, viz. "holding forth a preliminary human righteousness as some way expedient, or "rather necessary, to our enjoying the comfort and "benefit of Christ's." Unless Palæmon can make it manifest that we enjoy the comfort and benefit of Christ's righteousness, while we are, according to him, "working in the way of painful desire and fear, till we "come to that enjoyment;" common experience teacheth us, that righteousness can only relieve or comfort us, as far as it respects us. That he is able to save his elect, is no comfort to me, further than I conceive myself to be one of them; and in this case I am comforted, either by a conjectural hope, or by a hope founded on the difference there is betwixt me and others.

"And to obviate the difficulty, how shall I know "that the promise is to me! they address their brethren "in this manner: In the name of the great God we "declare, that the promise is to thee, and thee, O man, "woman, whosoever thou art." p. 23.

The promise of salvation, to whosoever believes on Christ, is evidently to the sinner, as his encouragement to come to the sure enjoyment of the righteousness and salvation given in him, by receiving, appropriating, and trusting confidently on him as so given.

"In his name, we call you this moment to stretch "forth the withered hand, and the withered heart, and "take hold of Christ, saying, He is mine, and I am his." Ibid.

That may be understood thus; "We speak not in our own name, as signifying our own importance, but inform you of the glad tidings, that it is God's command, and your duty, not to wait to feel some power or alteration in yourself as a ground for your confidence, but just as you are, in obedience to the divine com-command, receive or appropriate Christ, saying, He is mine, and I am his."

The withered hand and the withered heart, are expressions used to signify a powerless, helpless condition, which, consisting in the prevalence of our naturally-evil dispositions, serves to denominate us sinners, and spoils our hopes of living by our own performances; yet it is no objection against living by his obedience who hath become the righteousness of the guilty. For it must be remembered, we are not justified by our acts, but by the righteousness we appropriate; and our appropriation only serves to give us the divinely authentic enjoyment by the word, of that justification of the ungodly, and without strength, whereby we are saved. Hence we are called not to wait for strength to do something for the enjoyment of this justification, but stretch forth the withered hand, or just as we are, to live by Christ's righteousness, when we feel nothing but what marks us out for eternal destruction. When Lazarus was made to hear, he came forth, according to the command he heard, or in obedience to the voice that quickened him; and when we are made to hear the divine invitation and command to live by this righteousness, we appropriate it in obedience to him that makes us hear his voice. The righteousness itself, is that by which we are accepted; the appropriation respects our possession and enjoyment. In the latter we may be weaker or stronger; in the former, is the invariable ground of our confidence.

That God has given to us eternal life in his Son, is the apostolic style, and the very record which is pointed out for our peculiar attention; and when the word offer has been made use of, and understood to convey nothing more than this important truth, the believer of the record has become the receiver of the gift, or the enjoyer of the blessing.

"Hence we see, that This is mine, or this was done for me, is a truth, whose evidence takes its rise from the pains I take to believe it." p. 26.

Its evidence depends on the veracity and faithfulness of him who spake the world into being, has provided the sufficient righteousness, and has commanded us to give him this honour of depending on his word, in our enjoyment of this salvation.

It is not in this case the language of the belief of a truth, but of the reception or appropriation of a free gift; the belief of the truth of the sufficiency of Jesus Christ, and of his being freely given, goes before, and is that knowledge of the name of the Lord which emboldens us to put our trust in him. What we thus assure ourselves of, in compliance with the divine invitation, &c. as it is a certain truth in the divine mind, so it appears a truth by the divine word, when it is evident I am begotten to this Christian faith, hope, and charity. The difference here between us is, that, with Palæmon, This is mine, this was done for me, is a truth, whose evidence takes its rise only from a discovery, that I am distinguished from other sinners by my faith, love, and self-denied obedience. With us it is the language of a reception, appropriation, trust, or confidence, grounded upon the divine declarations to sinners for that purpose.

"This, I must say, is indeed a very strange and uncommon way of finding truth." Ibid.

But such a way of dependence on the divine veracity and faithfulness as becomes us, and gives glory to God. ——It is the reception of a gift by a persuasion of the mind.——It is trusting to the faithfulness of God to make out, in this particular case, a blessing indefinitely promised; not assuring myself of a proposition being true, but of eternal salvation, by a Saviour given to me.

To receive a gift, or to partake of any thing upon invitation, is nothing strange or uncommon. In this case, when the gift is given in divine declarations, and the reception of it purely mental, an answerable persuasion of the mind, or (in dependance on the divine veracity and faithfulness) an assuring ourselves of the blessing granted; what we are persuaded of is in a way peculiar to itself, and very consistent before him, who said, Whatsoever things ye desire when you pray, believe that you receive them, and ye have them. Palæmon will allow, that Christ's death is an uncommon affair, as is also imputing righteousness without works, &c. Why then should the peculiarity of thus enjoying righteousness without works, be so much the subject of sneer, because accounted strange and uncommon? ——May it not rather be accounted such a way of dependence on the divine veracity and faithfulness, as renders him his proper glory?

"If he (namely Christ) died for them that perish, "then the happiness of them who are saved, must be "owing to something else beside his death." Ibid.

Aspasio is no farther concerned here, than as he maintains, that Christ is given for the guilty to appropriate and live by. And in this regard, may it not be said, with as much propriety, If an entertainment, provided in common, is refused by some, that then the nourishment of those who partake of it, is owing to something else besides the food? this coming pretty near to our Lord's representation, John vi. 53. A fallacy or impropriety charged upon the former, is also a reflection upon the latter.

If we understand, by the happiness of them who are saved, their redemption from the wrath to come, and title to future glory; this is owing strictly to his perfect righteousness. If we mean their present happiness in a conscious possession, knowledge, or enjoyment of this redemption; this we may say is owing to his death, given to be received. Palæmon says, to a discovery of our faith, love, and self-denied obedience.

It is a very just observation, That "in speaking of "the redemption that is in Jesus Christ, we had need "keep clear of all human systems, and hold close by "the scriptures." p. 30.

And it is in strict conformity to this we assert, that although God has given eternal life in his Son, even unto them, who, by disbelieving it, make God a liar; yet no man has that life, but he that has the Son. God gives being to that which he commands, authorises, and thereby enables us to receive, appropriate, or be persuaded of. And if we admit of his character as a just God and a Saviour, in justifying the ungodly, why should we object thus giving him the glory of his power and faithfulness? Thus SARAH received strength to conceive seed,—because she judged him (not only able, but) faithful that had promised.——And thus our Lord speaks, Mark xi. 22. 23. 24. Shall it be disputed, whether God can give an existence to things that yet are not, and make out that to be true, which we, according to his word, depend upon him for? This confidence is due to God only, and is giving him glory. On the other hand, to suppose this cannot be, and, on this account, to set aside this manner of believing or trusting in him, is to rob him of his proper glory.

This persuasion may properly be called TRUSTING in the Lord, because it proceeds neither on pre-evidence, nor inward qualifications, but on God's bare word of invitation, promise, &c. taking that as a sufficient authority and security. By this a proper dependence of the creature on the Creator is preserved and kept up. And unless it can, without misrepresentation, be shewn inconsistent and antiscriptural; all other objections raised against it are but of small account; and all labour to form it into a proposition, true in itself, whether we believe it or no, is the labour of diffidence and unbelief. For it is plain, they cannot trust to God's invitations, commands, and declarations; and are seeking a reason of hope more agreeable to themselves.

"Aſpaſio maintains, that none have the proper ſcrip-"tural faith, but thoſe who are taught by the enlighten-"ing Spirit to draw the concluſion." p. 334.

Aſpaſio maintains, that "when the divine Spirit opens our eyes, &c. we diſcover and make uſe of the ſame right or warrant as is the privilege of the vileſt miſ-creant; a right founded, not on our awakened deſires, but purely, ſolely, entirely on the free grant of a Sa-viour." Dialogues, p. 335.

"They maintain, that reprobates have as fair a re-"vealed warrant, to draw the concluſion, as the elect "have." Ibid.

That is, that no man need to wait to ſee his election, or, in other words, any difference between himſelf and other men, to warrant his confidence in Chriſt. The general indefinite expreſſions, contained in the declara-tions of the goſpel, ſuch as whoſoever, any man, he that believeth in him, &c. fully authoriſing or warranting he, any man, whoſoever he be, to believe, or truſt confidently on Chriſt alone for everlaſting life. Being taught of God this truth, he lives by Chriſt as the Saviour of the loſt, even as being taught the ſufficiency of Chriſt he lives by that alone.

In the third letter, our author miſtakes the real queſ-tion between us. It is not, "Whether or not did "Chriſt finiſh upon the croſs, all that God requires, "every requiſite, without exception, to procure accep-"tance for, and give relief unto the guilty conſcience of "the moſt profane wretch that lives?" p. 41. 42.

This is not diſputed by us, but maintained more pro-perly on our ſide than by our author. The queſtion between us, is, Whether the guilty conſcience can be relieved from the ſentence of condemnation, by the conſideration of a ſufficient righteouſneſs for the elect and the qualified? Or, Whether God hath not provided for the relief of the guilty conſcience, by giving his only begotten Son that we might live through him? giving him not only to die, but giving him in the divine de-clarations to be believed on?

"It muſt be the very ſame thing which placates di-"vine juſtice, or which fully expreſſes the neceſſary op-"poſition of infinite goodneſs to evil or ſin, that re-"lieves the ſinner from the ſentence of condemnation, "which is no other than the voice of God naturally re-"ſiding in the conſcience." Ibid.

As it would be very abſurd to ſuppoſe it placates the divine juſtice, without being conſidered by that juſtice in the behalf of the tranſgreſſor; ſo it ſeems to be equally abſurd, that it can "relieve the guilty con-"ſcience from the ſentence of condemnation," without being appropriated by that conſcience.

The ſentence of condemnation, naturally reſiding in the conſcience, requires a revelation of righteouſneſs, that I may as really impute to myſelf, as the ſin that condemns me, or the condemnation ſtill remains un-touched. A poſſibility, that I may be an elect perſon, cannot give relief, becauſe it may be ten to one it is not true. My hope is only in proportion, as I apprehend many, or few, to be elected; and, after all, it is not, in fact, Chriſt's righteouſneſs that relieves me, but my conjectural or fond hope of being one of the elect.

Chriſt did finiſh upon the croſs that righteouſneſs "which placates the divine juſtice, or which fully ex-"preſſes the neceſſary oppoſition of infinite goodneſs to "evil, or ſin." That righteouſneſs which alone can relieve the ſinner from eternal death, entitle him to eter-nal life, and bring peace and hope of everlaſting life to the moſt guilty conſcience. At the ſame time, it would be abſurd to ſay, Chriſt finiſhed on the croſs every re-quiſite or commandment relative to this righteouſneſs as preached or declared in the world. For inſtance; He hath commanded all men every where to repent. Which I underſtand a repentance reſpective of this righteouſneſs, and the ſame with the commandment, that we ſhould be-lieve on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt. Again, the voice from heaven, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed, was attended with a commandment to hear him, agreeable to Iſ. li. 1.—5. If it is again inquired, of what avail are theſe commandments? It may be an-ſwered, as the commandment to preach the goſpel to every creature, availed to be the ſavour of life unto life in them that are ſaved, and of death unto death in them that periſh; ſo the commandment to believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, avails to encourage and warrant the ſinner, as ſuch, to truſt, believe in, or ap-propriate and enjoy that righteouſneſs. I am perſuaded Palæmon will not ſay, that Chriſt finiſhed upon the croſs any of the commandments above mentioned. As it may be affirmed on the other hand, that the obedience to theſe commands is no part of that righteouſneſs which procures acceptance for, or gives relief unto the con-ſcience of the moſt profane wretch that lives. But Palæmon's reply is, That all obedience to theſe com-mands, ſuppoſes the belief of the goſpel-report. Be it ſo, the commandment ſpeaks to them, not as to believ-ers, or to the diſtinguiſhed among mankind, but as to ſinners or children of wrath, even as others; and is the divine method of grace in giving us a conſcious poſſeſ-ſion or enjoyment. Which Palæmon ſeeks totally by works.

"What is the turning-point from deſpair to good "hope?" Ibid.

The finiſhed work of Chriſt alone. How is that our hope? As it is given for that purpoſe to be the hope of the guilty.

"Aſpaſio's faith reſts, one foot on the work of Chriſt, "and the other on human efforts, or the motions of "man's heart." Ibid.

Quite a miſtake. Aſpaſio's faith is, that the work of Chriſt is given to him; on this he reſts, and on no mo-tions of his heart whatever.

"What gives right to eternal life? The imputed "righteouſneſs. What gives right to that? The work "of faith. Who have a right to act faith? Thoſe who "feel an averſion to ſin," &c. p. 44.

This is alſo far from being Aſpaſio's view of the mat-ter: he ſhould be repreſented thus; What gives right to eternal life? The imputed righteouſneſs. What gives right to that? The declarations of the goſpel, giving it freely to ſinners as ſuch. Who have a right to act faith, or appropriate this righteouſneſs? All the ends of the earth; as many as can be included in the word whoſo-ever. To any of all the ends of the earth were the apoſ-tles commiſſioned to ſay, Believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and thou ſhalt be ſaved. To exhort thus to a paſſive involuntary conviction, would be very abſurd.

Aſpaſio's obſervation is, the "grant is made to ſin-"ners; in receiving the grant we commence belie-"vers," according to the above-mentioned apoſtolic exhortation.

"But Aſpaſio will ſtill inſiſt, that theſe qualifica-"tions are by no means the ground of their right. "Let us ſee then, where the ground of their right "lies?" p. 46.

In the divine declarations to ſinners as ſuch.

"I think the obvious meaning of Aſpaſio's words is "this: theſe perſons, ſo qualified, have the right ex-"cluſive of unqualified ſinners." Ibid.

It is very obvious this is not his meaning.

"Where then can the ground of this right lie, but "in the diſtinguiſhed qualifications? It cannot lie in "any thing common to both; for, in that caſe, the "unqualified would have as good a right as the quali-"fied." Ibid.

They have ſo. Theſe are Aſpaſio's real ſentiments; whatever qualifications make a difference between one man and another, they confer no right to the king-dom of God, they confer no right to the imputed righteouſneſs. For as all have ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God, they who are juſtified, are juſtified freely freely by his grace, through the redemption which is in Jesus Christ.

"They have nothing in the heaven above, nor in the "earth below, to keep their hearts from sinking into "utter despair, but the bare propitiation. This, and "this alone, encourages them to make their address to "God." p. 48.

Can this encourage further than they see their interest in it, or right to draw near to God thereby, in virtue of his gracious declarations? And how are they to address God? As their friend and father, on account of this righteousness? Then they, in fact, appropriate it, and our debate is at an end; we are agreed. Or, do they address God only as the friend of some who are to be known in time by suitable qualifications? If this is our author's meaning, then it is he, and not Aspasio, that, in drawing near to God, seeks for inherent qualifications, instead of the imputed righteousness.

"By this, and this alone, God conveys the first taste "of his favour and peace into their hearts." Ibid.

Unless we conceive of the imputed righteousness as graciously granted unto us in this destitute condition, where is the connection? What taste of favour and peace can be admitted barely by the consideration of sufficiency for the elect? Sufficient for me a guilty sinner, without any other consideration, is evangelical. To wait for something more before we are allowed to call him friend or father, on account of this righteousness, is not at all adapted to bring us nigh to God by the bare propitiation.

"And it pleases me to find, Aspasio had not courage "to close this period, without bringing forth the plain "truth at last. For pointing to the poor, indigent, and "guilty sinners, he concludes, For such the Saviour is "provided; to such his benefits are proposed; and on "such his grace will be magnified." p. 48, 49.

If it is allowed, that his benefits are proposed to such, the debate is ended. We mean no more. It is undoubtedly warrantable to receive and appropriate what is provided for the enjoyment of any, or whosoever among the guilty; and proposed to our trust and confidence under that name. If any other consideration must intervene, then it is plain, the benefits are not provided for and proposed to such, but only for, and to those who have the additional consideration.

"As for the bare work finished on the cross, or the "bare report about it, however true we think it, so far "have we mistaken it, that, setting aside our active ope"rations about it, we do not see what comfort or benefit "can be derived from it." p. 85.

This proceeds on a total mistake and misrepresentation of Aspasio; he is not putting the least slight on the report or persuasion of the sufficiency of the finished work of Jesus Christ, to justify the most guilty without more; he is here opposing a qualified persuasion, or rather mere profession, artfully substituted in the room of the sufficient righteousness, and the sinner's living by that alone—A persuasion, "that the shelter of the sum"mer-house is free for our use, accompanied with a high esteem of its accommodation, an earnest desire after its protection, or an habitual tendency towards it." Aspasio asks not whether a persuasion of the sufficiency of Christ, but "a persuasion that the summer-house is free "for our use," whether this, though accompanied with esteem, desire, or tendency, unless "carried into actual "entrance and possession," would answer the end and design of such a truth, "would be a proper safe-guard, "or indeed any manner of advantage as to our per"sons," that is, in respect of possession, enjoyment, and advantage from that enjoyment. These are his very words, 16th dialogue, p. 344. And let any one impartially judge, whether Aspasio is here objecting against the finished work of Jesus? or rather, is he not setting aside a fruitless persuasion, or rather profession, that the shelter is free for our use, with dependence on our supposed esteems, desires, tendencies, &c. that the soul may rest purely and entirely on Jesus Christ alone? Whom in the same page he describes from the prophet Isaiah, as "a place of refuge, as a covert from the storm "and from rain." Aspasio asks, if a persuasion that Christ is such a place of refuge and covert free for our use, accompanied with any esteems, desires, and tendencies, will answer to such a representation? Which is, in fact, whether we may trust in such a persuasion, esteem, desire, and tendency, instead of that righteousness which is our appointed refuge? It is plain, all the active operations pleaded for, is to live by this alone, in distinction from any other dependence. And the advantage arising from these active operations, is the enjoyment, comfort, and influence of this sufficient righteousness.

If the objector had been pleading for the entire sufficiency of the work of Jesus, Aspasio would readily agree to that, and have recommended living by that alone. But after he had so far coincided with Aspasio, as to allow, "that all this grace, and each of these benefits, "are free, perfectly free, for you, for me, for others;" might not Aspasio ask, would this bare persuasion answer the end and design of such a truth, unless I was induced thereby to really use it as a shelter? that is, to oppose Christ's righteousness, thus freely given unto me, to every sense of guilt and condemnation, and assure myself of salvation by that alone. As I suppose Mr Sandeman, in his view of things, will allow the believer of the gospel-report to oppose the truth of Christ's sufficiency to every declaration or conviction of guilt tending to despair, and this may as properly be called reducing that truth to practice. This is what Aspasio calls reducing to practice, the truth of Christ being given for us to receive and live by him as such a gift, as a refuge from all curses of the law, and danger of damnation, unto the end of peace, assurance, and holiness. We do not consider the gospel as barely furnishing us with good and excellent materials to work upon, but with blessings to enjoy and possess as our own; and our whole comfort, or any part of it, does not arise from the success of our labour, but wholly from the blessing so freely presented to us to take comfort in them, and is very far from making them fit to comfort us.

"Now, it does not signify much by what name we "call the mean of escape, whether we call it the law or "the gospel; for the great concern we have with "either of these, is to obtain righteousness or a title to "life." p. 92, 93.

However true this may be of those who seek by works in a way of "painful desire and fear till they are "crowned with enjoyment;" Aspasio is not chargeable, whose doctrine allows an immediate enjoyment, without the intervention of any righteousness or work whatever.

"For—it is not the bare knowledge of the law or "gospel that can do us any service, but the use we make "of them." p. 93.

This is but mere sound; for our author pleads for the above-mentioned use to be made of the report, previous to the enjoyment of the privilege. The use we make of the gospel-report, is immediately to live by the righteousness it reveals: whereas the use of the law is to do that we may live. Is not here a manifest? yea, is not here a sufficient difference?

"So each one reasons thus: Seeing many shall perish, "and seeing the gospel says nothing to me, but what it says to "every one, what comfort can I reap from it, unless I can find "about myself, at least one grain of odds, casting the balance "in my favour, in comparison with others, or in comparison "with what I myself have hitherto been? p. 94.

But this is not Aspasio's language, which may rather be represented, Seeing the gospel authorises me and every sinner to live by the righteousness it reveals, why should I not make this use of it? Since the door into the kingdom of God is thus open for sinners, why should I any longer hesitate?

of

"But what signifies all this, says the proud devotee, "unless I can find some reason about myself, why the "Deity should distinguish me as his favourite beyond "other men? And thus he treats the bare truth of the "gospel with scorn and contempt." Note, p. 97.

Aspasio waits for no such reason, therefore this representation does not affect him.

"In vain shall he (any sinner) expect to hear one "syllable more from God, to encourage him to draw "nigh to him, than that he is well pleased in his beloved "Son; that JEHOVAH is well pleased for his righteous-"ness." p. 115.

Hath not God already said, He that believeth on him shall not be ashamed? that he that cometh to him shall in no wise be cast out? &c. Hath he not given him as bread from heaven, that whosoever eateth him should live by him? Has he not given eternal life to us in him? even so given to us, that whosoever of us believe not this record that he hath given of his Son, makes him a lyar? Are we to set aside these declarations as no encouragement to us to appropriate or to draw nigh to God, lest we should not sufficiently submit ourselves to the divine sovereignty? Or are we not rather to look upon them, as the declarations of sovereign grace; which has found out a way consistent with the highest justice thus to shew favour to the guilty, and for the encouragement of such to believe on him, or draw nigh with confidence through the faith of him?

"The apostle John says, This is his commandment, that "we should believe on the name of his Son; not that we "should do any thing to obtain life, but that we should "live by what he hath done. It is a commandment "not requiring any thing of us, but bestowing life by "the knowledge which it conveys." p. 126.

If I live by what he hath done, I account what he hath done, given me for that purpose. And this is also the use I make of it; and this commandment, so understood, requireth nothing of us, but bestows life by the knowledge it conveys. So that what our author has here said, expresses our whole mind, and may end the dispute.

"Paul, in the deepest of all his distresses, was relieved by that very faith, which we modern Christians, "in the height of our complaisance, chuse only to call, "of the enfeebled and infantile kind." p. 128.

A mistake this; Paul was relieved by a view of the sufficiency of grace for himself in particular, My grace is sufficient for THEE. He waited for no other righteousness to certify him, that this sufficient grace belonged to him.

"If we hearken to them, the great point about which "our faith is principally concerned, is a matter which "turns out to be true; no book nor man can tell how." p. 168.

It turns out to be true in God's faithfulness, answering to his gracious declarations. Our assurance or appropriation is founded and exercised upon God's faithfulness to answer to what he has revealed as the ground of our confidence. That he has given to us eternal life in his Son; that in this man's name is preached to us remission of sins; and that whosoever believeth on him shall not perish, but have everlasting life. So that, in the very nature of the thing, the appropriating language is only the language of trust and confidence, and will turn out to be truth, if God may be depended on, as he most surely may.

"In the gospel-offer, we are told, is presented to the "poor bankrupt, a bond, or bill indorsed to him, to relieve him from his poverty.——It is not his as yet," Ibid.

It is freely given to him, it is his in right to possess and enjoy, as any thing we are invited to partake of——It is therefore his to live upon, though not his in present enjoyment. It is not presented to him, but in common with others who perish, rejecting it as insufficient; yet it is so really presented to him, that he is welcome to live by it, or avail himself of it as his own, without performing one act, or obtaining one qualification to entitle him to it. The difficulty lies in a man's being thoroughly persuaded that this is true; which when a man really is, he immediately lives by this revealed righteousness without more.

"He at last lays hold of it,—so it becomes his." Ibid.

It becomes his by that same grace which has convinced him of its truth, and influenced him thereby to appropriate and enjoy it. It becomes his in possession and enjoyment. Not that God imputes it on account of our appropriation; that only serves the use of peace of conscience by it, and a warrantable enjoyment by the divine word, and to demonstrate we are those to whom it is imputed.

Mr Marshall, Mr Boston, and Mess. Erskines, maintain, that, according to the law, "man is bound to believe whatever God declares, and do whatever he commands; that the duty of believing to be true what God has reported, and receiving what he has commanded us to receive, or take to ourselves, belongs to the law; which fastens the new duty upon us, the moment the gospel reveals the new object."——And if this is not true, how will the hearers of the gospel be condemned for despising or neglecting this great salvation? And if this is true, why may not gospel-ministers declare against the rejectors of this grace, what will be matter of their just condemnation? Or, in other words, what proves, that they that perish, perish justly, and of their own will and choice, vindicating the righteous judgment of God.

And is it not to be maintained consistent with this, that the gospel is purely and entirely a revelation of a sufficient righteousness for the most guilty, that where it takes place in the heart, it is by the sovereign grace of him who provided the righteousness it treats of? That in receiving it for true, and living by it, they are fulfilling the command of the new covenant; they are performing of duty; and at the same time, the subjects of the New-testament promise, in having that obedience, or law written on their heart by the Spirit of the living God, as a Spirit of grace and truth?

"I hope Satan does not chain you to your houses, "nor stake you down to your fields on the Lord's "day." p. 267.

This is rather to be considered as a convicting them of their sinful negligence and willing ignorance, than giving any directions what we must do to be saved. In that case we allow the answer is, Either keep the law yourself, or live by what Christ has already done.

"We may now turn our eyes more particularly to "those who are most successful in propagating a per-"verted gospel.——These men do indeed press very "hard upon the conscience to awaken fear: but when "they have driven the serious hearer almost to despair, "by an awful description of his miserable condition, "and by representing him as utterly unable in every "respect to contribute any thing toward his own deli-"verance, they at last condescend, with no small art and "address, to make some comfortable exceptions from "the foregoing awful doctrine.——Now is described, "in a variety of particulars, a convenient resource, "where the pride of the serious hearer may exercise it-"self with great hopes of success." p. 279.

The pride of the serious hearer, is the conceit of his being able to do or obtain something to deliver him, as proceeding from his propensity to live by something he is to do, whereby he becomes self-dependent. The truth is, the gift of the divine righteousness depends on no doing or difference in man. The being quickened by the truth of the gospel to hear the voice of God therein, depends on the sovereign good pleasure of heaven. A man hearing this voice of God, not to the qualified, but to the absolutely guilty guilty and loſt, is made obedient to the commands and exhortations to believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, or to live by his righteouſneſs, without waiting for any other; and the obedience that anſwers as an echo to that divine voice, command, invitation, &c. is, and can be no other, than truſting, depending, and aſſuring ourſelves of ſalvation by Chriſt alone, in obedience to the divine declaration; as Lazarus came forth in obedience to the voice that quickened him. When we bid ſinners believe on Chriſt, we would be underſtood as exhibiting a quickening truth, as well as a divine command; that is, that there is a ſufficient Saviour who may ſafely be depended on. And in obedience to this voice we are not doing that we may live, but we are living by Chriſt alone, in obedience to him who makes the dead to hear his voice. The pride of the ſerious hearer may be as much excited by being told to do that they may know their ſalvation, as to do to be ſaved.

"The preacher finds it neceſſary to warn his hearers "to avoid all thoughts of this doctrine of election at pre-"ſent." Ibid.

That is, when election is objected againſt the divine declarations, encouraging the guilty under that character, and without any evidence of election, to live immediately by Chriſt's righteouſneſs. For the jailor to have objected election againſt Paul, when he bid him believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, would have been from the enemy.

"Becauſe (ſays he) there is in this doctrine no viſible "ground for faith to reſt upon,—no viſible reſource for "the pride of any man." p. 280.

No viſible ground for a ſinner's confidence or truſt in Chriſt alone, which is not the pride of man, but eſſential to the faith of God's elect.

"Sometimes they take great pains to ſhew us how "little we do when we put forth an act of faith." p. 281.

The act we plead for, is to live alone by what Chriſt has done, whether we call it believing on Chriſt, receiving, appropriating, truſting, or whatever name we give it; this is what we mean. Our opponents on this head, are thoſe who are for having ſome good thing to be wrought in us, or done by us, before we are to be allowed to live by what Jeſus has done; which is, in fact, a denial of its being wrought for the guilty. When they have been driven out of every ſubterfuge, they at laſt plead, that we tell people to believe on Chriſt; whereas it is the Spirit's work, and they muſt wait for this working of the Spirit before they are able to believe. We do not pretend to deny, that for a man to believe on the Son of God is the Spirit's work; but at the ſame time we are aſſured, that when a man is taught of God to believe Chriſt's righteouſneſs a proviſion for the guilty, he is not taught to aſſume any other character as his title to it. Nor is he taught of God to conſider himſelf in any other light than as guilty, and juſtly condemned. And therefore we farther inſiſt upon it, that a man, without waiting for any thing more than what Chriſt has already done, is to live by that, as ſufficient for him, and given to him in the indefinite grant of the goſpel. And this he is to do, that is, live by Chriſt's righteouſneſs in obedience to the divine command and invitation, when he feels nothing good in him, to embolden him thereto; and to depend upon it, that that righteouſneſs will not fail him. And thus far we proceed ſcripturally, according to the anſwer given to the Philippian jailor.

We have alſo aſſerted, that a man may aſk the queſtion, What ſhall I do to be ſaved, and yet be but upon nature's bottom. The direction to that man, is not to wait for to do ſomething, or to get ſomething done in him, but to believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. When it has been objected to this, that nature cannot believe on Chriſt, and therefore ſuch are not to be told ſo; we have anſwered, he that gives the command is able to overcome this difficulty by divine conviction of the truth, writing his laws in our hearts and minds. And while we, thus taught of God, in obedience to the word, are endeavouring to believe or truſt on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to obtain our certainty, and reſt ſatisfied with this righteouſneſs, the Spirit of grace and truth may further diſſipate every diſtruſtful ſuggeſtion, and make us fully ſo. And here by believing on Chriſt, we mean ſuch a truſting, confiding on him, as we allow follows a divine paſſive conviction of the truth, that kind of activity which is intimated in the ſcripture-phraſes, Acts xvi. 31. John vi. 35. and John iii. 23.

We cannot believe through our natural averſeneſs to live by the righteouſneſs of another, or our proneneſs to eſtabliſh our own. But, at the ſame time, he that is taught of God, when he acknowledges he can do nothing, he rejoices that nothing is left for him to do, but on the contrary that he is called to live by what Chriſt has already done. And they who will not diſtinguiſh this life from an endeavour to live by our own righteouſneſs, cannot be farther talked with.

As conviction of the truth of the ſufficiency of Chriſt, and his being freely given to the guilty and loſt, is the only conviction of truth that is free from ſelf-righteouſneſs; ſo to live by this ſufficient righteouſneſs as ſo given, is the only activity that moſt immediately anſwers to the above-mentioned truths.

Palæmon cannot deny, but coming to Chriſt has the promiſe of being in nowiſe caſt out; but he judges it to be an obedience in conſequence of faith, or the belief of the truth. This, on the other hand, is not denied him. And it may be alſo affirmed, that the promiſe is an encouragement of certainty of ſucceſs to every one that comes to him, and a divine declaration which aſcertains the ſufficient righteouſneſs to be imputed to every particular perſon anſwering that character. Coming to Chriſt is allowed to be more than a paſſive conviction; it is allowed to be ſomething active in conſequence of ſuch a conviction; and as it cannot by any ſuch activity or coming as contradicts the alone ſufficiency of Chriſt's finiſhed work, what anſwers to the ſcripture-deſcriptions or names given to this activity, more properly than living by that ſufficient righteouſneſs, inſtead of doing or ſeeking to do any thing to add thereto?

And as far as Aſpaſio, Marſhall, &c. plead for, or encourage, to an activity of this kind, they cannot be accuſed juſtly of ſetting up another righteouſneſs.—This activity terminates in its object, and reſolves itſelf entirely therein. The buſineſs to be accompliſhed by this activity, is only to come under ſuch a certainty of ſalvation by Chriſt alone, as is implied in the words truſt and confidence; and the nature of it is as oppoſite to ſetting up another righteouſneſs, as the perſuaſion of Chriſt's ſufficiency. Palæmon pleads for activity in coming at the certainty of our intereſt in Chriſt's ſufficient work, and we plead for no more. Which therefore removes our plea beyond the reach of his objections.

To plead for appropriation as ſomething to be added to entitle to acceptance, is liable to Palæmon's objections. To plead for it, ſo as to make the ſufficient righteouſneſs depend on that act for its acceptance with God in our behalf, may alſo be accuſed as a doctrine of ſelf-dependence; but to appropriate as an effect of the report believed, as a means of aſcertaining to ourſelves eternal life by that righteouſneſs revealed, and as an animating principle of obedience evidencing our ſpecial intereſt therein, is not at all liable to ſuch objections.

"If faith muſt be called an inſtrument, and if it "be at the ſame time maintained, that juſtification "comes by faith only; then I am at full liberty to

" affirm, that he who is poſſeſſed of the inſtrument, " hand, or mouth, is already juſtified, without regard " to his uſing the inſtrument," &c. p. 285.

Quite a miſtaken view; becauſe faith, or appropriation of Chriſt, has no exiſtence in itſelf without its object, as material inſtruments have.

" We ſhall ſeldom find them ſpeaking any thing " like the language of the goſpel, without cautioning, " mincing, or clogging it with ſome exceptive; but," &c. Ibid.

The apoſtle ſays, To him that worketh not, but believeth, &c. There is a believing that ſtands oppoſed to working; and if our but is the but of the apoſtle, and only reſpects our receiving the record, and appropriating the revealed righteouſneſs accordingly, it is free from this exception.

" Though Theron is diveſted of all righteouſneſs of his " own, of every qualification and every recommendation, he " muſt yet be well provided with requiſites, even ſuch " as may embolden him to make the appropriation." p. 287.

A wide miſtake; Aſpaſio's ſcope and deſign throughout, is to ſhew, that nothing emboldens to appropriation, but the divine grant to ſinners, as ſuch.

" He (Theron) is very willing to believe that he is a " gracious perſon." p. 288.

How evident does it appear from the paſſage here quoted, that the faith or truth recommended was, " that " all was his;" that is, by way of the divine grant of heaven to the guilty?—Quite different from believing about himſelf that he is a gracious perſon.

" And while Theron cannot be brought to believe, Aſ- " paſio beholds his title perfectly clear." p. 289.

Aſpaſio beheld his title or warrant to appropriate from the divine grant made to ſinners; not from the prerequiſites of Theron.

" I muſt frankly own,—that I ſee no more difference " betwixt a careleſs and convicted ſinner, than is be- " twixt a felon ranging his round at large, and one " newly apprehended by the officers of juſtice: and for " my part, I think it would look liker an impertinent " ſarcaſm, than any thing elſe, to tell either of theſe " laſt, that he was now in a very hopeful way." p. 293.

As faith comes by hearing, we hope for another when we can prevail with him only to hear. This does not imply, that there is a foundation of hope in them. We hope when we ſee people concerned about their everlaſting ſtate, that this concern will terminate in liſtening to the remedy that is graciouſly provided.

" As if one could reap any ſpiritual benefit from ſtudy- " ing the divine law, or know how pure, how exten- " ſive, how ſublimely-perfect it is, before he knows " Chriſt the end thereof for righteouſneſs; as if ſuch a " one could judge of his ſpiritual ſtate impartially." p. 295.

Palæmon ſeems to forget, that in page 51, he has intimated, that "it was for want of comparing themſelves " with the divine law, that the Phariſees made their " miſtake." He that meaſures himſelf by others inſtead of this ſublimely-perfect ſtandard, muſt at laſt ſtand ſelf-condemned *. He that meaſures himſelf hereby, will know his ſtate to be deſperate, unleſs relieved by the finiſhed work of Chriſt.

" Aſpaſio, then, hath found out a path, by walking " wherein the guilty may confidently hope to arrive at " righteouſneſs at laſt." p. 296.

Not ſo, but Aſpaſio hath found himſelf guilty by comparing himſelf with the divine law;—he hath found the difference ſo great, as to lead him to deſpair of himſelf;—he hath found Chriſt the end of the law for righteouſneſs, and the principle of new evangelical obedience.—He teſtifies of this with confidence, as a ſubject wherewith he is really acquainted, and teſtifies of what he has experienced to be true.

" The doubtſome faith he (E. E.) complains of, is " that which admits of a doubt concerning one's own " ſtate. Now, a man may have ſome doubts about " this, who is very firmly perſuaded of the truth of the " goſpel." p. 334.

The doubtſome faith we complain of, is the want of that confidence anſwerable to the gracious declarations of ſalvation in Chriſt to the abſolutely guilty; and not a man's doubting about himſelf, or what he at preſent is. On the contrary, we maintain, that this perſuaſion of a new ſtate in Chriſt, implies our natural ſtate to be quite bad, and paſt recovery; and the particular application we plead for, is flying from a bad ſtate in our natural ſituation, to a good ſtate in the perſon, righteouſneſs, and bleſſings of Chriſt.

As exiſtence, and conſciouſneſs of exiſtence, bear ſuch a relation to each other in the human mind, that the former is only enjoyed by the latter; ſo is juſtification, and the conſciouſneſs of it. If I perceive not my juſtification, it is to me as if I was not juſtified. If I apprehend it is ſo from a falſe foundation, it will prove to me as a dream, which vaniſhes when wide awake. If a man, by ſome kind of argument, was to perſuade me that I exiſted a thouſand years ago, though I am not now conſcious of it, it would be the ſame deluſion, as if he was to perſuade me that I am now King George, or the King of Pruſſia. For a hundred ſuch exiſtences is, in fact, a hundred men, every man's own conſciouſneſs aſcertaining himſelf to himſelf in diſtinction from any other. In like manner, if a man was to uſe arguments, to perſuade me that I was juſtified long ago, when I was not conſcious of it, he could propoſe no other end, his labour could no otherwiſe terminate, than in perſuading me that I am now juſtified. And that which is brought to prove, that I am one of thoſe who were juſtified long ago, when I was not conſcious of it, may as well give me a conſciouſneſs of my preſent juſtification, without all that round-about labour. Unleſs it is, that while we are conſidering theſe pre-exiſting juſtifications, we are apt to ſlip ourſelves in for a ſhare, upon a foundation that will not bear a preſent ſcrutiny. The ſcripture therefore, does not thus metaphyſically ſubtilize, it does not thus ſeparate our juſtification from the conſciouſneſs of it. He that is juſtified, by the finiſhed work of Chriſt, without any conſciouſneſs of a difference between himſelf and others, is juſtified as ungodly; has peace with God by that which juſtifies him; and is juſtified by his faith, that is, not by what he does, but by what he believes: and the additional confirmation, by the fruits of faith, or conſciouſneſs of our not being deceived in our juſtification by faith, is called by the apoſtle James, juſtification by works, without bearing any contradiction to the alone righteouſneſs by which we are juſtified. If my juſtification ariſes to me from the difference there is betwixt me and others, I may be ſaid to be juſtified, or enjoy juſtification by that difference. If the ſpring of my hope ariſes to my view from the report making me welcome to the finiſhed work of Chriſt, as the righteouſneſs provided for the guilty to live by, then I am juſtified, or enjoy juſtification by Chriſt's righteouſneſs given to me, in oppoſition to any thing done by me, or performed in me. If my perſonal juſtification, and the conſciouſneſs of it, ſtand ſo nearly related, it is not at all improper that the ground of our acceptance with God, and the ground of our conſciouſneſs of that acceptance, ſhould be of the ſame kind. So that if I am accepted with God by the work of

* If, as the ſcripture affirms, the thoughts and imaginations of of man's heart are evil, and that continually; if this compound of evils is only in ſome meaſure reſtrained and covered in the brighteſt characters amongſt men; if theſe reſtraints are only from the various workings of pride, fear, and ſhame, in all who are not influenced by the ſaving truth: how wretchedly are they miſtaken, who found their hope on ſelf-excellencies ariſing from ſo poor and ſhameful an original?

Christ alone, given to me, I am to know my acceptance with God just upon the same, and no other foundation. If it were not so, the favourite something might be set up, and the pride of man as fully gratified under the name of marks and evidences, as it is under the name of entitling conditions; and we are as effectually taught to draw near, with a God, I thank thee, I am not as other men. The sufficient righteousness justifies a man, and gives him a consciousness of his acceptance with God, when he knows it is graciously given to him, so that he is made welcome to draw near to God on that account. He that believes to the peace of his conscience, believes this, and does not rest in an uncertain conjectural hope. Says Palæmon, a hope grounded on the sovereignty of God;—say we, not unless that sovereignty has declared a ground of hope for us; otherwise we rest in bare conjecture. But hearing that Jesus has fulfilled all righteousness for the justification of those guilty ones who believe in his name, from a conviction that the doctrine is true, we assure ourselves, in dependence on the divine veracity and faithfulness, that the privileges are our own; or that we shall not be confounded in so trusting to Jesus.

"Paul calls upon some whom he himself looked upon as believers, to examine themselves whether they were in the faith; and he exhorts others, about whom he observed the surest tokens of their being true Christians, to give all diligence to remove every doubt concerning their state." p. 334.

When Paul bid the Corinthians examine themselves, &c. he plainly intimates their being in the faith a self-evident matter; and that to be in the faith, and to have Christ in them, as the peace of their consciences, and hope of glory, is the same thing; and this was the surest evidence that he had been a minister of Christ unto them. He is not here calling them to remove the doubts concerning their own state, by a discovery of their faith, love, and self-denied obedience. It is also very improbable, that the apostle should (as Palæmon says) have the surest tokens of their being Christians, and yet call them to doubt of it.

"I am sorry to see Aspasio so much carried away with "their (i. e. the popular preachers) dissimulation."—— He points out to Theron his danger and remedy in the following manner: "If you fail in one point, or in any degree, you are guilty of all. If your conformity be not persevering as well as perfect, you incur the penalty, and are abandoned to the curse," unless you find mercy by what Christ has already done. No; but "unless, renouncing all your personal performances, you place all your "affiance on a Saviour's atonement and a Saviour's righteousness." p. 334.

They who endeavour to renounce their personal performances, as an entitling performance required of them, act inconsistently; but they who evidently renounce their own, from a gospel-discovery of the Redeemer's righteousness, and live alone by that, in virtue of the divine declarations, are taught of God, and find mercy by what Christ has alread done.

"This good conduct of ours, by which we are said "to escape the curse." Note, p. 334.

So we are, according to Palæmon, to take care that we have no affiance or confidence in Christ's atonement, or righteousness, because that is escaping the curse by some good conduct of our own!

"Were (says Aspasio) that firm and joyful reliance on "Christ Jesus, in any degree proportioned to his infinite merits "and inviolable promises? And if (says Palæmon) I cannot find acceptance with God, but in being conscious "of perfect conformity to this new law, then I am in "as great danger as before." p. 335.

Aspasio moves this very question, not to obtain a prerequisite, but to manifest the necessity of a better righteousness than our reliance, considered as a performance or work of ours, that we may rely upon the sufficient work of Christ, without recurring to any other.

The gospel-declarations are not to be separated from our Saviour, his atonement, or righteousness. Nor can our affiance, knowledge, or enjoyment through that report, be separated from either. Is Christ's righteousness presented to me as a security from the curse of the law? My affiance therein, or knowledge thereof, is Christ, my security, enjoyed by me, and manifested to me. The apostle was not so curious as to distinguish and divide with our author, when he said, I count all things but loss, not for the excellency of Christ, in distinction from the knowledge of him, but for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord; and this he styles, not having on his own righteousness.

"My expectations were greatly raised by the beauti-"ful and affecting description of the royal stag chace in "dial. 9. till I saw the sinner's relief described as com-"ing to him by means of such conflicts and struggles, "&c." p. 337.

Aspasio does not mean struggling to believe the report, but struggling for that rest, which comes at last in a way they thought not of; that is, by the report. The reasons of the soul-struggles described, are ignorance and self-righteousness, seeking other methods of relief than by the declaration of eternal life given in Christ; and it frequently proves, that after many useless struggles in divers ways, the soul thus finds rest.

"They knew their interest in Christ's death, by the "effect that his death had upon them." p. 339.

Christ's death hath its effect upon us when we draw near to God thereby; which is, in fact, when we appropriate it.

"They imagine, that something besides the bare "truth may contribute more or less toward their "escape." p. 339.

They are clear of this charge, who escape by what that truth declares.

"The gospel leads a man to the greatest reverence "for, and submission to the divine sovereignty, without "having any claim upon God whatsoever, or finding "any reason why God should regard him more than "those that perish." p. 345.

Palæmon maintains, that all who acknowledge the truth of Christ's sufficiency have the promise of salvation. He does not imagine a dependence on this promise opposes the most absolute submission to the divine sovereignty; but is rather a dependence on the promises of sovereign grace. And if we are persuaded of a grant of this sufficient righteousness to the guilty, why may not this be admitted as fully consistent with the same submission to the divine sovereignty?

"The divine sovereignty appearing, that grace might "be shewn to the worthless; and the divine justice ap-"pearing in justifying the ungodly," it is very readily acknowledged, leaves a man entirely at the mercy of God for his salvation. Here no man's pride is flattered; "no man can find any ground to presume, that "the Deity regards him more than others. And a re-"lief a man finds by this discovery, is, that God can be "just, and justify him as he at present stands without "more, or while he finds nothing about himself in the "way of wish, desire, or otherwise, but what renders "him obnoxious to the divine displeasure." p. 346.

The question that remains is, whether God has not intended a farther relief for such guilty helpless ones, even to assure them of their particular salvation in believing, trusting, and confiding, in this sufficient righteousness, as given freely to them to be thus depended upon?—— Whether there is not a word, promise, call, or testimony, to this purpose? and whether Christian obedience is not influenced by an assurance thus obtained?——At the same time we can also readily agree, that "no man "can warrantably be assured that he is already a "Christian,

" Chriſtian, a believer in Chriſt, or that he is an object " of the peculiar favour of God, but by being alſo con- " ſcious, on good grounds, that his practice, in obe- " dience to the peculiar precepts of Chriſtianity, is in- " fluenced by that ſame truth, which influenced the " lives of the apoſtles."

Now, if there is ſuch a word, promiſe, call, or teſtimony, as above mentioned, it is very diſtinct from, though not contrary to the declarations concerning the purpoſe and election of God; and affords a viſible ground for our confident dependence on that righteouſneſs, as ſinners, without finding any reaſon about ourſelves, why God ſhould regard us more than others: whereas the doctrine of election, in the nature of it, is not of itſelf capable of affording us this relief.

It is true, " this word, promiſe, call, or teſtimony, leaves " it as much a ſecret what particular perſon ſhall be " ſaved, as the doctrine of the divine purpoſe, or election " does." p. 348. but does not leave the ſinner ſo much without a warrant to appropriate. Notwithſtanding the doctrine of election, Palæmon will allow, that by him, all that believe are juſtified. So alſo it is ſaid, He that cometh to him ſhall in no wiſe be caſt out; He that believeth on him ſhall never be confounded.

In this view of things, we are fully warranted " to " repreſent the Deity, as keeping ſecret his gracious in- " tentions" to beget this or that particular perſon, by the word of truth; and, at the ſame time, " revealing " his gracious intentions" to ſave all thoſe, or any, whoſoever they be, that, without ſeeing any difference at all between themſelves and others, ſhall, upon the bare invitation and divine promiſe to the guilty, live, truſt, or depend on his Son and his righteouſneſs, graciouſly provided as a refuge unto ſuch. And while we " are buſy in prompting our hearers to live thus by " Chriſt alone, as given freely and indefinitely to the " guilty; we have reaſon to ſhew no ſmall concern, leſt " Satan tempt them" to think, that becauſe God's people are choſen to ſalvation, they are not allowed to feed upon the bread of life, till they know themſelves to be diſtinguiſhed from other ſinners as God's choſen.—— Hereby ſalvation, to the abſolutely guilty, is denied; and the people are taught to hope for eternal life, only by that which diſtinguiſhes them from the reſt of mankind. This is building wood, hay, and ſtubble, on the precious foundation, Chriſt the Saviour of the loſt.

" They tell us, that God hath made a grant, or deed of " gift of Chriſt, and all his benefits, to ſinners of mankind. " But when we inquire into this again, we find it turns " out to be a gift of benefits to multitudes who are " never benefited thereby." p. 350.

And what of all that? Could there be no ſuch thing as manna given to, or rained daily around the camp of Iſrael, becauſe ſome deſpiſed it, and longed for the fleſh-pots of Egypt? Muſt it follow that there is no ſuch gift, becauſe multitudes neglect and ſlight it? or becauſe, like Palæmon, they will not be perſuaded there is ſuch a gift? Shall our unbelief make the gift, the faith, or faithfulneſs of God, of none effect? It remaineth nevertheleſs a truth, that whoſoever believeth on him, or receiveth the gift, ſhall not periſh, but have eternal life. And why may not they miſs of the benefit of this gift who thus reject it, as the word preached never profited, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it?

" It might, with equal propriety, be ſaid, that there " is a grant of life made in the law, and that the divine " willingneſs to bleſs men is therein expreſſed; Keep " the commandments, and thou ſhalt live." p. 351.

It might ſo; the difference lies here. The grant of life in the law, requires conditions to be previouſly performed, before we may preſume to account the bleſſing ours. The goſpel beſtows life in Chriſt without any condition, or as a free gift, to be immediately enjoyed.

In p. 352. ſeveral inſtances of the faith of thoſe who were healed by Chriſt, are adduced to evidence, that they only believed Chriſt's ability to cure them. To this I anſwer, that in thoſe inſtances they waited for a proper ground, or declaration to proceed upon, in believing that he would; and for that purpoſe they made application to him. And where they had ground for concluding the event, they were as certain of that, as of his ability. And faith in thoſe caſes includes that certainty. 1 Cor. xiii. 2. If I had all faith, ſo that I could remove mountains, comp. with Matth. xvii. 20. When he ſaw he had faith to be healed. Acts xiv. 9. and in Luke v. 19, 29. they neither doubted his ability, or willingneſs. In our caſe, the grant of a Saviour to the guilty is declared, as well as the ſufficiency of his righteouſneſs; hence we make God a lyar, if we do not proceed on the truth of both.

" The leper, like the two blind men, was fully per- " ſuaded that Chriſt was able to relieve him. Yet, as " he had no claim upon, he referred his requeſt entire- " ly to his ſovereign pleaſure. In the full aſſurance of " faith he was at Chriſt's mercy, who was nowiſe obli- " ged to apply his healing power to him." p. 352.

But this is no argument againſt that appropriation which proceeds entirely upon the gracious declaration and grant of that ſovereign good pleaſure. If the ſovereign good pleaſure has declared the guilty as ſuch, ſo welcome to what is already done, that whoſoever believeth on him ſhall have eternal life; he hath no other application to make, or to wait for. We may be without any claim upon God to do for us any thing that he has not already done, or to give us any right unto what is already done; but as far as he is pleaſed to declare himſelf, it is our buſineſs aſſuredly to believe, truſt in him, or hope in his mercy. And that appropriation which proceeds wholly upon his gracious declaration, is conſiſtent with the utmoſt ſubmiſſion to ſovereign grace.

" Sovereign grace interpoſed, providing a righteouſ- " neſs for the guilty world." p. 353.

Palæmon ſhould ſay, to aſcertain his meaning, " pro- " viding a righteouſneſs for ſome of the guilty world."

" When once the gift of righteouſneſs is made known " to a man." p. 353.

Can the gift properly be ſaid to be made known to a man, unleſs he knows to whom it is given? A gift to nobody, is no gift. A gift to the elect, or to the qualified, is not a gift to the guilty world, but to them that are choſen out of it, and diſtinguiſhed from it.

" He that believeth on the Son of God, hath the re- " cord in himſelf,—the record that God gave of his " Son." Ibid.

Palæmon ſlips over the record here treated of, viz. That God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. This the apoſtle points unto, as what is to be particularly regarded, And this is the record, &c. Nor ſhould the teſtimony, that he is well pleaſed in him, be underſtood in any ſenſe excluſive of it.

" In like manner, all his children in the faith believe " the divine word for righteouſneſs, without perceiv- " ing any ſhadow or ſymptom of it about themſelves, " without feeling or being conſcious of any thing about " themſelves, to concur with the divine word, to make " out their righteouſneſs." Ibid.

This deſcription ſuits Aſpaſio much better than Palæmon, who waits for a diſcovery of his faith, love, and ſelf-denied obedience.

" If we look into the ſcripture, muſt we not ſay " that all the good works which ſhall be recompenſed " at the reſurrection of the juſt, are produced by the " influence influence of the divine Spirit dwelling in the hearts of those who believe? Yet such is the connection betwixt every good work and its reward, that, according to the scripture, the justice of God, not to say his grace, is concerned to make it good: Heb. vi. 10. God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love.—Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name,—verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward. Justice, as well as grace, will appear in the last judgment; when due regard will be had to every man's works. But in the justification of sinners, God has no respect to any man, as better than another. He considers men, when he commends his love to them, as ungodly, and without strength, that is, without any will to be better. And all who find mercy, are brought to view themselves in that same point of light wherein God beheld men when he gave his Son to die for them. They do not find themselves prepared, or made fitter than others for mercy, by any work of the divine Spirit upon their minds; but they find their first taste of comfort by hearing of him, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God." p. 257.

Then they find their first taste of comfort independent of any previous discovery or discernment of their faith, love, or self-denied obedience. And their first taste of comfort is, not that there is a sufficient righteousness provided for the elect, or the qualified, but that there is a sufficient righteousness provided for the guilty to live by, without waiting for any farther discovery.

"The popular doctrine supposes, that unbelievers may be seriously engaged in praying for the Holy Spirit to help them to faith, and exhorts them accordingly; which is as absurd as to suppose, that a man may be desirous of being influenced by the Spirit of a truth, which, at present, he neither believes nor loves. For I reckon it must be granted, that no man loves the gospel before he believes it." p. 360.

If we only understood by the gospel that we were to come to do something, or to wait and pray for something to denominate us Christ's people, then we might be complaining for want of this power, praying for it, and perhaps falsely comforted with the supposed will for the deed; and all the while there is no willingness to live entirely by what Christ has done. But this is not the case; when Aspasio considered appropriation as essential to faith, and pressed it accordingly, he understood by appropriation, a living entirely by Christ's righteousness alone, without waiting for any other.

"When our systems describe faith to us, as a saving grace bestowed on us, by which we make use of Christ for salvation; are we not led to think of some grace necessary to our salvation, beside what appeared when Christ, by the grace of God, tasted death for the sins of men?" p. 361.

But in as much as Aspasio's whole plea is to live immediately by that grace alone, without waiting for any other; he stands clear of this mistake.

"They seem to forget, that Christ is in heaven, and we on the earth;—that the only way wherein we can receive benefit from Christ, is by the report concerning him conveyed to our ears." p. 363.

If the report, in this particular case, invites and authorises us to live by him, and the righteousness which he performed, who is gone to heaven; we may, notwithstanding he is gone to heaven, receive the report for true, and also laid hold of, or live by the righteousness it thus reveals and conveys to us.

"When he comes to know that he may be justified, he finds immediately a covert from the storm." p. 364.

But according to Palæmon, he does not find this to be a covert for him, till he discovers distinguishing qualifications; whereas Aspasio finds a covert for the guilty sinner, without any such distinction.

"If now we understand by the storm, the wrath that "is to come, the believer, knowing that Christ hath "done enough to deliver from it, loves him, takes "hold of him, or flies to him."

How?

"In obeying his commands, and frequenting every "mean of correspondence with him." Ibid.

He that loves him, takes hold of him, or flies to him, obeys his commands; and is inclined to frequent every means of correspondence with him; but to give us this as the meaning and import of those scriptural phrases and representations, more becomes Mr Locke, or Archbishop Tillotson, than the evangelical Palæmon. He may be assured, if he abides by this doctrine, the offence of the cross will soon cease. The primitive Christians were taught to obey, because Jesus had delivered them from the wrath to come, 1 Thess. i. 10. They fled to him as the righteousness provided for the guilty and destitute; and by the enjoyment of him, under this character, they were disposed to all other obedience.

"Accordingly we find Barnabas exhorted those at "Antioch, in whom he saw the grace of God, that with "purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord. The "consequence of which was, they assembled together "in the appointed church-order, and denied themselves "in sending relief to their brethren in Judea." p. 365.

Did they not assemble as members of Christ, and partakers of his righteousness? Did they not cleave to him as the Lord their righteousness? Or did they only fall into the appointed church-order, in order to escape the wrath to come? If so, what is now become of the sufficient righteousness? or, in short, of all the apostolic exhortations, which constantly proceed upon the certainty of salvation by Christ, as the principle of all the obedience they call for.

"See what effect the knowledge of Christ had on "Paul, and what was his steady purpose: Yea doubtless, "and I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the "knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." Ibid.

Paul says, My Lord, the thing we plead for, and counts himself apprehended of Christ Jesus. So that it is plain, he ran not as uncertainly, he fought not as one that beateth the air. And as his assurance did not allow him, or lead him to trifle, or slacken his diligence in pressing forward to the desired end; so, on the other hand, his pressing forward was far from being the result of his uncertainty; far from being animated with a view to know by his performances, whether the divine sovereignty had interposed in his behalf.

Palæmon does not approve of Aspasio saying, "You "must endeavour, diligently endeavour, to believe." Ibid. But we may plead, in his excuse, that Aspasio is not here pressing to receive a report as true without evidence, but to appropriate and live by the revealed righteousness; to obtain and maintain thereby that certainty of acceptance with God, which was necessary to animate and incline to all evangelical obedience, and is included in every apostolic exhortation. Wherefore as ye have always obeyed—As ye have received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk in him—Work out your own salvation—Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, &c. And thus understood, we may allow, with Palæmon, that "by such arguments God worketh in them that believe, "both to will and to do, not any thing in order to justi-"fication, but all those things wherein their salvation is "evidenced." p. 367.

"If a friend of mine should see me chearful, on "hearing something new, and I should tell him, I was "comforted by an act of faith; would he not say, I "trifled with him, and readily ask what good news I "had heard, that he might partake in my satisfaction?" p. 369.

But this representation does not reach those who plead for an immediate and constant living upon the complete and perfect righteousness of Jesus Christ. They are comforted by his acts, and their own has no other concern in it.

"Faith, with its effects, is in scripture often signi- "fied by one expression, and accordingly connected "with salvation, as when it is said, Whosoever shall call "on the name of the Lord shall be saved. Now, though "we cannot say that a believer is saved on account of "his prayers; yet we may say, that he is saved on ac- "count of what he believes, and by which he is encou- "raged to pray. It is easy to see love and hope expres- "sed in all the prayers of faith recorded in the scripture; "yet it would be absurd to infer from thence, that "prayer, love, and faith, are requisites in order to jus- "tification: for, if we agree with the apostles, we must "still maintain, that justification comes by faith, and "not by works, not by any thing we do in obedience "to any law whatsoever." p. 370.

And at the same time it must be acknowledged, that faith is duty and obedience to the divine law, and in this sense a work: for, as our author has observed, p. 354. "Will not that law which Christ came to ful- "fil, the law which requires love to God with all the "heart, condemn all who by their unbelief make God a "liar? Does not the Spirit of God convince all whom "he brings to the knowledge of the truth, of sin, be- "cause they believe not on Christ? In fine, is there any "thing contrary to the gospel of the glory of the blessed "God, not condemned by the divine law?" How can these be reconciled, unless we admit that faith is so far a work, duty, or obedience, as has been above mention- ed. Yet, as Palæmon maintains, we are justified only by what we believe. We are justified by faith as we are pleased with a sight, that is, with what we see. And God justifies us by faith when he gives us this sight or faith, whereby we are thus justified. And thus to be justified by Christ's blood, and to be justified by faith, is the same thing.

If Palæmon will abide by what he says, p. 371. that "the scriptures point forth the freedom of divine grace "to the setting aside all human distinctions, in such lan- "guage as this, If any man will come after me;—Let him "that heareth say come; and whosoever will, let him take of "the water of life freely," p. 371, we are then agreed, this is the foundation of all we plead for, that sinners, as such, are made welcome to take of the water of life freely.

"If the scriptures describe believers as pilgrims, and "strangers on earth, as running the Christian race, de- "nying themselves for the sake of the heavenly inheri- "tance, and accordingly flying for refuge, to lay hold upon "the hope set before them; our preachers, ever mindful "of their acts of faith, are ready to exhort us to put "forth the acts of flying to Christ, and laying hold on him." p. 372.

The passage alluded to is Heb. vi. 18. 19. That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lye, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge, to lay hold upon the hope set before us. Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and stedfast, &c. WHO HAVE FLED is an act passed, and bears a manifest refer- ence to flying from the revenger of blood to the cities of refuge, Numb. xxxv. 27. to which city the man-slayer being fled, was, while there, secure; not in his act, but in the privilege of the city wherein he now dwelt; and waited unto the death of the high priest, as the hope set before him. The hope set before us, the apostle tells us we yet see not, but with patience wait for it, Rom. viii. 25. But how can we with patience wait for it, if it is not at present, the anchor of the soul, both sure and stedfast? as the apostle says in another place, I so run, not as uncertainly. Yet as his security lay in that righteousness Christ alone, he kept his body (all his temporal concern under subjection thereto, even as the man-slayer abode the city of refuge, knowing there was no safety for h elsewhere. When a man performs his acts of obedien that he may thereby gain himself a conscious title, p session, or enjoyment, of the favour of God, it is but little moment whether he styles it the favour of God Christ, or by any other name. His way to come at i still the same, by his own obedience. Nor can this flying for refuge to Christ, but rather chusing my ow performances as my security, and betaking myself them.

"If Barnabas exhorts those in whom he saw t "grace of God, with purpose of heart to cleave unto "Lord, after the example of the believers who we "said to be added unto the Lord, when they were a "ded to the society of the disciples, keeping his com "mands, then we are told that justifying faith is a clea "ing to Christ." Ibid.

It will answer our purpose, and convey our who meaning, to say, The faith which justifies cleaves Christ; and in exhorting to cleave to Christ, we e hort to continue in the faith. The phrase, Believe were the more added to the Lord, is, very evidently, n ther more nor less, than that many more were begott to the faith. As to what relation these phrases may al bear to fellowship in the gospel, see the answer p. 365. in p. 457.

"But Aspasio tells us, in this page, that it is the offi "of faith, to take and use the inestimable gift. If in this, "any other part of the New Testament, more be mea "by receiving Christ, than knowing him, or believin "on him, then I am ready to shew, that more tha "faith is meant, namely, faith with its fruits and effects. p. 373.

By receiving Christ more may be meant than knowi him, but not more than believing on him. We may b said to know a thing when its evidence forces itself upo the mind; but to believe on Christ, is, in the scripture sense, the subject of exhortation. If Palæmon will confin himself to mean by faith, no more than a passive con viction of truth, it shall be allowed him, that by believ ing on Christ, more than he means by faith is intended The same may be said of the phrases laying hold, leanin &c. more is allowed to be meant by these expressio than Palæmon means by faith. At the same time it ma be affirmed, that these expressions of activity "do no contribute their quota" to our justification, since we ar justified by the righteousness received, trusted, or leane upon, and not by our act. We are justified by wh we receive, even as Palæmon will allow we are justifie by what we believe.

"The faith of the gospel is indeed the basis of trust." p. 374.

If so, we are agreed again, for this trust we call be lieving on Christ. If the faith of the gospel is the basis trust, it is of appropriation; for how can I trust in th wherein I am not allowed to take any share? If we ar not allowed to trust in the Redeemer's righteousnes when absolutely guilty, the faith of the gospel is not th basis of trust. In Palæmon's view, the gospel only shew us the possibility of the salvation of the elect, and can not therefore be the basis of trust to a sinner, but the dis covery of his obedience as giving him hopes that he one of the elect, is, in fact, the matter wherein his tru is founded.

"If one approaching to a frozen lake or river, ove "which he has occasion to pass, tells me, that he ha "been assured, by good information, that the ice wa "sufficiently strong to support him; and yet, afte "all, proves timorous, and averse to make the trial "b

"by venturing his perſon freely upon it; I plainly perceive "he has no faith in the report he heard; becauſe he "does not truſt in it; or, which is the ſame thing, he "cannot truſt, rely, confide in, or venture himſelf upon "the ice." Ibid.

There cannot be a more apt illuſtration of what we plead for. And he that ventures his eternal concerns on the all-ſufficient righteouſneſs of Chriſt, with the ſame confidence that he that believes the ice will bear him ventures his body upon that, will not be averſe to run the riſk of his intereſt and reputation alſo for the ſake of it. We can therefore have no objection to Palæmon, when he ſays,

"If one tells me, that he believes the goſpel, and yet "proves averſe to riſk his intereſt or reputation in the "world for the ſake of it; I immediately perceive, that "whatever he ſpeaks with his mouth, he does not in "his heart believe the goſpel, becauſe he puts no truſt "in it." p. 375.

"Perhaps it will now be inquired, are no rules to be "obſerved, no means to be uſed, no works to be exert-"ed by the human mind or body, in order to juſtifica-"tion? The anſwer is ready: Yes, very many. And "they may be thus ſhortly ſummed up: Be perfect, "keep the commandments, and thou ſhalt live. The "obligation of the law is eternal, and cannot be looſ-"ed.———But, perhaps, another ſtate of the queſtion "will be demanded, and that faith ſhould be more "directly reſpected therein: Well then, let it ſtand "thus: Ought not a man to be at pains to attain the "perſuaſion, that all the pains he takes are good for "nothing, except to enchance his guilt? Here, me-"thinks, we are landed at downright abſurdity. For "who will labour in hopes of being convinced, that "all his labour is to no purpoſe, unleſs to his hurt?" p. 387, 388.

This we may allow to be very well ſtated, with reſpect to the perſons whom it concerns. But the queſtion between our author and Aſpaſio, really ſtands thus: Are no rules to be obſerved, no means to be uſed, no acts to be exerted by the human mind or body, to arrive at the certainty of our own particular juſtification? Palæmon ſays, Yes, a great many, as many as will ſerve to demonſtrate that we are elected. Aſpaſio ſays, Only thankfully to receive or accept the bleſſings as freely given: and all the direction given by Aſpaſio, reſpects this queſtion and not the ſufficiency of the finiſhed work of Chriſt to juſtify the moſt guilty.

"The deſign of the paſſage (Rom. x. 19, 20, 21.) is "plainly to ſhew, that faith comes not by any endea-"vours, or the uſe of any means, even under the great-"eſt advantages that men can enjoy, but of that ſame "ſovereign good pleaſure which provided the grand "thing believed." p. 390.

Here is then, notwithſtanding all Palæmon's exactneſs, a ſomething more than the finiſhed work of Chriſt, a ſomething called faith, which he tells us comes "of "that ſame ſovereign good pleaſure which provided "the grand thing believed." Palæmon will reply, he means no more than believing that which is provided is ſufficient; nor do we mean any more by appropriation, than receiving that which is ſufficient, as believing it to be freely given to us for that purpoſe.

"I would here ſubjoin, by way of poſtſcript to this, "ſome reflections on the aſſurance or appropriation ſaid "to be eſſential to ſaving faith.

"While various terms and diſtinctions are coined by "popular preachers on this ſubject, great neglect is "ſhewn to a very plain and obvious diſtinction, which "Paul makes betwixt the aſſurance of faith, and the aſ-"ſurance of hope." p. 393.

Upon a review of the ſcriptures to ſee what foundation there was for this remark, I gathered the following:

1. In regard to faith. Being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. v. 1. All joy and peace in believing, Rom. xv. 13. and not by what Palæmon ſtyles aſſurance of hope gathered from a diſcovery of our faith, love, and ſelf-denied obedience.

The language of faith is not barely concerning others, the elect, &c. But WE believe, that, through the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, WE ſhall be ſaved, Acts xv. 11.

Faith is deſcribed, Heb. xi. 25, 26. to be ſo far the aſſurance of eternal life by Chriſt, as to be, on that very account, the victory that overcomes the world.

They that died in faith, not having received the promiſes, but having ſeen them afar off, and were perſuaded of and embraced them, and (therefore) confeſſed they were ſtrangers and pilgrims on the earth, Heb. xi. 23. did they not appropriate theſe promiſes? or, did they only conſider them as belonging to the elect, and themſelves uncertain whether they were of the number, till they could diſcover it by the diſcovery of their faith, love, and ſelf-denied obedience?

The aſſurance of faith proceeds upon having boldneſs to enter into the holieſt by the blood of Jeſus,—by a way conſecrated for us,—and having a high prieſt over the houſe of God, Heb. x. 19, 22. And can all this be in a fixed uncertainty, or without appropriation? Can I draw near, as having a way conſecrated, or as having a high prieſt over the houſe of God; and, at the ſame time, don't know whether I have or no?

If we are condemned for aſking doubtingly, James i. 6, 7. and for little faith in providence, Matth. vi. 30. does not the oppoſite character imply a certainty of divine favour and regard by ſovereign grace, independent of a diſcovery of our previous obedience?

Rom. xiv. 23. Whatſoever is not of faith (i. e. whatſoever action is not of confidence of acceptance with God) is ſin. Does not this ſcripture make confidence eſſential to faith?

Rom. iv. 5. To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, &c. Is not this inconſiſtent with waiting to be godly, before I dare put my truſt in him?

We cannot call on him in whom we have not believed, Rom. x. 14. that is, we cannot call in faith, nothing doubting, as above, Jam. i. 6.

It is the divine commandment to believe in his name, 1 John iii. 23. and it is the ſtrength of faith againſt hope, of what we ſee or feel, to believe in hope of what God has freely given and promiſed.

Eph. iii. 12. In whom we have boldneſs and acceſs with confidence by the FAITH of him. Can this be where there is no appropriation?

Gal. v. 5. We, through the Spirit, wait for the hope of righteouſneſs by FAITH. Can this be ſaid in uncertainty? or in a conditional certainty depending on our performance?

Can the dead live by believing on him, according to John xi. 25. if they are to wait till they feel life firſt?

2. In regard to hope, we are told, that not our performances, but God's promiſe and oath are the ſtrong conſolation of them who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the HOPE ſet before them; which hope we have as an anchor of the ſoul, both SURE and STEDFAST, and which entereth into that within the vail, Heb. vi. 18, 19.

We are told to hold faſt the beginning of our confidence—the confidence and rejoicing of the hope, firm unto the end. Heb. iii. 6.

As we have not ſeen and yet have believed, ſo we are ſaid to hope for that we ſee not, and patiently wait for it, Rom. viii. 25. We are ſaved through faith, Eph. ii. 8. We are ſaved by hope, Rom. viii. 23. We are ſaid to purify ourſelves by this hope, 1 John iii. 3. To have our hearts purified by faith, Acts xv. 9. To purify our ſouls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, unto the unfeigned love of the brethren, 1 Pet. i. 22. We are ſaid to be all the children of God by faith in Jeſus Chriſt, Christ, Gal. iii. 29. to be begotten again to a lively hope, not through a discovery of our obedience, but by the resurrection of Christ from the dead, 1 Pet. i. 3. And the God of hope fills us with all joy and peace in believing, Rom. xv. 13. And being justified by faith, we rejoice in the hope of the glory of God, Rom. v. 2.

When we are exhorted, 1 Pet. iii. 15. to be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh us a reason of the hope that is in us, I apprehend our faith, or that truth we believe, is that reason, and not our own righteousness or qualifications. Upon this review of these scriptures, it appears to me, that Palæmon's refinement upon the scripture-phrases, to the excluding appropriation or certainty of salvation from faith, and ascribing it wholly to a discovery of our inherent qualifications, under the name of assurance of hope, is not so scripturally founded as he has imagined.

"The assurance of hope, is enjoyed only by those "who give all diligence to obtain it." p. 393.

That they are exhorted to shew the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end, is true. We are also to hold fast the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end.

"The first of these (the assurance of faith) was called "for in a man's first profession of the faith, upon his first "hearing the gospel, in order to his being acknow-"ledged for a Christian." Ibid.

Hope is also called the hope of our calling by the gospel, Eph. i. 18. not the hope of our obedience, or hope arising from our qualifications. And upon a man's first hearing the gospel, when he was first begotten again by the word of truth, he is said to be begotten again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Christ from the dead, 1 Pet. i. 3. Christ is said to dwell in our hearts by FAITH, Eph. iii. 17. and Col. i. 27. as our HOPE of glory. And if he is not thus in us, we are said to be not young professors, or young Christians, but reprobates.

"The assurance of faith is likewise necessary to the "drawing near to God in his worship." p. 394.

We are likewise said to draw near to God by the better hope, Heb. vii. 19. which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both SURE and STEDFAST.

"The assurance of hope again, is an enjoyment pro-"posed to them who believed." Ibid.

A stedfast continuance, full assurance, and increase in the faith, is proposed to them also.

"The assurance of hope, then, holds pace, first and "last, with the work and labour of love." Ibid.

The apostolic hope held pace, first and last, with the apostolic faith; and love or charity followed both. The apostles do not teach the order to be faith, love, and hope, because I love; but faith, in the revealed righteousness, is the spring of hope; and love flowing from both. Now abideth faith, hope, and charity; these three as the root, and not the fruit of our obedience.

"There was no Christian, however eminent, in the "days of the apostle, but needed the exhortation, to "give all diligence for maintaining and confirming the "assurance of hope." Ibid.

Nor was any Christian so far advanced, but he might be exhorted to be strong in the grace which is in Christ Jesus, and continue in the faith grounded and settled.

"They often called on men to examine themselves." Ibid.

They declared remission of sin immediately in Christ's name, as the truth whereby we pass from death to life. They did not teach people to find remission of sin by the way of their inherent dispositions, or works; but when the apostle Paul was called upon for a proof of Christ speaking in him, he bid the Corinthians examine themselves for that proof; for if they had not received Christ, they were reprobates; and if they had, they were his epistle of commendation, agreeable to what he had said, chap. iii.—xiii. 5.

"No man, then, can be charged with the sin of dis-"believing the gospel, for doubting, if he be a good "Christian." Ibid.

But he may for doubting whether Christ is given to him in the divine declarations to sinners; or, whether he may trust to those declarations; or, for doubting whether he may venture his eternal concerns upon Jesus Christ alone, without, and before any discovery of his excellency above other men.

"Yea, we find the apostles ready to quash the confi-"dence of those who were ready to conclude their state "was changed, by such awful sentences as this: He that "saith I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a "lyar, and the truth is not in him." p. 395.

They who professed the faith and hope of Christians, and were evidently not influenced by the Christian love, to observe the commandments of him in whom they professed to believe, were undoubtedly the subjects of this censure; which may well be admitted without any contradiction to the hope of a guilty sinner by Christ alone.

"The apostles frequently declare their assurance of "faith and of hope in the same passage. While they "express their faith in Christ, they are at the same time "confident of their interest in him." Ibid.

This proves, that either the apostles' Christian hope, stood in a nearer connection with their faith, and sprung more immediately from their doctrine, than Palæmon will admit of; or else that he is more accurate than they in describing it.

"This joint assurance they sometimes express in fel-"lowship with all that follow their footsteps, and often, "in language plainly, distinguishing the apostles them-"selves from other professors of the faith." Ibid.

The 1 John v. 11. is not of the sort: This is the record, which he that believeth, hath in himself; he that believeth it not, maketh God a lyar, because he believeth not the record which he gave of his Son. And THIS IS THE RECORD that God hath given, not to us apostles, exclusive of others; not to us who can say, God, I thank thee, I am not as other men; but to us, guilty, sinners, lost, &c. to us, as numbered with them, who, in not believing it, make God a lyar. God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. So given him, that he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life; it being only to be received, possessed, or enjoyed in receiving, possessing, and enjoying of him.

"The same Spirit, acting as the Comforter, is given "only to those who are already the friends of Christ. "—To this purpose, Paul says, Gal. iv. 6. And because "ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into "your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." p. 397.

That is, and because ye, while enemies, have received, through the gospel, the adoption of children by Jesus Christ, Eph. i. 5. Because, also, according to the fulness of time, ye are sons; the church being come out of her nonage. As a proof of this, it is evident, God hath not given you the spirit of bondage again to fear, but he hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, whereby ye obtain such a discovery of salvation to the guilty, as enables you to cry, Abba, Father.

"The Holy Spirit then acts a twofold part, as he "breathes in the gospel. He reconciles enemies, and "he comforts friends." Ibid.

He reconciles and comforts enemies in the same instant, and by the same truth; so the distinction is not properly founded. Besides, the consolation we have by Christ to the end, is of the same nature with the beginning; the grace that is manifest in Christ Jesus to the guilty. Not but that we have also the additional consolation of those sayings which relate to our witnessing and suffering for the truth.

"What then shall we say of those pretenders to "the apostolic consolation, whose very profession of "Christianity, instead of being any loss to them, "spreads

"ſpreads their reputation for piety, and procures them "eſteem and reverence from the world?" p. 398.

We will ſay, their conſolation is not apoſtolic, that the offence of the croſs has ceaſed with them, or that they are of the world. But it is very plain, Aſpaſio's appropriation, or that truſt wherein he is comforted, has not had this effect; however he may have been honoured on other accounts.

"In latter times, not a few have, from the hand of "church-authority, ſupported by ſecular power, endu-"red the ſame ſufferings which the apoſtles met with "from the Jews and Romans, and accordingly enjoyed "the ſame conſolation. It was very natural for ſuch of "them as were writers, to commend the faith which "thus wrought by love." Ibid.

They ſuffered as maintaining the certainty of ſalvation by Chriſt alone; and did not ground their certainty upon their ſufferings; although they were far from being diſcouraged thereby, but endured them with additional conſolation. Their aſſurance gave the offence, and cauſed their ſufferings.

"Shall we ſay, that theſe friends of Chriſt would "have approved of that aſſurance of an intereſt in him, "which men now pretend to acquire by ſome heart-"work, in a full conſiſtency with their worldly eaſe and "reputation?" p. 399.

Nor does Aſpaſio plead for ſuch an aſſurance; what he pleads for is founded only upon the divine declarations to guilty ſinners; and is far from having the approbation of the devout and honourable of the world, however they may profeſs to eſteem his writings on account of the elegancy of the ſtyle, or ſome particulars foreign to his main intention in them.

"The modern aſſurance—proceeds on the principle, "that the ſimple truth believed, affords no joy nor "comfort." p. 402.

This cannot be our caſe who plead for the joy and comfort of the ſufficient righteouſneſs, as given freely to the guilty in thoſe evangelical declarations. See remark on p. 85. in p. 451.

"Will the news of a plentiful importation of corn, "in time of famine, give joy to many ready to periſh, "and revive even the pooreſt with the hope that they "may be fed?" Ibid.

Will the joy and comfort of this news be ſet aſide, by underſtanding that the corn is freely given for us to live upon without money or price? Will not this rather enhance the joy? Does not the pooreſt receive comfort from ſuch tidings, becauſe they expect either to be able to buy ſome, or to have ſome given them? See remark on p. 429.

"Yet no man knows certainly, but this preſent day "may be his laſt."

But the joy created by the news above mentioned proceeds on a contrary ſuppoſition, viz. That he ſhall live, and be ſuſtained by it. Beſides, the bread of life concerns a day that will never have an end, therefore this uncertainty is foreign to the purpoſe.

"And however diffident the convert" (that is, the convert of Aſpaſio's ſtamp) "be, he is ſtill ſuppoſed to "be poſſeſſed of ſome degree of aſſurance, provided he "blame himſelf for the want of it." p. 403.

He is ſuppoſed to live by Chriſt alone, as his ſufficient righteouſneſs, who condemns every word, work, or thought, to the contrary, or who fights this fight of faith againſt all oppoſitions and trials, inward or outward. But though we may make ſuch an allowance, this is not our point. The queſtion is not ſo much about whether I believe, let that make itſelf evident. The proper queſtion to be always conſidered and reſted in, is this: Does God give to guilty me eternal life in his Son? Is this the ſpring of my hope, and the ſource of my love and obedience? Do I live, not by my notion that I am a believer, but do I live by this?

"They (the devils) believe, they hate, and yet they "tremble at that truth which Chriſt's people believe, "love, and find ſalvation in. With them are ranked "all thoſe of mankind, who know as much of the "truth as inclines them to hate and pervert it." p. 405.

Yet it cannot be ſaid of the devils, they have the ſame confidence. It cannot be ſaid of the devils, that they receive or appropriate the divine righteouſneſs as freely given to them, or that they ſee any foundation for it.

"In this view, the ſame truth is the ſavour of life "unto life unto ſome, and of death unto death unto "others. In this view, the ſame truth is the object "of contempt and chagrin to ſome, and of love and joy "to others." Ibid.

True it is ſo, but not by both believing it alike for themſelves.

LETTER VI.

"We are now then to conſider faith as a principle of "life and action." p. 406.

Palæmon is here obliged to admit of a different conſideration of faith. If he conſidered it in juſtification as a principle of life and action, he would have been involved in the miſtakes he has been oppoſing. If on the other hand he denied faith to be a principle of life and action, he would overthrow the principle of the Chriſtian obedience he pleads for. Now, ſince he is thus obliged to take up this diſtinction for himſelf, why ſhould he not allow it to Aſpaſio? Why ſhould he not allow that appropriation, although it is an act, or work exerted by the human mind, in conſequence of the belief of the goſpel, and as a principle of all other Chriſtian obedience; yet we are not juſtified by our appropriating perſuaſion, but by the righteouſneſs we appropriate, even as Palæmon ſays, we are juſtified by what we believe, and not by faith, as a principle of life and action. See obſ. on p. 483.

"And here we muſt carefully diſtinguiſh betwixt all "works by which men would pretend to acquire faith, "and thoſe which faith produces: for if we will contend "that juſtification comes by faith without works, and "that there is no acceptable working but what follows "upon this, and yet maintain that faith is acquired by "works, we undoubtedly reaſon in a circle.—And how-"ever ſeriouſly and devoutly we may be occupied in "this kind of reaſoning, it is evident we are employed "in nothing elſe but ſolemn trick and diſſimulation; un-"leſs it may be pled in our behalf, that we are impoſing "on ourſelves by the ſame means by which we impoſe "upon others.

"Men are juſtified by the knowledge of a righteouſ-"neſs finiſhed in the days of Tiberius; and this know-"ledge operates upon them, and leads them to work "righteouſneſs. If ye know, ſays the apoſtle John, that "he is righteous, ye know that every one that doth righteouſ-"neſs is born of him. Faith is not acquired, but is ob-"tained, as Peter ſays, (τοις λαχουσι) To them who have "OBTAINED BY LOT like precious faith with us. Of two "criminals juſtly condemned to die, if one eſcapes by a "favourable throw of the dice, and the other dies for "his crime, we ſee mercy in the deliverance of the for-"mer, and no injuſtice in the death of the latter. Two "men may be employed with equal diligence in ſtudy-"ing the ſcripture, and with equal ſeriouſneſs in pray-"ing for divine aſſiſtance; the one may come to know "the truth, and the other may grope in the dark all his "life-time. He who comes to know it, plainly perceives "that he has found what he was not ſeeking after: He "plainly ſees, that his moſt ſerious devotion was pointed "in direct oppoſition to what now comforts him." p. 406, 407.

Nevertheleſs the truth being declared, they may, like the noble Bereans, ſearch the ſcriptures, whether theſe things are ſo?

" Thus the word of life is held forth in the world— " ſerving as a mean of divine appointment to lead " ſome to the faith, and render others inexcuſeable." p. 408.

This is a proper reply to Palæmon's own objection, p. 350. " That the grant of the goſpel is a gift of be- " nefits to multitudes who are never benefited thereby." It ſerves as a means of divine appointment to lead ſome to faith, and leave others inexcuſable.

" The change made upon a man by the belief of the " goſpel, may be thus illuſtrated: When Lazarus was " revived to the enjoyment of this mortal life, neither his " will nor power were concerned in the obtaining of life. " Yet his life could no otherwiſe be continued and en- " joyed, but in his voluntary exerciſe of it. As ſoon " as he revived, the principle of ſelf-preſervation, with " all its hopes and fears, behoved immediately to be ſet " in motion. No ſooner was he poſſeſſed of life, than " the active love of it behoved to take place. Accord- " ingly no ſooner does a man begin to know the grace " of God in truth, than love to it takes place in his " heart. Love is the activity of that life which a man " obtains by faith, for faith worketh by love." Ibid.

But what is all this to the doctrine of working in painful deſire and fear, till we come to the enjoyment of life, or the knowledge that we have life? Lazarus had no principle of ſelf-preſervation before he was con- ſcious he had a ſelf to preſerve, nor had he any love of life before he enjoyed it. In like manner we can have no love to that grace of God we know not, nor deſire to preſerve that life we never enjoyed.

" If a man of low condition, is by a royal patent en- " nobled, and entitled to a place in the politeſt aſſem- " blies, he cannot enjoy the pleaſures of his promotion, " but in as far as he loves and ſtudies to learn the man- " ners ſuitable to his rank and company." p. 409.

And his motive to this improvement of theſe man- ners is, that he is promoted to a ſtation he deſires to enjoy more perfectly. So we being called to the adop- tion of children by Jeſus Chriſt, toil no more in the way of painful deſire and fear, to attain to a conſciouſneſs of the privilege, but as partakers of it, are influenced thereby.

" The apoſtle John, ſpeaking of obedience to the " new commandment of love, ſays, Beloved, if our " hearts condemn us not, then have we confidence towards " God; that is, if, notwithſtanding our natural bias " againſt the goſpel, with its remaining effects, giving " us daily diſquiet, our heart condemn us not as deſti- " tute of love to that truth which the world hates, then " we have confidence towards God; even as much " confidence as the teſtimony of our own conſcience " can give us." p. 414.

This is plainly not the confidence which the truth itſelf affords a guilty ſinner, but confidence " that we " are not deſtitute of love to that truth the world hates." The former is our life, the latter is only an additional corroborating comfort.

" Yet this is but one witneſs, and needs to be ſup- " ported. For in this caſe one may be liable to doubts, " leſt even his own conſcience ſhould be partial in his " favour."

If we have confidence in Chriſt by the truth itſelf as we are guilty ſinners; if I am conſcious that the truth, or, which is the ſame thing, my faith, and confidence in it, works by love; if our hearts condemn us not in this matter, then have we confidence towards God. Firſt, becauſe we are conſcious we proceed on divine authority. Secondly, we prove the bleſſed effect of the truth. Theſe then are two witneſſes inſeparably united. The firſt a divine truth, the teſtimony of the divine Spirit, than which there cannot be a greater ground of certainty; the latter is the conſciouſneſs of the effect of that truth.

" Here then the Spirit of truth, who never fails to " bear witneſs to the genuine effects thereof, gives his " teſtimony as a ſecond witneſs ſupporting the former. " Thus Paul, after he had ſaid, As many as are led by the " Spirit of God, they are the ſons of God; adds, The Spirit " itſelf beareth witneſs with our ſpirit, that we are the chil- " dren of God." p. 417.

The apoſtle Paul, after he had ſaid, As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the ſons of God; adds, For ye have not received the ſpirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received (i. e. by the goſpel-truth) the Spirit of adop- tion, whereby we cry, Abba, Father; and then follow the words, The Spirit itſelf (which ye received in the hearing of the goſpel, emboldening us guilty ſinners to cry, Abba, Father, through the divine righteouſneſs freely given to us; this Spirit received in the goſpel) beareth witneſs with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God, and not of them who deceive themſelves with vain thoughts.

It is already granted, p. 397. that " the Spirit of " truth never ſpeaks one word or ſentence to any per- " ſon beyond what is written in the ſcripture." And what is written in the ſcripture is either the declarations of free ſalvation to ſinners in Jeſus Chriſt, or divine aſ- ſurances of no diſappointment to them that believe on Chriſt, or on account of the genuine effects of faith. In the firſt we are taught to apply what is ſaid to our- ſelves as ſinners: In the ſecond we are encouraged to believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in aſſurance of ſalva- tion by him without diſappointment; In the laſt we are informed of the genuine effects of this truth, or faith, correſponding to what we find and feel to be true, when we believe according to that which is written.

" And this he (i. e. the Spirit) does by ſhedding " abroad in the heart ſuch an abundant ſenſe of the di- " vine love, as leaves no room for, ſo caſts out, the " anxious fear of coming ſhort of life everlaſting." Ibid.

The love ſhed abroad in the heart, is that manifeſted in Chriſt dying for the ungodly when enemies and without ſtrength. Not love manifeſted to the qualified. For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son (given freely unto us), much more being reconciled, as is apparent to us in what we believe, and in its genuine effects, we have a hope (that maketh not aſhamed) that we ſhall be ſaved by his life; that he who gave us righteouſneſs while enemies, will ſave us for ever who are thus reconciled to him.

" Thus that love to the truth, which formerly " wrought in a way of painful deſire, attended with " many fears, is perfected by being crowned with the " higheſt enjoyment it is capable of in this mortal ſtate." Ibid.

I do not read in the ſcripture of any love to the truth of the goſpel ſo deſcribed. Herein is love, not that we loved God, and he crowned us with enjoyment, but that he loved us, and ſent his Son, his only begotten Son, into the world, that we might live through him; ſent his Son to be a propitiation for our ſins. If we who are of this truth love one another, his love is already perfected in us. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. Herein is our love made perfect. He that fetireth, and is not em- boldened by the truth to venture his everlaſting con- cerns upon Jeſus Chriſt alone, is not made perfect in love. We love him becauſe he firſt loved us, purifying our ſouls by obeying the truth through the Spirit; unto the unfeigned love of the brethren, as its proper and genuine effect.

" Jeſus Chriſt who loved his Father with a p • fect " heart, even while ſorrowful unto death, received " the higheſt proof of his being the beloved Son of " God, when being exalted at the Father's right hand, " and being made moſt bleſſed with a ſenſe of his " love,

ove, he experienced fulneſs of joy in his preſence."

But he knew he was the Son of God before he had highеſt proof; he, though ſorrowful unto death, none of the anxious fear of coming ſhort of his ry, but was animated by that glory. For the joy that ſet before him, he endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, received the word in its accompliſhment, as the heſt confirmation of the veracity of what his Father ſpoken. But ſurely he ſhewed himſelf entirely ſa- ied with the bare teſtimony, when he anſwered the mpter, Man ſhall not live by bread alone, but by every thing t proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

"The report of this draws them who believe it to love him, and ſuffer for his ſake. To ſuch Jeſus Chriſt promiſed fellowſhip with him in the fulneſs of joy." Ibid.

That fulneſs of joy muſt be in the life to come, accord- to Pſal. xvi. 11. For in this life we walk by faith d not by ſight, and hope which is ſeen is not hope. d it is alſo acknowledged, that Jeſus himſelf did not ter into this joy till he ceaſed from this world.

John xv. 10. 11. "If ye keep my commandments, ye ſhall abide in my love, even as I have kept my Father's command- ments, and abide in his love. Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." Ibid.

The commandments here ſpoken of are to believe, d love for the truth's ſake. The love and joy is that hich is manifeſted by the word in this life; and which ither life, nor death, nor angels, principalities, nor powers, r any kind of ſuffering nor affliction, ſhall be able to parate us from. Nevertheleſs we yet but hope for the lneſs of joy that Jeſus is now arrived at, with hope that keth not aſhamed, but animates us to be followers of ſus, enduring the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame.

"When the ſaving truth firſt ſhines into the hearts of men, the effect is ſuitable to the divine promiſe, Jer. xxxii. 40. I will put my fear in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart from me. This fear dwelling in their hearts, checks and recalls them when ready to be ut- terly led away by their former evil inclinations.—— They are preſerved from falling away, by the fear of falling away." p. 419. 420.

This is no more than a fear of caution, conſiſtent with e utmoſt confidence of the ſufficiency of Chriſt, and e veracity and faithfulneſs of God. Conſiſtent with firm perſuaſion, that nothing ſhall be able to ſeparate us m the love of God which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. The aviſh fear which ariſeth from uncertainty, and is ſeek- g after a differencing ſomething to remove our tor- ent, is ſo far from preſerving us from falling, that it rather proof we are not ſatisfied with the ſufficient ghteouſneſs, with the ſufficient ground of faith and pe, and have at preſent no part or lot in the matter.

"It is evident, that to have the Holy Spirit as the comforter and earneſt of the heavenly inheritance, is an attainment far beyond any influences of the Spirit that are common to thoſe who believe for a time, and thoſe who believe to the ſaving of the ſoul. Yea, beyond the regenerating work of the Spirit, by which men are at firſt brought to the knowledge of the truth, and taught to love it." p. 420.

"To find by experience (in the effects of the report on our minds) the truth of what they formerly believed on teſ- timony," (which is what Palæmon declares himſelf to mean, p. 416) is certainly an attainment of another kind than the joy and comfort of the truth itſelf. But hat a conſcious certainty, that "I depend on the promiſe of Chriſt, and run all hazards for his ſake," is what the ſcrip- ture means by the comforter and earneſt of the heavenly inheritance, does not ſo evidently appear: beauſe 1. This is not taking of things of Chriſt, but taking of our things, and ſhewing them to us. 2. It is not the Spirit's bearing witneſs itſelf with our ſpirits, but bearing wit- neſs by the medium of our obedience. 3. It would be ſpeaking more to us than what is written in the ſcrip- ture. 4. This conſciouſneſs, and the joy accompany- ing it, was an attainment of the people of God before the reſurrection of Chriſt, as really as it has been ſince; whereas the Comforter promiſed was to be the conſe- quence of Chriſt's aſcenſion to his Father, and was firſt performed on the day of Pentecoſt, Acts ii. 33. Laſtly, To wait for an attainment far beyond the knowledge of the truth, or, which is the ſame thing, of the power of Chriſt's reſurrection; ſerves, in fact, to ſet aſide that reſurrection as inſufficient, ſo to deny the one thing needful. More eſpecially as, according to Palæmon,

"It (this ſuppoſed attainment) muſt be diſtinguiſhed "from any joy or ſpiritual delight which neceſſarily attend the "obtaining of faith, or its beginning to work by love." And "that it is vain and abſurd to call men to be aſſured of their "being children of God, when they are not enjoying it.—— "That it cannot further appear that any man has known the "grace of God in truth, than he gives all diligence to the end, "in order to obtain it." p. 420. Now the grand arca- num in Palæmon's doctrine is, how a man can live en- tirely by the one thing needful, and yet be ſo diligently employed in labouring for ſo important a ſomething more?

"It is ſo plain, that the promiſe of the Spirit as the "Comforter is common to all thoſe who follow the "faith and practice of the apoſtles." Ibid.

It is plain, they were comforted by the Spirit of God, in the joy of the truth concerning Jeſus the Saviour of ſinners, and had alſo the additional comfort of thoſe con- firming declarations concerning the children of God and their bleſſings, which are recorded for that purpoſe. But that we are taught to wait for any other attainment, under the name of the Spirit, as the Comforter, does not appear.

"Their (the Jews) appropriation was the great "ſpring of all their pride, of all their diſaffection to "the true goſpel, and all their ruin." p. 424.

The Jews appropriation was upon the ground of the difference between themſelves and others; which we readily agree has this effect, that "the more men excelled "in this way, they proved the more hardened enemies to the "true God, and the eternal happineſs of mankind." p. 422. But what is this for an objection to that appropriation which proceeds entirely on the free grant of heaven to the guilty, excluding all ſuch difference? Aſpaſio is ſtill left to affirm of his appropriation, that "nothing will be "ſo powerful to produce holy love, and willing obedience, to "exalt our deſires, and enable us to overcome the world."

Who ſtands higheſt to the Jewiſh appropriation, Aſpaſio or Palæmon? Aſpaſio, who in dial. 16. com- pares "thoſe who adviſe us to prove our title to comfort by "genuine marks of converſion, and teach us on this column to "fix the capital of aſſurance, unto thoſe who would fix the "dome of a cathedral upon the ſtalk of a tulip," or Palæmon, who judges this "talking profanely." p. 425. Neither do I ſee how this is talking profanely, until it is firſt proved, that the marks whereby we ſuppoſe ourſelves entitled to comfort rather than others, are the Deity in which we are to put our truſt. Aſpaſio rightly judges, that this is placing a moſt weighty affair upon that moſt ſlight and uncertain foundation, what we feel, or do, in- ſtead of the Rock Chriſt, given to guilty ſinners. Does not the Holy Ghoſt prove a comforter, by manifeſting to us, guilty ſinners, the things that are freely given of God; taking of the things of Chriſt, and ſhewing them to us? And muſt not every genuine mark of converſion have its foundation here?

"He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that "ſent

" sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condem-
" nation, but is passed from death to life, John v. 24. Here
" we see how men pass from death to life." p. 426.

The word that Jesus hath spoken, and the declaration the Father hath made, is the first and surest ground of undeceivable certainty. The dependence hereon proceeds entirely on the truth and faithfulness of God; and that dependence is the assurance we have pleaded for; and they who thus depend, our Lord declares, have everlasting life, are already passed from death to life.

" Here we see how men pass from death to life. " John declares how they come to know this; while, " plainly pointing at the words of Jesus, he says, We " know that we are passed from death to life, because we love " the brethren." Ibid.

There is no foundation for the distinction here made by Palæmon, viz. That our Lord only declares how men pass from death to life, and John only declares how they come to know this. It is plain, that our Lord's declaration runs in the same strain with that of his disciple; our Lord says, He that heareth my word—is passed from death unto life. John says, He that loveth the brethren, is passed from death unto life; where is the difference? Both are declarations of who are passed from death to life, therefore both alike in that respect. Our Lord intimates, the life-giving word the matter believed by all who are passed from death to life; his disciple intimates, the proper and genuine effect of that word on all who believe. " We know (says John, we have an additional proof, that the word of Jesus is true) that we are passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. It is plain, that they abide still in death who abide in the hating murdering spirit of the world; and more especially, who cannot love them who are of the truth for the truth's sake. On the other hand, the uniting life-giving tendency of the truth, appears to us who are of it, since it causeth us thus to love one another for the truth's sake, and proves what Jesus said, that he that heareth his word, and believeth on him that sent him, is passed from death to life."

Jesus saith, He is passed from death to life that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me. John saith, We know he has passed from death to life who loves the brethren. The only difference is, Jesus declares the privilege by that whereby we enjoy it; John gives proof in the love of the brethren, as a demonstrative effect, that Jesus's words are true.

" By this proof, men come to know, that the joy " they had upon their first believing, was not the joy " of the hypocrite." Ibid.

The joy true believers have on their first believing, is the joy of the truth. If that we rejoice in is found to be true, our joy is proved genuine.

" And so their joy is made full." Ibid.

Our joy is not made full by a discovery of itself, but by farther confirmations of that truth which begat and supports it. The believer gives an account of his faith and joy when he gives an account of what he believes and rejoices in. And it is made full by a farther supply or confirmation, of the truth and faithfulness of God on which he depends.

" By this they come to know it was the genuine truth " of God, and not any human counterfeit and corrup- " tion of it, which they at first believed." Ibid.

The genuine truth of God makes itself manifest to be such at our first believing, 1 Thess. ii. 13.—1 John i. 10. and thereby begets faith, joy, and every other effect. He that waits for such effect, to know whether he has the genuine truth or no, may finish his inquiry, by reminding himself that he is in this inquiry very evidently but upon the search, and therefore has not found truth as yet. He may also be convinced his search is wrong and preposterous, as if a man that should make an inquiry after what was proper for him should, instead thereof, be waiting to know by certain effects, whether he had eat any or no. The noble Bereans inquired after truth, by searching the scripture to see whether these things were so; therefore (it is added) many of them believed. The truth was made manifest unto them as the truth of God. And when this was the case, they did not wait for the joy of it with its effects, to know whether it was so or no.

" Thus they receive an additional knowledge and " certainty about the truth, in the way of experience, " by perceiving that it works effectually in them, pro- " ducing its genuine effects."

If the experience of the effects of the genuine gospel produces only an additional knowledge and certainty from experience, as the first knowledge and certainty came by divine evidence of the truth itself, this is all we plead for, then we are again agreed.

" As often as the apostles speak of their interest in " Christ, and life eternal, or use any language to the " effect, we shall find that they either speak of them- " selves separately, or in conjunction with those on " who are possessed of the same unfeigned faith and " love with them." Ibid.

That the apostles wrote their epistles to professed believers, may be very readily admitted. As on the other hand, that the apostles did not live by Christ alone, under the notion and view of themselves as guilty sinners, but only through a medium or discovery of their own faith, love, &c. will be very difficult to be proved, however confidently asserted.

" Hereby we, who love the brethren, perceive the love " of God, because he laid down his life for us. We, who " are conscious of the effects, and enjoy the fruits of his " atonement, know that God first loved us, and had " peculiar regard to us in providing the atonement. p. 428.

The effects and fruits of the atonement, are sinners peace with God; their access to the holiest of all thereby; it is allowed that we enjoy and are conscious of these, we are again agreed. But if Palæmon means only being conscious of " working in the way of painful desire and " fear, till we are crowned with enjoyment," there cannot be a plainer deviation from the intent of the apostle. The apostle says, Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us. Palæmon says, Hereby perceive we the love of God, because we are conscious of the effects, and enjoy the fruits of the atonement. The apostles lead us to think he laid down his life for us who were justly doomed to eternal death. Palæmon leads us to think he laid down his life for us, who can say, God, I thank thee, I am not as other men; " who can find some reason about themselves " why all the great things spoken and done by Jesus, should " bear its peculiar direction towards them."

Besides, how does it appear we love the brethren when those we call so, are seeking the reason of their hope, certainty, and assurance of eternal life, wholly in their own love and obedience? consequently are not in this respect the despised few, but of the same mind and judgment with every natural man.

" He who perceiving the divine love to sinners of all " sorts without distinction, manifested in the atone- " ment, is thereby led to love the atonement, and the " divine character appearing there; and so to enjoy " the promised comfort resulting thence to the obedi- " ent." p. 428.

If the promised comfort is suspended for want of obedience, or depends on obedience as its condition, the divine love is far from being manifested to sinners of all sorts without distinction.

" And thus by happily experiencing the truth of " the gospel." Ibid.

He does not experience the truth of the gospel, but only the effect of that doctrine that tells him, if he is willing willing and obedient, he shall eat the good of the land. Whereas, the truth of the gospel, relieving the guilty without condition, animates thereby to all the obedience it calls for.

"So he labours neither first nor last to acquire any "requisite to justification; but all his labour proceeds "on the persuasion that the atonement itself is the sole "and sufficient requisite to justification." Ibid.

All his labour proceeds on the persuasion, that however sufficient the atonement may be for the elect, yet he is not allowed to account it of any use to him a sinner, or to trust or depend upon it, but to be at an entire uncertainty about it, until he discovers his works of obedience to such a degree, as to conceive himself to be an elect person.

"So he knows, that all his holiness, as well as all "his happiness, comes entirely of that grace which pro-"vided the atonement." p. 439.

Far from it; all his holiness, as well as all his happiness, according to Palæmon's representation, comes entirely of the painful desire and fear, lest he should have no part in that grace which provided the atonement.

"The merchant who, being encouraged by some cre-"dible intelligence Providence has favoured him with, "from an unexpected quarter, sets out at all hazards "on some new branch of traffic, will be greatly anima-"ted to proceed, when he finds his labours crowned "with success. Ibid.

But our obtaining salvation is not like a trading merchant setting out at all hazards on a new branch of traffic; this is salvation by works indeed! Matth. xiii. 45. describes the merchant as finding one pearl of great price, which puts an end to all future merchandizing.

"He who so knows the bare report thereof, as to "love it, and to run all risks upon it, shall in no wise "lose his reward." Ibid.

True, but Palæmon's Christian rather runs all risks in order to know his part in the atonement, than on the account of the bare report of salvation to the guilty.

"The passages in the dialogues which appear to me "to deserve the greatest censure, are those two, which "in a very confident manner deny; the one, the com-"fort attending the simple report of the gospel; and "the other, the additional comfort attending the self-"denied obedience to it." Ibid.

These passages have been considered, and it appears that neither are denied, but confirmed by Aspasio's doctrine. We proceed on the report in appropriation, so it is the very basis of our comfort. We are confirmed by the effect of the enjoyment, that our enjoyment, or the foundation of it, is not a fancy.

"And all this is done, in order to rest, I cannot say "our comfort but a good opinion of our state, on what "is neither faith nor obedience." Ibid.

Not so, but to rest our souls on Christ alone, and neither on our faith, obedience, nor good opinion of our state.

"For, according to the popular doctrine, men living "for a course of years together in unbelief, consequent-"ly neither loving the gospel nor enjoying the com-"fort of it, are allowed to consider themselves all the "while as regenerate, provided they have once in their "lifetime exerted a certain act." p. 430.

It may be so according to the popular doctrine; but according to the unpopular doctrine, which Palæmon excepts against, we depend upon no acts but the perfect obedience of Christ.

"I shall now take some notice of a treatise highly "esteemed by the votaries of the popular doctrine: I "mean, The gospel-mystery of sanctification." Ibid.

This book was so far from being highly esteemed by the votaries of the popular doctrine in England, it was hardly known till Aspasio recommended it, and since that disapproved of by many devout people: Because, 1. It proves that the most earnest desires and endeavours after obedience to the law, may be in the natural state of man. 2. That the new life, new state, or new creation, is inseparably in Christ; so that we have no such privilege, but in enjoying Christ himself through the report of the gospel. 3. That there is no furniture for the obedience of love, but in partaking of this reconciliation, or new state in Christ. 4. That no conditions or performances are to be placed between the sinner and the Saviour, but the first step of practical religion is to trust on Christ alone, as given to us for the sure enjoyment of himself and his salvation.

"This author supposes his unconverted reader, when "beginning to be concerned about religion, to propose "for this end such an obedience to the divine law, as "may be acceptable to God."

He rightly supposes, that men who are yet in their natural state, may attain with great zeal to great heights of legal obedience, and, as Paul and others, be very earnest after it, counting it their truest gain; and like Paul, at the same time, totally unacquainted with, yea enemies unto real Christianity, and the obedience of love to the truth, and to God manifested thereby.

"According to this author, then, Christ is not the "end of the law for righteousness, but the best means "one can make use of for enabling him to perform "that righteousness which is the end of the law." Ibid.

He (as the apostle does) directs unto that love which is the fulfilling of the law, by the enjoyment of that righteousness which is the end of it, by enjoying that new state of peace and reconciliation with God which is inseparably in Christ; or, in fact, his view is, to recommend the gospel of our Lord Jesus, as a principle of obedience, in opposition to that preliminary grace, which, as Palæmon well says, p. 445. "however much "it has been christianized, is at bottom the same thing with "that divine AFFLATUS, influence, or energy, by which "it was supposed philosophers and heroes of old became good "and great men."

"Accordingly the well-disposed reader is led for-"ward to his desired end, in consequence of the same "good dispositions that led him to use the means." p. 431.

Not so, however fair the directions may seem to promise at first to him that is naturally desirous to keep the law that he may live; yet no man is made a disciple to these directions, but by being converted from this false hope, to the hope of the gospel. No man is disposed to use the means of reconciliation with God by Christ alone as a principle of obedience; but he that is converted from the false hope of obtaining life by any obedience he can render, to live alone by what Christ hath already done, as the spring of his hope, and the source of his future obedience.

"But why all this round-about course? Why should "we seek to repress any man's impetuosity to fulfil the "law? Why should we retard his course, by entang-"ling him in a labyrinth about the use of means?" Ibid.

Men, naturally desirous to keep the law, that they may live, may, and do, as Mr Marshall observes, "rush "blindly upon immediate practice, making more haste than "good speed, crying, with Israel of old, All that the "Lord saith we will do. At the same time there is no "such heart in them." But through a natural propensity to those things which are contrary to the divine law, they continually fail in the obedience they have so strongly purposed. "And some of these, when "they have mis-spent many years in striving against the "stream of their lusts, without any success, do at last fall "miserably into despair, and turn to wallow in the mire "of their lusts, or are fearfully swallowed up with hor-

" ror of conſcience." As all their religion, or impetuoſity to fulfil the law, is founded on a miſerable miſtaken hope, to live by their own obedience; ſo Mr Marſhall's is to throw down that falſe hope, by proving that there can be no obedience acceptable to God, till we are firſt made accepted in the Beloved; or, in other words, till we firſt live by Chriſt's obedience alone, and are influenced thereby. His hope to live by his own obedience is criminal; it is therefore no matter how ſoon we repreſs his impetuoſity, and retard his courſe; and when he underſtands his reconciliation with God by Chriſt alone, to be the principle, or means of goſpel obedience, he will not be entangled in a labyrinth, but made free by the Son of God.

" As for the goſpel, it was only intended to relieve " thoſe ill-diſpoſed people who deſpair of ever doing " any thing to render them acceptable to God, by any " aſſiſtance whatſoever." Ibid.

And Mr Marſhall's deſign is to ſhew, that thoſe well-diſpoſed people who hope to live by their own obedience, are, in fact, at the ſame time, thoſe ill-diſpoſed people, who will never be really obedient till they deſpair of ever doing any thing to render them acceptable to God, by any aſſiſtance whatſoever; and, in that deſpair of themſelves, live alone by what Chriſt has already done.

" It (the goſpel) was never intended to be an auxi- " liary to thoſe good people who are deſirous to give " acceptable obedience to the divine law." p. 431.

But it was intended to remove their miſtake, that they may be obedient from a more divine principle; that is, reconciliation with God by Chriſt alone. And this, it is evident, is the main deſign of Mr Marſhall.

" All ſuch (who are deſirous to give acceptable obe- " dience to the divine law) whereſoever they are, ſhall " undoubtedly be happy, without having any occaſion " to trouble their heads about the goſpel." p. 431. 432.

All ſuch who are of this character uniformly, and without contradiction. But it muſt be allowed, that there are many, even every natural man has a propenſity to live by his own obedience, or to do, that he may live. At the ſame time, he is deſirous of thoſe things which are contrary to that obedience, whereby he forfeits the character, and becomes guilty before God.

" Let us now obſerve the uſe of means to which our " author directs, direct. 11. p. 208. Endeavour dili- " gently to perform the great work of believing on Chriſt." p. 432.

That is, in Mr Marſhall's ſenſe, endeavour diligently to live by Chriſt alone, to be ſatisfied with him, to aſſure your ſoul of ſalvation by him, by what he has done and ſuffered; that you may, in this way, have a perſonal conſcious enjoyment of him and his fulneſs, in which fulneſs we enjoy reconciliation with God, and every bleſſing tending to the obedience of love. Was Palæmon to direct to perſonal conſcious enjoyment of Chriſt, he would tell us about working diligently, working in the way of painful deſire and fear, till we were crowned with enjoyment, in a conviction that we were diſtinguiſhed from others, by having faith, love, and ſelf-denied obedience. Where lies the difference between the two, but that the latter ſays, Do that you may live; that you may be crowned with enjoyment? the other ſays, Live by Chriſt, that you may do? Enjoy as ſinners, that you may live as ſaints.

" It is neceſſary that we ſhould endeavour it, (i. e. " to believe on Chriſt), and that before we can find the " Spirit of God working faith effectually in us, or giv- " ing ſtrength to believe." Ibid.

Mr Marſhall here conſiders faith as a duty required by the law, which Palæmon alſo aſſerts, p. 354. At the ſame time, he ſo explains himſelf, as it is evident faith neither juſtifies nor ſanctifies as a duty; but by Chriſt alone believed on. And it is alſo evident, he means not the divine paſſive conviction, but an obedience to the apoſtolic exhortation; a " truſting on a " Saviour as diſcovered by a teſtimony, which (as he " ſays) is properly believing on him."

He oppoſes at the ſame time, the popular notion, that we muſt wait for God to give us ſomething called faith, before we are to attempt to believe, or live by his righteouſneſs; whereas, in whomſoever faith is wrought, they immediately live by Chriſt alone; they wait for nothing, they ſee nothing to be waited for, but they ſee Chriſt's ſufficient work, and the grant of it to the guilty, a ſufficient ground for immediate truſt and confidence.

" Only (ſays Mr Marſhall) I ſhall prove, that we are " bound, by the command of God, thus to aſſure our- " ſelves; and the ſcripture doth ſufficiently warrant us, " that we ſhall not deceive ourſelves in believing a lie, " but according to our faith ſo ſhall it be to us, Matth. " ix. 29.—Here (ſays Palæmon) is the great whirlpool of " the popular doctrine." p. 433.

A very great miſtake to call this the popular doctrine; whereas Mr W——d, Mr W——y, and numbers more, ſuch as have been named, are full as great adverſaries to it as himſelf. Nor is any point more univerſally oppoſed, than that of aſſuring ourſelves of ſalvation, only from the grant of a ſufficient righteouſneſs in Jeſus Chriſt to the guilty.

" When we have thus, according to our author, " wrought ourſelves into a new ſtate." Ibid.

This repreſentation is not juſt; would it be proper, when a man receives a preſent, or gift, to ſay that he works himſelf into it? It is true, he may meet with ſome oppoſition in the enjoyment of that which is freely given him. And in this caſe, the ſcripture prevents Palæmon's reflection, by exhorting us to work out our own ſalvation, &c.

" According to him, there is no practice of holineſs, " but what proceeds from the perſuaſion of our ſtate " being changed." Ibid.

Rather from our perſuaſion of our reconciliation with God by Chriſt alone ariſing not from the conceit of our being better than others, or having done ſomething towards it; but as given freely in Chriſt Jeſus.

" This perſuaſion (of his ſtate being changed) is his " faith." Ibid.

No ſuch matter. Mr Marſhall's doctrine, or the truth believed in, his faith is, that there is a new ſtate prepared in Chriſt for the guilty which we are divinely authoriſed to enter into and enjoy without any works at all. As, on the other hand, Palæmon's doctrine leaves him working in painful deſire and fear, till he be crowned with enjoyment.

" If we hearken to this author, we muſt ſet out in " the ſervice of God, from the confidence of our being " in a better ſtate than other men." p. 434.

Is it not highly conſiſtent that we ſhould ſet out in the ſervice of God, with the furniture God hath provided us? If God hath given to us eternal life in his Son, is not our firſt obedience to receive and enjoy the eternal life that is in him? This does not conſiſt in any perſuaſion that we are better than other people, that there is any new ſtate in Chriſt for us rather than for others; but it conſiſts purely in what is inſeparably in Chriſt Jeſus, given to us in him, and only to be enjoyed in enjoying him. So that the whole is, we muſt ſet out as followers of our Lord, from the confidence of the eternal life given freely to us in Chriſt Jeſus.

" He makes no account of the grand things teſtified " of Chriſt, as any way ſufficient to lead us to holineſs, " without a good opinion of our own ſtate." p. 435.

Palæmon ſhould ſay, if he would give a juſt repreſentation sentation, that Mr Marshall makes no account of all that holiness which is not influenced by the reception and enjoyment of that new state, and eternal life, which is freely given to the guilty, in Christ Jesus. Mean while, the opinion we have of our own state, is, that it is stark naught, and cannot be mended. This is far from having a good opinion of it.

"Thus the ancient gospel, which, from the beginning, turned many from idols to serve the living God, is now set aside." Ibid.

The ancient gospel held forth the new state, and eternal life given in Christ, which we plead for.

I have nothing to say in defence of myself from the charge in p. 448. of patronizing my creed by the names of fallible men. I acknowledge my fault. If I have not the doctrine of the apostles, what signifies having all the world on my side? and if I have them to keep me in countenance, it ought to be little concern, though the whole world are against me *.

"The use these people (i. e. the people in fellowship with W. C.) have for Christ is, to give them strength to do something toward their justification." p. 449.

Our appropriation stands in no opposition to free justification by Christ alone, but rather to Palæmon's coming to the knowledge of it only, in a way of painful desire and fear.

But Palæmon's main objection to this reception, or appropriation of Christ, and eternal life in him, is, that "this is doing something toward our justification."——To what has been already said, I would only add the following illustration. A man has a large estate fallen to him by inheritance or legacy; he is now informed that he need do nothing toward his maintenance at all, for he has a sufficiency to live upon, and that would dishonour his benefactor, and be a disgrace to him to think of it. The man believes this, and accordingly sits down to a plentiful table provided, under a notion that all things being ready he has nothing to do but to EAT or ENJOY. Upon this, a virtuoso in criticism, like Palæmon, informs him, that to eat, is to do something towards his maintenance, that the victuals, and in short every thing, is his, without any act of his at all. So that if he imagines himself under any necessity of eating, he dishonours his benefactor, and denies the estate his benefactor has given to him, as though it was not in itself enough to maintain him without doing something towards his own maintenance. What answer would this person in all likelihood return? Very probably he would say, You speak extremely absurd; for if I eat not, all my right and title to it will be of no service to me; I starve, I die in the midst of plenty; besides, I love to eat *. The case is as parallel as possible; our Lord says, he is the bread of God come down from heaven to give life to the world; and that except we eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, we have no life in us.

This objection of Palæmon's is such a fine-spun cobweb of criticism, that he seems to have catched himself in it while he was endeavouring to entangle us. "Is "it possible (says he) after what we have seen, for any "one to maintain, that these people look for acceptance "with God only through the sacrifice of Christ, once "offered for the sins of many?" p. 405.

Now to look for acceptance with God only through the sacrifice of Christ, is the very thing we plead for, and he has been opposing. His argument has been, "The "sacrifice of Christ is sufficient of itself. To appro-"priate, or to look for acceptance with God on that ac-"count, is evidently to do something towards our justi-"fication; this is to set up in its stead another sacrifice "of their own preparing and offering.

"He who maintains that we are justified only by "faith, and at the same time affirms with Aspasio, that "faith is a work exerted by the human mind," "un-"doubtedly maintains, if he has any meaning to his "words, that we are justified by a work exerted by the "human mind." p. 483.

May not Aspasio as readily retort, He who maintains that we are justified only by faith, and at the same time affirms with Palæmon, "That faith is a principle of life "and action," undoubtedly maintains, if he has any meaning to his words, that we are justified by a principle of life and action? The answer that retrieves him out of this difficulty, will also serve us. See remark on p. 406. p. 395.

I have now considered all that I apprehend we are concerned with in Mr Sandeman's performance, not with a design to manifest his blemishes, or to defend Aspasio's; but to preserve the important truth he contended for, from the objections arising through evident mistakes and misrepresentations. Not pleading for a manner of believing either active or passive; but pleading against the private interpretation of those divine declarations, which are the sinner's only ground of immediate trust and confidence in that sufficient righteousness. It is no pleasure to me to find a people to whom my heart inclines on account of their appearing attachment to this sufficiency of Christ, at the same time so inclined to explain away those divine declarations, and tell us, that "God may, if he pleases, have mercy upon me," is all the conclusion that the guilty and destitute can draw from what God has revealed. Now, in this case, are we not to take heed, lest under the notion of purer faith we depart from trusting in the living God (to a labouring in painful desire and fear) through an evil heart of unbelief? And as there is a natural propensity in man to self-

* Methinks this author discovers too much complaisance, when he compliments Mr Sandeman so far as to make an apology for his conduct in professing an agreement, in some fundamental articles of the Christian faith, with the late Mess. Erskines and the Seceding ministers in Scotland, according to scripture, and the judgment of all sound Protestant divines, and in quoting a few passages from a sermon of Mr Ebenezer Erskine; as if he had thus made Mess. Erskines, and the Seceding ministers, with other Protestant divines, the vouchers of his creed, and given a manifest proof of his yielding implicit faith to their dictates and sentiments. Is it culpable, then, to yield obedience to our Lord's command in going forth by the footsteps of the flock, Cant. i. 8. or to remember them who have spoken to us the word of God, whose faith we are exhorted to follow, considering the end of their conversation? Heb. xiii. 7.—— Must an endeavour to keep the unity of the faith in the bond of peace be reputed a fault? and a sovereign contempt of the doctrine and principles of Christian teachers uninspired, however consonant to the word of God these may be found, accounted essential to the character of a true believer and apostolic Christian? What pity is it, that men should suffer themselves to be bantered, by the scornful and senseless reflections of one of the most trifling, though one of the most arrogant writers that this, or perhaps any age, has produced? Wilson's Palæmon's creed reviewed and examined; pref. p. lii. note.

* If any object, that this representation relates only to personal enjoyment, and manifestation to our own consciences, it may be granted; and it may be also affirmed, that the whole of God's revelation bears this design. The scriptures were never designed to inform God about our justification, but to inform us. And whenever any, who dislike the scripture-account, endeavour to scheme out another, what is their design, to inform God, or to inform man? If one tells me, I am justified (according to his scheme) whether I am persuaded of it or no, is not his design at the same time very evidently to persuade me that I am justified, or to manifest my justification according to his scheme? Shall I not rather let God be my instructor? And when I ask the question, Wherewith shall God be pleased? he answers, I am pleased in my Son.—— When I inquire further, How I shall know my own interest herein? he tells me, he gives me eternal life in him; and so makes me welcome to call it my own without more. Is it not the height of disaffection to this, to say, I will call it my own upon some other account; but not because he either bids me, or gives it to me?

self-dependence, is there not a proportionate averseness in him to trust on the bare declarations of the divine word? And may not this be the source of those Pharisaic attempts Mr Sandeman has so justly detected, of the objections that stand between us; and also of those laboured inventions of others, to make out that men are saved by Christ in a way of natural necessary connection; hereby, at once, setting aside the divine sovereignty, declarations, promises or trust therein. I shall only add, that if what we have pleaded for is (without misrepresentation) proved a contradiction to the fulfulness of the finished work of Christ, then, and not till then, I shall see a necessity for understanding the scriptures on this subject in another light than I do at present, and shall make my public acknowledgment accordingly.

Directions to the readers of THERON and ASPASIO, with respect to the amendments which were intended by Mr Hervey, had he survived another edition. ——Taken from Mr CUDWORTH's Defence.

PAGE 246. c. 2. l. 8. read, "This, he says, as it was wrought in the name and stead of the guilty, enemies and rebellious, was wrought out in my name, and in my stead; that is, in a name and character that undoubtedly belongs to me, and, according to the declarations of divine grace, sufficiently authorises me to draw near to God thereby."

P. 324. c. 1. l. 41. "Not one among all the numberless productions which tread the ground, or stand rooted to the soil, wants any convenience that is proper for its respective state. And the same heavenly FATHER has provided for the most guilty, the righteousness which is absolutely necessary to his present comfort, and his final happiness."

Ib. c. 2. l. 5. "Consider those stately poppies, &c. observe the young ravens, &c. He accommodates the former, though incapable of asking; he attends to the latter, though insensible of their benefactor. He also regards our pressing wants; he has also superseded our earnest petitions by such free and unmerited gifts, as it is both his delight and his honour to bestow."

Ib. c. 2. l. 60. "So that nothing is required, in order to our participation of CHRIST and his benefits.—We receive them as the freest gifts; as matter of mere grace."

P. 325. c. 1. l. 37. "The man without the wedding garment, &c. Your former mistakes, and present objections, tend to place you in the state of this unhappy creature. The returning prodigal came with no recommendation either of dress, of person, or of character. None but his nakedness and misery; his acknowledgment was vileness, which had every aggravating, not one extenuating circumstance."

Ib. c. 2. l. 19. "If there be any qualification, I think, it is our extreme indigence; and this, I presume, you are not without."

Ib. c. 2. l. 38. "Sanctification, heavenly-mindedness, and a victory over our lusts, are not the qualities he requires, but the blessings which he confers."

P. 326. c. 1. l. 59. "The greatest unworthiness is no objection in Christ's account; it is as much disavowed by the gospel, as equivocal generation is exploded by the discoveries of our improved philosophy."

P. 327. c. 1. l. 24. "From the King, whose name is the LORD of hosts, let us expect (if he vouchsafes to shew us any mercy) not barely what corresponds with our low models of generosity,—much less what we suppose proportioned to our fancied deserts,—but what is suitable to the unknown magnificence of his name, and the unbounded benevolence of his heart. Then we shall no longer be afraid, assuredly to trust to the gracious declaration, that CHRIST JESUS is made of GOD to us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption; That HE hath given himself for us, hath given himself to us, with all the blessings of his purchase, of his SPIRIT, and of eternal life."

Ib. c. 2. l. 12. "That we all deserve this misery, is beyond dispute. We are also told, that the LORD JESUS has satisfied divine justice."

Ib. c. 2. l. 38. "You are still corrupt; does this exclude you from being the very person for whom the Saviour's righteousness is intended, and to whom it is promised?"

P. 328. c. 1. l. 3. "And sure it cannot be a fanciful persuasion of our health which renders us proper objects of his recovering grace."

Ib. c. 2. l. 3. "I behold it (Theron's title) perfectly clear, not because you long or pray for it; but because the all-sufficient righteousness is granted to you a sinner in the record of the gospel."

Ib. c. 2. l. 22. "If any man, however unworthy his person, or obnoxious his character, thirst; thirst for something to make him happy; let him not seek to that which satisfieth not, but let him come to me the fountain of living waters, and drink his fill.

"That clergyman," &c.

Ib. c. 2. l. 68. "They are to be enjoyed by every one. No exception is made."

P. 329. c. 1. l. 18. "To us, says the prophet, a child is born.

Ib. c. 1. l. 43. "Since the LORD JEHOVAH has given us his SON and all his unutterable merits; and also seals this grant unto us in every sacramental ordinance; why should we not confide in it, as firmer than the firmest deed? and far more inviolable, than any royal patent?

"Ther. My servant never," &c.

P. 332. c. 1. l. 59. "It seems to be quite out of my reach."

Asp. "That is, because you still imagine something is to be done by you, to entitle to this immaculate and perfect righteousness; you give no credit to those declarations of heaven, which brings it near to your view and home to your condition. Remember rather the words of our LORD, Come unto me, all ye that are weary, and heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Ib. c. 2. l. 14. "Nothing short of these mercies can afford any satisfaction to the guilty conscience, or true satisfaction to the restless soul."

"Say not then, my dear friend, that Christ, and the blessings of his purchase, are beyond your reach. They are now, even now, at your door."

Ib. c. 2. l. 70. "If you heard his voice, you would believe on him agreeable thereto. You then open the door, and he sups with you, makes his abode with you, manifests his salvation, and communicates his blessings. If you believed his promising word, you would no longer hesitate to believe on him accordingly. You then sup with him. This will be refreshing to your distressed soul, as the most sumptuous banquet to the famished stomach and craving appetite. Expunge all from here to the words, Ther. "This I believe—That I am a lost sinner;" &c.

P. 333. c. 1. l. 31. "He that believeth on the Son hath a chimerical? far from it; a real substantial happiness; even everlasting life.

"Can you doubt of his willingness to save the chief of sinners? or his sincerity in his declarations? Then go to mount Calvary."

Ib. c. 1. l. 62. "What a stranger was I then, to the blindness of my understanding, and the hardness of my heart; to my bondage under unbelief, and my natural averseness to the way of salvation by grace through faith!"

Asp.

Asp. "Are you ſure this is not now your caſe? This ſentiment, though ever ſo juſt, will not palliate your preſent infidelity. Since the Great Jehovah has declared the grant of his Son to you a ſinner; ſince he has thus given you eternal life in him; ſince he has warranted your immediate reception and enjoyment by his commands, invitations, and promiſes, you make him a liar in all; you reject his word as not to be depended on, every moment you thus unbelievingly heſitate." Expunge from here to

Ther. "But is not faith the work of God's Spirit? how, or in what manner, &c."

P. 333. c. 2. l. 40. "I very much queſtion, whether I ſhall ever be able to attain it."

Aſp. "The true belief, Theron, has no exiſtence without its proper object Chriſt, and is never to be conſidered in the light you ſpeak of, that is, as a moſt refined and exalted virtue. When, upon the divine grant in the word, you behold Chriſt, as your given righteouſneſs and ſtrength, then you truly believe; you believe God's truth which can never deceive, you receive the gift which enriches you with grace and glory. But permit me to aſk," &c.

P. 338. c. 2. l. 56. "If you rely on the all-ſufficiency of his gracious declarations as the foundation of immediate truſt or confidence, as well as the all-ſufficiency of his power."

l. 62. "Let the moſt wretched ſinner, and moſt afflicted ſoul, truſt in the name of the Lord."

In note, p. 341. l. 5. "We only affirm, than an appropriating perſuaſion of ſalvation by Chriſt alone, is that confidence which properly anſwers to the divine report, and grant of a Saviour to be believed on for everlaſting life."

P. 343. c. 1. l. 50. Aſp. "The If is what I greatly queſtion; but of this I am certain, that you are ſtill inclined to ſpare Agag."

Ib. c. 2. l. 11. "You aſk, whether the ſtate of theſe perſons is ſafe and their faith real? I anſwer, What evidence is there of their ſafety or their faith, while Chriſt the only ſecurity is neglected, and the free grant of him to ſinners thus diſbelieved? Beſides, why ſhould, &c."

Ib. c. 2. l. 49. "GOD has freely loved me ſo as to give his Son unto me; CHRIST has graciouſly died for me, to take ſhare in his death as my own; and the HOLY GHOST ſanctifies me in the belief and appropriating confidence, ariſing from theſe precious truths."

P. 344. c. 1. l. 49. "When the divine SPIRIT, ſpeaking in the gracious declarations of the goſpel, manifeſts the grant of Chriſt to me a ſinner, then am I enabled to receive and appropriate his death as the deſert of my ſins, and his obedience as the matter of my juſtification."

Ib. c. 2. l. 3. "May I firmly believe on Chriſt for everlaſting life? may I firmly believe, that in this infinitely-meritorious Redeemer I have granted unto me pardon and acceptance, &c."

P. 345. c. 1. l. 57. "I do more than pardon my dear Theron. I feel for him, and I ſympathize with him; not becauſe he has not ſufficient evidence from God's word, for truſting in Chriſt for everlaſting life; but becauſe I have alſo felt that perverſe tendency in my own heart, to miſtruſt the infallible word of my God, as though he was leſs to be depended on than fallible man."

In like manner, p. 305. 316. 318. were to be corrected, and all other paſſages in his writings which might be underſtood, as making thirſtings, awakenings, earneſt prayers, ſorrows, tears, good deſires, or ſenſe of unworthineſs, as the encouragement for confidence. This Mr Hervey acknowledged was inconſiſtent with his main deſign, which was to come to God by him only, who was able to ſave to the uttermoſt; but he had been drawn ſometimes into this way of expreſſing himſelf by too great a regard for the current cuſtoms; and not conſidering, that till the divine relieving truth appear in view, the wiſhes and deſires of the diſtreſſed are as much pointed againſt the ſalvation of the guilty, as the careleſſneſs of the profane. He was ſenſible, that "the goſpel-hiſtory gives us no inſtance of an unbeliever diligent to obtain faith;" and therefore intended to expunge every thing that tended to encourage ſuch miſtakes.

When he took notice of "a ſpeculative aſſent to all the principles of religion," he intended by it ſuch agreeing with the current opinions as will ſtand conſiſtent with ſentiments quite ſubverſive of the ſaving truth. Not ſuch a knowledge of the truth as the apoſtle ſpeaks of, when he ſays, Ye know the truth, and that no lie is of the truth. He well knew, that there was no man, but he that is taught of God, could be ſatisfied with the apoſtolic account of ſalvation; and would have informed Theron, had he had another opportunity, "that if he attempted to do any thing eaſy, or difficult, under the notion of an act of believing, or any other act, in order to his acceptance with God, he only thereby heaped up more wrath againſt himſelf."

He was alſo ſenſible, that a man may be very uſeful and amiable amongſt men, and at the ſame time an utter enemy to the grace of God's kingdom:—That he has been too forward in commendations of thoſe, who were no friends to apoſtolic Chriſtianity. His deſign was only to commend what was amiable in every one, paſſing over their blemiſhes.——In this deſign he acknowledged, he was carried to an extreme. When he ſays of Eraſmus and Locke, that they ſat at the feet of Jeſus, he only meant to expreſs in an elegant way, that they betook themſelves to the reading of the ſcriptures, and not to vindicate their notions.

And he counted it an obſervation well worthy regard, that "it may be maintained by ſome, that converſion is carried on by grace aſſiſting nature; and by others, that this matter is wholly conducted by irreſiſtible grace; and yet both ſides may be equally diſaffected to that doctrine, which maintains the work finiſhed by Chriſt on the croſs, to be the only requiſite to juſtification.—And that while many Chriſtian teachers maintain, that no man can be eminently virtuous without divine energy, they ſay no more than Heathen philoſophers have ſaid before them."

Theſe remarks and obſervations may be ſufficient to direct the intelligent reader of Theron and Aſpaſio, to avoid needleſs objections, and alſo to improve that performance more agreeably to the ſcriptures and the author's own mind.

It appears by the Letters prefixed to this Defence, that an improvement of Mr Marſhall's book was intended, to obviate as much as poſſible all objections; which, through the preſſing importunities of the printer, and Mr Hervey's hopes of accompliſhing a fourth volume of THERON and ASPASIO, was not executed. The following is a plan of ſuch improvement, where, by changing the fourteen directions into the form of aſſertions or propoſitions, the ſtrongeſt objections are enervated.

ASSERTION I.

THAT practice and manner of life, which the ſcripture calls holineſs, righteouſneſs, or godlineſs, obedience, true religion, is not attained by our moſt reſolved endeavours, but is given through the knowledge of him that has called us to glory and virtue.

ASSERT. II.

No man can love God till he knows him, nor till he knows him to be his everlaſting friend. Therefore the ſpring of true holineſs, is a well-grounded perſuaſion of our reconciliation with God, and of our future enjoyment of the everlaſting heavenly happineſs, and of ſufficient ſtrength given in him for all that he calls us unto.

ASSERT. III.

Theſe endowments, ſo neceſſary to the obedience of love, are contained in the fulneſs of Chriſt, and are enjoyed only by union and fellowſhip with him.

ASSERT. IV.

The means or inſtruments whereby the Spirit of God accompliſheth our union with Chriſt, and our fellowſhip with him in all holineſs, are the goſpel, whereby Chriſt entereth into our hearts, begetting us to the faith whereby we actually receive Chriſt himſelf, with all his fulneſs, unto the hope of eternal life by him. And thus, by the influence of the Spirit of truth, we unfeignedly believe the goſpel, and alſo believe on Chriſt, as he is revealed and freely promiſed to us therein, for all his ſalvation.

ASSERT. V.

The practice of true holineſs is not attained by any endeavours of our natural ſtate, but is a bleſſing of that new ſtate given in Jeſus Chriſt, and partook of by union and fellowſhip with Chriſt through faith.

ASSERT. VI.

Thoſe that endeavour to perform ſincere obedience to all the commands of Chriſt, as the condition whereby they are to procure for themſelves a right and title to ſalvation, and a good ground to truſt on him for the ſame, do ſeek their ſalvation by the works of the law, and not by the faith of Chriſt as he is revealed in the goſpel: and they ſhall never be able to perform ſincerely any true holy obedience by all ſuch endeavours.

ASSERT. VII.

We are not to imagine, that our hearts and lives muſt be changed from ſin to holineſs, in any meaſure, before we may ſafely venture to truſt on Chriſt for the ſure enjoyment of himſelf and his ſalvation.

ASSERT. VIII.

True holineſs of heart and life, hath its due order where God hath placed it, that is after, union with Chriſt, juſtification, and the gift of the Holy Ghoſt. It is not therefore to be expected but in that order, as what accompanies ſalvation.

ASSERT. IX.

It is only by the comforts of the goſpel revealing a juſt God and a Saviour, that God works in us to will and to do of his good pleaſure.

ASSERT. X.

The comforts of the goſpel, neceſſary to Chriſtian obedience, contain ſufficient grounds of aſſurance of our ſalvation, not becauſe we believe, but in a way of immediate truſt and confidence. Therefore, inſtead of ſeeking other methods of peace and holineſs, we muſt endeavour to believe or truſt on Chriſt confidently; perſuading and aſſuring ourſelves, according to the divine declarations, that God freely gives to us an intereſt in Chriſt and his ſalvation, according to his gracious promiſe.

ASSERT. XI.

It is therefore belonging to the practical part of the Chriſtian life, to maintain the ſame immediate truſt and confidence in dependence on the divine faithfulneſs, not to ſuffer us to be confounded, that ſo our enjoyment of Chriſt, union and fellowſhip with him, and all holineſs by him, may be continued and encreaſed in us.

ASSERT. XII.

The ſcripture calls upon Chriſtians to walk no longer according to the principles or means of practice that belong unto the natural or original ſtate of man, but only according to that new ſtate given in Chriſt, which we receive by faith, and the principles and means of practice that properly belong thereunto; and to ſtrive to continue and increaſe in ſuch a manner of practice.

ASSERT. XIII.

All ordinances of divine appointment, for the eſtabliſhment and increaſe of our faith and love, are to be conſidered only in this way of believing in Chriſt, and walking in him according to this new ſtate given in him.

ASSERT. XIV.

That we may be confirmed in holineſs only by believing in Chriſt, and walking in him by faith, according to the former aſſertions, we may take encouragement from the great advantages of this way, and excellent properties of it.

A

RECOMMENDATORY LETTER

FROM

Mr HERVEY

TO THE

Publisher of a new Edition of MARSHALL on Sanctification.

SIR,

IT gives me no small pleasure to hear, that you are going to republish Mr MARSHALL's Gospel-mystery of sanctification *. The instruction, consolation, and spiritual improvement, which I myself have received from that solid and judicious treatise, excite in me a pleasing hope, that it may be equally instructive and advantageous to others.

The recommendation of it in Theron and Aspasio, with which you propose to introduce the new edition, is at your service. To this proposal I consent the more readily, because Mr MARSHALL's book may be looked upon as no improper supplement to those dialogues and letters. The author of which intended to have closed his plan with a dissertation on practical holiness, or evangelical obedience. But this design was dropped; partly, on account of his very declining health; partly, because the work swelled, under his hands, far beyond his expectation.

He has been advised, once more, to resume the pen; and treat that grand subject with some degree of copiousness and particularity. If he should be enabled to execute, what he acknowledges to be expedient, the doctrines already discussed, and the privileges already displayed, will furnish the principal materials for his essay. Justification, free justification, through the righteousness of JESUS CHRIST, is the sacred fleece from which he would spin his thread, and weave his garment; agreeably to that important text, Ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify GOD †.—If Providence, in all things wise, and in all things gracious, should see fit to with-hold either time or ability for the accomplishment of my purpose, I do, by these presents, nominate and depute Mr MARSHALL to supply my lack of service.

Mr MARSHALL expresses my thoughts; he prosecutes my scheme; and not only pursues the same end, but proceeds in the same way. I shall therefore rejoice in the prospect of having the Gospel-mystery of sanctification stand as a fourth volume to Theron and Aspasio.——Might I be allowed, without the charge of irreverence, to use the beautiful images of an inspired writer, I could with great satisfaction say, If this be a wall, that will build upon it a palace of ivory; if this be a door, that will inclose with boards of cedar ‡.

Mr MARSHALL represents true holiness as consisting in the love of GOD, and the love of man;—that unforced, unfeigned, and most rational love of GOD, which arises from a discovery of his unspeakable mercy and infinite kindness to us; that cordial, disinterested and universal love of man, which flows from the possession of a satisfactory and delightful portion in the LORD JEHOVAH. These duties, of love to our Creator and our fellow-creatures, are regarded as the sum and substance of the moral law; as the root from which all other branches of pure and undefiled religion spring.——Holiness, thus stated, is considered, not as the means, but as a part, a distinguished part of our salvation; or, rather, as the very central point, in which all the means of grace, and all the ordinances of religion, terminate.

Man, in a natural state, is absolutely incapable of practising this holiness, or enjoying this happiness.—If you ask, What is meant by a natural state? It is that state, in which we are under the guilt of sin, and the curse of the law; are subject to the power of Satan, and influenced by evil propensities.——From this state none are realeased, but by being united to CHRIST; or, as the apostle speaks, by CHRIST dwelling in the heart through faith *.

Faith, according to Mr MARSHALL, is a real persuasion, that GOD is pleased to give CHRIST and his salvation; to give him freely without any recommending qualifications, or preparatory conditions; to give him, not to some sinners only, but to me a sinner in particular.——It is likewise an actual receiving of CHRIST, with all the benefits, privileges, and promises of the gospel; in pursuance of the divine gift, and on no other warrant than the divine grant.——This last office is particularly insisted on, as an essential part, or as the principal act of faith. To perform which, there is no rational, no possible way; unless, as our author declares, we do, in some measure, persuade and assure ourselves †, that CHRIST and his salvation are ours.

As faith is such a persuasion of the heart, and such a reception of CHRIST, it assures the soul of salvation by its own act; antecedent to all reflection on its fruits or effects, on marks or evidences.——It assures the soul of acquittance from guilt, and reconciliation

* Is is said, by the very best judge of propriety in sacred writing, great is the mystery of godliness, 1 Tim. iii. 16. This passage, I presume, Mr MARSHALL had in his view, when he pitched upon a title for his book. And this passage will render it superior to all censure; unexceptionably just and proper.

† 1 Cor. vi. 20. ‡ Cant. viii. 9.

* Eph. iii. 17.

† It is not, by this expression, affirmed, or insinuated, that we are able to produce faith in ourselves, by any power of our own. The self-sufficiency the author has professedly and frequently disclaimed; asserting, That "the SPIRIT of GOD habitually dis-"poses and inclines our hearts to a right performance of this most "important act."—This manner of speaking is used, I imagine, for two reasons: To point out the first and chief work, which we are to be doing, incessantly and assiduously, till our LORD come: To remind us, that we must not expect to have faith wrought in us, by some fatality of supernatural operation, without any application or endeavour of our own; but that we must make it our diligent endeavour, and our daily business, to believe in CHRIST. We must labour to enter into this rest, and shew all diligence to the full assurance of hope.

to

to GOD; of a title to the everlasting inheritance, and of grace sufficient for every case of need.——By the exercise of this faith, and the enjoyment of these blessings, we are sanctified; conscience is pacified, and the heart purified; we are delivered from the dominion of sin, disposed to holy tempers, and furnished for an holy practice.

Here, I apprehend, our author will appear singular, this is the place in which he seems to go quite out of the common road. The generality of serious people look upon these unspeakable blessings as the reward of holiness; to be received, after we have sincerely practised universal holiness; not as necessary, previously necessary to perform any act of true holiness. This is the stumbling-block, which our legal mind, dim with prejudice, and swollen with pride, will hardly get over.—However, these endowments of our new state are, in our author's opinion, the effectual, and the only effectual expedient, to produce sanctification. They are the very method which the eternal SPIRIT has ordained, for our bringing forth those fruits of righteousness, which are by JESUS CHRIST unto the glory and praise of GOD *.——Whereas, if there be any appearances of virtue, or any efforts of obedience, which spring not from these motives and means of practice, Mr MARSHALL treats them as "reprobate silver." He cannot allow them the character of gospel-holiness.

This is the plan, and these are the leading sentiments, of the ensuing treatise. To establish or defend them, is not my aim. This is attempted, and, I think, executed, in the work itself. My aim is, only to exhibit the most distinguishing principles, in one short sketch, and clear point of view; that the reader may the more easily remember them, and, by this key, enter the more perfectly into the writer's meaning.——Let him that is spiritual † judge; and reject or admit, as each tenet shall appear to correspond or disagree with the infallible word. Only let candour, not rigour, fill the chair; and interpret an unguarded expression, or a seemingly inconsistent-sentence, by the general tenor of the discourse.

We are not to expect much pathos of address, or any delicacy of composition. Here the gospel-diamond is set, not in gold, but in steel; not where it may display the most sprightly beam, or pour a flood of brilliancy; but where it may do the most signal service, and afford a fund of usefulness.——Neither is this book so particularly calculated for careless insensible sinners, as for those who are awakened into a solicitous attention to their everlasting interests; who are earnestly inquiring, with the Philippian jailor, What shall I do to be saved *? or passionately crying, in the language of the apostle, O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death †? If there be any such, as no doubt there are many, in the Christian world, I would say, with regard to them, as the Israelitish captive said concerning her illustrious but afflicted master, Would GOD my master were with the prophet that is in Samaria; for he would recover him of his leprosy ‡. O that such persons were acquainted with the doctrines, and influenced by the directions contained in this treatise! they would, under the divine blessing, recover them from their distress, and restore them to tranquillity; they would comfort their hearts, and thereby establish them in every good word and work ‖.

But I am going to anticipate what the following extract § speaks. I shall therefore only add my hearty wishes, that you may meet with encouragement and success in the publication of this truly valuable piece. Since there is, in this instance, an evident connection between your private interest and the general good; I think you may promise yourself the approbation and acceptance of the public; as you will assuredly have all the support and assistance that can be given, by,

SIR,

Your humble servant,

Weston-Favell, near Northampton, Nov. 5, 1756.

JAMES HERVEY.

* Phil. i. 11. † 1 Cor. ii. 15.

* Acts xvi. 30. † Rom. vii. 24.

‡ 2 Kings v. 3. ‖ 2 Thess. ii. 17.

§ This extract, or the recommendation given of this excellent book, entitled, The gospel-mystery of sanctification, is to be found in our author's works, above, p. 342. c. 1. note.

SERMONS.

THE

TIME OF DANGER,

THE

MEANS OF SAFETY,

AND THE

WAY OF HOLINESS.

BEING THE

SUBSTANCE OF

THREE SERMONS,

Preached on the PUBLIC FAST-DAYS, 1756 and 1757.

PREFACE.

SHOULD any one ask, "Why does this author "publish his sermons, when the fast is gone and "forgotten?"—For this very reason he publishes, that the fast, though gone, may not be forgotten; that we may remember the sins we confessed, and the miseries we deprecated; remember the vows of GOD, which are still upon us; and the snares of death, which are still around us.

Should it be further asked, "Why does he obtrude "himself on the public, when so many eminent writers "have already made their appearance? Does he bring "with him any distinguished excellency of composi-"tion, any superior force of argument, or uncommon "delicacy of sentiment?" No such thing. He pretends to nothing refined or extraordinary: he affects neither brilliant thought, nor polished style: equally remote from nice criticism and profound learning, his discourses are studiously plain, and brought down to the level of the meanest capacity.

"What then is his motive?"—This is the very truth. In several of the sermons published on this occasion, the one thing needful seems to be overlooked. CHRIST and his free grace, CHRIST and his great salvation, are either totally omitted, or but slightly touched.—Where these are but slightly touched, the door of hope and the city of refuge are shewn, as it were, through a mist, dimly and indistinctly. We have no more than a transient glimpse of the desirable objects; and only so much light as is sufficient to bewilder, rather than direct.—Where they are totally omitted, the door of hope si barred, and the city of refuge withdrawn from our view. In this case, being without CHRIST, we are without consolation; and may justly complain, with the mourning prophet, the Comforter, that should relieve our souls, is far off.

Through the following discourses, a constant regard is paid to the redemption which is in CHRIST JESUS; to his all-atoning blood, and his everlasting righteousness; which are the grand means, both of comforting our hearts, and sanctifying our nature.—Indeed the principal aim of the whole is, to display the unsearchable riches of CHRIST, the matchless efficacy of his death, and that perfect freeness with which all his invaluable benefits are bestowed.——To those who believe he is precious; and to those who are convinced of sin, these salutary truths will be their own best recommendation. Such readers will excuse a multitude of blemishes, provided they find JESUS who was crucified; JESUS, who is the desire of all nations; JESUS, than whom no other foundation can be laid, either for preſent holineſs, or future happineſs.

As theſe ſermons were not preached to gratify a curious taſte, neither are they publiſhed with any fond proſpect of reforming a ſinful nation. Sincerely as the author loves his country, and ardently as he deſires the ſalvation of his countrymen, he is not ſo vainly ſanguine in his expectations.—But this he will venture to aſſert, that, if ever a reformation is produced, it muſt, under the influences of the eternal SPIRIT, be produced by the doctrines of free grace, and juſtification through a REDEEMER's righteouſneſs. Till theſe doctrines are generally inculcated, the moſt eloquent harangues from the pulpit, or the moſt correct diſſertations from the preſs, will be no better than a pointleſs arrow, and a broken bow.

This alſo he will venture to hope, that the diſcourſes may here and there meet with ſome poor ſinner, who is ſmitten with a ſenſe of guilt, and alarmed with apprehenſions of danger; who deſires nothing ſo much as to find a reſting-place, where he may be free from the terrors of conſcience, and ſafe in the day of trouble. This freedom and this ſafety are to be found only, are to be found infallibly, in the bleſſed JESUS and the blood of ſprinkling. If ſuch a reader, by the following pages, is conducted to this divine ſanctuary, the writer is ſatisfied, is rewarded, enjoys the utmoſt of his wiſhes.

Then, inſtead of ſoliciting the voice of fame, or coveting the wreath of honour; inſtead of giving himſelf any concern about the officious critic; he will thankfully adore that almighty hand which confirmeth the word of his ſervant, and performeth the counſel of his meſſengers *. For, oh! how inſipid is the praiſe of men, compared with the exalted pleaſure of glorifying GOD, and edifying an immortal ſoul! How harmleſs is defamation from a fellow creature, when our great CREATOR ſmiles; and is pleaſed by weak things, and by things that are deſpiſed †, to accompliſh the purpoſes of his infinite grace and everlaſting love!

* Iſ. xliv. 26. † 1 Cor. i. 27. 28.

SERMON I.

The Time of Danger.

HEB. xi. 28.

Through faith he kept the paſſover, and the ſprinkling of blood, leſt he that deſtroyed the firſt-born ſhould touch them.

IF we conſult the hiſtory to which theſe words refer, we ſhall find the Iſraelites in a ſtate of great affliction. The Egyptians oppreſſed them; very heavily laid the yoke upon them; and made their lives bitter with hard bondage.—The miſery of his people GOD pities, and is reſolved to redreſs. Accordingly he ſends Moſes, in the quality of his ambaſſador, to demand their releaſe. The king of Egypt moſt inſolently replies, Who is the LORD, that I ſhould obey his voice, to let Iſrael go? I know not the LORD, neither will I let Iſrael go. GOD, to chaſtiſe his inſolence and obſtinacy, inflicts a variety of plagues on him and his ſubjects: in contempt of all which Pharaoh hardens his heart, perſiſts in his diſobedience; and refuſes to let the people go.—At laſt, ſays the LORD, I will bring one plague more upon Pharaoh and upon Egypt *; which ſhall infallibly accompliſh my purpoſe. Be their hearts hard as the nether milſtone, this ſhall make them feel: be their reſolution ſtubborn as an iron ſinew, this ſhall make it bend. About midnight I will go out into the midſt of Egypt, and all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt ſhall die †.

But as the Iſraelites then dwelt in Egypt, how ſhould they be ſafe amidſt the general deſolation?—Will it be ſaid, the Iſraelites, being the people of GOD, were not expoſed to this puniſhment; had no reaſon to fear the infliction of this vengeance? None, that remembers how all the world is become guilty before GOD, will affirm this; none, that conſiders how rebellious and idolatrous the Iſraelites were, can ſuppoſe this. And every one who has read Ezek. xx. 8. * muſt allow, that there was no difference in this reſpect. The one people were criminal, as well as the other. All of them moſt righteouſly deſerved the afflictive ſtroke. Grace, free and ſovereign grace alone, muſt make the diſtinction.

Since this was the caſe, it may reaſonably be aſked, How ſhall the Iſraelites be ſafe?—The LORD himſelf directs Moſes to a method, which ſhould effectually ſecure all the families of Iſrael, while death entered into every habitation of the Egyptians. The method—its execution—and ſucceſs—are all ſpecified in the text. By faith Moſes kept the paſſover, and the ſprinkling of blood, leſt he that deſtroyed the firſt-born ſhould touch them. Where we may obſerve,

I. A very dreadful danger; ſignified by the deſtruction of the firſt-born.

II. A method of ſecurity from this danger; effected by keeping the paſſover, and the blood of ſprinkling.

III. The ſucceſs of this method; denoted by the deſtroyer not ſo much as touching them.

* Exod. xi. 1. † Exod. xi. 4. 5.

* But they rebelled againſt me, and would not hearken unto me: they did not, every man, caſt away the abominations of his eyes, neither did they forſake the idols of Egypt. Then I ſaid, I will pour out my fury upon them, to accompliſh mine anger againſt them, in the midſt of the land of Egypt.

The

The good LORD enable us to open and apply the ...ons, thus divided! Then we ſhall ſee their ſuitable-...ſs to the preſent occaſion; and, I hope, feel their ...lutary influence on our ſouls.

I. A very dreadful danger; ſignified by the deſtruction of the firſt-born. The LORD had already put his hand to the ſword. It was even now drawn from the ſcab-...ard, and had received a commiſſion to go forth; to go ...orth that very night; to walk through all the land of ...gypt; and to be bathed, before the morning-light, in ...he blood of the firſt-born, all the firſt-born, from the ...aughty king that ſat on the throne, even to the ſlave ...hat toiled at the mill, and the very ſheep that yeaned in ...he field.——Tremendous, as well as inevitable blow! ...O what an alarm will it create, and what affliction will ...ſpread! make every heart ſad, and every houſe a ...cene of mourning! There ſhall be a great cry throughout ...ll the land of Egypt, ſuch as there was none like it, nor ſhall ...be like it any more *.

And is not the preſent time a time of imminent dan-...ger? are not the judgments of the Almighty now abroad ...in the world? have not earthquakes ſhaken kingdoms, ...and rent the foundations of nature? have they not ...ſpread terror through our own and diſtant nations; ...laid wealthy towns and magnificent cities in ruin; and ...ſwallowed up or deſtroyed unknown multitudes of our ...fellow-creatures?

'Is not the ſword of ſlaughter drawn? has not war ...hung out her bloody flag? are not the flames kindled ...in Europe and America; on the land and on the ocean? ...are they not gathering ſtrength daily; ſpreading their ...rage continually; and threatening to over-run all?

If we were evidently ſuperior to our enemies in num-...ber and power, in vigilance and unanimity; yet the ...events of military undertakings are very uncertain.—The battle is not always to the ſtrong †. Succeſs and vic-...tory depend upon a hand higher far than the arm of ...fleſh. Without me, ſaith the LORD, they ſhall bow down ...under the priſoners, and they ſhall fall under the ſlain ‡.

But are we not at war with one of the moſt potent, ...inſidious, enterpriſing kingdoms in the world? is there ...not great reaſon to ſuppoſe, that they will ſoon be join-...ed by their neighbours the Spaniards? And, if we ...have been worſted by one, how ſhall we contend with ...their united force?—Conſidering the ſituation and be-...haviour of the ungrateful Auſtrians, have we not cauſe ...to ſuſpect the junction of a third Popiſh power againſt ...our religion and liberty? will not the court of Rome, ...with all her bigotted adherents, urge and inſtigate ...them to be active in this confederacy ‖? will they not ...at this juncture,—the moſt favourable for the proſecu-...tion of their purpoſe that any age has afforded, or their ...own ſanguine zeal can deſire;—will they not exert their ...utmoſt ability to cruſh the Proteſtant cauſe and extirpate ...the Proteſtant name §?

Should the enemy make a deſcent upon our iſland, what can we expect, but that our iſland be turned into a field of blood? They, who have always been jealous of our intereſt and influence, have now added rage to their jealouſy. Their reſentment, like the burning fiery furnace, is heated ſeven times hotter than uſual. We ſhould certainly find them, as the ſcripture ſpeaks, a bitter and haſty nation *; and, without the ſpirit of pro-...phecy, may venture to declare, Wo be to England, if GOD ſhould now deliver it into the hands of the French.

Some, perhaps, may cry, "Theſe fears are all chime-"rical. There is no ground for ſuch diſcouraging ſug-"geſtions. We don't queſtion but we ſhall be a match, "and more than a match for our adverſaries."——To this confident boaſting let not my tongue, but let the courſe of events, let the diſpoſals of Providence reply. ——Have we, then, been ſuperior in the day of trial? Alas! have we not loſt Minorca? is not Oſwego gone? a general ſlain, and his army cut in pieces? an admiral condemned to be ſhot to death, and his fleet defeated by an inferior number of the enemy's ſhips? Are not ravages and depredations made almoſt continually up-on our colonies in America; and horrible, unheard-of cruelties committed by the ſavages, on the perſons of our fellow-ſubjects? What have we reaped from the late campaign, but diſappointment, loſs, and ſhame?

Are not all theſe things apparently againſt us? will they not diſpirit our men and embolden our foes? will they not make our allies backward to come in with their ſuccours, and render the powers that are unengaged afraid to declare themſelves on our ſide?

All theſe circumſtances conſidered, the preſent time appears to be a time of uncommon danger: affairs, look where-ever we will, wear a louring aſpect. Our ſky is black with clouds, and there is the ſound of abundance of rain †. Judgments ſeem, more than ſeem, to be hovering all around us. How ſoon they may fall, GOD only knows!

If GOD indeed were for us, we might truſt, and not be afraid; we might look danger in the face, and bold-ly ſay, Who ſhall be againſt us ‡?—But is this the caſe? are we a righteous nation, that keepeth the truth ‖? is there ſufficient reaſon to believe that the holy One of Iſrael is our defence?—Are we not, on the contrary, a ſinful generation, a people laden with iniquity? is there not abundant reaſon to fear, leſt our GOD ſhould ſay, in terrible indignation, They are joined to idols let them alone §? —In order to determine this point, let us examine our ways. Nothing can be more proper for a day of hu-miliation. Are not we, like the Egyptians, in a ſtate of great danger? if we conſider

1. The ſins of our nation.

2. The judgments of GOD denounced upon ſuch ſins,

3. The certain execution of thoſe judgments, unleſs we fly to the appointed refuge.

1. Conſider the ſins of our nation. Here I ſhall mention ſome, and only ſome, of thoſe abominations, which, where-ever they are found, cannot fail to pro-voke the eyes of GOD's glory, and render either a per-ſon or a people ripe for his vengeance.

The Chriſtian ſabbath is an ineſtimable privilege to the church of CHRIST: it is a happy means of building us up in knowledge, of eſtabliſhing us in faith, and preparing us for our everlaſting reſt.——Yet is it not ſhamefully profaned in city and in country? What multitudes waſte it in idleneſs, or ſquander it away in unedifying converſation; making it by far the moſt uſeleſs and contemptible day of the week?—This they do, even though GOD ſtrictly charges,

* Exod. xi. 6. † Eccleſ. ix. 11. ‡ Iſ. x. 4.

‖ I am informed, that when the Pope heard of the alliance lately eſtabliſhed between the houſes of Bourbon and Auſtria, Hungary and Bohemia, ſtrengthened by the unexpected acceſſion of Ruſſia, he cried out, with an air of triumph, O admirabile commercium gene-ris humani! "Admirable aſſociation and intercourſe of man-"kind!" promiſing himſelf, I ſuppoſe, from this remarkable turn of affairs, ſuch advantages to the cauſe and intereſts of Popery as exceeded even all his hopes.

§ The French and Auſtrian miniſters, it ſeems, have long been concerting meaſures to tear up the reformed religion by the roots, and not to leave a Proteſtant upon the face of the earth. This execrable plot is diſcovered by the ſagacity and activity of the king of Pruſſia; is averred and proved, in the memorials lately publiſh-ed by his Majeſty. If that hero and his army ſhould fall before their enemies, what can hinder the execution of this horrid deſign? It may puzzle the acuteſt politician to aſſign any human means, ſuf-ficient to ſtand as a barrier.

* Hab. i. 6. † 1 Kings xviii. 41. ‡ Rom. viii. 31.

‖ Iſ. xxvi. 2. § Hoſ. iv. 17.

ſaying,

saying, Remember ye the sabbath-day, not barely to abstain from your ordinary works, but to keep it holy *: devoting it entirely to holy purposes, and religious exercises.—— This they do, even though GOD solemnly threatens, saying, If ye will not hearken unto me, to hallow the sabbath-day, then will I kindle a fire in your gates, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched †.

Is not the name of GOD great, wonderful, and holy? ought it not to be used with the deepest veneration, and magnified above all things? But is it not audaciously dishonoured, and impiously blasphemed? dishonoured by customary and wanton, blasphemed by false and perfidious swearing? Has not the most high GOD declared, that he will in no wise hold such daring wretches guiltless? Yet how do these daring wretches swarm, like the locusts of society, in our polluted land? O England, how is thy air tainted with this breath of the infernal pit! how do thy streets resound, most horribly resound, with this language of hell! And will not the almighty LORD make thee know,—know by bitter experience, what that meaneth, which is spoken by his prophet? Because of swearing the land mourneth ‡; mourneth under afflicting visitations, and desolating judgments.

Is not the scripture a singular blessing? Yes; it is celebrated by the psalmist as the sovereign blessing; that which crowns the other instances of divine goodness: He sheweth his word unto Jacob, his statutes and ordinances unto Israel. It is also celebrated as a most distinguishing blessing, from which multitudes are excluded: He hath not dealt so with all nations, neither have the Heathen knowledge of his laws ‖. Should not then the scripture be precious to our souls; more precious than fine gold; sweeter also than honey, and the droppings of the honey-comb? should we not exercise ourselves in it day and night §; reading it by day, meditating on it by night? should we not make it the most delightful subject of our conversation? talk of it to our children, our domestics, our neighbours; when we lie down, and rise up; when we walk by the way, and sit in the house ¶? —But where are the persons who bear such a superlative esteem for the Bible? where is the company that delights to converse on those oracles of truth? where are the parents that diligently instruct their children, and feed them with the milk of the word? Diversion, of every kind, engages their attention, and the most trifling impertinence employs their tongue: but the LORD's word is insipid, if not irksome. His word is treated, even by Protestants, as the manna was treated by the Israelites, who had the ingratitude and impudence to say, Our soul loatheth this light bread †. A plague from the LORD of hosts was the consequence of their contemptuous treatment of the meat that perisheth. Of how much sorer punishment shall we be thought worthy, who contemn the food which endureth to everlasting life?

GOD hath reserved the unjust, saith the scripture, unto the day of judgment, to be punished; chiefly those who walk after the flesh in the lusts of uncleanness ††. Is not this iniquity rampant among the inhabitants of England? What lewd pictures are exposed to view! what filthy writings are suffered to see the light! fewel for lust, and incentives to debauchery.—— What is wit, in our day, but either some lascivious hint, or some licentious abuse of scripture? Are not the wanton entertainments of the stage, and other seminaries of lewdness, countenanced, supported, thronged? Can you acquit your cities and towns of drunkenness, revellings, and abominable excesses? Are not these, and all sorts of filthiness, found in our skirts? If so, hear the word of the LORD, and let it sink deep into every heart. When I had fed them to the full, they then committed adultery and assembled themselves by troops in the harlots-houses. They were as fed horses in the morning: every one neighed after his neighbour's wife. Shall I not visit for these things? saith the LORD; and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this *?

Is not religion, vital religion, very much upon the decline? does it not, even among the serious, wear a sickly dying aspect? What multitudes profess to know GOD, but in works deny him; and, quite destitute of the power of godliness, content themselves with the mere form? Whereas, if any, in imitation of the first believers and preachers, are fervent in spirit, serving the LORD with alacrity and zeal; these persons, instead of being encouraged, are opposed; instead of being esteemed, are reproached.——Of such persons even the malignant spirit could bear witness; These are the servants of the most high GOD, who shew unto us the way of salvation †. But among us, who call ourselves Christians, who pique ourselves upon being the purest church in Christendom, among us such persons are deemed the visionaries of the age, the disturbers of society, the men that would turn the world upside down ‡.——The ministers who are most faithful, and the people who are most exemplary, are a derision and a by-word among their neighbours. Thus, in Israel, they mocked the messengers of GOD, and despised his words, and misused his prophets. But it was to the confusion of those scoffers, and the ruin of their country. For the wrath of the LORD arose against his people, till there was no remedy. Therefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, who slew their young men with the sword, in the house of their sanctuary; and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man or him that stooped for age ‖.

Are we not abandoned to a spirit of carnal confidence? When do we discover any reliance on the Almighty, or ascribe any of our success to his gracious interposition? It is not GOD, but our sword, that shall help us. Or, if any unseen power is acknowledged, it is not the LORD of hosts, but good fortune. One would almost imagine, that we were ashamed of a heavenly ally; and thought it a disgrace to own ourselves dependent on Omnipotence. Is not such a temper a national infatuation, and the harbinger of national judgments? Zedekiah and the men of Judah forgot or neglected the Rock of their salvation, and made Pharaoh's army their confidence. But see what was the issue, or hear it from the mouth of him who fulfilleth the word of his servants; Though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but wounded men among them, yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire §.

Should you say, This is a false charge: have we not, this very day, publicly acknowledged, that, "without "the divine aid, the wisest counsels of frail men, and "the multitude of an host, and all the instruments of "war, are but weak and vain?" Have we not likewise expressly declared, that, "not confiding in the splen-"dor of any thing that is great, or the stability of any "thing that is strong here below, we do most humbly "flee to the LORD for succour, and put our trust un-"der the shadow of his wings ¶?" I would to GOD we believed that acknowledgment, and acted conformably to this declaration. We should then be very diligent to propagate religion among our soldiers and sailors; we should seek for such officers and commanders, as are men fearing GOD; we should be as desirous to establish our troops in godliness, as to train them up in

* Psal. i. 2. † Deut. vi. 7. ‡ Numb. xxi. 5. ‖ 2 Pet. ii. 10. § Exod. xx. 8. ¶ Jer. xvii. 27. † Jer. xxiii. 10. †† Psal. cxlvii. 19, 20.

* Jer. v. 7, 8, 9. † Acts xvi. 17. ‡ Acts xvii. 6. ‖ 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, 17. § Jer. xxxvii. 10. ¶ The form of prayer appointed for the fast.

in military discipline.——But is it thus with our army? Is it thus with our navy? Visit a man of war.——You will think yourself, not in one of the bulwarks of our island, but in a little hell. Observe the gentlemen of the sword. Concerning the generality of them you will have reason to ask, Are these Christians? are they not incarnate devils * ?——And can we expect, that the infinitely-pure GOD will go forth with such hosts? will he not rather become their enemy, and fight against them † ?

What ignorance prevails, especially among the lower ranks of people? The grossest ignorance of themselves, and of GOD our SAVIOUR; the grossest ignorance of grace and salvation by a REDEEMER's righteousness; the grossest ignorance of the very first principles of our holy religion. To do evil they are wise: but to do good, to believe in JESUS CHRIST, to love and glorify him who bought sinners with his blood; to do all, to do any of this, they have no knowledge. And is it a small matter to be thus children of darkness? is not the soul alienated from the life of GOD through ignorance ‡? does not this displease the most high GOD, and provoke the holy One of Israel? Let his own word determine: It is a people of no understanding; therefore he that made them, will not have mercy on them; and he that formed them, will shew them no favour ‖. Are these impotent menaces? made only to be contemned? then we may dismiss our fears. But if they are the word of GOD, which liveth and abideth for ever; then we have reason to cry, "What will become of England?"

In a word, religion, both as to knowledge and practice, was never at so low an ebb, since the reformation took place; nor luxury, and immorality of every kind, at such an enormous height.——Where now are our rulers? are they zealous for GOD, and valiant for the truth; have they courage to stem the torrent, or to oppose the overflowings of ungodliness?—Where are the grandees and magistrates? warm with generous indignation, do they snatch the spear; and, like the gallant Phinehas, smite through the loins of iniquity? Alas! have not our great men altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds §? are they not, generally speaking, the ringleaders in transgression; as eminent for their contempt of GOD, as for the affluence of their circumstances? Yea, the hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in the several trespasses ¶. But will that dignity, which they have abused; will that authority which was lent them for better purposes; will those distinctions be a security to them or their country, in the day of visitation? ——Hear what the righteous LORD says, who is higher than the highest, and able to execute all his decrees: It is the sword of the great men that are slain, which entereth into their privy chambers. I have set the point of the sword against all their gates, that their hearts may faint, and their ruins be multiplied †. Gates, be they ever so strongly fortified, or ever so faithfully guarded, are no fence against the point of JEHOVAH's sword. And if sin is suffered to enter, judgments will assuredly follow: judgments will follow even the most powerful and wealthy sinners; will pursue them like an eager bloodhound; will haunt them like a dismal ghost; will force a way into their palaces, nay into their closest retirements; and never remit the chace, till fainting of heart ends in multiplied ruin; in the ruin of themselves, their families, their country.

Amidst all these crying evils, are we not presumptuously secure? is there not a deplorable state of stupidity, which blinds our eyes, and renders us insensible? Scarce any one lays these miseries and dangers to heart. Who mourneth for the abominations of the land? who stirreth up himself to call upon GOD, if so be he may yet be entreated, and have mercy upon Zion?—Are we not too much like the intoxicated sinners of the old world? They ate, they drank; they bought, they sold; they planted, they builded. They gave themselves wholly up to sensual gratifications, and inferior cares; disregarding all the admonitions of Noah, and all the tokens of impending vengeance: till the divine long-suffering ceased; the universal flood came; and, with irresistible violence, swept them all away *.—Are we not in the condition of those supine senseless people, spoken of by the prophet Zephaniah? It shall come to pass at that day, that I will search Jerusalem with candles, and punish the men that are settled upon their lees; that say in their heart, The LORD will not do good, neither will he do evil. And may we not justly expect their awful doom? Therefore their goods shall become a booty, and their houses a desolation. Their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as the dung. Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them, in the day of the LORD's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy †.

As a farther aggravation of our crimes, have we not been incorrigible, amidst the most compulsive and the most winning motives to amendment?—We have been visited with a contagious distemper among our cattle; which, we were apprehensive, might have introduced a plague among the human race. From this fear we have been delivered: but are we delivered from our evil works, and have we renounced all ungodliness?—Rebellion broke out in our island; threatening to overthrow our Protestant government, and deprive us of our reformed religion; threatening to deprive us of our liberty and its privileges, of our peace and its comforts. This storm also was soon blown over, and tranquillity restored to our land. But did we return every one to the LORD our GOD, who dealt so graciously with us? ——Earthquakes have shattered other kingdoms, have destroyed other cities; while they only admonished, not injured, us and ours. Has this goodness, this distinguishing goodness of GOD, led us to repentance?—Were we not lately preserved from the most calamitous of all temporal losses? from losing the precious fruits of the earth. When the corn was ripe and ready for the sickle, who can forget the louring sky, and the descending rains, which held back the husbandman's hand, and forbade the gathering? A few more days of such unseasonable weather had inevitably spoiled the produce of the ground, and destroyed the staff of life. But Divine Providence, at the very hour of need, restrained the immoderate showers; bid the sun shine forth with peculiar brightness; and gave us the expected weeks of the harvest; thus rescuing us from famine, perhaps from pestilence, probably from mutiny, certainly from a train of evils, the particulars of which we cannot so much as imagine. But is there not too much ground for the complaint, so pa-

* Does this sound harsh? or will any other part of the charge advanced in these discourses, prove offensive?—I am sorry there should be any occasion for such language. But I dare not retract it; I must not soften it; no nor apologize for it. Thus much, however, I will very readily acknowledge, borrowing the words of Job; If it be not so now, let experience make me a liar, and in this case make my speech nothing worth, Job xxiv. 25. Desirous as I am of speaking truth, here I shall rejoice to be convicted of falsehood.

† Is. lxiii. 10. ‡ Eph. iv. 18. ‖ Is. xxvii. 11.
§ Jer. v. 5. ¶ Ezra ix. 2. † Ezek. xxi. 14. 15.

* Luke xvii. 27. † Zeph. i. 12. &c.

Tremendous threat'ning! black as night it stands,
Fierce as ten furies, terrible as hell,
And shakes a dreadful dart; MILTON.

Even the dart of divine indignation over a guilty land. Yet who is awaked from a state of indolence? who is induced to watch and pray? who falls down at the feet of JEHOVAH, though they see his wrath enkindling, and hear his terrors denounced?

thetically urged, and ſo frequently repeated, by the prophet; *Though I have done all this for you, yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the LORD?

Behold, now, the ſtate of our nation.——Our ſins abound, and are grown up to heaven;—ſins of every, even the moſt horrid kind; ſins among all ranks, from the higheſt to the loweſt.—In our ſins we perſiſt, though wooed, as it were, with the choiceſt mercies; though made to ſmart under various judgments; though threatened with far more afflictive viſitations.—And will the great, the mighty, the immortal GOD, always bear with ſuch a people? will he receive the moſt horrible indignities, and ſtill, ſtill refrain himſelf? Surely he will awake, as one out of ſleep! ſurely he will ſay, with a determined indignation, Ah! I will eaſe me of mine adverſaries, and avenge me of mine enemies.†—Has he not ſhewed us evident tokens of his diſpleaſure? is he not filling all his diſpenſations with marks of anger? And what, O what may be the end of theſe beginnings! how doleful, how deſtructive! unleſs ſovereign grace interpoſe; bringing us, by faith in the SON of GOD, to unfeigned repentance and newneſs of life.—Some notion we may form concerning the end of theſe things by unfolding the ſecond point;

2. The judgments of GOD denounced on ſuch ſins.—Where ſuch iniquities prevail, we might naturally conclude, that the divine indignation is awakened, and the divine vengeance lingereth not. Is there a GOD? does he behold the children of men? is his nature infinitely pure and holy? Surely then he cannot, he will not ſuffer the moſt outrageous violations of his ſublime perfections to paſs unpuniſhed.—Thus we might argue from the nature of GOD; this we might conjecture from the aſpect of things. But we have a more ſure word of prophecy; in this word, the wrath of GOD is revealed againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men‡. And ſee! in what flaming colours, by what frightful images this wrath is repreſented, theſe judgments are deſcribed.

They are likened to a lion rending his prey. The LORD hath been unto Ephraim as a moth, and unto the houſe of Judah as a worm. He had diſpenſed milder corrections; afflicting them in meaſure, and with-holding inferior comforts. His judgments were like a moth fretting the garment, or like a worm corroding the wood. In both which caſes the conſumption creeps, as it were; the waſting operates ſilently, and proceeds ſlowly. Thus the chaſtiſing JEHOVAH acted; giving the people ſpace for recollection, and looking for repentance; but no repentance was produced; they continued irreclaimable, adding ſin to ſin.—Then ſays the LORD, I will be unto Ephraim as a lion; which, all fierce and ravenous, ruſhes upon a lonely traveller. I will now come forth, as an incenſed and irreſiſtable adverſary, and be as a roaring lion to the houſe of Judah. I, even I, who am omnipotent, will tear, will deſtroy them with a mighty hand; and go away, ſatiated with ſlaughter and vengeance. I will take away both prince and people; I will take away their very place and nation; and none ſhall have power to effect, or courage to attempt a reſcue ‖.—If GOD do thus to perverſe and incorrigible Judah, why ſhould we imagine that he will deal otherwiſe with perverſe and incorrigible England?

They are deſcribed by a flood. Now therefore behold the LORD bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, ſtrong and many, even the king of Aſſyria and all his glory: and he ſhall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks. And he ſhall paſs through Judah; he ſhall overflow and go over; he ſhall reach even to the neck, and the ſtretching out of his wings ſhall fill the breadth of thy land, O IMMANUEL §. The king of Aſſyria and his army, determined to invade Judah, are ſignified by the waters of the river. Theſe the LORD bringeth up; over-ruling the purpoſes of ambitious princes, and making even their wicked deſigns ſubſervient to his holy will.——They are, like the waters of an immenſe flood, ſtrong and many; their multitude innumerable, and their force unconquerable. For they ſhall come with all their glory; with their choiceſt troops, their ableſt commanders, and their whole warlike artillery. He ſhall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks: from all parts of his vaſt dominion, his troops ſhall be aſſembled; each province ſhall be drained of its braveſt inhabitants; and all unite to render this expedition one of the moſt formidable that ever was undertaken.—He ſhall paſs through Judah; not only make inroads upon the frontiers, but puſh his way through the country, and penetrate the very heart of the kingdom. He ſhall overflow; ſpread terror and deſolation on every ſide, and in every quarter. He ſhall go over villages, towns, cities, tribes; and bear down all before him. He ſhall reach even to the neck; his ravages ſhall extend even to the royal city, to the very gates of the metropolis; threatening deſtruction to the palace of the king, and the walls of the temple. The ſtretching out of his wings, the ſeveral detachments and parties of his victorious army, ſhall fill the breadth of the land with havock, ſlaughter, and ruin; even of thy land, O IMMANUEL. Their relation to thee ſhall procure no favour, ſhall afford no protection. They have diſhonoured that goodly name wherewith they were called. Therefore that goodly name ſhall no longer ſtand in the breach, but pour itſelf with the torrent, and render it irreſiſtible.—Such an inundation of judgments, ſo terrible, ſo deſtructive, have not we deſerved, may not we expect?

Theſe judgments are compared to fire, and to the fierceſt of fires, that which glows in a furnace. The houſe of Iſrael is to me become droſs, all they are braſs, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midſt of the furnace; they are even the droſs of ſilver. Therefore thus ſaith the LORD GOD, becauſe ye are all become droſs, behold, therefore I will gather you into the midſt of Jeruſalem. As they gather braſs, and iron, and tin, and lead into the midſt of the furnace, to blow the fire upon it, to melt it; ſo will I gather you, in mine anger and in my fury; and I will leave you there, and melt you. Yea, I will gather you, and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye ſhall be melted in the midſt thereof *. Aſtoniſhing words! And they are doubled! they are redoubled! in order to alarm the inſenſible ſinners: as the ſword, by being brandiſhed in many a dreadful circle, over the criminal's head, ſtrikes terror into his apprehenſions, before it does the work of vengeance on his heart.—This generation is become braſs, impudent in their wickedneſs. They have a whore's forehead; they cannot bluſh at their iniquities, but glory in their ſhame.——They are tin; a degenerate race, children that are corrupters. They have forſaken the good old way, and ſwerved from the example of their fathers.——With regard to hardneſs of heart, they are as iron; impenitent amidſt all their guilt; obſtinately tenacious of their vices; and not to be wrought upon by any addreſſes, not to be reclaimed by any expedients.——In another reſpect, they are as lead; ſtupid and ſottiſh; pliable to evil, but for any good purpoſe unmeet, to every good work reprobate.——Becauſe they are ſo exceedingly ſinful, they ſhall be overtaken by GOD's anger, and ſurrounded by his fury; as metals caſt into the midſt of a furnace, are ſurrounded with the raging heat. The flame of this wrath ſhall be blown, as with a vehement wind, to its utmoſt height. In this furnace they ſhall be left, to this wrath they ſhall be abandoned; till, by a complication

* Amos iv. 6. 8. 9. 10. 11. † Iſ. i. 24.

‡ Rom. i. 18. ‖ Hoſ. v. 12. 14. § Iſ. viii. 7. 8.

* Ezek. xxii. 18. 19. 20. 21.

of

of afflictions, reſembling the complication of their vices, they are overcome, ſubdued, and even melted; ſo melted, as to be either purged from the droſs of their iniquities, or elſe blended together in one promiſcuous ruin.

Theſe judgments are deſcribed by the terrible repreſentation of an end. An end of affluence and proſperity, of which we have gloried: an end of power and ſtrength, in which we have truſted: an end of all national bleſſings, which we have not improved to GOD's honour, but turned into licentiouſneſs. Thus ſaith the LORD GOD, An end, the end is come upon the four corners of the land. The ſword is without, and the peſtilence and the famine within: he that is in the field, ſhall die with the ſword; and he that is in the city, peſtilence and famine ſhall devour him *. For this we have been ripening, by an uninterrupted courſe of ungodlineſs and iniquity. And what can be expected by an impenitent people, hating to be reformed? What, but that judgments, which have long been ſuſpended, ſhould at laſt be inflicted? An end is come;—it is come upon the land. It is a national viſitation; not confined to a part, but extending to the whole kingdom.—Upon the four corners of the land. No place ſhall be exempt; nothing ſecure: neither that which ſeems to be moſt ſecret, nor that which lies moſt remote. The vengeance is univerſal and inevitable.——The executioners of this vengeance take their ſtand, within and without, at home and abroad; ſo that to fly from one is only to fall into the hands of another. He that is in the field ſhall find no way to eſcape, but ſhall die with the ſword. He that is in the city ſhall obtain no protection, but famine and peſtilence ſhall devour him. Every city ſhall be a charnel-houſe, and every field a field of blood. In city and country ſin has prodigiouſly abounded; therefore in city and country deſolation ſhall be made, deaths ſhall be multiplied, miſeries ſhall abound.

Theſe are ſome of the images, by which the judgments and the wrath of GOD are repreſented in the ſcriptures. But when all images are uſed, when fancy itſelf is exhauſted, we may truly cry out with the pſalmiſt, Who knoweth the power of thine anger †? If GOD whet his glittering ſword, and his hand take hold on judgment, what can withſtand it, or who can ſuſtain it? If his wrath be kindled, yea but a little, it ſhall conſume the earth with her increaſe: it ſhall ſet on fire the foundation of the mountains, and burn to the loweſt hell ‡.

When the lion has roared, ſays the prophet, who will not fear? When the moſt high GOD has ſpoken; ſpoken ſuch terrible things in righteouſneſs; who will not lay them to heart? O! how deep is that ſleep; how deadly is that lethargy, which the voice of him who ſhakes the heavens does neither alarm nor awe!

Leſt you ſhould begin to ſay within yourſelves, Theſe threatenings are applicable only to the Jews, I proceed to ſhew,

3. The certain execution of theſe, or ſome ſuch judgments on us, unleſs we fly to the appointed refuge.

GOD is an infinite ſpeaker. In his word, he addreſſes himſelf to all generations of men, and to every individual of the human kind, where his holy revelation is made. It is therefore a certain rule, that when any people, enlightened by the glorious goſpel, become, like Jeruſalem, univerſally and incorrigibly corrupt; they do, in Jeruſalem's doom, read their own.

GOD is the ſame yeſterday, to-day, and for ever.—He remembereth his threatenings, as well as his promiſes, to a thouſand generations. Whatſoever, of either kind, happened to our forefathers, happened to them as enſamples to us. And whatſoever was written aforetime, was written for our learning. Obſerve, it was written, not for our amuſement, but for our learning and admonition *; that we may, as in a mirror, ſee our own picture; and, as from an oracle, learn our own deſtiny.

Is it not in a manner neceſſary, for the manifeſtation of GOD's inflexible juſtice, and his unalterable hatred of ſin, that judgment ſhould take their courſe; when iniquity rears its head, and refuſes to be controlled? At ſuch a juncture does not every one of the divine attributes cry aloud, O LORD GOD, to whom vengeance belongeth; thou GOD, to whom vengeance belongeth, ſhew thyſelf.——And how can the juſtice of GOD, with regard to a wicked nation, be ſhewn, but by executing his vengeance upon them, in temporal calamities?

Conſider, Sirs, the very eſſence of nations and political communities is temporal, purely temporal. They have no duration, no exiſtence, but in this world.—— Hereafter ſinners will be judged and puniſhed ſingly, and in a perſonal capacity only. How then ſhall He, who is ruler among the nations, maintain the dignity of his government over the kingdoms of the earth, but by inflicting national puniſhments, for national provocations; and, for final impenitence, total deſtruction?

Beſides, has not the LORD always acted in this manner? Go back to the generations of old. Contemplate Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them;—well watered every where, even as the garden of the LORD. Yet this fruitful land is made barren, thoſe populous cities are turned into aſhes, for the wickedneſs of them that dwelt therein †; for their pride and idleneſs; for their voluptuous and wanton indulgencies. For which things ſake the wrath of GOD not only has come, in former ages, and in diſtant nations; but in every age cometh, and in every nation will come, upon the children of diſobedience ‡.

Paſs over to Babylon, the grandeſt city that the ſun ever beheld; which ſet calamity at defiance, ſaying in her heart, I ſhall be a lady for ever ‖. How is ſhe fallen! ſwept with the beſom of deſtruction §! Not ſo much as a trace or footſtep of her ancient glory left! And ſhall we be ſafe, when thoſe very iniquities prevail among us, which razed the foundations of the Babylonian metropolis, and overthrew the magnificence of the Babylonian monarchy?

Take a view of Conſtantinople, once the moſt flouriſhing Chriſtian city in the world; where the firſt Chriſtian emperor filled the throne, and Chryſoſtom, that great Chriſtian orator, the pulpit. Then it was glorioufly enlightened with the knowledge of JESUS CHRIST. Grace and truth dwelt in it; and the beauties of holineſs adorned it. But now the candleſtick is removed. It is now given up to infidelity and barbarity; is now full of darkneſs and cruel habitations.

Come hither then, ye careleſs ones, and ſee what deſolations ſin has made in the earth. On account of ſin Sodom was conſumed, as in a moment; Babylon is totally deſtroyed ¶; Conſtantinople has loſt her glory. ——And will the LORD, the LORD GOD, who is unchangeably juſt and holy; will he ſpare that

* Ezek. vii. 2, 15.

† Pſal. xc. 11. ‡ Deut. xxxii. 22.

* 1 Cor. x. 11. † Pſal. cvii. 34.

‡ Col. iii. 6. ‖ Iſ. xlvii. 7. § Iſ. xiv. 23.

¶ Will any, raiſed in their own conceit above the vulgar level, neglect theſe admonitions with a ſmile of diſdain? Becauſe they can aſſign the ſecond cauſes of ſome ſuch evils, as have been deſcribed, will they therefore quiet their ſpirits, amidſt the alarming proſpect of judgments from heaven?—They have heard (I make no doubt) that a midnight-debauch in Babylon, and a popular ſedition in Jeruſalem, left the gates of the former open to Cyrus, and the walls of the latter without defence to Veſpaſian. Perhaps they will ſuppoſe, that the overthrow of Sodom was occaſioned by the ſhock of an earthquake; and that the fire from heaven was produced by ſulphureous exhalations.

in

in one people which he has so severely corrected in another? He that chastiseth the Heathen, shall not he punish us, when we do according to all their abominations?

Have we a licence to sin with impunity? are our sins less heinous than those of other people? Quite the reverse. Considering the many blessings which we enjoy as a nation; the many deliverances we have enjoyed as a Protestant nation; the numberless advantages for religious knowledge and religious practice, which we both have enjoyed, and do enjoy, above all the nations on earth;—considering these circumstances, our wickedness is highly aggravated; it is become exceeding sinful; it overpasses the deeds * of the most abandoned Heathens. What then can prevent our ruin?

Will you reply, "We fast, and humble ourselves be-"fore the LORD?"——I ask, Do we fast from sin? are our fast-days the beginning of a gospel-reformation? When we abstain from our daily bread, do we turn by faith to JESUS CHRIST; that eating his flesh, and drinking his blood, we may live through him †? live in holiness here, and live in glory hereafter, by applying his immaculate righteousness to our souls.——If this is the case, we may entertain reviving hopes. The scripture speaks good words, and comfortable words, to such people; be their condition ever so vile, or their guilt ever so great. ——But, alas! are we not just the same persons the day after our fast as we were before? as vain in our conversation, and as forgetful of GOD? as fond of folly, and as negligent of divine grace? as mad upon our idols, of carnal gratification and worldly gain?—If so, our fasts are not an acceptable, no, nor a reasonable service? but a mere mockery of the omniscient Majesty. May he not justly use that upbraiding expostulation? Will ye steal, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and walk after other gods, serving, not the LORD JEHOVAH, but divers lusts and pleasures; and then, with hypocritical devotion, stand before me in this house, which is called by my name ‡?

Perhaps you are ready to allege, "Our alms will de-"liver us. The son of Sirach exhorts us, to shut up alms "in our store-houses; and assures us, that they shall fight for "us against our enemies, better than a mighty shield and "strong spear ‖. And when was there a greater flow of "beneficence observable in our own, or in any land? "What sums have been given to the poor during this "severe season of cold and scarcity! what hospitals of "various sorts, and other charitable foundations, have "been set on foot and are supported through the king-"dom!"—Let us beware, brethren, lest those very things, which we look upon as our recommendation, should prove an offence. If our alms proceed not from faith in JESUS CHRIST, and an unfeigned zeal for the glory of GOD, if they are not accompanied with a spirit of love to his name, and with a course of obedience to his commands; hear what the LORD himself says concerning such works; see what a figure they make in his sight, and then judge, whether they are likely to be a security to our land. I hate, I despise your feast days, and I will not smell in your solemn assemblies. Though ye offer me burnt offerings, and your meat-offerings, I will not accept them, neither will I regard the peace-offerings of your fat beasts. Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs; for I will not hear the melody of thy viols. Hymns of praise, you see, are no other than a noise in the LORD's ear; the most costly services of religion are no better than a smoke in his nostrils; unless judgment, and the love of GOD, run down as a river; unless righteousness, and the faith of CHRIST, abound as a mighty stream *.

Do you still conceit yourselves, that, because there are many righteous persons remaining, they will stand in the gap; they will turn away the anger of the LORD, and be as the chariots of Israel, and the horsemen of Israel, to our endangered state?—Hear what a charge the supreme JEHOVAH gave to his prophet, when the provocations of Israel were risen to a very high pitch: Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for I will not hear thee †. Amazing and awful prohibition! Yet it is repeated again and again ‡.—God's professing people may, by their excessive wickedness, become so insufferably loathsome, that were the greatest saints to make supplication in their behalf, they should not prevail. Though Noah, Daniel, and Job, men mighty in prayer, and zealous for the welfare of their neighbours; though these three men (who had each, by his single intercession, procured blessings from heaven) were uniting their petitions in the midst of this profligate generation; as I live, saith the LORD GOD, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters; they only shall be delivered, but the land shall be desolate ‖.

The land shall be desolate—Doleful sound! dismal decree! And has it not long ago been carried into execution? was not Jerusalem ploughed as a field, and trodden down by the Gentiles? are not the inhabitants rooted out of their dwellings, and scattered to all the ends of the earth? while their country is given up for a prey, and for a possession to strangers, to infidels, to Turks.

Perhaps you will say, "The Jews crucified the LORD "of glory, and rejected his gospel: therefore wrath "came upon them to the uttermost."——And are we innocent in this respect? are not we verily, are not we greatly guilty concerning this thing? Is CHRIST received into the hearts of men, with deep adoration of his person, as IMMANUEL, GOD with us? do they glory and delight themselves in his complete redemption, as finished by the great GOD and our SAVIOUR? do they confide in him alone for their justification, as an infinite Surety, and as JEHOVAH our righteousness? do they depend on him alone for their sanctification, as JESUS who saves his people from their sins, and sanctifies them through his blood? do they count all things but dung, for the excellency of CHRIST, and his incomprehensible merit?——Alas! is not his gospel, though the light of the world, disregarded and despised? is not his name, though a name above every name, derided and blasphemed? are not the influences of his eternal SPIRIT, though the very life of our souls, exploded and ridiculed? They who would exalt the SAVIOUR, would make every sheaf bow down to the REDEEMER's representing

Be the premises ever so certain, is there any thing rational in the conclusion? Is not what we term the course of nature, the incessant administration of Providence? are not many of its ordinary appearances very evident indications of a righteous and holy government, unalterably determined to punish sin? The poverty and ignominy of the lazy vagabond; the diseases of the debauchee, and the distresses of the spendthrift; are these less manifest signs of divine displeasure, because they are the immediate effects of an evil conduct? are they not as certainly the judicial, the penal, as they are the natural consequences of vice?

Let those therefore who fear no judgments, compare causes and events. If selfishness, avarice, and venality; if indolence, luxury, and prodigality; if youth without principles, tradesmen without honesty, and nobles without honour; if these are allowed to be either provoking immoralities or fatal symptoms; I fear the ruin of England cannot be far off. GOD Almighty grant we ministers may not accelerate the fall of our country, by neglecting to warn every man, and exhort every man, to the great evangelical duty of BELIEVING; in order to promote national reformation, and to escape national destruction.

* Jer. v. 28. † John vi. 57.

‡ Jer. vii. 9, 10. ‖ Ecclus xxix. 12, 13.

* Amos v. 21. 22. 23. 24. † Jer. vii. 16.

‡ Jer. xi. 14. & xiv. 11. ‖ Ezek. xiv. 16.

lamenting him as the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, in the ſalvation of ſinners; thoſe preachers, thoſe writers, thoſe believers, are treated as the fooliſh people that dwell in Sichem *.

What the Jews did through ignorance, we, who call ourſelves Chriſtians, Engliſhmen, Proteſtants; we do knowingly, wilfully, and of malicious wickedneſs. And if we thus trample upon the blood which alone can ſcreen us; if we thus crucify afreſh that JESUS who is our only hope; what can we look for, but vengeance and fiery indignation? If we ourſelves, with our own hands, demoliſh the only barrier, what can enſue, but an inundation of wrath, tribulation, and anguiſh?

Conſider theſe things, brethren. The LORD enable you to diſcern the ſigns of the times! Then you will acknowledge, that we have reaſon to be alarmed, to tremble, to be horribly afraid.——Are not theſe iniquities the Achans, that will aſſuredly bring diſtreſs and trouble, if not deſtruction, upon our country? are not theſe iniquities the Jonahs, that will awaken the divine diſpleaſure, and deliver up our veſſel to the tempeſt, if not to ſhipwreck?

Is any one diſpoſed to ſay within himſelf, "Though "others may be guilty of theſe flagrant iniquities, yet "am not I?"—Remember, my friend, the prophet Iſaiah. He was, at leaſt, as free from theſe flagrant iniquities as yourſelf. Yet he laments, and with painful apprehenſions, the guilt of his countrymen, as well as his own †.——Remember king Joſiah. Though a holy man and a juſt, he rent his cloaths, and trembled at GOD's word denouncing vengeance againſt an irreligious people ‡.

Conſider alſo, whether you have not been an acceſſary, even where you was not the principal. Though you have not joined with the more profligate ſinners, nor ſat in the ſeat of the ſcornful; yet have you not connived at their impiety? Do their affronts offered to the King of heaven rouſe you into a becoming zeal to vindicate his injured honour? or, becauſe iniquity has abounded, is not your love, and the love of many waxed cold ‖? Have not the diſciples, even the diſciples of JESUS, been cowards and traitors; while others have been profeſſed enemies and rebels?

Beſides, have not you, have not I, have not all contributed, in many, many inſtances, to ſwell the ſcore of national provocations? Is not every ſin a diſobedience of GOD's moſt holy command? is not every ſin a defiance of his uncontrollable authority? is not every ſin an imitation of the devil? does it not create a kind of hell in the heart? muſt it not therefore be inconceivably odious to the holy, holy, holy LORD GOD of Sabaoth?—If ſo, how guilty are the very beſt among us? Is not this accurſed thing § found in all our tents? has not every one added to the load, that dreadful load, which is likely to ſink the nation in ruin? Should not every one, therefore, ſmite upon his breaſt, and ſay, with the penitent, What have I done! and cry with the publican, GOD be merciful to me a ſinner!

Will you ſtill flatter yourſelf? "All theſe judgments "may be delayed: they may not come in my time."——I anſwer, If there be any truth of GOD's word; if any conjecture is to be made from the appearance of things; theſe judgments are near; they are at the door. They are like the axe in the executioner's hand, which has been poiſed, has received its laſt elevation, and is now falling on the criminal's neck.——Yet, if theſe ſhould be with-held for a ſeaſon, will not ſickneſs come upon you? are not many diſaſters lying in ambuſh to ſeize you? is not death ſharpening his arrow; perhaps fitting it to the ſtring; or even aiming at your life? Is not the day, the dreadful day approaching, when the ſhout of the archangel and the trump of GOD will be heard; when the dead ſhall ariſe, and heaven and earth flee away? will not the LORD, the LORD GOD omnipotent quickly come, with ten thouſands of his ſaints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly, of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodlily committed; and of all their hard ſpeeches, which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him *?

Take then, my dear hearers, take the advice of the greateſt of preachers, and the wiſeſt of men; The prudent foreſeeth the evil, and hideth himſelf †.—Behold! the rains are deſcending, and the flood is coming; haſten like Noah, haſten to your ark. See! the ſkies are kindling all around, and the ſhafts of vengeance are ready to fly. Make haſte, Oh! make haſte, and delay not the time, to get into a hiding-place.—Let me ſound in your ears the angel's admonition; and may the LORD of angels, may the Friend of ſinners, convey it to your hearts! Eſcape for your lives, leſt ye be conſumed: leſt the judgments of GOD, and the wrath of GOD, more to be feared than a deluge of waters, more to be feared than a torrent of flames, ſurround you ſuddenly, —ſeize you unavoidably,—and overwhelm you in ruin, temporal and eternal.

O that I might prevail! O that GOD would make you ſenſible of your peril! O that man, woman, and child, would aſk, "How ſhall I fly from the wrath to "come? where ſhall I be ſafe in the day of viſitation? "Shew me the ark! ſhew me the refuge!"—I ſhould then, with great ſatisfaction, proceed to anſwer this inquiry; and point out CHRIST to your ſouls, as the only hiding-place, as the ſure hiding-place, where you may certainly find ſafety. But this muſt be the buſineſs, the pleaſing buſineſs of my next diſcourſe.

Let me beſeech you, in the mean time, to lay theſe alarming truths to heart: let them impreſs your conſciences! let them penetrate your ſouls! And O thou gracious, thou almighty LORD GOD, do thou command them to ſink deep into all our minds: that we may, with Ezra thy prieſt, ſit down aſhamed and aſtoniſhed ‡, under a ſenſe of our manifold iniquities:—That we may, with thy ſervant Job, abhor ourſelves, and repent in duſt and aſhes ‖:—That we may, in the words, and with the compunction of thy prophet, every one cry out, Wo is me, for I am undone: becauſe I am a man of unclean lips; and I dwell in the midſt of a people of unclean lips §.

* Ecclus l. 26. † Iſ. vi. 5. ‡ 2 Kings xxii. 12. 13.
‖ Math. xxiv. 12. § Joſh. vi. 18.

* Jude 14. 15. † Prov. xxii. 3.
‡ Ezra ix. 3. ‖ Job xli. 6. § Iſ. vi. 5.

SERMON II.

The Means of Safety.

HEB. xi. 28.

Through faith he kept the paſſover, and the ſprinkling of blood, leſt he that deſtroyed the firſt-born ſhould touch them.

WE have been conſidering the danger of our nation, occaſioned—by the ſin of its inhabitants,—by the judgments of GOD, denounced againſt ſuch ſinners,—by the certain execution of his righteous threatenings, unleſs we fly to the appointed refuge.—When ſuch is the ſtate of a nation, it is high time for the watchmen on her walls to lift up their voice; not indeed to ſpread vain terrors, but to give notice of the approaching evil; to warn the unwary; to call in the ſtragglers; and urge every one to retire into a place of ſafety.

Having, in the preceding diſcourſe, attempted to diſcharge this office; I ſhall now, brethren, as in the preſence of the all-ſeeing GOD, aſk,—Have we been attentive to theſe things? are we alarmed with a ſenſe of our guilt and our peril? have we, with the prophet Iſaiah, lamented our own, and the ſins of our people?—If ſo, we ſhall highly prize, we ſhall ardently deſire, the ſame conſolation, and the ſame relief, which the GOD of infinitely-free goodneſs vouchſafed to his ſervant. Then flew one of the ſeraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken from off the altar, and he laid it upon my mouth *; an action which repreſents the very thing ſignified in the text by the ſprinkling of blood.

The altar typified CHRIST; who is both the ſacrifice that makes the atonement, and the altar that ſanctifies the gift.—The live coal ſeems to betoken the word of grace, and the word of life; which brings the glad tidings of the goſpel, and teſtifies of the bleeding JESUS.—Laying this upon the mouth, very ſignificantly denotes the application of CHRIST and his great atonement. When this is done, under the influence of the SPIRIT, and by means of faith, then iniquity is taken away, and ſin purged; taken away from the ſight of GOD, and purged from the ſinner's conſcience. Guilt is aboliſhed; fear ceaſes.—But this leads us to our ſecond particular.

II. The method of ſecurity from danger, effected by keeping the paſſover, and ſprinkling the blood.

Moſes was appriſed of a dreadful vengeance to be inflicted on Egypt; the moſt dreadful that ever was known ſince the beginning of their nation; ſo dreadful, that it would make every ear tingle, and every heart bleed. The deſtroying angel was to paſs through all the territories of Pharaoh, and ſmite every firſt-born both of man and beaſt; ſo that, before the morning, there ſhould be heaps of ſlain in the cities, the villages, the fields; not a houſe exempt, not a family ſpared, not a herd, nor a flock, free from the fatal calamity.

Moſes feared the blow. He feared, as the text intimates, the leaſt touch of the divine executioner's ſword; knowing that it would cruſh him and his people, as a moth is cruſhed by the falling millſtone. He is therefore greatly ſolicitous to provide for their welfare. But what expedient ſhall he uſe?——Shall he give them orders to cloſe their windows, and bar their doors; to erect fortifications, and ſtand upon their defence? Alas! before an inviſible hand, armed with the vengeance of heaven, all ſuch precautions would have been as a ſpark before the whirlwind.——Shall he aſſemble the warriors, or detach parties of ſoldiers to patrole the ſtreets, and guard the houſes? Vanity of vanities! the ſword of the avenging angel would pierce through legions and legions of ſuch guards, as lightning penetrates the yielding air.——Shall the whole congregation bend their knees, with ſolemn confeſſion of their ſins, and ſincere reſolutions of future amendment? This, though abſolutely neceſſary to be done, was extremely improper to be relied on. It would have been relying on a broken reed, and deſpiſing the ordinance of the HOLY ONE.

The LORD himſelf appoints a method of preſervation. Moſes is directed to ſlay a lamb. Each family in Iſrael is to do the ſame. Having received the blood into a baſon, they are to ſprinkle it, not on the threſhold, but on the lintel and ſide-poſts of their doors. This ſhall be a ſign to the deſtroying angel. Looking upon this ſign, he will paſs over the houſe; will ſtrike no blow, and execute no vengeance, wherever he ſees the blood ſprinkled.——All this, in purſuance of the divine direction, being performed; with faith and tranquillity they wait the event.

You will ſay, perhaps, What is all this to us? I anſwer, It is a pattern for our imitation.——Are we then to do the very ſame thing?—We are to do what their practice typified. The ſhadow was theirs, the ſubſtance is ours. The blood of the lamb typified the blood of CHRIST, who is the LAMB of GOD, ſlain for the ſins of the world.—By the blood of CHRIST is frequently ſignified in ſcripture the whole * merit of his life and death, of his actions and ſufferings, of his trials and graces: which ſatisfied GOD's juſtice, and magnified GOD's law; which made propitiation for iniquity, and brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs.——Well does the apoſtle call it precious blood. Unſpeakably precious are its effects. It appeaſes the wrath of GOD revealed from heaven, and makes peace between the offended CREATOR and the offending creature. Sprinkled on the conſcience, it takes away all guilt, and ſecures from all vengeance.—This, therefore, my brethren, this blood is our ſe-

* Iſ. vi. 7.

* Being juſtified by his blood, Rom. v. 9. That is, being pardoned, being made righteous, and heirs of all ſpiritual bleſſings.—Thou haſt redeemed us to GOD by thy blood, Rev. vi. 9. That is, thou haſt delivered us from all ſin and all wrath; thou haſt reconciled us to the Almighty MAJESTY, and introduced us into his bliſsful preſence.—Theſe bleſſings, aſcribed to our LORD's blood, are confeſſedly the fruit, not barely of his ſufferings, but of his whole humiliation, obedience, and death. Therefore, in a very valuable dictionary of the moſt valuable words and phraſes we have this explication of the blood of the LAMB, "The ſacri-
" fice of CHRIST's death, together with his perfect righteouſ-
" neſs and holineſs imputed." See Wilſon's Chriſt. Dict.

curity

curity. This is to our ſouls, what the blood of the paſchal lamb was to the Iſraelitiſh families. The name of the LORD, the grace and goodneſs of GOD, manifeſted in the death and obedience of CHRIST, is a ſtrong tower: not only the righteous perſon, but the diſtreſſed creature, and the endangered ſinner, runneth unto it and is ſafe *.

Since this is a point of the utmoſt importance, it cannot be too clearly diſplayed, or too ſtrongly eſtabliſhed. For this purpoſe, the ſcripture gives us ſeveral moſt amiable and inſtructive views of CHRIST, as our refuge and ſafety.——He is called a hiding-place †. To a hiding-place people retreat, and are ſecure from their enemies, even from thoſe cruel enemies that ſee their deſtruction. Thus the prophets, whom Obadiah hid by fifty in a cave, were ſecure from Ahab's tyranny, and Jezebel's perſecution. So the ſoul that flies to CHRIST, that takes ſanctuary under the blood of ſprinkling, is ſecure from the moſt formidable of all enemies; is ſecure from all the wrath due to ſin, and from every accuſation which Satan can bring. To ſuch a perſon ſhall be fulfilled what is ſpoken by the prophet Jeremiah; When the iniquity of Iſrael ſhall be ſought for, there ſhall be none; and the ſins of Judah, they ſhall not be found ‡.

CHRIST is ſtyled a covert from the tempeſt. A man, ſays Iſaiah, that is, the GOD-man CHRIST JESUS, ſhall be as an hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempeſt ‖. When the thunders roar, and the lightnings flaſh; when the clouds pour down water, and a horrid ſtorm comes on; all that are in the open air retire under the branches of a thick tree, or fly to ſome other commodious ſhelter. What ſtorm can be ſo dreadful as the righteous vengeance of GOD, poured out upon a ſinful nation? What ſtorm can be ſo dreadful as the eternal vengeance of GOD, poured out upon a ſinful ſoul? To both theſe we are expoſed, to both theſe we are juſtly liable. But CHRIST's blood and righteouſneſs are a covert. Hither we may fly, and be ſcreened; hither we may fly, and be ſafe: ſafe as was Noah when he entered the ark; and GOD's own hand cloſed the door, and GOD's own eye guided its motions. For there is no condemnation of any kind, or from any quarter, to them that are in CHRIST JESUS §.

CHRIST is compared to a ſtrong-hold. Turn ye to the ſtrong-hold, ſays the prophet Zechariah ¶. When ſoldiers fly from a victorious army, being admitted into an impregnable caſtle, they are beyond the reach of danger. They give their fears to the wind, and repoſe themſelves in tranquillity. When ſinners fly by faith to the dying JESUS, they alſo, from thenceforth, are in a tower of ſalvation †. They may ſay, each one for himſelf, "Soul, take thine eaſe. All thy guilt is laid upon "thy LORD, and puniſhed in thy Surety. The flaming ſword of juſtice is returned to the ſheath, having received full ſatisfaction from the ſufferings of "CHRIST. The curſe of a violated law is no more, having been executed to the utmoſt upon the perſon "of my REDEEMER. Nay, its curſe is turned into "a bleſſing. For CHRIST has redeemed us from the "curſe of the law, that the bleſſing of Abraham might come "upon us Gentiles ††: even the bleſſing of perfect reconciliation, and everlaſting friendſhip, with GOD moſt "high."

This leads me to mention another beautiful compariſon, which repreſents CHRIST not only as the cauſe of ſafety, but as the ſource of conſolation. He ſhall be as rivers of water in a dry place, and as the ſhadow of a great rock in a weary land ‡‡.——In a dry place, burnt up for want of moiſture, nothing is ſo deſirable, nothing ſo refreſhing as water. To the poor ſinful ſoul, of whoſe condition the parched ground is a fit reſemblance, CHRIST ſhall be, not barely as the morning-dew, not barely as the tranſient ſhower, but as a river; yea, as rivers of water, that flow in copious and never-failing ſtreams through the thirſty ſoil; making even the ſandy deſert green with herbage, and gay with flowers.—In a ſultry clime, where the ſun pours inſufferable heat, and all things languiſh under the glaring rays, nothing is ſo chearing to the labourer, nothing ſo welcome to the traveller, as a cool and gloomy ſhade. A poor ſoul, aſſaulted by the fiery darts of Satan, and diſtreſſed with the remembrance of former iniquities, is this ſultry clime, or weary land. But CHRIST and his atonement are not barely as the boughs of an oak, which extend their coolneſs to a ſmall diſtance; not barely as the canopy of an alcove, through which much of the glowing influence penetrates; but like the ſhadow of a rock, a great rock; which projects the friendly ſhade over many a league; which has repelled and excluded the ſun, through all preceding ages; and gives you, as it were, "the cold of ſnow amidſt the heat of harveſt *."

Here then, brethren, is our ſecurity amidſt all peril. The blood, the righteouſneſs, the infinitely-glorious perſon of CHRIST; theſe are our hiding-place—theſe are our covert—theſe are our ſtrong-hold. And (bleſſed be GOD!) the doors ſtand wide open: they are never ſhut, night nor day. The acceſs is free for any, free for all, free for the greateſt ſinners. We are not only allowed, but we are invited; nay, we are commanded, to approach; to enter; to enjoy the protection; or, as the words of the text expreſs it, to ſprinkle the blood on our ſouls.

Sprinkle the blood on our ſouls! You will probably ſay, "What does this ſignify? What was done by "Moſes, when he ſprinkled the viſible blood, we eaſily "apprehend: but how can we ſprinkle the blood of "CHRIST, which we never ſaw? the blood of "CHRIST, whom the heavens have received?"——This is one of thoſe myſteries which the natural man underſtandeth not; he can form no notion of it; it is fooliſhneſs to his apprehenſion. Therefore, may the eternal SPIRIT both teach us to underſtand the doctrine, and enable us to practiſe the duty!

To ſprinkle the blood of CHRIST, is truly to believe in CHRIST, in his infinite atonement and everlaſting righteouſneſs: it is to receive theſe bleſſings as GOD's free gift to men, to ſinners, to ourſelves in particular; and, having received, to make continual uſe of them in every time of trial, for every occaſion of need.

Perhaps this doctrine may become clearer, if we illuſtrate it by an example. A remarkable example we have in the practice of David. After the commiſſion of his grievous crimes, he did, in a very eminent manner, ſprinkle the blood. For he ſaid unto the LORD, Thou ſhalt purge me with hyſſop, (the inſtrument of ſprinkling the typical blood,) and I ſhall be clean; thou ſhalt waſh me in the fountain opened for ſin and uncleanneſs, and I ſhall be whiter than ſnow †. This fountain he looked upon as opened for his ſins; and fully ſufficient to cleanſe him from all his filthineſs; ſo that he ſhould be as free from ſpot, before the righteous Judge, as the ſnow on Salmon was free from ſtain.——Had he ſaid within himſelf, "My crimes are too great for this "blood to expiate;" or, "This blood cannot be ſhed "for ſo vile an offender as I am:" he would then have put the atonement far from him, together with all its expiating virtue. This would have been not to apply, but to throw away the blood; not to ſprinkle it upon the ſoul, but to pour it upon the ground,

Come then, brethren; come, fellow-ſinners; let us alſo, in this day of fear and danger, look unto CHRIST, as dying that we may live; as made ſin, that we may be made the righteouſneſs of GOD in him:

* Prov. xviii. 10. † Iſ. xxxii. 2. ‡ Jer. l. 20.
‖ Iſ. xxxii. 2. § Rom. viii. 1. ¶ Zech. ix. 12.
† 2 Sam. xxii. 51. ++ Gal. iii. 13, 14. ‡‡ Iſ. xxxii. 2.

* Prov. xxv. 13. † Pſal. li. 7.

him; as made a curſe, that we may inherit eternal bleſſedneſs.——Let us look unto JESUS as taking our nature, and ſtanding in our ſtead. Behold him apprehended as a thief; ignominiouſly bound, and marked with the laſhes of the ſcourge. Behold him crowned with thorns; his hair clotted, his face diſcoloured, his breaſt and ſhoulders all bedewed with his own moſt innocent blood. Behold him nailed to the croſs; hanging in the moſt racking poſture, till all his bones are out of joint; hanging amidſt malefactors, forſaken of GOD, of angels and men. Behold him bowing his head in death, and ſtabbed to the heart with the executioner's ſpear.——Thus behold him, and ſay, "Verily, this "ſufferer was the SON of GOD, and the LORD of "glory. Verily, theſe ſufferings were the puniſhment "due to my ſins. In all this extreme anguiſh he bore "my griefs, and carried my ſorrows. He was oppreſſed, "and he was afflicted, becauſe I had done amiſs and "dealt wickedly. He was cut off out of the land of "the living, that he might make his ſoul an offering "for my ſins, and obtain eternal redemption for me."

Thus behold the bleſſed JESUS: thus, ſinners, behold the LORD your righteouſneſs; with this look of application, with this appropriating faith. Be verily perſuaded, that you ſhall find mercy before a holy GOD; not becauſe you have any worthineſs, but becauſe CHRIST has incomparable merit; that you ſhall never come into condemnation, not becauſe you have faſted and prayed, but becauſe CHRIST is your great propitiation. Be perſuaded, that GOD has given his SON for you; that GOD gives his SON to you; and together with him eternal life.——Be perſuaded of all this, upon the beſt of foundations, the infallible word of GOD; who has declared, that CHRIST died for the ungodly *, and by his obedience ſinners are made righteous †; that CHRIST was wounded on the croſs, and intercedes in heaven for tranſgreſſors ‡; that he received ſpiritual gifts and divine bleſſings, even for the rebellious ‖.——The LORD GOD omnipotent, the author and finiſher of faith, enable you thus to believe! on the ground of his own moſt ſure word, thus to believe! Then you keep the Chriſtian paſſover; then you ſprinkle the blood of CHRIST; then you may boldly ſay, Under his ſhadow we ſhall be ſafe.——Which reminds us of the third particular, namely,

III. The ſucceſs of this method, denoted by the deſtroyer not ſo much as touching them. Leſt he that deſtroyed the firſt-born ſhould touch them.——What a beautiful antitheſis! The Egyptian firſt-born were wounded, were mortally wounded, were abſolutely deſtroyed; the Iſraelites were not hurt, nor endangered, no nor ſo much as touched. So ſure and complete a defence was this blood of ſprinkling!—Nothing elſe could have yielded any protection; this afforded perfect ſecurity. When this was ſprinkled on their door-poſts, they had no cauſe to be afraid for the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day; for the peſtilence that walketh in darkneſs, nor for the deſtruction that waſteth at noon-day §.

And is not the hiding-place, the covert, the ſtronghold, provided for us in the blood and righteouſneſs of CHRIST, an equal ſecurity? do they not yield abſolute, perfect, conſummate ſafety? Nothing elſe could adminiſter the leaſt hope to the chiefeſt apoſtle; this opens an inviolable ſanctuary even for the greateſt of ſinners. None ever periſhed who laid their help upon CHRIST. He ſaves—he ſaves to the uttermoſt;—he ſaves not a few only, but all—all that come unto GOD through him ¶. Is our danger great? Our ſecurity is greater. Is our danger exceeding great? Our ſecurity is incomparably greater. In ſhort, our refuge and ſecurity are the greateſt that can be wiſhed, that can be imagined, that GOD himſelf could provide.——Chearing, charming, raviſhing truth! Suffer me to enlarge upon it, brethren. Let your attention hang on the glad tidings. May your hearts imbibe the precious doctrine!

Had more than forty men bound themſelves with an oath that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed * ſome one in this congregation; the danger would be great, and the caſe ſtartling. Nevertheleſs the endangered perſon would think him ſufficiently ſafe, if he could ſteal away, and hide himſelf in one of the deepeſt caves of America, with a vaſt tract of unknown land, and all the waters of the vaſter ocean between himſelf and the ruffians. Much ſafer will your ſouls be under the hiding, cleanſing, atoning efficacy of this blood of ſprinkling; by which unrighteouſneſſes are forgiven, ſins are covered, and iniquities done away, as though they had never been.

Were you overtaken by a violent and impetuous ſtorm? If you ſought ſhelter under a covert that was firmer than boards of cedar, harder than ſlabs of marble, thicker than the roofs of all the houſes in Europe, you would reckon yourſelves ſecure from torrents of rain, or from volleys of hail. Much more ſecure will you be from everlaſting wrath; ſecure, even when the LORD ſhall rain ſnares, fire and brimſtone, ſtorm and tempeſt †, provided you are found under the covert of CHRIST's magnificent and meritorious righteouſneſs; by virtue of which, all that believe are juſtified——I ſay not from millions, or from thouſands of millions, but—from all offenſive, provoking, criminal things ‡.

Should you be purſued by a conquering foe, determined to cut you in pieces? If you turned into a caſtle whoſe walls were ſtronger than braſs, ſtronger than adamant, ſtronger than all the rocks in the world; you might laugh at the attempts of your enemy; you are guarded from the power and peril of the ſword. So, and abundantly more, are you guarded from every ſpiritual enemy, and from every ſpiritual evil, when you fly to the ſtrong-hold of CHRIST's death and atonement. The ſouls that abide in CHRIST, they ſhall dwell on high; beyond the rage of the old ſerpent, and the great dragon: their place of defence ſhall be the munitions of rocks ‖; againſt which all the aſſaults of earth and hell ſhall never be able to prevail. They may ſay, with the triumphant apoſtle, How much more ſhall we, who receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteouſneſs, be delivered from ruin, and reign in life by CHRIST JESUS §!

And will you not prize ſuch a ſtrong-hold? ſhall not ſuch a covert be dear to your guilty ſouls? will you not ſet an exceeding great value upon ſuch an hiding-place? eſpecially when the ſtorm is gathering and threatening all around; when days of deſolation and perplexity are coming upon the world, and judgments, inflicted by men, may tranſmit us to the everlaſting judgment of GOD.——How did Iſrael bleſs and adore their moſt merciful JEHOVAH, for granting them ſuch an effectual means of preſervation, as the blood of the paſchal lamb! and ſhall not we bleſs aud adore the ſame moſt gracious JEHOVAH, for granting us a means of preſervation altogether as effectual, and incomparably more wonderful?

If you ſhould ſay, "How does it appear, that the "blood of CHRIST is ſuch a ſecurity? ſo great, ſo "wonderful, ſo matchleſs!"——Becauſe it is the blood of him who is JEHOVAH's fellow ¶; of him who is GOD over all, bleſſed for ever †; of him in whom dwells all the fulneſs of the GODHEAD bodily ††.——Permit me, brethren, to clear up and eſtabliſh this doctrine; as it is a doctrine of the laſt importance; on which the very ſtrength of our ſalvation is built; and from which the fulneſs of our conſolation flows.

There are in CHRIST, in his one undivided perſon,

* Rom. v. 6.
† Rom. v. 10.
‡ Iſ. liii. 12.
‖ Pſal. lxviii. 18.
§ Pſal. xci. 5, 6.
¶ Heb. vii. 25.
* Acts xxiii. 21.
† Pſal. xi. 6.
‡ Acts xiii. 39.
‖ Iſ. xxxiii. 16.
§ Rom. v. 17.
¶ Zech. xiii. 7.
† Rom. ix. 5.
†† Col. ii. 9.

ſon,

ſons, two diſtinct natures. One nature is eternal, infinite, almighty; which is called by the apoſtle, the form of GOD *. The other nature had a beginning; is limited as to extent, and limited as to power. This is termed by the apoſtle, the ſeed of Abraham †.——As GOD, he is ſubject to no authority; and infinitely ſuperior to all poſſibility of ſuffering. To become capable of obeying, ſuffering, and dying, he humbled himſelf, and was found in faſhion as a man: that by obeying, ſuffering, and dying in human fleſh, he might triumph over ſin and Satan, in that very nature which Satan had overcome, and ſin had ruined: that, by accompliſhing all this in the room and ſtead of his people, he might bring many ſons unto glory; not without a full ſatisfaction to the rights of injured juſtice, and to the demands of a violated law.

JESUS CHRIST then, in his divine nature, is the moſt high GOD. The heaven of heavens is the auguſt palace, and royal reſidence, of this bleſſed and only Potentate. Thouſand thouſands miniſter unto him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtand before him. The church militant rely on him; the church triumphant adore him; while all the hoſts of angels pay homage to him. JESUS CHRIST, in his divine nature, is the majeſtic and adorable I AM; ſelf-exiſtent and independent. All worlds and all beings are derived wholly from him, and depend continually upon him: he made the worlds, and upholdeth all things ‡.—View the beauty, the magnificence, the harmony, obſervable in heaven, on earth, through the univerſe. All is intended, like the miracle wrought at Cana of Galilee, to manifeſt his glory; to tell every one who has eyes to ſee, and a heart to underſtand, how great our SAVIOUR is, how ſublime his majeſty, and how marvellous his perfection. All things, ſays the SPIRIT of inſpiration, were created by him, and for him §.—Judge then, whether the obedience and atonement of ſuch a REDEEMER are not ſufficient to ſecure, perfectly to ſecure any ſinner, every ſinner, all ſinners, that fly by faith under his wings. As perfectly ſufficient they are for this bleſſed purpoſe, as the unmeaſurable circuit of the ſkies is roomy enough for a lark to fly in, or as the immenſe orb of the ſun is beamy enough for a labourer to work by.

Behold now the dignity and excellency of this blood, which is your covert, your hiding-place, your ſtrong-hold. It has all the power and efficacy that every divine perfection can give it. It is the blood and righteouſneſs of him who is eternal, incomprehenſible, and exalted above all bleſſing and praiſe. Surely then nothing can bear any proportion to it. Guilt, all guilt, though ever ſo execrable and horrid, compared with the grandeur and riches of this invaluable blood ¶, is as a glow-worm before the ſun. All manner of ſins and blaſphemies are blotted out by ſuch an expiation, as the ſhades of night are aboliſhed by the light of day. Every ſinner waſhed in this blood muſt be whiter than the unſullied wool, whiter than the virgin ſnows. Every ſinner clothed in this righteouſneſs, muſt be unblameable and unreproveable, even before the eye of Omniſcience itſelf.

For this, therefore, bleſs the LORD, O my ſoul; and all that is within me, bleſs his holy name. Bleſs the LORD, O my brethren; and let every thing that hath a being praiſe his unutterable grace. For behold! GOD is our ſalvation. GOD himſelf is made fleſh, and become our ſacrifice, our ſin-offering, our juſtifying righteouſneſs: therefore will we truſt, and not be afraid *; truſt in this infinitely-ſufficient SAVIOUR; and not be afraid of death or hell, of any enemy or any evil.—But this leads me to apply the whole: which I ſhall do by way of Examination, Direction,

Exhortation, Conſolation.

I. By way of examination, Examine your own ſelves, ſays the apoſtle †. Have you kept the paſſover? have you ſprinkled the blood?—Many, perhaps, will be ready to anſwer, "We have."—But beware, my friends, leſt ye deceive your own ſouls. Let me give you a touchſtone, whereby you may try your ſpirit, and pronounce aright concerning your ſtate.

Have you been convinced of your great ſinfulneſs? of your ſinful nature and your ſinful practice? Have you been made ſenſible, that hell, the deepeſt hell, is your deſerved portion? is what you deſerve for any tranſgreſſion,—for every tranſgreſſion?——how much more for the many thouſands,—how much much more for the many millions,—how much more for the numberleſs multitude of your provocations? If you have never been convinced of theſe moſt alarming, but certain truths; if you have never been touched with a ſenſe of your extreme guilt, and undone ſtate; I fear, you are ſettled upon your lees, you are in the dead ſleep of ſin. You are not ſo much as awakened; much leſs have you applied CHRIST.

Again, have you been made to ſee, that nothing but CHRIST and his precious blood, nothing but CHRIST and his divine righteouſneſs, can be your

* Phil. ii. 6. † Heb. ii. 16.
‡ Heb. i. 2. 3. ‖ John ii. 11. § Col. i. 16.

¶ St Chryſoſtom's explanation of a verſe lately quoted is ſo important in itſelf, and ſo appoſite to our purpoſe, exhibits ſuch a magnificent and delightful diſplay of the ſalvation which is in JESUS CHRIST, that I promiſe myſelf, the reader will allow me to preſent him with a tranſlation. How much more ſhall they who receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteouſneſs, reign in life by one CHRIST JESUS! Ουχ ὑπερ ἐνταυθα Χαριν, &c. "The apoſtle ſays not, grace, but abundance of grace. For we receive, not barely what may ſuffice to obtain our pardon, but incomparably more. We are delivered from all puniſhment, and from every evil. We are juſtified, we are ſanctified, made the children of GOD, and the brethren of his only begotten SON. We are conſtituted heirs, joint heirs with the PRINCE of heaven. Yea, we become the members of his body; moſt intimately and indiſſolubly united to that divine head.

"All theſe privileges St Paul ſtyles the abundance of grace: intimating, that the antidote is not only qualified to counteract and expel the poiſon, but is ſovereign alſo to eſtabliſh health, to create beauty, to impart honour, and from the moſt malignant of all evils, to produce the moſt diſtinguiſhed bleſſings: any one of which, ſeparately conſidered, would have been ſufficient to overcome and diſarm death; but, under their combined influence, it is abſolutely deſtroyed, it vaniſhes entirely away, "and leaves not ſo much as a trace of miſchief, or a ſhadow of "terror.

"Let us ſuppoſe ſome poor debtor owing a conſiderable ſum, "and, for want of payment, caſt into priſon. A generous "friend, pitying his condition, diſcharges the whole debt, and "releaſes him from confinement: and not this only, but beſtows "upon him ſplendid apparel, with thouſands of ſilver and gold; "introduces him to court, and recommends him to the royal favour; procures his advancement to the higheſt honours, and "puts him in poſſeſſion of the grandeſt preferments. Where "now is the diſgrace of his impriſonment? and where are the "diſtreſſes of his inſolvent ſtate?

"Such is the caſe with regard to us ſinners, and our moſt gracious REDEEMER. He has paid inconceivably more than we "either did or could poſſibly owe. Being GOD, the true GOD, "the infinite and eternal GOD, his payment exceeds our debt, "as much as the waters of the great deep exceed the ſmall drop "of a bucket.—Doubt not, therefore, poor ſinner, that fleeſt for "refuge to this all-glorious SAVIOUR; doubt not but thy ſins, "though more virulent than all plagues, are done away; and "death, though he be the king of terrors, is aboliſhed; this abo"liſhed, and thoſe done away, before ſuch grace and merit; even "as a ſpark of fire is extinguiſhed, when plunged into the abyſſes "of the ſea."—For, indeed, compared with a divine perſon, and an infinite righteouſneſs, whatever guilt you have contracted, whatever thing you can name, is, as our devout orator ſpeaks, ῥανις μικρα προς πελαγος απειρον, no more than a ſcanty drop compared with the boundleſs ocean. Vid. Chryſoſt. in loc.

* Iſ. xii. 2. † 2 Cor. xiii. 5.

ſecurity from vengeance? Have you been convinced, that thouſands of rams, and ten thouſands of rivers of oil, could never expiate the leaſt of your iniquities? that no tears, no confeſſions, no amendment, nothing but the ſacrifice of the body of CHRIST, can make your peace with GOD? If you have not been taught the abſolute inſufficiency of every remedy, ſave only the meritorious ſufferings of JESUS CHRIST; you have not ſeen him, neither known him; much leſs is his blood ſprinkled upon your conſcience.

Once more, have you a ſupreme, a matchleſs eſteem for CHRIST? Is CHRIST and his great ſalvation the thing that you long for? is he to your ſouls the pearl of great price? do you account all things but loſs, that you may win CHRIST, and be found in him? If this is not the ſtate of your ſoul, I dare not flatter you with vain hopes; I muſt not buoy you up with ungrounded imaginations. You are not, as yet, in your hiding-place; neither have you fled to your ſtrong-hold. All the curſes of the divine law ſtand charged and pointed full againſt you. You have no ſecurity from being hurt by the firſt death, nor from being irrecoverably ruined by the ſecond death. If judgments ſhould come upon a ſinful and backſliding people, you have no defence; there is no wall of fire around you. You muſt therefore expect to fall among thoſe that fall; and, falling by the ſword, may immediately drop into hell.

Can you hear this, and be unconcerned? can you liſten to this warning, more awful than the voice of ten thouſand thunders, and not ſtart from your inſenſibility? are you not looking around, and ready to cry out, "What then ſhall I do to be ſafe in the day of "evil?"—O! that this inquiry came from the very bottom of your hearts. I ſhould then proceed, with great chearfulneſs, to

2. A word of direction.——Fly to CHRIST, alarmed ſinners. Come under the covert of his blood. Appropriate the bleſſed JESUS; look upon him and his merit as your own. Thus ſprinkle his blood: ſprinkle it upon your lintel and door-poſts; upon all you are, upon all you have, and all you do; upon your conſciences, that they may be purged; upon your ſouls, that they may be ſanctified; upon your works, that they may be accepted.——Say, every one for himſelf, "I am a poor, "guilty, helpleſs creature; but in JESUS CHRIST, "who is full of grace and truth, I have righteouſneſs and "ſtrength *.——I am a poor, polluted, loathſome crea- "ture: but JESUS CHRIST, who is the image of the "inviſible GOD, and the brightneſs of his Father's "glory, has loved me, and waſhed me from my filthineſs in "his own blood †.—I am by nature a perverſe depraved "creature; and, by evil practice, a loſt damnable ſin- "ner; but JESUS CHRIST, who made the worlds; "JESUS CHRIST, whom heaven and earth adore; "even JESUS CHRIST himſelf came from the man- "ſions of bliſs, on purpoſe to ſeek me, to ſave me ‡; to "give himſelf for me.—And how can I periſh, who "have ſuch a ranſom? how can I be undone, who "have ſuch a repairer of my breaches? how can I "come into condemnation, who have the blood, not "of ten thouſand ſacrifices; the merit, not of ten "thouſand angels, but the blood and merit of JEHO- "VAH himſelf, for my propitiation?"

Should you ſay, "Have I a warrant for ſuch a truſt?" —You have the beſt of warrants, our LORD's expreſs permiſſion; Whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely ‖. It is not ſaid, this or that perſon only, but whoſoever; including you and me; excluding no individual man or woman.—It is not ſaid, whoſoever is worthy, but whoſoever is willing. Wilt thou be made whole? was our LORD's queſtion to the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda. Wilt thou, all terms and conditions apart, inherent grace and glory? is his moſt benevolent addreſs to ſinful men, in all ages.—Let him take the water of life; let him receive ME and my righteouſneſs; let him look upon all that I have done and ſuffered, as done and ſuffered for his redemption. This will adminiſter peace of conſcience, and joy in the HOLY GHOST: this will produce love of GOD, and alacrity of obedience; in which things the true life of the ſoul conſiſts.—All theſe bleſſings are to be received freely, without money, and without price: that is, without any good works, any good qualities, or any preparatory requiſites whatever: to be received, as the infinitely-rich gift of divine grace, vouchſafed even to the loſt---the guilty---the undone.

You have our LORD's moſt generous invitation; Come unto ME. And whom does he call? The righteous? No. The excellent? Quite the reverſe. He calls ſinners; miſerable ſinners; even the moſt miſerable of ſinners; thoſe who are weary and heavy laden; overwhelmed with iniquities; bowed down to the very brink of hell, and ready to think, "There is no hope "for them." Yet them he encourages; them he invites; to them he declares, I will give you reſt *; reſt in the enjoyment of peace with GOD, and peace in your own conſciences.——Obſerve and admire the riches of your REDEEMER's grace. He ſays not, Ye are vile wretches; polluted by ſin, and enſlaved to the devil; therefore keep at a diſtance; but, therefore come. Come and be cleanſed by my blood; come, and be made free by my SPIRIT.—He ſays not, Furniſh yourſelves with this, or that, or the other recommending accompliſhment, but only come: come juſt as you are; poor, undone, guilty creatures. Yea, come to ME for pardon and recovery; to ME, who have given my life, myſelf, my all, for your ranſom.

Should you ſtill queſtion, whether theſe ineſtimable bleſſings are free for you? Remember, brethren, they are free for ſinners. Is this your character? Then they are as free for your acceptance, as for any perſon's in the world. To us eternal life is given †; not us who had deſerved it by our goodneſs, but us who had forfeited it by our ſins.—To you is preached the forgiveneſs of ſins ‡; not you whoſe tranſgreſſions were inconſiderable, but you whoſe iniquities were more in number than the hairs of your head.—Even to you, who are the loſt and periſhing ſinners of Adam's family, is the word of this ſalvation ſent ‖. And, by a commiſſion from GOD, we publiſh it; that, as ſinners, you may receive it; that receiving it, you may commence believers; and believing, may have life through his name §.

Some, perhaps, will be inclined to debate; "Is this "ſo extraordinary a matter? will this exerciſe of be- "lieving do ſuch great things for us, or put us in poſſeſ- "ſion of ſuch ſingular bleſſings?"—Moſes might have formed the ſame ſcruple with regard to the ſprinkling of blood. Will this ſeemingly-inſignificant circumſtance be ſuch an extraordinary ſafeguard to us? will this preſerve us from the impending blow, more effectually than the labours of the engineer, or the ſhield and ſpear of the warrior?—But Moſes conſulted not with fleſh and blood; Moſes rejected all ſuch carnal reaſonings. By faith he and his people kept the paſſover, and were made partakers of the temporal ſalvation. By faith may you and I receive CHRIST! So ſhall we be partakers of pardon and eternal ſalvation.

By believing the promiſe of GOD, and by truſting in the perſon of CHRIST, we are united to the LORD JESUS ¶; ſo as to have a real intereſt in

* If. xlv. 24. † Rev. i. 5.
‡ Matth. xviii. 11. ‖ Rev. xxii. 17.

* Matth. xi. 28. † 1 John v. 11.
‡ Acts xiii. 38. ‖ Acts xiii. 26.
§ John xx. 31. ¶ Eph. iii. 17.

his blood and righteouſneſs. Being united to CHRIST, our ſins are done away, by virtue of his infinitely-precious atonement; and eternal life becomes ours, on account of his everlaſting righteouſneſs.—Whoever thus believes, believes merely as a ſinner, not upon the ſuppoſition of any goodneſs in himſelf, but upon the ſole warrant of GOD's promiſe, in the infallible word of the goſpel. Such a perſon ſhall not be aſhamed of his belief; ſhall never be diſappointed of his hope; according to his faith ſhall it be unto him *.

Come then, fellow-ſinners; believe the record of heaven. Set to your ſeal, that GOD is true. Honour his word, which cannot lie; honour his grace, which is abſolutely free; honour his dear SON, who has obtained eternal redemption for ſuch unworthy creatures as you and I. What ſhall hinder you?——But this leads me to

3. A word of exhortation. I ſay then, what ſhall hinder you? what ſhall with-hold you, a ſingle moment, from believing? ſince all things are ready † in CHRIST JESUS. The great propitiation is made by him; the perfect obedience is performed by him; all the conditions of the new covenant are fulfilled by him. Come then, and partake of the heavenly bleſſings; as you partake of a marriage-feaſt, when the entertainment is all prepared, and the bridegroom bids you welcome.

Fain would I prevail in this moſt important addreſs. LORD, make bare thy arm; incline their hearts; make them willing in the day of thy power ‡.——My dear friends, if you turn away from ſuch invitations, you are ruined to eternity: miſery awaits you here, and damnation hereafter. Suffer me then to be importunate. Refuſe not him that calleth you by my mouth; that bids you truſt and not be afraid; that offereth himſelf, with all his fulneſs, to you.——Why are you backward? why ſlow of heart to believe? why do you ſtand at a diſtance from the all-gracious JESUS?

Is it becauſe you are guilty wretches? Then he publiſhes the act of indemnity to you: I, even I, am he that bloteth out your tranſgreſſions, for mine own ſake ‖.——Is it becauſe you are polluted creatures; loathſome in your own eyes, and much more loathſome in the eye of infinite purity? Then hear the word of the HOLY ONE: I will ſprinkle clean water upon you, and ye ſhall be clean. From all your filthineſs, and from all your idols will I cleanſe you §.——Is it becauſe your ſins are more numerous, and more heinous than the ſins of others? Be they ever ſo heinous, or ever ſo aggravated, thus ſaith the GOD of immenſely-rich grace in CHRIST; Though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be as white as ſnow; though they be red like crimſon, they ſhall be as wool ¶.

Are you ſtill objecting, "I am weak; I have no "ſtrength; I cannot believe?"——Look then to a promiſing GOD, that he may help your unbelief; that he may fulfil in you all the good pleaſure of his will, and the work of faith with power. For he who is truth itſelf hath ſaid, Your GOD will come and ſave you. Then ſhall the eyes of the blind be opened, and the ears of the deaf ſhall be unſtopped: the lame man ſhall leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb ſhall ſing ⸸.—Has the LORD given you a deſire to believe in his dear SON? doubt not but he will alſo give you the power. Does GOD the LORD bring to the birth, and not give ſtrength to bring forth? That be far from him! the ſuſpicion be far from us! He has, in unſpeakable mercy, appointed his bleſſed SPIRIT for this purpoſe. The HOLY GHOST, the Comforter, attendeth continually on this very thing; to teſtify of CHRIST, and to reveal CHRIST in our ſinful ſouls; enabling us to diſcern the all-ſufficiency of CHRIST, to diſcern our right to make uſe of CHRIST, and to receive CHRIST as our own—our own GOD and SAVIOUR.

Be it then your daily endeavour, your continual buſineſs, to believe; firmly, confidently, aſſuredly to believe in JESUS CHRIST, as the great and glorious REDEEMER, in whom you have pardon, you have righteouſneſs, and eternal life. Thus exerciſe yourſelves unto godlineſs, and GOD will help you: GOD will ſtrengthen you; yea, GOD will uphold you with the right hand of his righteouſneſs.—Thus exerciſe yourſelves unto godlineſs, depending on the divine faithfulneſs, proceeding upon the divine warrant, in obedience to the divine command, which expreſsly ſays, Believe in the LORD your GOD, ſo ſhall ye be eſtabliſhed: believe his prophets, ſo ſhall ye proſper *: believe in his dear SON, ſo ſhall ye be ſaved †.

Pharaoh ſaid to Joſeph, Now thou art commanded, this do ‡. Let me alſo ſay to my hearers, Now ye are allowed, invited, commanded to believe in the SON of GOD, this do. 'Tis your grand concern; the one thing needful. Without this, nothing will profit you.——Therefore I repeat my exhortation; therefore I am ſo urgent; therefore I cannot diſmiſs the ſubject, without beſeeching the FATHER of mercies to command a bleſſing upon the word; that you may indeed believe ‖ unto righteouſneſs, unto life, unto ſalvation. Thus will you glorify the ineffable goodneſs of GOD, and the ineſtimable merit of CHRIST: thus will you find a ſure, a full, an incomparably-rich proviſion made for your ſafety: and thus will you moſt effectually comply with that tender and gracious invitation of the LORD your GOD; Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and ſhut thy doors about thee: hide thyſelf as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpaſt. For behold! the LORD cometh out of his place, to puniſh the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity §.

And what will ye do, when the LORD cometh forth to puniſh, if you are not received into the hiding-place? What will ye do, ye men of ſober and decent converſation; who have nothing but an outward regularity, and ſome cuſtomary conformity to religious worſhip? Theſe, though in their place valuable, yet are no ſecurity. They are only the outworks, not your fortification, nor your citadel. When the righteous Judge ſhall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, to take vengeance on them that obey not the goſpel ¶; theſe, without the blood of ſprinkling, will be but as a withered leaf amidſt the inextinguiſhable burning.

What will ye do, ye men of wealth and large poſſeſſions? Will riches profit you in the day of wrath ⸸? will riches protect you in the day of the LORD's controverſy? Alas! they will mark you out for a prey, and ſerve only to lure the vultures. If riches have been your idol; hoarded up in your coffers, or laviſhed out upon yourſelves; they will, when the day of reckoning comes, be like the garment of pitch and brimſtone, put upon the criminal condemned to the flames.

What will ye do, ye mighty men of valour? If the LORD turn his hand upon you, your heart ſhall fail, and your knees be feeble; your arm ſhall loſe its ſtrength, and your ſword ſhall loſe its edge. Your fleets and armies ſhall be as tow, and the commanders of them as a ſpark; and they ſhall both burn together, and none ſhall quench them →.——If you are not ſheltered and ſecured by this blood, what will ye do, when the ſhout of the archangel is made, and the trump of GOD is heard? Undaunted as you now ſeem, you will then, in an agony of deſpair, call upon rocks to fall upon you, and mountains to cover you ↔.

What will ye do, ye voluptuous men, and ye careleſs women? ye that eat the lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the midſt of the ſtall? ye that drink

* Matth. ix. 29. † Matth. xxii. 4. ‡ Pſal. cx. 3.
‖ Iſ. xliii. 25. § Ezek. xxxvi. 25.
¶ Iſ. i. 18. ⸸ Iſ. xxxv. 4, 5, 6.

* 2 Chron. xx. 20. † Acts xvi. 31. ‡ Gen. xlv. 19.
‖ Rom. x. 10. § Iſ. xxvi. 20, 21. ¶ 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8.
⸸ Prov. xi. 4. → Iſ. i. 31. ↔ Rev. vi. 16.

wine

wine in bowls, and anoint yourselves with the chief ointments? Ah! what will ye do, when the whole land, for the universal degeneracy of its inhabitants, for their contempt of CHRIST, and neglect of grace, shall become brimstone, and salt, and burning; insomuch that it shall not be sown, nor bear, nor any grass grow thereon *? Much more may I ask, What will ye do, when the heavens shall pass away will a great noise, when the elements shall melt with fervent heat, when the whole earth, and all the works that are therein, shall be burnt up?

What will ye do, people of all ranks and conditions, when mischief shall come upon mischief, and rumour shall be upon rumour †? when your houses shall be laid in heaps, and your streets be made a place of graves? when your cities, that were full of inhabitants, shall be solitary; and not a voice heard amidst them, but sighs of the disconsolate, and groans of the dying? when your children shall be slaughtered in one place, your parents in another; and the "slain shall lie behind the slayer, as the sheaves ‡ "behind the reaper, in the time of harvest?"——But, above all, what will ye do, when the great white throne is erected; when the earth and the heavens flee away from the face of him that sitteth thereon; and the dead, both small and great, stand before GOD to be judged? Without the blood of sprinkling, where can you be safe? how will you appear? what will you do?—Whereas, if CHRIST and his blood are yours, all is yours. You have nothing to fear, in time or eternity. "O! well "is it with you, and happy shall you be." But this reminds me of adding a word,

4. By way of consolation——Possibly you may be ready to inquire, "What consolation will this admini-"ster, amidst the presages, or under the approach, of "national calamities?"——Very great. Fear not, says the LORD, for I have redeemed thee ‖. Redemption by CHRIST is a preservative from all terror, and an antidote against every evil. This causes the serene breast, and the lightsome heart. Hence comes calmness of conscience, quietness and assurance for ever. Therefore, says the prophet, This man shall be our peace when the Assyrian shall come into our land. The blood and righteousness of our incarnate GOD shall be the sovereign support of our souls, even when the enemy invades our territories, and preys upon the vitals of our country: yea, when he treads upon our palaces §; not only demolishes our dwelling-houses, but lays our royal edifices in the dust, and makes us feel all the grievousness of war.

Further, when this blood is sprinkled, sin is done away, and GOD is appeased. His promises are your portion, and his arm is your defence. For the comfort of such people it is written; He shall deliver thee in six troubles; yea, in seven there shall no evil touch thee. In famine, he shall redeem thee from death; and in war, from the power of the sword. Thou shalt be hid from the scourge of the tongue; neither shalt thou be afraid of destruction, when it cometh ¶. In the hands of this reconciled and faithful CREATOR, this unwearied and almighty DELIVERER, how safely may you deposit yourselves and your families, your possessions and your all!

Be not then discouraged, ye followers of CHRIST, though troublous times should come. All creatures, and all events, are under the controul of your heavenly FATHER. If he has any further occasion for your service, or sees it conducive to your good, he will preserve you amidst the greatest dangers. He can draw a curtain of concealment over you, as he did over David in the cave *. He can plant an invisible guard around you, as he did around Elisha in Dothan †. He can turn the hearts of your adversaries, and make even the enemy and the avenger to be at peace with you; as he did in the case of Jacob and his enraged brother Esau.—Or, if you fall in the common calamity, your latter end shall be peace; your inheritance is unalienable, and your joy no man taketh from you. Your best things, your eternal interests, are secure, inviolably secure, being hid with CHRIST in GOD ‡.

Happy, unspeakably blessed and happy the people, on whom this blood is sprinkled! If vindictive visitations come upon the land, this may screen and protect their persons; like the mark, which the man clothed with linen set on the forehead of GOD's chosen ones ‖; or like the line of scarlet thread, which Rahab the harlot bound to the window of her house §. However, by this blood of reconciliation, all afflictions shall be disarmed, and every evil unstung. Nay, all things, not in prosperity only, but an adversity likewise, shall work together for good ¶. Death, even death, is vanquished for them, and become their gain. And the last judgment is no longer the object of their dread, but their unspeakable privilege. Being justified by this blood, they may even glory in tribulation, and rejoice in hope, in sure and stedfast hope of the glory of GOD †.

Will ye not then, brethren, ardently join with me? while I lift my voice to GOD in the heavens, and say, "Awake, awake, O arm of the LORD; let this be a "day of thy power, and a day of our redemption.—— "Behold, O GOD our SAVIOUR, and look upon thy "various congregations. See what a gathering of the "people there is in thy courts; let there be as great a "gathering of souls to thy blessed self. Fulfil the pro-"phecy, almighty SHILOH! Let sinners, won by "the discovery of thy grace, fly unto thee as a cloud; "and take shelter in thy wounds, as the doves in their "windows! that they may rest in the day of trouble; "and, when time shall be no more, may enter into that "everlasting rest, which remaineth for the people of "GOD." Amen!

* 1 Sam. xxiv. 3. † 2 Kings vi. 17.
‡ Col. iii. 3. ‖ Ezek. xi. 6. § Josh. ii. 18, 19.
¶ Rom. viii. 28. This seems to be the meaning of the HOLY GHOST, in the passage lately quoted from Job. In six, in manifold and various troubles GOD shall deliver thee. Or, if he suffer thee to be involved in seven, there shall no evil, no penal evil, touch thee. His gracious presence shall be more than deliverance.—— Thou shalt not feel anguish, but enjoy comfort; thou shalt not suffer harm, but receive benefit. Though the flames of tribulation kindle all around, they shall not consume thee; but (like the fire which surrounded the three Hebrew confessors) shall only loose thy bonds, and set thee free; set thy affections free from a troublesome world, or set thy soul free from a prison of clay.
† Rom. v. 1, 2, 3.

* Deut. xxxix. 23. † Ezek. vii. 26.
‡ Jer. ix. 22. ‖ Is. xliii. 1.
§ Mic. v. 5. ¶ Job v. 19, 20, 21.

SERMON III.

The Way of Holineſs.

EZEK. xviii. 27.

When the wicked man turneth away from his wickedneſs that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he ſhall ſave his ſoul alive.

MANY of my hearers, I obſerve, are huſbandmen; and the ſeaſon, if I miſtake not, is the ſeaſon of ſeed time. I will ſuppoſe a perſon, unſkilled in your buſineſs, brethren, taking notice of your work. Perhaps he goes home, and ſays,—"What ſtrange inconſiderate "creatures have I ſeen in the field! I ſaw them, inſtead of laying up their corn in the garner, throwing "it away by handfuls. Nay, they even buried it in "the ground, and left it to putrefy under the clods. Is "this the way to improve their ſtock, and increaſe their "ſubſtance? is this the way to get gain, and provide "for their families?"

Should any one make ſuch a reflection on your conduct, you have an anſwer ready. The ſame anſwer, only with an alteration of circumſtances, will be equally proper for your preacher. It is true, his uſual ſubjects are, the abſolutely-free grace of GOD, and the immenſely-rich merits of CHRIST; the infinite atonement, and everlaſting righteouſneſs of the REDEEMER. But becauſe he generally enlarges upon theſe doctrines, is he therefore throwing away his words? does he neglect the cauſe, or diſregard the intereſts of holineſs? Far from it. He is ſowing the ſeed of vital holineſs; without which ſeed, holineſs will never flouriſh in your hearts, will never bring forth fruit in your lives; any more than your ploughed lands would produce a crop of corn, without receiving the appointed grain. It is through the knowledge of our adorable SAVIOUR, as calling us to glory and virtue, that we have all things pertaining unto life and godlineſs *; unto the enjoyment of life eternal, and the practice of true godlineſs.

To convince you that this is my aim, I have choſen a text full to the purpoſe; and not unſuitable to the occaſion of our preſent aſſembly. When the wicked man turneth away from his wickedneſs that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he ſhall ſave his ſoul alive.

The words naturally divide themſelves into the following particulars;

I. What the wicked man ſhould turn from—wickedneſs.

II. What he ſhould turn to—to do that which is lawful and right.

III. What will be the effect of ſuch turning—he ſhall ſave his ſoul alive.

May CHRIST JESUS, the Head of his church, and the wonderful Counſellor, enable us to open theſe truths; to add a word of lively application; and to receive godly edifying from the whole!

I. What the wicked man ſhould turn from—wickedneſs. Here perhaps you expect, that I ſhould mention ſeveral ſorts of wickedneſs; ſhould diſplay the deteſtable nature and deſtructive conſequences of each; and deter you, by ſuch conſiderations, from the commiſſion of them all; deter you from lying and defrauding, from curſing, and ſwearing, from drunkenneſs and uncleanneſs, from a ſpiteful temper and a backbiting tongue. Theſe are horrid evils. On account of theſe the land mourns. This brings the vengeance of GOD on a perſon, and on a people *. If I could ſpeak in thunder, I could never inveigh too loudly againſt theſe vices. "Ye that go on in ſuch iniquities, ye are ſtar- "tering brimſtone upon your habitations †; ye are heaping up "wrath againſt the day of wrath ‡. How can ye eſcape the "damnation of hell ‖?"

But let me forbear invectives. Let me reaſon with you in the ſpirit of mildneſs.——I will ſuppoſe you poſſeſſed of a pleaſant garden. In ſome favourite bed, many weeds ſpring up, alluring to the eye, but full of deadly poiſon. Will you order your gardener, to crop off the leaves, or to pluck up the roots?——To pluck up the roots moſt certainly. Becauſe, if he does the former only, it will avail but little; it will be no better than labour loſt; whereas, if he does the latter, he will effectually rid your ground of the pernicious incumberance. ——Thus would I act. Wickedneſs is this pernicious weed. It is full of deadly poiſon; it pollutes your ſouls, and will be the bane of your happineſs. I would not therefore be content with uſing the pruning-knife, and cutting off the ſhoots; but I would take the ſpade, and level my blow at the root.

I would fain have you turn, not partially and ſuperficially, but thoroughly and habitually;—not from ſome only, but from all wickedneſs;—and not barely from the practice, but even from the love of it, and any fondneſs for it.—This will never be accompliſhed, unleſs you turn

From a thoughtleſs } From a prayerleſs } ſtate. From an inſenſible }

1. From a thoughtleſs ſtate.—You are made for eternity; you are immortal beings. You muſt dwell either with GOD in heaven, or with devils in hell; and that to endleſs, endleſs ages. You know not how ſoon you may be ſummoned into the inviſible and eternal world; the following night, for aught you can tell; or before the preſent hour is expired. Do you ſeriouſly conſider, to which of theſe everlaſting abodes you are approaching? for which of theſe unchangeable conditions you are meet?

Except a man be born again, ſays our LORD, he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven §. This is the fixed determination of the righteous Judge. You all hope for heaven; and I humbly beſeech the LORD that you may not be diſappointed of your hope. But do you diligently inquire, whether you have experienced this new birth? Is there a ſpiritual change wrought in your ſouls; are your affections taken off from vanity, and fixed on the infinitely-amiable GOD? is your memory filled with the truths of the goſpel, and are your deſires riſing to things above? To expect the bleſſedneſs of heaven, and have no concern about this renewal of your nature, is to contemn the counſels of CHRIST, and to trifle with his unalterable decree.

* 2 Pet. i. 3.

* Col. iii. 6. † Job xviii. 15. ‡ Rom. ii. 5. ‖ Matth. xxiii. 33. § John iii. 3.

Without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the LORD *. This is the ſtanding rule for our preſent conduct, and indiſpenſably neceſſary for our future happineſs. You may be civil and decent in your behaviour; you may attend the place of divine worſhip, and paſs for reputable perſons: yet, unleſs you are holy in your hearts, and holy in your converſation, you cannot enter into GOD's bliſsful preſence. To be holy is to put on CHRIST †; to reſemble CHRIST, in your ſpirit and carriage, as one man reſembles another, when he puts on his dreſs, or imitates his manners. Do you look to CHRIST as your pattern; follow CHRIST as your guide; and, in the general courſe of your life, walk as CHRIST walked? ——Perhaps you have never ſo much as aimed at this; never ſo much as ſeriouſly conſidered eternity, regeneration, and a conformity to CHRIST. Theſe things are ſeldom, if ever, in your thoughts: then be aſſured you are far from holineſs; you are not turned from your evil way; no, nor ſo much as beginning to turn.

Say not, "This duty of ſerious conſideration is a "ſlight matter. If I had been guilty of injuſtice or per-"jury; if I had committed adultery or murder; theſe "indeed were heinous crimes: whereas, the omiſſion "which you have inſiſted on, is but a ſmall offence." ——Small offence! Preſume not to think ſo. However ſuch guilt may appear little in your view, or ſit eaſy upon your conſcience, it is heinous enough to make heaven and earth amazed. For thus ſaith the LORD; Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth! I have nouriſhed and brought up children, and they have rebelled againſt me. The ox knoweth his owner, and the aſs his maſter's crib: but Iſrael doth not know, my people DOTH NOT CONSIDER ‡. To ſay the truth, an inconſiderate careleſs life is an unintermitted courſe of ſin; it is one continued act of rebellion againſt GOD.——It oppoſes his compaſſionate wiſh; O that they were wiſe! that they underſtood this! that they would conſider their latter end ‖!—It diſobeys his poſitive command; Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, the ſupreme Ruler of the world, Conſider your ways §.—It defeats the deſign of his holy word, and would make the blood of his SON to be of none effect.

2. Turn from a prayerleſs ſtate. Alas! how many of thoſe whom we call Chriſtians are ſtrangers to prayer! How many ſervants riſe to their work, and never bend a knee before their MASTER in heaven! how many maſters ſet their ſervants an ungodly example; enter upon the affairs of the day, without imploring the GOD of all grace, either to proſper their buſineſs, or to ſanctify their ſouls! How many parents know not what it is to make earneſt ſupplications for the converſion and ſalvation of their children! and how many children are as ignorant of the nature, the neceſſity, the advantages of prayer, "as the wild aſs's colt ¶!"

Shall I reckon theſe good people! are theſe turned to their GOD! No; they are deſpiſers of the Moſt HIGH; they caſt contempt upon his majeſty. The language of their practice is, "Depart from us, Omnipotent as thou "art, we have no need of thee; no need of thy "SPIRIT, to make interceſſion in us; no need of thy "SON, to make interceſſion for us."——Moſt juſtly, therefore, is it reckoned by Eliphaz, as part of a wicked and abandoned character, Thou reſtraineſt prayer before GOD †. Nay it is mentioned by the pſalmiſt as the finiſhing part, that which ſeals up the ſoul under the dominion of iniquity, and ſhuts out all reaſonable hope of a reformation: They are corrupt; they do abominable works; and there is no proſpect of their doing otherwiſe, ſince they call not upon the LORD ←.

* Heb. xii. 14. † Rom. xiii. 14. ‡ Iſ. i. 2, 3.
‖ Deut. xxxii. 29. § Hag. i. 5, 7. ¶ Job xi. 12.
† Job xv. 4. ← Pſal. xiv. 4.

Religious, yet neglect prayer! Impoſſible. Can a man live without food? can he breathe without air? No more can you withſtand temptation, or exerciſe godlineſs, unleſs you watch unto prayer *.—The neglect of prayer is not only ſinful in itſelf, but the ſure ſign of an unſanctified heart, and the wide inlet to every unrighteous practice. "Shew me a prayerleſs perſon," ſaid one, "and I will ſhew you a graceleſs perſon."—Turn then, ſinners, turn, without delay, to a habit of prayer; of ſecret, ſerious, earneſt prayer: otherwiſe, you cannot expect that the wrath of GOD ſhould be turned away from you. No; when he whets his glittering ſword, and his hand takes hold on judgment, you are the perſons that cauſe the indignation; you are the perſons who have reaſon to tremble at the ſtroke. For thus it is written in that venerable book, which is a tranſcript of the divine will, and the rule of the divine procedure; Pour out thy fury upon the Heathen, that know thee not; pour out thy fury upon the families that call not on thy name †.

3. Turn from your inſenſible ſtate.——Be ſenſible of your guilt, your miſery, your ruin. Thoughtleſs and prayerleſs people, you are ſinners before the GOD of heaven; you are the children of his wrath; you are the objects of his vengeance; condemned and accurſed by his holy word. O! may the LORD of all power rend the veil from your underſtandings, and ſhew you your perilous, your dreadfully-perilous condition.

If, while I am ſpeaking, the earth ſhould reel to and fro, and be in ſtrong convulſions under your feet; if it ſhould open its horrid jaws, and gape frightfully wide to devour you; not one in the aſſembly but would be greatly alarmed. How then can you be careleſs and unconcerned, when hell from beneath is opening her mouth, to ſwallow you up in endleſs perdition?——If this building was rocking over your heads, and tottering on every ſide; if the beams were burſting, and the walls cleaving; you would be ſtruck with aſtoniſhment and horror. And how is it that you are under no apprehenſions, when the indignation of an almighty GOD is ready to fall upon you; which, far more inſupportable than the fall of loaded roofs, or ponderous millſtones, muſt even grind you to powder.——If the French were landed, and an army of deſperate Papiſts ravaging the nation; if you were purſued, or ſurrounded, by thoſe barbarous enemies of your religion and country; if their ſwords, reeking with Britiſh blood, were now at your throats; you would tremble for your lives. And will you not feel ſome concern for your ſouls, when the ſword of Omnipotence is ſharpened to cut you in pieces! when, for aught you know, it may be already unſheathed; may have received a commiſſion to give the fatal blow; and, before another hour paſſes, may actually ſtrike.——If the late diſtemper among the cattle, ſhould turn to a plague among men; if it ſhould ſweep away thouſands and ten thouſands to an untimely grave; if you ſhould ſee multitudes of your neighbours ſickening, dropping, dying on every ſide? certainly you would be terrified. How then can you remain unimpreſſed, when the curſe ‡ of GOD is approaching you? when the curſe of GOD is hovering over you? when the curſe of GOD is ready to be poured out upon you? and turn all your delights into weeping, wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth?

Behold then, ſinners, inconſiderate and inſenſible ſinners, you are this day impleaded at GOD's bar: you are found guilty before the JUDGE of the world: you are upon the very brink of everlaſting deſtruction. ——Not the earth, but hell, is opening her mouth to devour you; not the ſtones and timber of your houſes, but the vengeance of the Moſt HIGH, is ruſhing down upon you. The ſword, not of an enraged adverſary, but of GOD's moſt tremendous diſpleaſure is drawn,

* Eph. vi. 18. † Jer. x. 25. ‡ Gal. iii. 10.

drawn, perhaps ſtretched out to deſtroy you: the peſtilence, or what is infinitely more to be dreaded than the peſtilence that walketh in darkneſs, the curſe of GOD is ready to break forth upon you.——And will not theſe terrors awaken you, alarm you, perſuade you *?—Thou GOD of the world, and GOD of our ſouls, let not thy judgments and thy threatenings go forth in vain!

I hope ſome of you are inclined to aſk,—How or to what ſhould we be perſuaded? If ſo, thy ſecond particular will ſuggeſt the proper anſwer.

II. What the wicked man ſhould turn to?—To do that which is lawful and right: to repent of ſin, and love GOD; to be pure in heart, and holy in all manner of converſation. This is implied in the exhortation of the text; this is the indiſpenſable duty of all men; and to promote this is the continual aim of our miniſtry.

But you are guilty, ruined, impotent creatures.——Guilty, and can you, under a load of treſpaſſes, ariſe and do your LORD's will?——Ruined, and can you, amidſt ſuch diſcouraging circumſtances, have any heart to ſet about the work of reformation?——Impotent, and can you, under the moſt deplorable weakneſs, perform the moſt difficult of all ſervices?—No; you muſt firſt be relieved and enabled, before you can be ſufficient for theſe things. Like the woman bowed down with a ſpirit of infirmity, or like the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda, you muſt receive reſtoration and ſtrength from GOD your SAVIOUR. Turn then to CHRIST, who ſays by his prophet, O Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thyſelf, but in ME is thy help †.

If you ſhould inquire, What ſhall I find in CHRIST?—All that you can want; all that you can wiſh; incomparably more than I am able to expreſs. For it hath pleaſed the FATHER, that in CHRIST ſhould all fulneſs dwell ‡.

Becauſe you are guilty, and have a burden of iniquity on your ſouls, HE is the Lamb of GOD, that taketh away the ſin of the world ‖: a lamb of GOD's own appointing; a lamb of infinite excellence and dignity; to whom nothing is equal, nothing comparable. This Lamb of GOD has ſhed his blood for ſinners; has ſuffered death for ſinners; yea, has died in their ſtead, and endured all that vengeance which they have deſerved. In this moſt wonderful and perfect manner has he obtained their pardon! pardon, not of ſome only, but of all ſins; be they ever ſo numerous, or ever ſo heinous, it maketh no difference with him. An infinite SAVIOUR taketh away millions, unnumbered millions of the moſt abominable iniquities, with as much eaſe as he expiates a ſingle offence, or the ſmalleſt fault. He blotteth out tranſgreſſions, aggravated tranſgreſſions, innumerable tranſgreſſions, as a cloud §: as eaſily and as completely as the wind ſweeps away a floating cloud from the face of the ſky. Delivered from this load of guilt, you will be fitted to walk in the way of GOD's commandments, and not be weary; yea, to run, and not faint ¶.

Becauſe you are ruined, and have nothing that may recommend you to the moſt high GOD, CHRIST has brought in a righteouſneſs—a complete righteouſneſs—a divine righteouſneſs. Conſider the unſpotted purity of his nature, and the unſinning obedience of his life; conſider his fervent charity to man, and his patient reſignation to GOD; conſider all his exalted virtues, and all his exemplary actions; theſe, all theſe, in their utmoſt perfection, are not only for the imitation, but for the juſtification alſo, of ſuch ſinners as you and I. His name is JEHOVAH, which ſpeaks incomprehenſible grandeur in him; JEHOVAH, our righteouſneſs †, which ſpeaks unutterable comfort to us. In this righteouſneſs we may be fully accepted, and entitled to life eternal. Of this we may make our boaſt, and ſay, In the LORD have I righteouſneſs *; I, a tranſgreſſor, have a real righteouſneſs; I, a defective creature, have a conſummate righteouſneſs; I, a frail relapſing Chriſtian, have an invariable and everlaſting righteouſneſs. O! what a treaſure is this! what an unſpeakable gift is this! Is there a cordial that can revive our ſpirits, is there a motive that can animate us to duty, like juſtification through IMMANUEL's righteouſneſs?—Bleſſed LORD! this makes thy yoke eaſy, and thy burden light.

Becauſe you are weak and diſabled, CHRIST has the reſidue of the SPIRIT †; the fulneſs of the SPIRIT ‡; the ſeven SPIRITS of GOD are before his throne ‖. The HOLY GHOST, in all his operations, and with all his graces, CHRIST ſends to whomſoever he pleaſes §.——He gave this ineſtimable bleſſing to Saul the perſecutor and blaſphemer: he gave this ineſtimable bleſſing to many of his murderers and crucifiers: he ſtill confers the heavenly gift on his enemies; yea, on the rebellious alſo ¶. And the promiſe, the free gracious promiſe, is to you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the LORD our GOD, by the preaching of his goſpel, ſhall call †.

How ſalutary and beneficial are the effects of this gift! our LORD himſelf, who beſt knew, has admirably ſhewn. He that believeth on ME, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water +. This ſpake he of the SPIRIT, which every one that turns to him, and believes on him, ſhall receive. Obſerve ſome beautiful and copious river; how it exhilarates the country, and fructifies the ſoil through which it paſſes; beſtows a thouſand conveniencies, and gives birth to a thouſand delights, where-ever it takes its winding courſe. So the COMFORTER dwelling in the heart, gives ſuch charming views of CHRIST and his unſearchable riches, as gladden the conſcience, and make us truly happy. Hence, as from an inexhauſtible ſource, true holineſs flows, and every ſpiritual good. This diſpoſes us to love our neighbour: this teaches us to be meek in ſpirit: and this will raiſe our deſires far above earthly, ſenſual, tranſitory things, even as David's thoughts were raiſed far above the ſhepherd's ſcrip, when he ſat exalted on the throne of Iſrael.

Under the influence of this divine SPIRIT, you will ſay, "CHRIST has taken away the execrable filth of "my ſins; and ſhall I wallow in the mire of iniquity "again?——CHRIST has delivered me from the pit "of everlaſting deſtruction; and ſhall I leap into thoſe "unquenchable flames, from which, as a brand, I have "been ſnatched?——In my adorable REDEEMER, I "have a perfect righteouſneſs, and am completely juſ-"tified; and ſhall I not endeavour to walk worthy of "ſuch favours; to ſhew my gratitude for ſuch bene-"ficence, by bringing forth the fruits of righteouſneſs "in all my converſation?"

Yes, brethren; when you are turned to CHRIST, to receive his atonement, to rely on his righteouſneſs, to be filled with his SPIRIT; it will be with your ſoul as it is with the earth, when it is turned to the ſun. The earth, you ſee, is now barren and unfruitful, becauſe it has been very much withdrawn from the enlivening beams of the ſun. 'Ere long it will be replaced under the full influences of that fountain of light and heat. Then what a change will take place! how will the flowers appear on the ground! how will the leaves adorn the trees! how will the ſinging of birds be heard in our land! So ſhall holineſs and a heavenly temper be produced in your ſouls; ſo ſhall obedience, with all the fruits of godlineſs, flouriſh in

* 2 Cor. v. 11. † Hoſ. xiii. 9.
‡ Col. i. 19. ‖ John i. 29.
§ If. xliv. 22. ¶ If. xl. 31. † Jer. xxiii. 6.

* If. xlv. 24. † Mal. ii. 15.
‡ Col. i. 19. ‖ Rev. i. 4. § John xvi. 7.
¶ Pſal. lxviii. 18. † Acts 39. + John vii. 38.

your

Your lives; when this Sun of righteousness manifests himself in your hearts, makes you partakers of his salvation, and thus arises upon you with healing under his wings.

Should any one doubt, whether this is the way to do that which is lawful and right; I ask,—Is it not a pleasing way? such as we should wish for; such as we should prefer above all others; and such as will render our LORD's service perfect freedom?—Is it not a rational way? apparently adapted to engage the heart, to strengthen the hand, and thereby to fit the whole man for every good work?

Besides, is it not the way appointed by GOD?—— Would we "earnestly repent, and be heartily sorry for "all our misdoings?" The wisdom of GOD assures us, this sorrow must arise from believing views of CHRIST; from looking unto him whom we have pierced †; looking unto him as wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities. This, if any thing, will incline us to be afflicted, and mourn, and weep, for all our abominations. Thus, and thus only, shall we experience that godly sorrow, which worketh repentance not to be repented of.

Would we love GOD? The oracles of heaven inform us, that we must first see his love; his infinitely-free, and infinitely-tender love towards us; his love not imputing any sin to our souls, but laying all our iniquities upon his own SON. Then shall we love him, when we perceive and know, that he has, in this most divinely gracious manner, regarded—loved—blessed us.

Would we be pure in heart? The LORD purifieth the heart by faith ‡: faith in CHRIST, as shedding his most precious blood, as giving his most glorious person, for our ransom; and, by his one oblation, finishing our transgression; making reconciliation for our iniquity; yea, perfecting us for ever: insomuch that we may boldly and assuredly say, Through the grace of our LORD JESUS CHRIST we shall be saved. He that hath this faith and this hope purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

Would we renounce all ungodliness? would we live soberly, righteously, and godlily ‖? By grace we must be enabled; even that grace which brings salvation, a finished and free salvation to sinners. That grace, appearing in the heart, and appropriated by faith, is the sure, the effectual means of true sanctification; the sure, the effectual motive to willing obedience.—Therefore our LORD says, He that eateth me, even he shall live by me §. He that eateth me, that receiveth my righteousness and redemption; that maketh a daily use of me and my benefits, for the refreshment and health of his soul; as people make a daily use of their necessary food, for the nourishment and support of their bodies: even he shall live by me; he shall live to GOD in real holiness here, and live with GOD in everlasting glory hereafter.—— This method will strengthen and prepare us for discharging all the duties of a Christian life, as bread strengthens and prepares the labourer for dispatching the business of his toilsome calling. Whereas, without using this sovereign expedient, we shall be as incapable of exercising ourselves unto godliness, as the hireling, deprived of his usual meals, would be incapable of performing his daily task.

Upon the whole, brethren, we do not urge you to make brick without straw: we do not call upon you to arise and work, without shewing you from whence you ability and vigour are to proceed.——— Some, perhaps, might exhort you to all holy obedience; but, neglecting these most necessary directions, their exhortations would be comfortless and insignificant; because you might fetch a sigh, and may answer, "All this "I would gladly do, but alas! we are not able!" Whereas here is grace sufficient for you in CHRIST.—— Whatever hinders you, CHRIST removes; whatever you want, CHRIST bestows; that, being delivered from your enemies, and from the hand of all that hate you; from the influence of all that embarrasses, and all that discourages you; you may serve him, without slavish or disquieting fear, in holiness and righteousness before him, all the days of your life *.

Happy deliverance! thrice happy conduct! but happier still the issue of all!—Which reminds me of my last inquiry; namely,

III. What will be the effect of this turning?—He, the wicked man, thus turned, shall save his soul alive.

He shall save—Safety shall be his companion; safety shall be his guard; safety shall escort him through the dangers of life. All the days of his appointed time he shall dwell under the defence of the Most HIGH, and abide under the shadow of the ALMIGHTY †.——Most desirable situation! especially when judgments, desolating and destructive judgments, are abroad.——While the storm of calamity is gathering, or when the tempest of tribulation is raging, O! what a calm must it create in the heart, to have the eternal GOD for our refuge! to say within ourselves, "The hand that is stretched over "the sea, and shakes the kingdoms of the earth; the "hand that rends the mountains, and scatters the everlasting hills ‖; that hand is my defence and my shield!"

Save his soul—It is not improbable, but his bodily welfare may be secured. GOD may set a mark upon his forehead, and command the sword of the destroying angel to pass over his house. But however this may be determined, his soul shall be safe. As to his spiritual welfare, he has a unit of protection under the great seal of heaven. The LORD JESUS is his ever faithful guardian, and none shall pluck him out of the divine REDEEMER's hand §. The roaring lion may go about, seeking to devour him: but he has a strong city, which the infernal adversary cannot storm; he has an impregnable bulwark, which the powers of darkness cannot scale. Though he fall, the arm of CHRIST will raise him; though he be defiled, the blood of CHRIST will cleanse him; though he die, it will be no loss, but gain. HE that has the keys of the grave, will give commandment concerning his mouldering bones; HE that lives for evermore, will receive his departing soul.—This, perhaps, may be meant by that other emphatical word, alive;

He shall save his soul alive—He shall not barely be safe, but happy. He shall enjoy what truly deserves the name of life. A man may escape from his enemy, by flying to a fortified castle: but in the castle there may be drought and famine. He may perish by these disasters, though preserved from the pursuing foe. It shall not be thus with the returning, believing, renewed sinner. He shall be saved with a complete and everlasting salvation. He is a child of GOD, and an heir of glory: he shall rejoice in CHRIST JESUS here, and shall enter into the joy of his LORD hereafter.——When the earth is burnt up, he shall see it; when the heavens pass away, he shall stand with boldness; when all nature sinks into dissolution, he shall not only survive, but enjoy the ruin. He shall leave a dissolving world, to possess a kingdom in heaven; to wear a crown of righteousness; and to be for ever with, for ever like, his blessed and glorious LORD.

* Mal. iv. 2. † Zech. xii. 10. ‡ Acts xv. 9.

‖ Tit. ii. 12. § John vi. 57.

* Luke i. 74, 75. † Psal. xci. 1.

‡ Deut. xxxiii. 27. ‖ Hab. iii. 6.

§ John x. 28.

We

We have now shewn—what the wicked man should from,—what he should turn to,—what will be the of this turning.——Give me leave to ask, Has the of the LORD been revealed? are you impressed the awful, or encouraged by the comfortable truths? ly, perhaps you will be ready to say, "Will CHRIST ceive me? will he make me a partaker of these in- comparable benefits? shall such a one, who is so very worthy, find favour in his sight?"

Yes, such a one may find favour. Any one, every e who comes, he will receive. He sends his ministers invite you; he sends his judgments to compel you; he s every expedient to gain you.—He bids earthquakes r the foundations of nature, and turn mighty cities o ruinous heaps, that you may be built on that rock hich shall never be shaken. He calls the sword of r out of its scabbord, and commands it to be bathed blood, that you may fly for safety to the Prince of ace. While ruin and desolation are pursuing their eadful work all around, he throws open the doors of grace and righteousness, and most compassionately ks, "Come, my people; come, poor offenders; enter into these chambers, and find rest *."

Is any of you inclined to reply, "Will CHRIST in- deed receive me, who am not only a sinner,—but a great sinner,—a long persisting sinner,—and now seem to come but at the last hour; more like one driven by fear, than drawn by love?"——What thinkest thou? ould the widow of Nain, who went mourning after e corpse of her only son, almost inconsolable with her ss; would she be unwilling to receive him, when our ORD reanimated the cold clay, and delivered him alive his mother †? Would she need much importunity, and rdly be prevailed on, to embrace her beloved, her mented child? Impossible to suppose. Remember hat CHRIST has done for sinners; what he has suffered r sinners; how his bowels yearn over sinners; and it ll appear equally impossible that he should reject any turning prodigate.

Reject! No. The good father, aged and venerable he was, hastened; yea, ran to meet the prodigal. e fell on his neck, and tenderly kissed the dissolute outh ‡. So, with such readiness, and such compas- on, will the everlasting FATHER receive you to his mily, his favour, his love.——Nay more, he will re- ive you with joy. He is the good Shepherd; you are e lost sheep; he is come, in his word, to seek you; hen you turn to him, he has found you. Then, says e scripture, the good shepherd goes home with his re- overed sheep, rejoicing ‖. O let your minister, and hich is unspeakably more engaging) let the blessed ESUS have joy of you, my brethren; even that JE- US by whom sinners are dearly beloved and longed for §; ho has no greater delight than to save them from their iquities, and number them among his children.

If you should answer,—"This a matter of the utmost importance. It lies at the very root of all my com- fort. Let me hear it confirmed from our LORD's own mouth. I will hearken what the LORD GOD will say concerning me ¶."

Hear then his own promise; the most precious pro- mise that words can form, or fancy conceive; Whoso- ever cometh to me, for pardon, for justification, for holi- ness, I will in no wise cast him out ††.——Whosoever; whe- ther he be high or low, learned or illiterate; whether e be a servant or a master, a prince or a beggar; no one is excepted, no one shall be refused. In no wise: on no consideration of past transgressions, on no account of present depravity, on no fore-knowledge of future fail- ings. Only let him come, only let him come, and nothing shall debar him from the enjoyment of my benefits; nothing shall separate him from the endearments of my love.

Hear his kind invitation; Return unto me, for I have redeemed you *. Ye that have hitherto been strangers to serioufness, and always alienated from me; turn unto me, and I will not so much as upbraid you † with your folly.——Ye that are now backsliders, and have for a season ungratefully departed from me; turn unto me, and I will heal your backslidings; my stripes shall make you whole.—Ye that have been slaves to vice; have sold yourselves to work wickedness; and are grown old in abominable practices; it is not too late even for you. I have redeemed even such as you.—I shake the pillars of nature, and rock the foundations of the world; I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering ‡. Yet, for such as you, I gave my back to the smiters, and hid not my face from shame and spitting ‖. Yes, sinners; sinners of every kind; I bore the curse of the law, and died the death of the cross, on purpose that I might re- deem such as you.—Most amiable REDEEMER! who would not listen to a call so wonderfully endearing? Sinners, how can you withstand a motive so sweetly constraining!

Hear his solemn oath; As I live, saith the LORD GOD, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live. Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel §? Was there ever any declaration so charming? or any address so affectionate?—See! how the high and lofty ONE condescends! He commands in heaven, on earth, through hell; yet, more like a supplicant than a sove- reign, he vouchsafes to solicit and beseech you. From the habitation of his glory he cries, Turn ye, poor pe- rishing creatures.—Again he cries, Turn ye to your GOD and SAVIOUR; that ye may be delivered from all your transgressions, and iniquity may not be your ruin. —To take away all your reluctance, he pleads, he ex- postulates, Why will ye die? why will ye destroy your- selves, and be undone for ever?—That you may have no doubt of a free pardon and a favourable reception, he sweare; swears by himself, by his own life and im- mortal perfections, that he has no pleasure in your death; but shall rejoice, infinitely rejoice in your recovery and salvation.

Here then you have the promise, the invitation, the oath of the LORD. Can there be greater encourage- ment? will not this threefold cord draw you?——Should you say, "I cannot turn; I am tied and bound "with the chain of my corruptions. O! that CHRIST" --Fear not: he will, he will. He that sends his mi- nister to give you this exhortation; he that sends his SPIRIT to work this desire in your soul; he that spilt his blood to obtain all blessings for you; he will put forth his strength, and turn you to himself. He stretched his beneficent hand, and saved Peter from sinking in the tempestuous sea. What he did for him is a pattern and a pledge of what he is ready to do for you.—Only continue to seek his face; let your heart talk of him; set his unbounded goodness and almighty power before your eyes; meditate on his in- finite propitiation and incomprehensible merits; con- sider his everlasting righteousness and never-ceasing intercession; look upon all these as your own. To look upon them as your own, you have a warrant, you have a command.—And if CHRIST has done so great things for you, you may assuredly believe, that, in his due time, in his wise manner, he will bring you spiritual health and cure; he will carry on what he has begun, and enable you to grow in grace. He will

* Is. xxvi. 20. † Luke vii. 15.

‡ Luke xv. 20. ‖ Luke xv. 5. § Philip. iv. 1.

¶ Psal. lxxxv. 8. †† John vi. 37.

* Is. xliv. 22. † James i. 5. ‡ Is. l. 3.
‖ Ver. 6. § Ezek. xxxiii. 11.

begun, and enable you to grow in grace. He will comfort our hearts, and ſtabliſh you in every good work.

Shall I proceed?—I have already been copious, perhaps ſomewhat tedious. Yet you will bear with me on this diſtinguiſhed and ſolemn occaſion: yes, you will bear with me a little longer; for I am loath, very loath to diſmiſs you, without perſuading you. Perſuading! alas! I cannot. GOD, and none but GOD, can perſuade Japheth *. However, as an inſtrument in his all-powerful hand, let me addreſs you once again.

I obſerve ſeveral perſons here, on this day of humiliation, who very rarely attend the public worſhip.—Why, my friends, why do you wrong your own ſouls? why do you withdraw yourſelves from the preaching of the goſpel? Know ye not, that JESUS paſſeth by †, in the way of his ordinances? Here you may, like Bartimeus of old, approach the Son of David; here you may obtain faith and holineſs. Faith cometh by hearing, and holineſs by the word of GOD. And are not theſe bleſſings worth your attendance? can you live happily without them? can you die comfortably without them? or can you, without them, be prepared to meet your GOD, when he cometh to judge the world?—Why ſhould you forſake the aſſembling yourſelves together? Do you hear terrifying or diſtreſſing doctrines in this place? is not this the houſe of praiſe, as well as of prayer? does not the joyful ſound echo under theſe roofs? Is not CHRIST ſet forth crucified before your eyes? crucified for ſuch offenders as you! crucified that ſuch offenders as you may be pardoned, may be accepted, may be glorified? And will you depiſe ſuch a divinely-compaſſionate SAVIOUR? will you refuſe ſuch aſtoniſhingly-rich mercies? O! that hereafter you may be glad when they ſay unto you, Let us go into the courts of the LORD ‡.

Should my wiſhes prove vain, I have at leaſt delivered my meſſage. If you periſh through obſtinacy and unbelief, I am clear from your blood. I call heaven and earth to witneſs, you have been warned, you have been inſtructed, you have been exhorted. You cannot ſay, you periſh for lack of knowledge; for life and ſalvation have been ſet before you, have been brought to your very door, and your are importuned to lay hold on them. You will therefore be without excuſe, and have no cloke for your guilt.

But why ſhould I leave you with ſuch melancholy apprehenſions? Let me hope better things of you: let me hope that you will not diſregard theſe admonitions, however they may have diſregarded too many exhortations of this kind. This is a remarkable day; O! that it may be memorable on account of your turning to GOD. Let this be its diſtinction through all your future life; let this be its diſtinction through all the ages of eternity: that you may ſay,—when death ſummons you into the inviſible ſtate; when the trump of GOD calls you to the great tribunal; when you mingle with ſaints and angels in the kingdom of heaven,—"Bleſſed "be GOD for that ſolemn day, and its ſacred exerciſes! "That was the day of my better birth. Then I began "to conſider; then I began to pray; then I began to "ſee my undone condition, and my extreme need of "a SAVIOUR: then too I ſaw JESUS, giving himſelf "a ſacrifice for my ſins, and redeeming me to GOD, "with his blood."—Happy! thrice happy! inexpreſſibly-happy day! if thus, if thus improved!

You have, I preſume, abſtained from your uſual food, as you have been joining in confeſſion, ſupplication, and prayer. This is well done: but this is only half; rather it is, by infinite degrees, the ſmalleſt part of your duty. It is not ſaid, When the wicked man abſtaineth from his uſual food; but when he turneth from his wickedneſs, as the conſequence of his believing in CHRIST. It is not ſaid, When the wicked man jo in public confeſſion to GOD; but when he doth t which is lawful and right, as the fruit of his fellowſh with CHRIST: THEN he ſhall ſave—he ſhall ſave ſoul—he ſhall ſave his ſoul alive. O that all, from t king on the throne, to the labourer in the barn; fr the higheſt nobleman, to the meaneſt tradeſman; t all might now be inclined, now be enabled, to turn u the SAVIOUR of the world. In him millions, unnu bered millions of wretched ſinners, have found recove and liberty; recovery from the death, and liberty fr the bondage of ſin. And (bleſſed be his unbound grace) yet there is room.

Then the national faſt would be a national bleſſ Whereas, without this all-important turning to t adorable SAVIOUR, what will the formalities of our d votion ſignify? They will be a mere lip-labour, a re gious trifling: nay, they will be a ſolemn mockery the ALMIGHTY, and provoke his abhorrence.—Do not JEHOVAH himſelf ſpeak to the ſame purpoſe? it ſuch a faſt that I have choſen? a day for a man to afflict ſoul? is it to bow down his head as a bulruſh, and to ſpr ſackcloth and aſhes under him *? to diſcontinue your or nary buſineſs, and refrain from a meal's meat? to ma a little doleful lamentation, and put up a few petitio extorted by fear? Will you call this a faſt? ſaith the hig and holy One, with an air of ſovereign contempt; t an acceptable day to the LORD? No verily; it is the mo odious hypocriſy; like crying, Hail maſter, with t tongue, while treachery and enmity fill the heart: u leſs you turn to CHRIST, that you may be waſhed, th you may be juſtified, that you may be ſanctified; tha having remiſſion of ſins through his blood, and pea of conſcience through his grace, you may feel the ban of wickedneſs looſed, and may become the willing ſe vants of righteouſneſs.

What is the grand ſin of our nation? Ignorance a neglect of CHRIST.—What is the cauſe of all our oth ſins? Ignorance and neglect of CHRIST.—Why ar the judgments of the ALMIGHTY hanging over ou heads? For ignorance and neglect of CHRIST. Neve therefore, ſhall we anſwer the end of our ſacred a ſembly, nor the deſign of GOD's alarming viſitation till we begin to know CHRIST, to receive CHRIST, t make uſe of CHRIST by faith. When this is done, w may reaſonably hope,—that our prayers will go up wit acceptance, and not return again, till a bleſſing be ſent —that, as individuals, our light ſhall break forth like t morning, and our health ſhall ſpring forth ſpeedily;—that, a a community, the favour of GOD ſhall go before us, and t glory of the LORD ſhall be our rere-ward †.

Then may we look around on our moſt enraged ene mies, and ſay with the pſalmiſt, Though an hoſt of me ſhould encamp againſt me, yet ſhall not my heart be afraid ‡. —Then may we look backward to the late deſolatin earthquake, and ſay with the believers of old, GOD i our refuge and ſtrength; therefore will we not fear, thoug the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carrie into the midſt of the ſea ‖.—Then may we look forward to an incomparably more dreadful ſcene, even to the righteous JUDGE, and the great tribunal, and ſay with the triumphant apoſtle, Who ſhall lay any thing to our charge? It is GOD that juſtifieth; who ſhall condemn us? it is CHRIST that died.

Let me entreat you therefore, brethren, for the ſake of your own immortal ſouls, and for the welfare of our endangered nation; let me charge you, by all that is deſirable in time, and awful in eternity, not to neglect theſe counſels. Being ſo ſolemnly reproved, if you harden your neck, your deſtruction cometh ſudden-

* Gen. ix. 27. † Matth. xx. 30. ‡ Pſal. cxxii. 1.

* Iſ. lviii. 5. † Iſ. lviii. 8. ‡ Pſal. xxvii. 3.
‖ Pſal. xlvi. 1, 2. § Rom. viii. 33. 34.

ly,

ly, and that without remedy *. Having these warnings from the divine word, and warnings from the divine providence, if ye still do wickedly: it is not man, it is not an angel, it is GOD HIMSELF who declares, Ye shall be consumed—even ye—your country—and your king *.

* Prov. xxix. 1.

* 1 Sam. xii. 25.

SERMON IV.

The Cross of CHRIST the Christian's Glory.

Preached at the visitation of the Rev. John Brown, D. D. Archdeacon of Northampton, held at All Saints church in Northampton, on the 10th of May, 1753.

GAL. vi. 14.

GOD forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our LORD JESUS CHRIST.

THE cross of CHRIST was the favourite topic of St Paul's contemplation:—the cross of CHRIST was the chosen subject of his sermons, and the grand theme of his writings.———At all times, and in every capacity, he professed, he avowed, he gloried in the cross of CHRIST.———Nay, what is very remarkable, he gloried in nothing else;—and, what is still more observable, he abhorred the thought of glorying in any thing else. He speaks of such a practice in the language of detestation and dread, accounting it a high degree both of folly and of wickedness: GOD forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our LORD JESUS CHRIST.

It may therefore be an employ worthy of our present attention, to inquire into the nature, the reasonableness, and the wisdom of this resolution. All which, I hope, will appear, if we consider,

I. In what the apostle would not glory.
II. In what he did glory.
III. What reason he had to glory in the cross of CHRIST.

These points being briefly dispatched, I shall beg leave to add a word of application, suggested by the tenor of the discourse, and adapted to the circumstances of my several hearers. And may that adorable JESUS, who has exchanged his cross for an heavenly crown, accompany all with his divine blessing!

Let us then inquire,

I. In what the apostle did not glory.——Not in the greatness of his learning, as a scholar. He was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel; educated by the most famous tutor of the age. Nor was his genius, or his industry, inferior to the other advantages of his education. Yet all these advantages, with their correspondent acquisitions, he accounted no better than pompous ignorance, or refined folly.

Not in the strictness of his life, as a Jew.——In this respect he profited above his equals; was taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers *; after the strictest sect of their religion he lived a Pharisee †: was zealous, exceedingly zealous, of the whole ceremonial law, and of all the traditional constitutions. Which accomplishments must finish his character among his country men; must open his way to some of the first honours of the nation; and give him a name among those worthies, who were reputed the excellent of the earth. But what others counted gain, this he counted loss for CHRIST.

Not in the eminency of his gifts, nor in this extent of his usefulness, as a Christian minister.———He had been caught up into the third heaven; had heard the words of GOD, and seen the vision of the ALMIGHTY; had wrought all manner of wonders, and signs, and mighty deeds.———What was still more valuable, he had planted churches, and converted souls. His labours were gone out into all lands, and his words into the ends of the earth.———Yet all these acquirements, before the infinite GOD, were defective: all these performances, in point of justification, were insufficient. Therefore in none of these he gloried.——Which reminds me of the second inquiry;

II. In what the apostle did glory.——He gloried in a cross. Strange! What so scandalous as a cross? On a cross rebellious slaves were executed. The cross was execrable among men, and accursed even by GOD *. Yet the apostle glories in the cross.———Crucifixion not being used among us, the expression does not sound so harsh, neither is the idea so horrid. But to the ear of a Galatian, it conveyed much the same meaning, as if the apostle had gloried in a halter, gloried in the gallows, gloried in a gibbet †.

"Stupid creature," perhaps some may reply, "to "undervalue the most substantial endowments, and "glory in infamy itself!"——But stop a moment, and hear the apostle farther. He glories in the cross of † Acts xxvi. 5.

* Acts xxii. 3.

* Gal. iii. 13.

† Some persons, I am informed, were disgusted at these words, halter, gallows, gibbet; they are so horridly contemptible?—To whom I would reply, that the cross, in point of ignominy and torment, included all this and more. Unless the English reader forms to himself some such image, he will never be able to apprehend the scandalous nature and shocking circumstances of his divine Master's death.

The words, I must confess, were diversified, and the sentiment was reiterated, on purpose to effect the mind with this astonishing truth. Neither can I prevail upon myself to expunge the expressions; unless I could substitute others of a more ignominious and execrable import. Only I would beg of the serious reader, to spend a moment in the following reflection:—"Is it so, that a polite and delicate ear can hardly endure

"so

CHRIST; that illustrious person, who was anointed to be the all-instructing Prophet, the all-atoning Priest, and the all-conquering King of the church.——In the cross of CHRIST JESUS; who, by the discharge of all those important offices, should save his people from the dominion of sin, and from the damnation of hell.——In the cross of CHRIST JESUS our LORD; and not ours only, but LORD of all; who doth according to his will, in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth *; who hath on his vesture, and on his thigh, a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS †.

And is it possible for any human heart to contemplate the cross of so divine a being, and not to glory? Is it possible to say, Angels, he rules over you; but he died, he died on a cross for me; and not exult in such transporting beneficence?—This will be more evident, if we examine,

III. What reason the apostle had to glory in the cross of CHRIST.——The cross, though in itself an ignominious tree; yet being the cross of CHRIST, is infinitely ennobled. It becomes the tree of life; it bears the divinest fruit; its clusters are all spiritual and heavenly blessings. Two or three of those clusters you will permit me to select; and may the GOD of all mercy make them better than a feast to every humble soul.

One blessing is the pardon of sin: the pardon of all sin, original and actual; sin that is remembered, and sin that is forgotten; sin, however circumstanced, or however aggravated. The pardon of all was purchased by the death of CHRIST;—completely purchased:—so that, against the true believer, sin shall never rise up in judgment; shall not so much as be mentioned unto him ‡; shall be done away, as though it had never been. For thus saith the ambassador of the Prince of peace, Be it known unto you, man and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins; and by him all that believe are justified from all things ‖.——Oh, my soul! my guilty soul! what are all the kingdoms of the world, and the glories of them, compared with this ineffable blessing! Yet this is but one among a multitude.

Another benefit, accruing from the cross of CHRIST, is reconciliation with GOD.——When we were enemies, we were reconciled to GOD by the death of his Son §. Not pardoned only, but accepted; from a state of enmity, restored to a state of favour; even that favour which is better than life ¶.——A privilege of such superlative excellency, that it was celebrated in the hymns of angels. When the heavenly host uttered a song, this was the subject of their harmonious joy; Glory be to GOD in the highest; and on earth peace, good-will towards men †.—— "By the birth of this wonderful child, and the death he "shall sustain, peace is made between heaven and "earth: and not peace only, but a divine friendship +— "commences. GOD regards the poor apostate race "of men, not only without indignation, but with com- "placency and delight. He rejoices over them, to do "them good *."

Another benefit is holiness; or, if you please, the truer the Christian morality.——Let none think, the believer in JESUS disparages true morality. True morality is the image of the blessed GOD; it is most charmingly delineated throughout the whole Bible; it is the beginning of heaven in the human soul; and its proper origin is from the cross of our divine Master.——For, through the merits of his death, sinners are made partakers of the Holy Spirit; who writes upon their hearts, and makes legible in their conversation, what was anciently written upon the mitre of the high priest, HOLINESS TO THE LORD.—And oh! what a motive is the cross of CHRIST to the exercise of every virtue! He died; my LORD, my JUDGE, my KING, died; to redeem me from all iniquity, and make me zealous of good works. How powerfully, far beyond any naked instructions, or abstract reasonings, do such considerations invite us,—urge us,—constrain us †, to renounce all ungodliness, and adorn the gospel of GOD our SAVIOUR!

Another blessing is victory over death.——This also is the fruit of that once detested, but now ever-beloved tree. For thus it is written, That, through death, he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil; and deliver them who, through fear of death, were all their life-time subject to bondage ‡. The devil is said to have the power of death; because, by tempting too successfully our first parents, he brought death into the world; because, by tempting their posterity to sin, and too often prevailing, he arrays death in horror; he arms death with its sting. But CHRIST, by expiating our guilt, has disarmed this last enemy; has taken away its sting; and made it not loss, but gain to die ‖.——The gay, and the healthy, know not how to form an estimate of this deliverance: nor can any words of mine describe it with proper energy. Go to dying beds; there you will learn its true worth. Ask some agonizing friend; he, and he alone, can tell you, what a blessing it is, to have the king of terrors converted into a messenger of peace.

One blessing more I would mention, and earnestly wish it, in due time, to all my hearers; an entrance into heaven. This too is the produce of our REDEEMER's cross.——St John saw a bright assembly of happy beings, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands, rejoicing before the throne of GOD. These, said one of the venerable elders, are they who came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the LAMB. THEREFORE are they before the throne §.——They came out of great tribulation: they suffered, it is probable, in the service of CHRIST: perhaps they laid down their lives for his sake. But this was not their passport into the regions of bliss.——They washed their robes in the blood of the LAMB: they had applied to their own souls the merits and atonement of the crucified JESUS. By this means they were presented without spot and

" so much as the sound of the words? How amazing then was " the condescension! how charming and adorable the goodness " of GOD's illustrious Son, to bear all that is signified by these in- " tolerably-vile terms! bear it willingly, bear it chearfully, for us " men, and our salvation!"

* Dan. iv. 35. † Rev. xix. 16.

‡ Ezek. xviii. 22. ‖ Acts xiii. 38, 39.

§ Rom. v. 10. ¶ Pfal. lxiii. 3. † Luke ii. 14.

+ There seems to be a beautiful gradation in this angelic hymn. Good-will is more expressive, and denotes a richer blessing, than peace.—The original Εὐδοκία is a word of the most amiable and noble meaning. It signifies a very high esteem, and a very tender benevolence. By a word of the same import, the almighty Father expresses has infinite satisfaction in the person and undertaking of his beloved Son. Matth. iii. 17.

Would my reader have the liveliest paraphrase on this passage, or see the actings of this divine complacency described with inimitable delicacy; let him attend to the prophet Zephaniah; The LORD thy GOD, in the midst of thee, is mighty. He will save; he will rejoice over thee with joy; he will rest in his love, he will joy over thee with singing, chap. iii. 17.

* Deut. xxviii. 63. † 2 Cor. v. 14.

Religion! thou the soul of happiness;
And, groaning Calvary, of thee! There shine
The noblest truths; there strongest motives sting!
There sacred violence assaults the soul;
There nothing but compulsion is forborne.

Night-Thoughts, No. IV.

‡ Heb. ii. 14, 15.

‖ Philip. i. 21. § Rev. vii. 9, 14, 15.

blameless;

blameleſs; on this account they were admitted to ſee the "King of heaven in his beauty *;" and to be ever, ever with the LORD.

Since then the croſs of CHRIST was demonſtrative of ſuch ſtupendous love; ſince it is productive of benefits innumerable, invaluable, and eternal; was there not a cauſe for the apoſtle to glory on this behalf?—Nay, might not the very ſtones have cried out, to reproach him with inſenſibility and ingratitude, if he had neglected to glory in the croſs of CHRIST?—And ſince this love was ſhewed, theſe benefits were procured, not for him only, but for us, and for all generations; does not this afford me an opportunity of applying the doctrine to each particular hearer?

1. Let me addreſs, or rather let me congratulate, my brethren in the miniſtry.——Though you cannot control the laws of nature: though you cannot ſee into the ſecrets of futurity; you have the ſame cauſe of glorying with the very chiefeſt of the apoſtles; a cauſe of glorying, which that holy man of GOD eſteemed far above all ſuch miraculous abilities. You have the croſs of CHRIST,

For your ſtudy, as men;
For your hope, as Chriſtians;
For your preaching, as miniſters.

For your ſtudy, as men. Here the reaſoning faculties may exert themſelves with everlaſting improvement, and everlaſting delight.—Here we contemplate the wonders, the unparalleled wonders of a GOD made man; dying as a pattern of patience, as a martyr for truth, as an all-perfect ſacrifice for ſin.—Here the LORD JEHOVAH hath fully granted, what his ſervant Moſes † ſo earneſtly requeſted; he hath made all his glory to paſs before the aſtoniſhed eyes of angels and of men. Here Juſtice has let her moſt awful terrors in array; even while Goodneſs appears, with inexpreſſible lovelineſs, and the moſt attractive beauty.—Here Truth, more unſhaken than a rock, takes her immoveable ſtand; and Mercy, tenderer than the mother's tear, yearns with bowels of everlaſting pity.——In a word, the croſs of CHRIST is a conſpicuous theatre, on which all the divine perfections unite, and harmonize, and ſhine forth with tranſcendent luſtre.

As Chriſtians, we have, in the croſs of CHRIST, the ruheſt proviſion for our own ſpiritual wants. This is a foundation of the ſublimeſt hope, and a fountain of the moſt exuberant joy: this affords matter for the deepeſt humility, and yields fuel for the moſt flaming love. Faith in our crucified JESUS is an ever-active principle of the moſt chearful and exact obedience; is an ample and inexhauſtible magazine, from which we may fetch arms to conquer, abſolutely conquer the allurements of the world, the ſolicitations of the fleſh, and the temptations of the devil.—By this a way is opened for us unto the holy of holies: and what may we not venture to aſk, what may we not expect to receive, who have the blood of the everlaſting covenant to plead, in all our approaches to the throne of grace?—Having therefore ſuch an high prieſt; having in his croſs, unſearchable riches; who ſhall make our glorying void? what ſhall hinder us from rejoicing and ſaying? "Bleſſed be GOD for theſe opening beauties of ſpring! bleſſed be GOD for the expected fruits of autumn! bleſſed be GOD for ten thouſand thouſand gifts of his indulgent providence! but above all, bleſſed be GOD for the croſs of CHRIST!"

As miniſters of the goſpel, we are not left to ſet before our hearers a ſyſtem of refined Heatheniſm; or to entertain them with cold ſpiritleſs lectures of virtue. No; we have the infinitely-tender love, the immenſely-free grace, of the bleeding, dying IMMANUEL, to diſplay—to improve—to enforce. And is there a topic in the whole compaſs of oratory, is there an argument amidſt all the ſtores of reaſon, ſo admirably calculated to touch the fineſt movements of the ſoul? to ſtrike all the inmoſt ſprings of action, with the moſt perſuaſive, the moſt commanding energy?—Would we alarm the ſupine, or intimidate the preſumptuous? we may call them to behold GOD's own Son weltering in blood, GOD's own Son tranſfixed with the arrows of juſtice; we may bid them conſider, if judgment begins with the immaculate MEDIATOR, where ſhall the irreclaimable ſinner appear? how will he eſcape the ſtroke? how bear the weight of GOD's everlaſting vengeance?—Would we comfort the diſtreſſed? we may point them to an atonement, whoſe merits are infinite, and able to ſave to the very uttermoſt *; we may lead them to a righteouſneſs, whoſe efficacy is unbounded, and ſufficient to juſtify the ungodly. And what balm can be ſo ſovereign for a wounded conſcience? Are we to ſupport the weak, and animate the doubting? here we may ſhew them promiſes, free promiſes †, exceeding great and precious promiſes, ratified by the oath of JEHOVAH, and ſealed by the blood of his Son. And what cordials can be ſo reſtorative to the drooping Chriſtian?

In ſhort, the doctrine of the croſs is ſuited to anſwer all the great ends of our miniſtry, and promote all the truly valuable intereſts of our people. By this the HOLY SPIRIT delights to work: and this, O Satan, ſhall be thy plague; this, O ſin, ſhall be thy deſtruction ‡.—However, therefore, the croſs might be to the Jews a ſtumbling block, and to the Greeks fooliſhneſs; GOD forbid that we ſhould glory in any thing elſe!—Let this be the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and ending ‖, of all our public miniſtrations.—Let us leave a ſavour of this knowledge, which is far better than precious ointment, in every private company!—Let it appear, from all our converſation, that the affections of our heart, and the labours of our life, are devoted, wholly devoted to our adored REDEEMER's croſs.—Happy the people who are under the care of ſuch miniſters! and bleſſed the miniſters who walk according to this rule!

2. Let me exhort all true believers; thoſe who are vile in their own eyes, and to whom CHRIST alone is precious.—Remember, brethren, what is written in the prophet: it is a deſcription of your ſtate; it is a direction for your conduct. In the LORD, the LORD JESUS CHRIST, ſhall all the ſeed of Iſrael be juſtified, and in him ſhall they glory §.

Let none ſay that religion is a gloomy or uncomfortable ſtate; I call upon you this day to rejoice ¶. Let none ſay that religion is a mean or deſpicable thing; I call

* If. xxxiii. 17. † Exod. xxxiii. 18.

* Heb. vii. 25.

† To man the bleeding croſs has promis'd all:
The bleeding croſs has ſworn eternal grace:
Who gave his life, what grace will he deny?
Night-Thoughts, No. IV.

‡ Hoſ. xiii. 14.

‖ The author who could write the ſpirited and weighty lines which follow, muſt doubtleſs have had this conviction deep on his heart.

——Thou, my all!
My theme! my inſpiration! and my crown!
My ſtrength in age! my riſe in low eſtate!
My ſoul's ambition, pleaſure, wealth!—my world!
My light in darkneſs! and my life in death!
My boaſt through time! bliſs through eternity!
My ſacrifice! my GOD!—What things are theſe!
Night-Thoughts, No. IV.

§ If. xlv. 25.

¶ 'Tis this makes Chriſtian triumph a command;
'Tis this makes joy a duty to the wiſe.
Night-Thoughts, No. IV.

upon you this day to glory; and have the divine authority for both*.—You will diſhonour the bleſſed JESUS, you will diſparage his ſurpaſſing excellency, if you do not confide in him, and make your boaſt of him. CHRIST is King of heaven, CHRIST is Judge of the world, CHRIST is GOD over all. And of ſuch a SAVIOUR ſhall we not glory? Yes, verily; and in all circumſtances, and on every occaſion.

Amidſt your manifold infirmities, glory in CHRIST. For, though he was crucified in weakneſs, he hath all power in heaven and earth. And it is written before him, it is one of his immutable decrees, ſin ſhall not have dominion over you †.—Amidſt your various failings, glory in CHRIST. For his righteouſneſs covers all your imperfections, his righteouſneſs ſecures you from wrath and condemnation; and, though deficient in yourſelves, you are complete in him ‡.——Under the preſſure of tribulations, lift up your heads, and glory in the croſs; becauſe the Captain of your ſalvation was made perfect through ſufferings. If you ſuffer with him, you ſhall alſo reign with him. And the ſufferings of this preſent time are not worthy to be compared with the happineſs which CHRIST hath purchaſed with his agonies, and will quickly beſtow on his people.——When death approaches, death that cuts off the ſpirit of princes, and is terrible among the kings of the earth; do you ſtill glory in the croſs. Adhering to this banner, you may boldly and triumphantly ſay, O death, where is thy ſting? O grave, where is thy victory ‖?—When that great, tremendous day ſhall come, which puts an end to time and terreſtrial things; when that awful, that majeſtic voice is heard, which commands all the race of Adam to appear at the bar; then, my dear brethren in CHRIST, then alſo ſhall you glory in the croſs. When others, in an agony of terror, call upon rocks to fall on them, and mountains to overwhelm them; this ſhall be your ſedate appeal; rather, this ſhall be your heroic challenge; Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of GOD's elect? It is GOD that juſtifieth; who is he that condemneth? It is CHRIST that died §.—Then ſhall you enter the harbour of eternal reſt; not like a ſhipwrecked mariner cleaving to ſome broken plank, and hardly eſcaping the raging waves; but like ſome ſtately veſſel, with all her ſails expanded, and riding before a proſperous gale ¶.

3. Let me caution the ſelf-righteous: thoſe who more frequently think of their own piety than of CHRIST's obedience; are more apt to cry out with the Phariſee, I am no extortioner, no adulterer; than to confeſs with the publican, GOD be merciful to me a ſinner.—What ſhall I ſay to theſe perſons? Let me not be thought cenſorious, when my only aim is to be faithful. Beware, I beſeech you, beware, leſt you build for eternity, not on a rock, but on the ſand. However you may appear in your own ſight, before the adorable majeſty of the everlaſting GOD, before the conſummate perfection of his holy law, you are leſs than nothing, you are worſe than nothing: you are, indeed you are, deficiency and ſin. Renounce, therefore, renounce all dependence on ſelf. Truſt no longer in a refuge of lies; leſt all your admired attainments, at the day of final retribution, be like ſtraw, and hay, and ſtubble, in Nebuchadnezzar's burning fiery furnace.——Imitate the bleſſed penman of my text. Are you blameleſs in your external carriage? ſo was he. Are you exemplary in many points? ſo was he. Yet all this righteouſneſs he accounted but dung, for the excellency of the knowledge of CHRIST JESUS his LORD *.—Be this your pattern. Write emptineſs upon your own duties, emptineſs upon your own works; and you ſhall be filled with all the fulneſs of GOD your SAVIOUR. Every other cauſe of glorying will be like the morning cloud, or the early dew, which paſſeth away †: but this cauſe of glorying will ſtand faſt for evermore as the moon, and as the faithful witneſs in heaven ‡.

Can I conclude, without adding a word of admonition to the wicked? thoſe, I mean, who are enemies to the croſs of CHRIST; who mind earthly things, but neither hunger nor thirſt after righteouſneſs.——My ſoul remembers the wormwood and the gall of ſuch a ſtate, and cannot but tenderly pity theſe unhappy people.—Alas! my friends, what have you to glory in? The devil and his angels expect ere long to glory in your deſtruction. Thoſe malignant fiends are eying you as their prey, and are impatient to begin your torment. Great, inexpreſſibly great is your danger: the LORD almighty open your eyes to diſcern it.—Nevertheleſs, your caſe is not deſperate. You may yet be delivered, "as a bird out of the ſnare of the fowler." Look unto the crucified JESUS. Why does he hang on that bloody tree? why are his hands pierced with iron? why is his body racked with pain? why his heart torn with anguiſh? It is for you, ſinners, for you. That blood is poured out, to cleanſe you from guilt; thoſe wounds are ſuſtained, to heal your conſciences; that anguiſh is endured, to obtain reſt for your ſouls.——In that mangled body dwells all the fulneſs of the Godhead ‖. Great, beyond imagination great, is the merit of thoſe ſufferings. Why then, O! why will you die? why will you periſh for ever, who have an all-ſufficient propitiation in the croſs of CHRIST? Fly to this ſanctuary: fly before it be too late: fly, without a moment's delay. 'Tis an inviolable ſanctuary. None ever periſhed that fled by faith to the compaſſionate, the divinely-compaſſionate REDEEMER.——His death ſhall be a full ſatisfaction for your iniquities. A ſenſe of his immenſely-rich goodneſs ſhall win your affections; ſhall incline (what all the threatenings of damnation could never effect), ſhall incline you to loath your ſins, and to love his ſervice; ſhall ſmooth your path, and expedite your progreſs, to the regions of immortal honour and joy.

Having now, with great plainneſs of ſpeech, addreſſed my brethren in the miniſtry; having exhorted believers, cautioned the ſelf-righteous, and warned the wicked; let me commeud the whole to your ſerious recollection, and to GOD's gracious benediction.—And, "O LORD moſt "holy! O GOD moſt mighty! O holy and merciful "SAVIOUR! by thine agony and bloody ſweat—— "by thy croſs and paſſion"---let not the word now ſpoken be in vain in the LORD! Amen, and amen.

* Καυχασθαι, the word in our text, denotes the act of rejoicing, as well as of glorying. Thus it is tranſlated, Rom. v. 11. And indeed this it always implies.——See Pſal. v. 11. Pſal. cxlix. 5. Sept. tranſl.

† Rom. vi. 14. ‡ Col. ii. 10.

‖ 1 Cor. xv. 55. This is evidently the language of a conqueror, addreſſed to ſome formidable, but vanquiſhed enemy.—We ſhall form no improper idea of this ſignificant and beautiful paſſage, if we picture to ourſelves the good apoſtle, in the attitude of thoſe Hebrew captains, who ſet their feet on the necks of the five Canaaniteiſh kings, Joſh. x. 24. If we ſuppoſe him, in ſuch a poſture, to utter this animated exclamation, or rather this pious inſult, over the two grand, but proſtrate adverſaries of mankind; "O "death, where is now thy ſting, ſince CHRIST has expiated ſin, "by the ſacrifice of himſelf? O grave, where is now thy victory, "ſince CHRIST is both riſen himſelf, and has aſcertained to his "people a joyful reſurrection?"

§ Rom. viii. 33, 34.

¶ St Peter's expreſſion Εισοδος πλουσιως επιχορηγηθησεται, is perhaps too nervous, and too noble to admit of an adequate tranſlation. The above compariſon is, I think, a very pertinent illuſtration of the delicate ſentiment, and the delighful doctrine. A ſhip wafted into the port, under the full influence of wind and tide, ſeems to afford the fineſt repreſentation of a large, a rich, an abundant entrance; 2 Pet. i. 11.

* Phil. iii. 8. † Hoſ. vi. 4. ‡ Pſal. lxxxix. 37.

‖ Col. ii. 9.

SERMON V.

The Miniſtry of Reconciliation: repreſenting the benign tendency of the goſpel; and that it is the friendly office of miniſters, as the ambaſſadors of Chriſt, to preſs men, with all imaginable tenderneſs, humility, and earneſtneſs, to accept the treaty of reconciliation, as eſtabliſhed in him, and urged by him, while on earth.

We are ambaſſadors for Chriſt, as though God did beſeech you by us: We pray you, in Chriſt's ſtead, be ye reconciled unto God. 2 Cor. v. 20.

ADVERTISEMENT.

AS this is a poſthumous piece, it may be neceſſary to obſerve, for the ſatisfaction of the public, that Mr Hervey was, many years ago, ſolicited to print this ſermon, by ſeveral who heard it; but as he was a man of great modeſty, and had not then appeared as an author, he could not at that time he prevailed on, by any ſolicitations, to comply with their requeſt.——However, at a particular friend's deſire, he tranſcribed it from his ſhort-hand copy, and gave it to him.——Some years afterwards, this friend deſired Mr Hervey to reviſe it, with a view of its being publiſhed; which (in conjunction with a very eminent divine) he accordingly did; and then returned the copy to his friend; telling him, that as the Meditations on the tombs, &c. had been ſo well received, he had now no objection againſt publiſhing it, with ſome other ſermons; and that he might one day or another require it of him again for that purpoſe.——This ſermon is printed from that very copy; and Mr Hervey himſelf would probably have added it to the volume which contains his four ſermons, had he happened to recollect that it was in the poſſeſſion of a friend, who would willingly have relinquiſhed it to its author for publication.

2 COR. v. 18.

All things are of GOD, who hath reconciled us to himſelf by JESUS CHRIST, and hath given to us the miniſtry of reconciliation.

THE love of God, that ſupremely-glorious, and ſupremely-gracious Being, is, of all other tempers, the moſt delightful and divine; a ſacred flower, which in its early bud is happineſs, and in its full bloom is heaven.——To plant this noble principle in the breaſt, to cultivate its growth, and bring it to maturity, is the grand end of all religion, and the genuine fruit of faith unfeigned.———Angels are happy, becauſe the love of GOD triumphs eternally, and without a rival in their exalted affections *. True believers are happy, becauſe the love of GOD, in a prevailing degree, is ſhed abroad in their hearts. The goſpel is a diſpenſation of happineſs, becauſe it diſcovers the ſuperabundant loving-kindneſs of GOD to man, and urges the moſt engaging motives for our ardent love to his almighty Majeſty.

The goſpel repreſents the great GOD, not only as beſtowing upon his creatures all the good they enjoy, but as effecting their reconciliation to his own adorable ſelf; effecting this moſt deſirable of all bleſſings, not barely by vouchſafing a pardon, but a pardon procured by the death of his Son; and, by this enriching circumſtance, infinitely enhanced; arrayed in all the charms that heaven itſelf could give.——To render the purpoſes of his love more effectual and extenſive, he has inſtituted an order of men to publiſh theſe glad tidings; and to invite, yea to beſeech the world, to partake the exceeding riches of his grace.——All which the apoſtle has expreſſed in my text, with his uſual energy and conciſeneſs; All things are of GOD, who hath reconciled us to himſelf by JESUS CHRIST, and hath given to us the miniſtry of reconciliation.

From which words, permit me, with all that ſimplicity which becomes a miniſter of the humble JESUS,

I. To enlarge a little upon that glorious and amiable repreſentation of the bleſſed GOD, diſcoverable even by the light of nature, All things are of him.

II. To remind you, how much more illuſtriouſly the delightful attributes of the DEITY are diſplayed in the accompliſhment of our redemption; in that he hath reconciled us to himſelf by JESUS CHRIST.

III. To obſerve the benign import and beneficial tendency of the goſpel-miniſtry, expreſſed in that remarkable clauſe, He hath given to us the miniſtry of reconciliation.

Firſt, Then let me enlarge a little upon that glorious and amiable repreſentation of the bleſſed GOD, diſcoverable even by the light of nature, All things are of Him.——Heaven, and the heaven of heavens are his, with all their hoſts. Thrones and dominions, principalities and powers, all the happy beings, that ſit at the fountain-head of felicity, were produced by his power, and are ſupplied with bleſſings from his hand, are filled with joy from his countenance.——If we trace the various emanations of comfort and advantage that refreſh our lower world, we ſhall find reaſon to acknowledge with the pſalmiſt, "All our freſh ſprings are in GOD."——The day is thine, ſays the ſame ſacred writer, and the night is thine; thou haſt prepared the light and the ſun. The magnificent luminaries in the ſky, are lamps of the LORD; hung up on high, to diſpenſe the chearing gift of light amidſt all the families of nature. The interchanges of night and day, with the viciſſitudes of revolving ſeaſons, are his miniſters; all ſent on errands of kindneſs, and bringing the moſt valuable preſents in their hands. The innumerable variety of living creatures, and of nutrimental vegetables, are the portion, not which our own induſtry has procured, but which our heavenly Father's bounty has ſettled upon us.

Every great endowment, beſtowed on the children of men; every noble achievement, accompliſhed by renowned

* To be good is to be happy:—Angels are happier than men, becauſe they are better.

Guilt is the ſource of ſorrow; 'tis the fiend,
Th' avenging fiend, who follows us behind
With whips and ſtings; the bleſs'd know none of this,
But reſt in everlaſting peace of mind. ROWE.

renowned perſonages; theſe derive their original from the uncreated Fountain of perfection and of power.—If Solomon is poſſeſſed of enlarged wiſdom, and kingly qualities; he expreſsly acknowledges, it is from the LORD, ſuperintending human affairs, that ſuch kings are advanced to reign; and by the LORD enlightening their minds, that ſuch princes decree juſtice. If, at one period, Nebuchadnezzar purſues his conqueſts with irreſiſtible impetuoſity, it is to ſcourge the offending people of the LORD; and baniſh idolatry from their worſhip, as the driving wind ſwept the chaff from their floors. If, at another juncture, Cyrus is equally victorious, and "comes upon princes as upon mortar, and "as the potter treadeth clay;" it was the LORD of hoſts that raiſed up this accompliſhed commander from the Eaſt, and bid him execute his deſigns of reſtoring love to his reformed nation.——All thoſe arts which meliorate, and ſciences which embelliſh life, even theſe are from the LORD, "who is wonderful in counſel, "and excellent in working."

The time would fail me to enumerate particulars.—Whatever is beneficial to communities, or comfortable to individuals; whatever ſprings from the rain of heaven, or is produced by fruitful ſeaſons; whatever adminiſters to the improvement, or chears the heart of man; all, all acknowledge GOD for their Author. He is the Giver of every good and perfect gift. The whole earth is filled with the profuſion of his beneficence.—And where, where is the creature, that has not taſted, that does not ſubſiſt on, the inexhauſtible ſtores of his bounty?—And though affliction alſo comes from the Father of our ſpirits, yet this is no derogation from his tender mercies: ſince he chaſtens, not with an arbitrary ſeverity, but with a parental pity; he chaſtens, only to amend; and theſe light, theſe tranſient tribulations, are preparatives for an exceeding great and eternal weight of glory.

And is not ſuch a being worthy of our higheſt admiration, and our devouteſt love? Has he not, by ſuch ineffable excellencies, ſuch unmeaſurable benignity,—has he not an undoubted claim to the affections of our hearts, the prailes of our tongues, and the unintermitted ſervices of our lives? He is the ſource of all our good; ſhould he not alſo be the centre of all our gratitude, and of our whole obedience?——But our obligations will riſe unmenſely higher, if we conſider, Secondly, How much more illuſtriouſly the delightful attributes of the DEITY are diſplayed in the accompliſhment of our redemption; in that he hath reconciled us to himſelf by JESUS CHRIST.——Man was created upright, immaculate, and in the image of GOD. Heavenly wiſdom ſhone bright in his underſtanding, and true holineſs ſat enthroned in his heart.——But how ſoon, how fatally, did he fall! from what height of perfection, to what depth of degeneracy! Since that deſtructive tranſgreſſion, all fleſh has corrupted his way; every man is become brutiſh in his knowledge; and the imagination of the thoughts of his heart is only evil continually. "Our iniquities ſeparated between us and "our GOD, and our ſins hid his face from us," as from an abominable object. Nay, our ſins accuſed us at his righteous tribunal, and, like the blood of Abel, cried to heaven for vengeance. Vengeance and fiery indignation was our expected doom, and eternal death the wages due to our offences.——What rendered the miſery of mankind ſtill more exceſſively deplorable, and only not deſperate, was, that they were without ſtrength; without any power to make ſatisfaction for their provocations, or extricate themſelves from this abyſs of wo.——O wretched, wretched man, if left in this ſtate of guilt and ruin! If abandoned by the GOD, from whom thou haſt ungratefully revolted, better had it been for thee never to have exiſted.

But behold the kindneſs and love of GOD our Saviour! Hearken to the ſounding of his bowels and his mercies towards us! "I have ſeen," ſaid he, (as in the caſe of enſlaved Iſrael), "I have ſeen the affliction "of my fallen creatures. They have undone them-"ſelves, but in me* is their recovery. Satan has de-"ceived, and deceiving has deſtroyed them; but I, even "I will deliver them."——Wherewithal will the LORD accompliſh this deſign? By his free, unmerited goodneſs. By the blood of bulls, or of goats, or of all the cattle upon a thouſand hills? Contemptible to the laſt degree are ſuch beggarly oblations; only ſo far as they typify the all-glorious ſacrifice.—Was an angel charged with this important buſineſs, or the higheſt ſeraph bidden to interpoſe as the repairer of our breach? The angels were abſolutely incapable of executing ſo great a work. It required a far abler agent, to negotiate our reconciliation. It muſt coſt incomparably more to redeem guilty ſouls. Therefore the GOD of our ſalvation "laid the help upon one that is mighty." He appointed, to the moſt momentous of all offices, the moſt illuſtrious of all beings. He appointed his own Son, the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon.

Behold then the Son of GOD, taking our nature, that he may act as our Mediator. Admirable conſtitution! full of wonder, and full of grace!—How joyful to the ſinner! The work muſt infallibly proſper in ſuch hands. Such a Surety cannot fail of ſucceeding in all he undertakes.——How gracious in the Father! Could there be a ſtronger aſſurance, or a more emphatical demonſtration of his boundleſs beneficence, than to ſend the Son of his boſom; the Son of his eternal delight; the Son dearer to him than all worlds?—How condeſcending in the Saviour! Would Ahaſuerus abdicate his imperial diadem, or the great ruler of Babylon forego the honours of his enlarged dominions, to attend on the welfare of ſome ignoble captive that grinds at a mill, or of ſome infamous malefactor that chained in a dungeon?—Yet the everlaſting Potentate of heaven and univerſal nature, undertakes a more humbling office of friendſhip, for a race of abject creatures, that dwell in duſt, and were doomed to hell.——Let every child of Adam look unto CHRIST by faith, as all the people of Iſrael looked unto Moſes, when he went into the tabernacle of the congregation to intercede before the LORD. (See Exodus xxxiii. 8.)

We have ſeen the perſon reconciling, let us next contemplate the manner of reconciling. A ſubject equally aſtoniſhing and delightful! The Father reconciled us to himſelf, by laying upon his Son the iniquities of us all; by admitting him to ſtand in our ſtead, and by exacting from him, the puniſhment which we had incurred.——GOD reconciled us to himſelf, not only by the humiliation, but by the ſuffering of this Prince of heaven; and not by ſome ſlighter ſuffering, but by his ſuffering unto death; and not by his undergoing a common death, but the moſt ignominious and tormenting of all deaths, the death of the croſs.—— "It pleaſed the Father," ſays the apoſtle, "to recon-"cile all things to himſelf; making peace by the blood "of the croſs."——Becauſe we deſerved ſhame, the LORD of glory was numbered with malefactors, and loaded with infamy. Becauſe we deſerved the bitterneſs of death, the LORD of life endured the pangs of diſſolution, in their unabated and moſt racking extremities. Becauſe we were obnoxious to the curſe of the law, therefore the ever-bleſſed "JESUS delivered us "from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for "us."

Glorious propitiation! and altogether as complete as glorious! What now ſhall terrify the true believer? What ſhall ſtand between him, and his eternal hopes?——Shall Satan muſter up his accuſations, and ſet them in frightful array? Yet, though there may be much guilt,

* See Hoſ. xiii. 9.

there is no condemnation to them that are in JESUS CHRIST.——Does the law take the guilty mortal by the throat, and with its rigorous severity, say, "Pay me that thou owest?" It is paid, fully paid by the intervention and suretiship, not of a mean man, but of the mighty GOD made flesh.——Does divine Justice demand satisfaction, for the wrongs received from sinners? It is not only satisfied, but most awfully glorified, by this wonderful oblation.——In short, this is a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice for the sins of the whole world. It vindicates the honour of GOD's holiness; it displays his unsearchable wisdom; it manifests his unutterable goodness; it gives the most magnificent and lovely lustre to all the divine perfections.—May we not then, looking unto our bleeding Saviour, and pleading his inestimable propitiation, venture to adopt the apostle's challenge? "Who shall lay any thing to the charge of GOD's elect? it is GOD that justifieth;" not imputing our trespasses unto us, but transferring them to his dear Son. "Who is he that condemneth? it is CHRIST that died," and by his precious death hath made reconciliation for iniquity, and brought in everlasting righteousness.

I have been the more copious upon this subject, because it is not only the grand point in my text, but is the very heart of the gospel; the fountain of all our comforts, and the foundation of all our hopes.——But I proceed, and with greater brevity,

Thirdly, To observe the benign import and beneficial tendency of the gospel-ministry, expressed in that remarkable clause, He hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation. Here I am not attempting to magnify my office, or to aggrandize the ministerial character; but only to render our services acceptable to our brethren.—Some persons, whether through prejudice or mistake, are apprehensive of being terrified by our message, or "tormented before the time" by our doctrine. But can the news of reconciliation to the LORD GOD of hosts terrify, or the offer of remission of sins torment? How welcome should be the approach, or to speak in the elegant language of a prophet, "how beautiful the feet of him that bringeth good tidings!" And can there be better tidings, more reviving, or more transporting, than those of the everlasting gospel? which saith unto Zion, "Thy iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged:" thy GOD is reconciled, and instead of abhorring thee as a rebel, is willing to embrace thee as a child.—When our armies have been in the field, and some very important, some decisive engagement drawing near; with what eagerness have you expected, and with what delight have you received, the account of complete victory gained? And is not our report equally worthy of all acceptation, which declares Satan vanquished, and sin destroyed; declares death abolished, hell deprived of its prey, and all the rich advantages of peace with heaven restored?—When Peter lay bound in prison, was the angel an unwelcome minister, who struck away his fetters, opened the gates of iron, and transmitted him, free and unmolested, to the cordial salutations of his friends? As you are all, by nature, in bondage to sin, our business is, to take you by the hand, and lead you out of this ignominious slavery, into the glorious liberty of the sons of GOD; while the Spirit of the Most High breaks off your shackles, and makes you free indeed.—What manna can be more refreshing than such a message? what balm more healing than such a service?—If, at any time, we arm our words with terror, and denounce the vengeance of GOD on every soul of man that doth evil; this is only to awaken you from that gay insensibility, which would lull you into irretrievable ruin. It is like the gathering clouds, and the distant peals of thunder, which might warn Noah to retire into the ark, before that infinitely more tremendous deluge came, which was to sweep the careless world away.—Whether therefore we display the allurements of divine love, it is for your delight; or whether we bend the bow of divine indignation, it is for your benefit; to win you to happiness, or drive you from misery. So that in every respect, and by all our ministrations, we are to be "helpers of your faith, and furtherers of your "joy."

And let not any one suspect, that a message of such free and rich grace has a tendency to soothe men into supineness, or serve the cause of licentiousness. It is, of all other expedients, most effectually calculated to reconcile us to GOD, in another sense of the word; to subdue our enmity, and captivate our perverse affections; to impress our alienated hearts with adoring gratitude, and engage our refractory wills to dutiful obedience.—For can we be cold and indifferent to such immense benignity? can we affront and grieve such unspeakably-tender kindness? What effect had David's clemency in sparing Saul's life, when it was in the power of his hand to have dispatched that implacable enemy? It overcame, for a while, even malice itself; it fetched tears of sorrow from the persecutor's eyes, and expressions of the most endeared affections from his lips *. And when GOD, the GOD to whom vengeance belongeth, not only spares us guilty wretches, but punishes his immaculate Son in our stead; when he bids the sword of Justice pass by our devoted heads, and sheathe itself in the heart of his beloved Son; can we resist such heavenly goodness? can we spurn such bowels of mercy? Must not love, so divine and infinite, melt even the most obdurate heart; make us fling down, with abhorrence, the weapons of rebellion, and constrain us, sweetly constrain us to obedience †?

Let me now, conformably to my sacred commission, beseech you all to be reconciled. Especially let me beseech the humble penitent, and the haughty self-righteous moralist.——Ye humble penitents, that are convinced of sin, and mourn for sin, be of good comfort. GOD has abounded in the riches of his grace towards you, and has given you a ransom to rely on, of higher dignity than all heavens, of more value than all worlds. The men of Tyre made Blastus the king's chamberlain their friend ‡; the GOD of glory has constituted his dear Son, your atoning sacrifice, your prevailing advocate. The men of Tyre desired conditions of peace; the LORD JESUS hath both obtained and fulfilled the conditions of your peace. Could there be a more glorious person chosen to act as your reconciler, than the Prince of heaven, and Heir of all things? could there be a more effectual method of reconciliation, than his obedience unto death, even the death of the cross?——Fly then to this all-sufficient Redeemer. Rely on his most meritorious and satisfactory sufferings. Be your sins ever so numerous, ever so enormous, these need be no bar to your acceptance. For GOD has received an atonement; an infinite atonement GOD has received. So that he can admit you to his favour, unworthy as you are, without the least blemish to his avenging justice. He can, he will admit you, as freely, as if you had never done amiss. Trust therefore in your reconciling Saviour. Place a chearful confidence in his propitiating merits. Only let the grace of GOD, which has appeared with such transcendent loveliness in the bleeding JESUS, let this grace teach you, with a prevailing efficacy, "to deny all ungodliness, and worldly "lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in "this present world."

* 1 Sam. xxiv. 16.

† Mr Hervey had added, by way of a note, the following words, in the copy which he transcribed, and from which this is printed. "When I preached this sermon, I recapitulated, in this "place, (as you, or any reader may do if he pleases), the preceding heads; but I thought it unnecessary to transcribe such a recapitulation."

‡ Acts xii. 20.

As to those of a contrary character, who are righteous in their own eyes, what shall I say? Shall I decry the exercise of morality, or disparage the duties of holiness? GOD forbid. The gospel is a doctrine according to godliness, and true holiness is the health, is the happiness of the soul. These duties, issuing from faith, and recommended by the intercession of CHRIST, are acceptable to the divine Majesty. But these are not your SAVIOUR. GOD has not reconciled the world to himself by their own pious practices, but by his Son JESUS CHRIST.——Can your charitable deeds expiate your innumerable offences? As soon may a single drop of pure water correct and sweeten the unfathomable brine of the ocean. Can your defective performances satisfy the demands of a perfect law, or your wandering devotions screen you from the displeasure of an injured GOD? As well may your uplifted hand eclipse the sun, or intercept the lightning when it darts through the bursting cloud.—There is no other name given under heaven whereby you may be reconciled to GOD, and saved from wrath, but only the name, only the name, remember, of JESUS CHRIST. Here fix your hopes and you shall never be disappointed. Fix them on any other object, and everlasting confusion will ensue.—We beseech you therefore, in GOD's stead, we beseech you for your own souls sake, reject not this abundant mercy, neglect not this GREAT SALVATION.

Now, unto him who has reconciled us to himself, and washed us from our sins in his Son's blood, be glory and thanksgiving, love and obedience, henceforth and for ever.

A DEFENCE, by R. Y. of the foregoing sermon, from the groundless objections raised against it by some inconsiderate readers.

IT is scarcely credible, that any one should assert, that Mr Hervey's posthumous sermon on the Ministry of reconciliation, is contradictory to the dialogues in Theron and Aspasio, and affirm that it has done injury to the work.—But such an assertion is easily refuted.——This complaint is either lodged by the friends or foes of the deceased: If by his friends, then I suppose it is because the doctrine of imputed righteousness, which makes so great a figure in those dialogues, is not mentioned in the sermon.—These people would do well to consider, that if it is not mentioned, it is strongly implied; and what is strongly implied in this place, cannot be contradictory to what is expressed in others. In that sermon, do we not read in the strongest terms, "That our iniquities are imputed to "CHRIST, by the FATHER's admitting him to stand "in our stead, and exacting from him the punishment "which we had incurred?" Do we not here find, "GOD reconciling us to himself, not only by the humiliation, but by the sufferings of the Prince of heaven; and not by some slighter sufferings, but by his sufferings unto death; and not by his undergoing a common death, but the most ignominious and tormenting of all deaths, the death upon the cross."

And as we find the imputation of our sins so plainly asserted here, so we find in the Dialogues, that "this "part of our LORD's meritorious humiliation is by a "very usual figure put for the whole. The death of "CHRIST includes, not only his sufferings, but his "obedience. The shedding of his precious blood, was "at once the grand instance of his sufferings, and the "finishing act of his obedience. In this view it is considered, and thus it is interpreted by his own ambassador, who, speaking of his divine MASTER, says,— "He was obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.— "When the scripture ascribes our justification to the "death of CHRIST, we are not to think that it would "set aside, but imply his obedience." (Theron and Aspasio, above, p. 200.) Now, if we are not to think this of the scripture, in Mr Hervey's opinion, how then can we think it of him? And, without thinking it, where lies the inconsistence between the sermon and the dialogues?

But I rather imagine, that the charge is brought by Mr Hervey's enemies. Some of these people, to avoid being thought Socinians, seem willing to allow the satisfaction of CHRIST, while they declare against the doctrine of justification by the imputation of his righteousness; and such are extremely willing to interpret Mr Hervey's silence into a consent to their own pernicious sentiments: Theron and Aspasio is a dead weight upon them; they have not, nor can they answer it; willingly, therefore, would they come off, by saying the author had contradicted himself. But false is their pretence, and as false is their profession. That they allow the satisfaction of CHRIST for imputation, is as reasonable, and as justifiable, in the one case as in the other; they both stand upon one and the same footing, so he that throws down one, throws down both; whoever rejects the doctrine of our SAVIOUR's righteousness being imputed unto man, rejects, by so doing, the doctrine of man's sins being imputed to our Saviour, and all the consequences of it; or, in other words, he who rejects the doctrine of free justification, rejects, by so doing, the doctrine of CHRIST. (See Theron and Aspasio, above, p. 155.)

As the main design in writing Theron and Aspasio, was to prove the fundamental doctrine of justification by the imputed righteousness of CHRIST; and as it appears that the sermon does not contradict it in this most important article; I suppose it will be allowed, that the charge of contradiction, as to what is most material, is entirely got over. But perhaps, in a matter of less consequence, it may still be objected, that Mr Hervey, in the Dialogues, appears plainly to be Calvinistic, in the doctrine of PARTICULAR redemption; but, in the sermon, he says expressly, that CHRIST's death is a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice for the sins of the WHOLE world.——The church of England says this, as well as Mr Hervey, in the office for the communion; and yet no unprejudiced person will question, but she is perfectly Calviniftical in her articles and homilies.

The truth is, there is no Calvinist but will allow, that the satisfaction of CHRIST is full, perfect, and sufficient for ALL; but then they distinguish between the sufficiency and efficiency of his sacrifice. With regard to the value of the oblation, it is sufficient for the redemption of every man; with regard to its efficacy, as every man is benefited by the death of CHRIST, so CHRIST died for him; but these benefits are not of one kind.—Some are common to every man; all the earthly blessings which unbelievers enjoy, are the fruits of CHRIST's death; so far as they are benefited by him, so far he died for them; other benefits belong to the members of the visible church, and are common to all those who live under the gospel: many graces such may receive from CHRIST, which through their own fault are not saving; and so far as they are benefited by CHRIST, so far CHRIST died for them: other benefits still, according to the will of GOD, and the intention of the MEDIATOR, are peculiar to those which he himself says are given unto him by the FATHER; his sheep, his elect, such as a true faith, regeneration, sanctification, adoption, &c. In this sense, says those Christians ians called Calviniſts, CHRIST died for his people only, to bring them effectually to grace and to glory.——This ſyſtem only is conſiſtent with Mr Hervey's notion of free grace.

The Arminian ſcheme is, That CHRIST died with a purpoſe to make the ſalvation of every man in the world poſſible, without any manner of difference, whether they are believers or unbelievers: That he died, not to bring any man actually to ſalvation, and make him a partaker of righteouſneſs and life, but to purchaſe a poſſibility of ſalvation and reconciliation, ſo far as that GOD might, conſiſtent with his juſtice, receive men into favour, upon condition of faith and repentance. This faith and repentance, ſay they, CHRIST merited not; for if he had, then GOD had been bound to give them unto every man, and ſo every man muſt have been ſaved. Thus, you ſee, according to theſe gentlemen, CHRIST died equally for all the world; and the reaſon why ſome are ſaved, lies wholly in themſelves, in attaining to that faith and repentance, by the good uſe of their natural powers, which CHRIST did not purchaſe for them. This is the meaning of every Arminian *, let him expreſs himſelf however he will. And how far this is inconſiſtent with Mr Hervey's exhortation to the ſelf-righteous moraliſt, in the cloſe of this ſermon, I believe I need not tell you. Indeed, Mr Hervey engages not here in the controverſy at all; but (going upon what both ſides are agreed in, viz. the ſufficiency of CHRIST's ſacrifice to ſave all that will believe) he invites all his hearers to fly unto him for ſalvation.——Now, if he never enters into the merits of the cauſe, how can he be guilty of inconſiſtency?

Upon the whole, then, this is a moſt excellent ſermon. As the dialogues in Theron and Aſpaſio were, ſo is this, the true offspring * of him who now reſts from his labours, and his works do follow him; the offspring of him who always ſought to exalt the SAVIOUR, to humble the ſinner, and to promote holineſs.

* That the reader may ſtill more clearly apprehend the doctrine of Mr Hervey, who was a Calviniſt,—and the difference between him and the Arminians, the following note is ſubjoined.

"The Arminians are ſuppoſed by ſome, (who are not ſufficiently acquainted with their tenets,) to maintain that we are to do ſomething for ourſelves, and Chriſt to do the reſt; or, in other words, that we have partly a righteouſneſs of our own, and that Jeſus Chriſt is to make up the deficiencies of that righteouſneſs. This, however, is not the common divinity of the Arminians. They have no ſuch notion of a patch-work juſtification, or that we are ſaved partly by the imputation of Chriſt's merits to make up the deficiencies of our own. But the principles of their ſcheme are briefly theſe.—That Chriſt is the ſole and only author of our ſalvation, not by imputing his righteouſneſs to us, but by purchaſing ſuch favourable terms of reconciliation for us, and by reſtoring to us ſuch abilities to fulfil them, by means of which we can only become capable of being juſtified in the ſight of God. Therefore we ſay, that thoſe in this life, who have uſed well the grace that is given them, and conformed to the terms of the goſpel, God doth juſtify; That is, were he to call them to the bar of judgment and try them, he would acquit or pronounce them not guilty.—Becauſe Chriſt, by his meritorious death and ſufferings, having purchaſed for them the law of repentance, as the law by which they are to be judged and tried; and they having through grace fulfilled the law, i. e. become true penitents, God therefore, for the above merits of Chriſt, admits of their qualifications, forgives them their offences, and rewards them as if they had never offended. Here then is no ſplitting of the imputation, no copartnerſhip with Chriſt: but Chriſt's righteouſneſs is repreſented, as the ſole procuring cauſe of our ſalvation, and ours as only the applying cauſe, by performing the requiſite conditions: i. e. They both tend to different ends: one to procure the terms of juſtification, and the other to perform them.—So that, in ſhort, according to this ſcheme of the Arminians, our juſtification is not made up partly of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and partly of our own; for his righteouſneſs is not partly imputed, but not at all imputed, in the Calviniſtical ſenſe of imputation. In order to make this difference of opinion ſtill clearer, it muſt be obſerved, that the Calviniſts (being accuſtomed to their ideas of imputative righteouſneſs) imagine, that when the Arminians affirm the neceſſity of inherent righteouſneſs, in order to juſtification, that they mean a borrowing of Chriſt's imputative righteouſneſs to make up the deficiencies of our own. Whereas the Arminians, indeed, ſuppoſe, that Chriſt did not, in any degree, fulfil the terms of juſtification in our ſtead; but, on the contrary, having purchaſed them for us, and procured us ſufficient powers and abilities of performing them, he left us to co-operate with thoſe powers, and ſo to fulfil them ourſelves." This is a fair, candid, and conſiſtent ſtate of the Arminian doctrine. No one can ſay it is miſrepreſented; for 'tis here given in the very words of an eminent divine, and dignitary of the church of England, who is himſelf an Arminian.——How much ſuperior the Calviniſtic (which was Mr Hervey's) doctrine is, to humble the ſinner, to exalt the Saviour, and to promote holineſs, let every reader judge.

* The ſermon itſelf, in Mr Hervey's own writing, is now in the hands of the Rev. Mr Robert Knight, the preſent Rector of Weſton-Favell, who married Mr Hervey's youngeſt ſiſter.

The Knowledge of Salvation precious in the Hour of Death;

PROVED IN A

SERMON,

Preached, January 4, 1759,

Upon the DEATH of

The Rev. Mr JAMES HERVEY.

By W. ROMAINE, M. A.

Lecturer of St Dunſtan's in the Weſt, London.

Righteouſneſs delivereth from death. PROV. x. 2.

LUKE ii. 29, 30.

LORD, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation.

ACCORDING to the ancient prophecies, in the fulneſs of time, God ſent forth his Son. He came to his own, when there was a general expectation of his birth. Many juſt and devout perſons in Jeruſalem were then looking out for the Redeemer's coming in the fleſh; and among them good old Simeon, and Anna a propheteſs, are particularly mentioned. St Luke ſays, There was a man in Jeruſalem, whoſe name was Simeon, and the ſame man was juſt, a juſtified perſon, and devout, fearing to offend God, as the Greek word ſignifies, waiting for the conſolation of Iſrael; he was waiting for the incarnation of the divine Comforter, by whoſe birth all the promiſes of comfort were to be ratified and fulfilled, and the Iſrael of God was to receive everlaſting conſolation. The Lord was pleaſed to vouchſafe a particular revelation of his will in this matter to Simeon: For the Holy Spirit was upon him, and it was revealed unto him by the Holy Spirit, that he ſhould not ſee death before he had ſeen the Lord's Chriſt incarnate. And he came by direction of the Spirit into the temple; and when the parents brought in the holy child Jeſus, to do for him after the cuſtom of the law, then took he him up in his arms, and bleſſed God that he had lived to this happy hour, when he could take up the prophet's words, and ſay, Lo this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will ſave us; this is the Lord, we have waited for him; we will be glad and rejoice in his ſalvation. Simeon waited to ſee God incarnate; and having ſeen him, he wanted to live no longer. He deſired his diſmiſſion. All the ends of living were anſwered; and therefore he put up this ſweet prayer;—Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation.

With theſe ſame words one of our dear brethren, now with the Lord, finiſhed his courſe. They were the dying words of the Rev. Mr James Hervey. He had long deſired to depart, and to be with Chriſt, which he knew was far better than to abide in the fleſh; but he waited patiently for the Lord's time; and when it was come, he thus expreſſed the thankfulneſs of his heart, Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace, according to thy moſt holy and comfortable word: for mine eyes have ſeen thy precious ſalvation *. The Lord heard him, and gave him a gentle diſmiſſion. He died, as he had lived, in a perfectly even and calm compoſure of mind. Death ſhewed that he came to him as a friendly meſſenger to call him to glory, for he chearfully obeyed the ſummons. There was no fear, no ſtruggle, not a ſigh or groan, but he departed in peace, and in full aſſurance of faith. Oh that you and I, my brethren, may ſo live by the faith of the Son of God, that when we come to die, we may be able to uſe this ſame prayer, and may receive of the Lord a like gracious anſwer.

Theſe ſweet dying words of our dear brother have made a great impreſſion upon ſeveral of his acquaintance: for they have been led to conſider them more cloſely than perhaps they ever did before, and ſeveral have meditated upon them with great comfort. In order that others might do the ſame, and that his happy death might be the means of ſtirring up many to ſeek to die the death of the righteous, and that their latter end might be like his, I have determined to ſpeak upon the words this day. May the ſame Spirit by which Simeon ſpake them be in all your hearts! may he teach you their true and full meaning, and in God's due time may he give you the comfortable experience of them! Under his guidance let us conſider,

Firſt, That when Simeon had ſeen the ſalvation of God, he was prepared to depart;

Secondly, He therefore deſired it, and prayed for it; and,

Thirdly, He expected he ſhould depart in peace according to God's word, which was fulfilled to him.—And, under each of theſe particulars, I ſhall ſpeak of the experience of our deceaſed brother.

Firſt, Simeon had it revealed to him by the Holy Spirit, that he ſhould not die until he had ſeen the Lord's Chriſt; and when Jeſus was brought into the temple, he was directed to go and receive him for the promiſed Meſſiah; and taking him up in his arms, he bleſſed God, and ſaid, Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have

* Several particulars in this ſermon reſpecting Mr Hervey, are more fully related in the account of his life prefixed to this work.

ſeen

by salvation. It is evident he ſpoke theſe words in a primary ſenſe, of his ſeeing Jeſus with the eyes of the body; but this could have been no great cauſe of joy to him, unleſs he had before ſeen Chriſt ſome other way; for multitudes ſaw him with their bodily eyes, while he was upon earth, who were no better for the ſight; and multitudes will hereafter ſee him in his glorified body, but it will be to their everlaſting confuſion. There is another kind of ſight to which our church referred you this afternoon, when each of you took up theſe words and ſaid, For mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation. If you knew what you ſaid, and ſpoke the truth as you had experienced it, you meant that you had ſeen the ſalvation of God with the eye of faith; according to what is ſaid of Moſes, That by faith he ſaw him who is inviſible (Heb. xi. 27.) He ſaw him by the eyes of his ſoul, who was inviſible to the eyes of his body; for the ſoul has its eyes as well as the body: but ſin darkened them; it put them into the ſtate in which the eyes of the body are when they have no light: then they can ſee nothing. So the ſoul is ſaid, in ſcripture, to be in darkneſs and blindneſs, until the eyes of the underſtanding be enlightened. They cannot ſee any ſpiritual objects until the Sun of Righteouſneſs ſhine upon them; nor, when he does ſhine, can they ſee any lovelineſs in theſe objects, until they be able to act faith upon them; for the eye of faith not only beholds the object, but alſo diſtinguiſhes its own intereſt in it. Faith keeps all the ſenſes of the ſoul in act and exerciſe upon the proper object, which each apprehends; here the eye of faith is fixed upon ſalvation, not only viewing it as a bleſſing belonging to others, but alſo appropriating it to itſelf. Mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation: here Simeon, ſpeaking of our Saviour, calls him ſalvation, becauſe all ſalvation is in and from him. He is the author, and he is the finiſher of it. The great plan of it was laid by the co-equal and co-eternal Perſons of the ever-bleſſed Trinity, before the foundation of the world; it was carried into execution by our divine Saviour in the fulneſs of time; and he is an eternal ſalvation, an eternal deliverance from all evil, and an eternal poſſeſſion of all good. Upon the entrance of ſin into the world, this great ſalvation of our God was revealed, and by faith believers under the Old-teſtament diſpenſation enjoyed the benefits of it. At the appointed time Jehovah took a body of fleſh, and our divine Immanuel ſtood up to ſave his people from their ſins. He undertook to ſatisfy all the demands of law and juſtice. The law he ſatisfied, by paying it a perfect unſinning obedience; which being a divine, as well as a human obedience, did therefore magnify the law, and make it more honourable, than if all the creatures in heaven and earth had never offended againſt it. Juſtice he ſatisfied, by enduring the threatened puniſhment; and after his ſufferings and death, juſtice had no more demands upon him; for he came out of the priſon of the grave with a full diſcharge. This ſatisfaction, made to law and juſtice by the obedience and ſufferings of the Lord Jeſus, is what the ſcripture calls the righteouſneſs of God, becauſe it is a divine and infinitely-perfect righteouſneſs, a divine righteouſneſs wrought out by Jehovah himſelf, and as infinitely perfect a righteouſneſs as Jehovah could make it. In this all-glorious righteouſneſs of the God-man, Chriſt Jeſus, conſiſts the ſinner's ſalvation: for he is accepted and juſtified by it; the fruits of this righteouſneſs are his ſanctification, and the robe of this righteouſneſs is his glorification. So that ſalvation in time and in eternity depends upon the righteouſneſs of the incarnate God. This is the fundamental doctrine of the Chriſtian religion, for which our dear brother was a noble champion. He ſaw, he experienced the importance of it, and therefore in his converſation and in his preaching it was his favourite topic. How ſweetly, how profitably have I heard him dwell upon it! and how excellently has he defended it in his writings? Read his Theron and Aſpaſio; and when you are thoroughly convinced that Chriſt is the end of the law for righteouſneſs to every one who believeth, and can ſay with faith, "In the Lord have I righteouſneſs and ſalvation;" then your mind will be ſettled in peace and comfort, and you will be delivered from thoſe dangerous errors which are now propagated concerning the righteouſneſs of the Lord Jeſus. Thank God for the maſterly defence of it in theſe dialogues *. In them Mr Hervey, being dead, yet ſpeaketh the praiſes of his adorable Redeemer, and clearly proves that we have our ſalvation through his righteouſneſs. Immanuel the Saviour is the juſtifier, as he ſays himſelf, Iſ. xlv. 21, 22. "There "is no God elſe beſide me, a God that gives righteouſ-"neſs, and a Saviour, there is none beſide me.—— "Look unto me and be ye ſaved, all the ends of the "earth; for I am God, and there is none elſe." How could they be ſaved by looking unto Chriſt? Certainly, not by a look of their bodily eyes. Simeon's joy did not ariſe from having Chriſt in his arms, and looking upon him; but from being able to look upon him by an act of faith. He knew him to be his Saviour. Thence aroſe his joy, and from thence muſt yours ariſe. It is the look of faith which ſaves; the eye of faith kept in exerciſe upon its proper object, even upon Jeſus, the author and finiſher of faith. It is this act of faith which our Lord requires:—Look unto me, with this promiſe annexed, and be ye ſaved. There is ſalvation in the look of faith: for it ſees and receives Jeſus, as he is offered in ſcripture, for a free, full, and complete Saviour. And whoever keeps the eye of faith in conſtant exerciſe, is prepared with good old Simeon, to depart in peace: becauſe, by having an intereſt and property in the ſalvation of our God, he is thereby delivered from every thing that can make death dreadful, and is in the poſſeſſion of every thing that can make death deſirable.

What is it that makes death dreadful? Is it not guilt in the conſcience, accuſing the ſinner for the breach of the holy law, and alarming him with fear of the threatened puniſhment, which the juſtice, and holineſs, and truth of God are concerned to ſee inflicted, in time and in eternity? Thus we read, "The ſting of death is ſin, "and the ſtrength of ſin is the law." Death has power to ſting, ſo long as the broken law gives ſin a right to accuſe and condemn: all unpardoned ſinners therefore are afraid of death. From this ſtate of fear and bondage our Lord came to ſave his people: "He came to deliver "them, who through fear of death were all their life-"time ſubject to bondage;" and he does deliver them, when their ſins are forgiven, and his righteouſneſs is imputed to them: for then the broken law

* About a week before Mr Hervey was taken ill, I mentioned to him a report that was ſpread about, concerning Mr Sandeman's Letters on Theron and Aſpaſio, to this effect: That he (Mr Hervey) had written a letter to Mrs Cooke, and therein had ſaid, that Mr Sandeman was in the right, and had convinced him of his error; or words to that purpoſe. To which he anſwered, That he had written a letter to Mrs Cooke, and therein he had acknowledged, that many of Mr Sandeman's remarks were judicious, and that he had corrected ſome of his expreſſions and inaccuracies. But he ſaid, that he was very far from having changed his opinion as to the ſubſtance and matter of the argument; for therein he thought Mr Sandeman was entirely wrong. Whereupon I deſired he would inſert an advertiſement in ſome of the London papers, ſigned by himſelf, to ſet this miſtake right, leſt it might hinder the ſale and reading of his books, and thereby prevent much good. To which he agreed; and added, that he would let that paragraph ſtand in his anſwer to Mr Weſley, relating to Mr Sandeman, only ſoftening the expreſſion a little: but all this was prevented by his illneſs and death. The truth of this I am ready to atteſt.

ABRAHAM MADDOCK,
Curate of Weſton-Favell.

cannot condemn, nor justice punish, there being no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus. Upon which death loses its sting; and when the pardoned sinner looks upon it, he sees nothing terrible in its appearance, but can boldly and without presumption say, "Yea, "when I walk through the valley of the shadow of "death, I will fear no evil: for thou my God art with "me."

And he is not only prepared to die because he is delivered from every thing that could make death dreadful, but also because he is in the possession of every thing that can make death desirable. He knows he has an interest in Christ, and Christ is the possessor of heaven and earth. He has all things in his hands, and has promised to make them all work together for the good of his redeemed people: so that whoever has Christ has all things. "All things," says the apostle, "are yours, "whether life or death, or things present or things to "come, all are yours." And the reason follows, "and "ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." As all that Christ has is yours, and all that God has is Christ's, consequently all is yours. And death by name is yours: no longer a curse and a punishment, but turned into a real blessing; for it is the gate and entrance, through which you pass into endless life and never-fading glory.

Thus he is prepared to depart, who has seen with the eye of faith the salvation of God. The doctrine is clear from scripture; but how is it, my brethren, in your experience? Are you prepared to depart; and on what do ye build your preparation? on the Lord Jesus, or on what? Search and see; for nothing can comfort you in the hour of death, but having received him into your hearts by faith and love. You must see his salvation, and be able to keep the eye of faith intent upon it, before you can be prepared to depart; but when this is your happy case, then in whatever shape death comes, you will be able to say with our dear brother, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation. He might well say, Mine eyes have seen thy salvation: for all that came near him were convinced that he had seen it. The effects shewed it. He had put off the old man, and had put on the new; and was under the influence of divine love to his adorable Saviour. The love of Jesus ruled in his heart; and was therefore constantly uppermost in his mouth. He loved to be telling of his salvation all the day long. And he did not talk like a professor full of mere head-knowledge; but what he spake had a warmth, and life, and power in it, which shewed that it came from his heart. He was perfectly enflamed with the love of his divine Lord and Master; and if you sat any time in his company, you could not help catching some of the holy flame. So that if strangers to his person may doubt of his experience of a Saviour's love, we who have conversed with him cannot. We are sure from what we saw and heard, that he had seen the salvation of God, and therefore was prepared to depart. He knew in whom he had believed, and was certain the power and the love of the dear Immanuel were in his interest; so that neither death, nor he that had the power of death, could hurt him.

A friend of mine was much with him on the 15th of December, and the discourse turned upon what Christ had done for his soul. Mr Hervey spake strongly and earnestly of the assurance of his faith, and of the great love of God in Christ to him. He declared, that the fear of death was taken from him; and it afterwards appeared, that death had no sting to hurt, nor the grave any power to get victory over him: for when death came, it found his mind in perfect peace. He had no uneasy apprehensions of dying, but had hopes full of glory and immortality. Doubtless then he had seen the salvation of God. The knowledge of salvation had been precious to him in life, and therefore he experienced the preciousness of it in death: for then he could give thanks to God for giving him the victory through Jesus Christ his Lord. Happy are they to whom God has given the knowledge of their salvation; they believe on good grounds, that their Saviour has brought them into a state of salvation; and therefore they are prepared to meet death, yea they can desire and pray for it, as Simeon did; which is the second particular I was to consider.

Simeon knowing that he was prepared, therefore desired to depart. And this is the believer's case. He longs for death, not out of an impatient discontented temper, but out of a real holy affection. When worldly men are oppressed with troubles on all sides, and see no way to escape, they are apt to desire death, that it may bring their misery to an end, and put them out of their pain. And there are some most miserable and abject cowards, who murder themselves to get rid of the troubles of life. These men court death as a less evil, but the believer desires it as a real blessing. He knows that his death will be to the glory of his Saviour; for it grieves him to the heart that he should ever do any thing displeasing to such a kind Benefactor. After receiving so many tokens of Christ's love, Oh it is indeed afflicting to give him the least offence. I appeal to yourselves. You that have the love of Jesus in your hearts, are not you sorry that you love him so little? Have not you reason daily to mourn for your ingratitude to him? and what will such thoughts suggest, but a desire to be where the very occasion of offence will be removed? It was on this account that Mr Hervey desired death: for the last morning of his life, when his brother came in to inquire after his welfare, he said, I have been thinking of my great ingratitude to my God. And these thoughts made him wish to be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

And he desired it as Simeon did, and all believers do, upon another motive, namely, because the Lord will get himself honour, by the honour which he will give to his people in his kingdom. He will be glorified, says the apostle, in his saints; he will get himself glory by the great glory which he will bestow upon them. And as the believer has, in all things, an eye to God's glory, so has he especially in his desires to be dissolved and to be with Christ. He knows that God is glorified in him, and by him at present; but then it is imperfectly, and that grieves him. Self, or the creature, will be trying to share the heart with God, and thereby to rob him of his glory. A bare thought of this, when only rising in the mind, hurts the believer. He would have every thought brought unto subjection to Christ; and that makes him desire to be where temptation and sin shall be no more, and where he shall glorify God, and God shall be glorified in him for ever and ever. With this view Mr Hervey desired to depart. His great love to his Saviour's glory made him wish for death. He longed to be dissolved, that he might be freed from the frailties and infirmities of this mortal life, under which he laboured, and could not always, nor in a perfect degree, promote the glory of his redeeming God; therefore he desired to be with them who follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, and are ever receiving glory from him, and ever giving glory to him. And the Lord granted his desire; he literally answered his prayer; for he departed in peace, according to the word of God, as I purposed to shew under my third head.

What it is to be at peace with God, and to depart with a sense of this peace upon our minds, I cannot better express, than in the excellent words of the present Archbishop of Canterbury, in his Nine Sermons, p. 132. "The peace of God is that sense of being in friend-"ship with him, that feeling of comfort and joy flow-

"ing

"ing from him, which passeth all understanding, exceeds "the conceptions of those who have not experienced "it, and will exceed hereafter the present conceptions of "those who have." And the believer, even when he is departing this life, has a sense of his being in friendship with God, and has a feeling of comfort and joy flowing from him. This is promised in scripture, and this is fulfilled to them who, being justified by faith, have peace with God: being reconciled to the Father through the Son of his love, they live, and they die in peace.

I suppose some weak in the faith are thinking thus within themselves: "Well, is it so, that true believers "die in peace and joy? I am sure I could not at pre"sent; for I am dreadfully afraid of death; and what "would not I give to be delivered from these fears? "for they make my life miserable." My brethren, why are you in bondage to them? God offers you deliverance. There are many general promises in his word, that let what will happen to believers, the peace of God shall rule in their hearts. Thus, Is. xxvi. 3. "Thou "wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is staid "upon thee." And as it is a perfect, so it is a continual peace. "The Lord of peace himself," says the apostle, 2 Thess. iii. 16. "give you peace always by all "means:" for after he has once given this peace, he makes all means, even the most unlikely, tend to the promoting of it; therefore death can by no means weaken, and much less destroy, this peace of God. These general promises he fulfilled to the patriarchs:—for St Paul says, Heb. xi. 13. "That they all died in faith:" —they acted faith in their death, and consequently had a sweet sense of the peace of God in their hearts when they died. David shews us the reason of their dying in faith, Psal. xlviii. 14. "This God is our God for ever "and ever, he shall be our guide even unto death."— They knew that their God would be with them to guide and keep them, when the body returned to dust, and the spirit returned to God who gave it: and therefore David spoke for himself what each of them also could say,—"When I walk through the valley of the shadow "of death, I will fear no evil, because thou my God art "then with me: thy rod and thy staff comfort me "even then," Psal. xxiii. 3. With this faith they looked upon death as disarmed of its sting and power to hurt; and therefore they laid down their heads, and fell asleep in the arms of death, with as much composure as any weary traveller ever longed for rest. They fell asleep. The scripture speaks of their death under this beautiful image, to teach us that death was as sweet to them as ever sleep was to a hard-labouring man.—— The faithful fell asleep quietly and composedly. And how should it be otherwise? they had no evil to fear; for they were at peace with God. And what could death do to hurt that peace? It does indeed dissolve all other bonds, but it strengthens this. It is the happy instrument of fastening the bond of peace with a tie which never can be dissolved. And when the faithful look upon death in this light, what is there in it but joy and peace, even a joy unspeakable, and a peace that surpasseth all understanding?

Perhaps some of you think this is not always the case; because there are very good men who have had strong conflicts and struggles before death. Nay, my brethren, think not so wickedly of God. Is it according to his word that the faithful shall depart in peace, and do they not? What! can the word of God be broken? No; it shall stand fast for ever and ever. And in the case which you state, it does not follow that this peace is weakened or destroyed, because it is tempted; by no means. The sense of this peace may remain when it is most furiously attacked; for it is the peace of God. God gave it, and God keeps it; and he may suffer the devil to tempt, but not to destroy it. The more it is tempted, the more honour redounds to God for preserving it in the fiery trial. It was more to God's glory to preserve his children in the fiery furnace, than to have kept them out of it. Doubtless he that has the power of death, will make his last efforts, and try to shake the faith of a dying believer. The devil will then set upon him with all his fury. But though he be a roaring lion, yet he is chained; and the almighty Saviour so over-rules his malice and rage, that he makes them work together for his glory and his people's good; as he did remarkably in the last efforts, which the enemy made against our dear brother. He saw him in great weakness of body, and then made a furious on-set against his faith; but the dear Immanuel was with him, and would not give him over into the enemy's hands. His faith was tried, and it came like gold out of the fire. He knew that it would be tried, and had therefore prepared himself for the fiery trial. Speaking of it to a faithful minister of Christ, who was often with him in his last sickness, he said,—"How many precious texts "are there, big with the rich truths of Christ, which we "do not comprehend, which we know nothing of; "and of those which we do know, how few do we re"member? Bonus textuarius est bonus theologus, and that "is the armour. The word of God is the sword; these "texts are the weapons, which I must use when that "subtle spirit, that arch adversary of mankind, comes to "tempt and sift me in my last conflict. Surely I had "need be well provided with these weapons, I had "need have my quiver full of them, to answer Satan "with texts out of the word of God when he assaults "me." Satan did assault him, but found him prepared and armed. Mr Hervey said to his friends the day that he died, "Oh you know not how great a conflict "I have." And after he had sat for some time with his eyes constantly lift up towards heaven, and his hands clasped together in a praying form, he said, "Now this "great conflict is over." Jesus made him conqueror over all the powers of darkness; having endeavoured to rob him of his peace; but in vain, they left him in the Saviour's arms, never more to be tempted; and he watched over him with the tenderest love, until he took him home. And when he went, he indeed departed in peace. His body seemed to be ready as well as his soul. When death came, he had not one struggle with it. There was not a single groan or sigh, or any thing that could shew the least unwillingness to depart. He had such a gentle dismission as he had prayed for in Simeon's words. He departed in peace, and fell asleep.

I have now finished what I had to offer upon the three particulars mentioned in my text; and it appears, that when a sinner is convinced of his want of a Saviour, and is convinced that Jesus is such a Saviour as he wants, able and willing to save to the uttermost, and when he is made to see his interest in the perfect complete righteousness of this adorable Saviour, and is assured of it from the word and Spirit of God, and from the fruits of righteousness produced in his life and conversation, then he is prepared to die; then he may desire it with submission to God's will; and whenever death comes, he may expect to depart in peace, according to the word of God. These great truths I have illustrated from scripture and from experience, more especially from the experience of our dear brother, now with the Lord, of whom I have spoken nothing more than what the words of my text naturally led me to say. If I were to attempt to draw the character of this excellent man, I would consider him in the several relations in which he stood to God and man, and would exhort you to follow him, so far as he followed Christ. But the compass of this discourse will not suffer me to enlarge. I can only just observe some particular instances, from whence it will evidently appear that he had seen the salvation of God

God. He had a clear view of it by the eye of faith, and was able to act faith upon it, for his was a faith working by love. "We love God," says the beloved apostle, "because he first loved us;" because we know by faith that he first loved us: so that our love is the reflex act of his love to us. And Mr Hervey had great experience of God's love to him, and therefore his heart was full of love to God; and out of the abundance of his heart his mouth spake. There was such a sweetness of heart-love upon his tongue, that he used to speak of the love of the adorable Redeemer, like one who had seen him face to face in the fulness of his glory. He would, with all the power of language and dignity of sentiment, speak for a long time together in praise of the ever-blessed Saviour. But you might plainly see, though every body else was pleased, yet he was not satisfied with what he had said. He thought he had not said enough, and what he had said fell far below his Lord's merit. But still he would try again, and indeed was never weary. You could not hear him speak for any time upon this his favourite subject, without being convinced that he felt what he said; and if you had any love of God, when you went into his company, his conversation would inflame it. He had an excellency, which I never saw to so great a degree in any other person. He never let an opportunity slip of speaking of the love of Christ. He would take occasion from the most common incident, and yet it would not appear forced: for he had a wonderful talent at spiritualizing and improving whatever happened about him; by which means he hindered the conversation from turning upon trifling matters, and, at the same time, kept it up with spirit and usefulness. Having set the Lord always before him, he saw the love of God in every thing, and therefore it is not to be wondered that all objects and events should give him occasion to speak of it. In his last sickness it continued still to be his favourite theme; for whenever my friend, who was much with him, came into the room, he would begin to talk of the love of Christ, and of the great things which Christ had done for him, until his breath failed him; and as soon as he had recovered himself a little, he would proceed upon the same sweet subject: so that he might have truly applied to himself the words of the prophet,—"My mouth shall be telling of thy righteousness and of "thy salvation all the day long; for I know no end "thereof."

This heart-love to God appeared evidently in every part of his character. As a minister, his faith wrought by love to the souls of men in all the offices of his function. While his health permitted him, he watched like a faithful shepherd over his flock. He used to visit them from house to house, and to speak freely to them of the state of their souls; and when the weakness of his body obliged him to drop these religious visits, he would often grieve, that he could not be more useful, and would speak with great concern and uneasiness of his not being able to preach oftener, and to do more for Christ. In the pulpit he was fervent and earnest with his people, and would often exert himself beyond his strength: for he preached the great doctrines of salvation, as one who had experienced the power of them. It was manifest to all who heard him, that he felt what he spake. And when we speak what we know, and testify what we have seen, then God blesses this experimental preaching. He puts a divine power and energy into it, and renders it effectual to awaken sinners, to comfort them that mourn for sin, and to edify and build up the faithful. Mr Hervey had many happy proofs of the usefulness of his preaching for each of these purposes; and therefore he did not think it enough to preach once a-week on the Lord's-day, but he set up a weekly lecture at Weston-Favell, which was very well attended, and was blessed to many of his neighbours, who will be his glory and crown of rejoicing in the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ, at his coming.

He did not forget that he was a minister in his own house; for he called his family together twice a-day to serve God. It was his custom in the evening, after the servants had read the Psalms and the second lesson, to explain some part of what had been read. In this exercise he would sometimes dwell for half an hour; and when he met with a sweet passage upon the love of Christ, I have heard him speak for three quarters of an hour, and then he concluded with prayer.

In the morning, when the family were met together, he used to ask the servants,—"Well! where was our "text last night?" And after they had repeated it, he made them give an account of what had been said upon it; and then he would repeat and enforce his last night's discourse, concluding with prayer.

In the afternoon, when he was called down to tea, he used to bring his Hebrew Bible or Greek Testament with him, and would either speak upon one verse or upon several verses, as occasion offered. This was generally an improving season. The glory of God is very seldom promoted at the tea-table; but it was at Mr Hervey's. Drinking tea with him was like being at an ordinance; for it was sanctified by the word of God and prayer.

As a member of society, his faith wrought abundantly by love to his neighbour: for he was full of good works. His charities to the poor were very large; and that he might be liberal to them, he was very frugal in his own expences. He chose rather to clothe the poor than to give them money. He used to get some judicious person to buy linen, coarse cloth, stockings, shoes, &c. for them at the best hand, alledging that the poor could not buy so good a commodity at the little shops and with driblets of money. "I am God's steward," says he, "for his poor, and I must husband the little "pittance I have to bestow upon them, and make it "go as far as possible." But where money would be particularly serviceable to a family long afflicted with sickness, or to a prudent housekeeper who had met with great losses in trade, he would give five, ten, or fifteen guineas at a time, taking care it should not be known from whence the money came.

He gave away a great number of good books, with suitable instructions for their use, and especially Bibles. In the blank leaf he frequently wrote something striking, or else stuck in a printed paper, relating to the promises of God in and through Jesus Christ.

Mr Hervey's income was but small, and it may be wondered how he managed it so well as to have such sums to spare for charitable uses; but what money was left, after the family-expences were paid, and all the profits arising from the sale of his books, which was a very considerable sum, he gave away in charity. He made of it a bank for the poor. "And this," says he, "I have devoted to God. I will on no account apply "it to any worldly uses. I write not for profit or for "fame, but to serve the cause of God; and as he has "blessed my attempt, I think myself bound to relieve "the distresses of my fellow-creatures with the profit "that comes from this quarter." And he is still relieving them. He was not willing that his charities should die with him; for he ordered all the profit arising from the future sale of his books to be constantly applied to charitable uses. Thus, having believed in God, he was careful to maintain good works, knowing that these things are good and profitable unto men.

In his private life he was under the influence of the same faith, working by love to the will and commandments of God. His holy walking was very exemplary. What he said, in words, concerning his interest in the Redeemer's righteousness, he proved by his actions; for he was very sensible of the importance of this scripture, "He that saith he abideth in him, ought "himself also to walk, even as he walked." (1 John ii.

(6) Mr Hervey walked very close after Christ; and found that the belief of Christ's righteousness being imputed to him for his justification, was so far from being a licentious doctrine, that it inspired him with the noblest motives to a grateful obedience. His holy life was an excellent recommendation of his principles: for I never saw one who came up so near to the scripture-character of a Christian. God had enriched him with great gifts, and with great graces, and had made him humble: for he was humbled by the power of grace. He had been a very vain proud young man; but the grace of God emptied him of pride and self, and clothed him with humility. Having put on Christ, he had put on with him the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit; which appeared in his great patience and resignation to the will of God. He had some very sharp trials of his faith and patience, both from God and from men, and he learned obedience by the things which he suffered. It was very remarkable, that in his long illness he was never known to fret or be uneasy; nor did the persons about him ever hear one angry, or one hasty word come out of his mouth.

The same principle of faith working by love was manifest in his studies, which he directed to the glory of God. He was once a great reader of the Greek and Roman authors, and his writings shew that he had a good taste for classical learning; but for some years past he chiefly applied himself to the study of the sacred scriptures. God had blessed him with a fine understanding, and a great memory, which he exercised in reading the Bible in the original languages. He was very well skilled in the Hebrew, and was an excellent critic in the Greek, and was a scribe instructed unto the kingdom of heaven, who, like unto a man that is an householder, bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old. He had a great veneration for this treasure of the Old and New Testaments. He used to talk of them in the highest terms, next to that adorable person of whom they treat. They were sweeter to him than honey and the honey-comb; and so they will be to every one who reads them, as he did, with faith. Whoever can act faith upon the exceeding great and precious promises contained in the sacred volume, will find so much sweetness in it, that he will have but little relish left for other books.

As to his writings, I leave them to speak for themselves. They stand in no need of my praises. They are in the hands of the public, and every reader will form his own judgment. Oh that the Spirit of the living God may direct it, that whoever reads his writings may learn to have no confidence in the flesh, but to make mention of Jehovah's righteousness, even of his only.

The time would fail me, if I was to enlarge upon all the particulars of his life and death. That was not my design. I only intended briefly to relate some things, from whence a tolerable judgment might be formed of Mr Hervey's character. But I cannot finish without taking notice of the last scene of his life, which was very triumphant and glorious. The last and great trial of his faith was more precious than that of gold which perisheth. Its preciousness never appeared more than in the hour of death; for then he evidently saw by faith, and apprehended the salvation of God, and could rejoice in a clear view of his own interest in it. When Dr Stonhouse saw him for the last time, namely, on Christmas-day, about two hours before he expired, Mr Hervey pressed home upon him his everlasting concerns, in the most affectionate manner; telling him that here is no abiding place, and begging of him to attend, amidst the multiplicity of his business, to the one thing needful.

The Doctor, seeing the great difficulty and pain with which he spoke, (for he was almost suffocated with phlegm and frequent vomitings,) and finding, by his pulse, that the pangs of death were then coming on, desired that he would spare himself. "No," says he, "Doctor, no. You tell me I have but few moments "to live; Oh let me spend them in adoring our great "Redeemer. Though my flesh and my heart fail me, "yet God is the strength of my heart, and my portion "for ever." He then expatiated in the most striking manner upon these words of St Paul, 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23.——"All things are yours, life and death: for ye "are Christ's." "Here," says he, "is the treasure of "a Christian. Death is reckoned amongst this inventory;—and a noble treasure it is. How thankful am "I for death, as it is the passage through which I pass "to the Lord and Giver of eternal life, and as it frees "me from all this misery you now see me endure, and "which I am willing to endure, as long as God thinks "fit! for I know he will, by and by, in his own good "time, dismiss me from the body. These light afflictions are but for a moment, and then comes an eternal weight of glory. Oh welcome, welcome death! "—Thou mayst well be reckoned among the treasures "of the Christian.——To live is Christ, but to die is "gain."

After which, as the Doctor was taking his final leave of him, Mr Hervey expressed great gratitude for his visits, though it had been long out of the power of medicine to cure him.——He then paused a little, and, with great serenity and sweetness in his countenance, though the pangs of death were then on him, repeated these triumphant words—

"Lord, now letteſt thou thy servant depart in peace, "according to thy most holy and comfortable word: for "mine eyes have seen thy precious salvation. Here, "Doctor, is my cordial. What are all cordials to the "dying, compared to the salvation of Christ? This, "this supports me."—He found this supporting him in his last moments, and declared it, by saying, twice or thrice, Precious salvation! and then, leaning his head against the side of the easy chair in which he sat, he shut his eyes, and fell asleep. Oh precious salvation! how precious must it be to the dying man, who, interested in it, can thank God for death, and reckon it among his riches; who, supported by faith in the salvation of God, can account it his gain to die; and can gladly say, Oh welcome, welcome death! May this faith support you, my brethren, when all other supports fail, and make salvation as precious to you as it was to Mr Hervey! and of this you may be assured, that what the Lord did for him he is able also to do for you. He was indeed a glorious instance of the power of grace; for by the grace of God he was what he was. And grace is free; as free for you as it was for him; able also to make you live and die as much to the glory of God as he did. He was truly a burning and shining light; but the Lord's hand is not shortened. It can make your light shine also before men, and enable you to adorn the doctrine of God your Saviour as much as Mr Hervey did. And the great use to be made of his example is, to stir you up to glorify God for the gifts and graces bestowed upon him, and to desire the same may be bestowed upon you.—With this view I shall apply it.

First, To those persons who have never seen the salvation of God, and, consequently, are not prepared to depart in peace; and these are all careless sinners, who live secure in the wilful commission of sin. Mr Hervey knew, that whenever the Lord should call him out of this life, he should be found in Christ, not having his own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith; and, clothed in this righteousness, he was certain that he should appear at the bar of justice without spot of sin, unto eternal salvation.——But this is not your experience. Nay, you have never been awakened to desire it. You have never been humbled under a ſenſe of your loſt condition, nor broken down under a conviction of your helpleſſneſs: ſo that you have never ſeen your want of a Saviour, and conſequently, have never ſeen the ſalvation of our God. If you entertain any hopes of departing in peace, while you are in this ſtate, you are of all men the moſt deceived; for when death comes, it will find you in your ſins unpardoned, without any faith in the Redeemer's righteouſneſs to make death deſirable, but with every thing that can make it terrible. The holy, juſt, and good law of the moſt high God will accuſe, conſcience will plead guilty, juſtice will condemn and puniſh, and the wrath of God will abide upon you for ever and ever. How is it poſſible you ſhould depart in peace, unleſs you die inſenſible? and that would be dreadful indeed. If ſin ſhould ſo far infatuate you, that you never awake out of its deluſive ſlumbers until you are are called to receive the wages of ſin. Oh think what ſort of a peace you ſpeak to yourſelves! ſince it leaves you in the greateſt danger, and, at the ſame time, inſenſible of it. To depart in ſuch a falſe peace, would be your everlaſting deſtruction. Oh Sirs, conſider then what a deluſion you are under! The wrath of an offended God abideth on you, the curſes of his broken law hang over your guilty heads, and you are liable to the vengeance of his almighty juſtice; and yet you think yourſelves ſafe. You are ſaying, Peace, peace, while all the powers in heaven and earth are at war with you, and in a moment you may be cut off, and delivered over to the tormentors; and then you will have a ſad and eternal experience of that awful threatening, "There is no "peace, ſaith my God, to the wicked."

Men and brethren, what do you ſay to theſe things? Are they true, or are they not? If they be true, why are you not influenced by them? And if you think them not true, why do you make any profeſſion of the Chriſtian religion? why do you come to the houſe of God to attend upon his ordinances? Your appearance here ranks you among profeſſors; and if you keep up the form, without the power of godlineſs, I have for you, in the ſecond place, a word of reproof.

There have ariſen, in the latter days, mockers, who pretend to ridicule the ſeeing of the ſalvation of God, and the being thereby prepared to depart in peace.—Poſſibly there may be ſome ſuch amongſt us to-day, who laugh at all vital and experimental religion. If there be, I would aſk them, whether the ſcripture has not promiſed deliverance from the fear of death? Is it not written, (Heb. ix. 15.) "That Chriſt came to "deliver them who through fear of death, were all "their life-time ſubject to bondage?" Obſerve, they were in bondage to the fear of death, but Chriſt came to deliver them. And did not he attain the end for which he came? Moſt certainly he did. "I have fi-"niſhed, ſays he to his Father, "the work which thou "gaveſt me to do." Now, it was the part of the work to deliver his people from the fear of death; and as the work was finiſhed, conſequently they are delivered. And they ſay they are. They atteſt it, and they have given the moſt convincing proofs of their having conquered all fear of death: they have been afflicted, tormented, ſtoned, ſawn aſunder, put on the rack; and yet they would not accept deliverance, becauſe they were ſure of obtaining a better reſurrection.—And of theſe there have not been two or three only, but a noble and numerous army, yea, a great multitude, whom no man could number; and, glory be to God, it is an increaſing multitude: there are ſome who daily depart in peace, and there are hundreds, thouſands now alive, who are waiting for their departure with hopes full of immortality; and why ſhould you think they will be diſappointed of their hope? Will Chriſt break his word? can his promiſe fail? No his word and his promiſe ſhall be eſtabliſhed, when heaven and earth ſhall be no more; and until the place of them ſhall not be found, the Lord will always have ſuch witneſſes of the truth of the doctrine in my text, as Mr Hervey, who will depart this life in the triumph of faith.

Againſt theſe plain facts what can you object? They are founded upon the clear promiſes of ſcripture, which are literally fulfilled at this very day; and you can have no pretence to reject their authority, unleſs you run into downright ſcepticiſm, and deny the authority of the holy ſcriptures. If any of you have arrived at this pitch of ridicule, I ſhall not reaſon with you at preſent. Let the day decide the point. If death does not, judgment will. You will be forced to be tried by that book which you reject, and by that Judge whom you have inſulted and vilified. O that you may be convinced of your error before it be too late! May God open your eyes to ſee your guilt and your danger, that you may ſue for mercy along with them who are ſeeking the experience of the doctrine in my text; to whom I have, in the third place, a word of comfort.

I ſuppoſe there are many perſons here, who find the ſting of death in their guilty conſciences, and who therefore deſire to be delivered from the fear and from the power of death. My brethren, there is a glorious Deliverer, who has, in his own perſon, conquered death, and him that had the power of death; and he is able to make you conquerors. His power is almighty: for he is the Lord God omnipotent; and he is an all-loving Saviour, who is more ready to give, than you are to aſk, his promiſed help. Since he has ſhewn you your want of it, aſk and you ſhall have, ſeek and you ſhall find.

You do ſeek, you ſay, but it is with many doubts and fears. Of what do you doubt? of Chriſt's power or of Chriſt's love? He can deliver you. All things are poſſible to him, becauſe all power in heaven and earth is in his hands. And he is a God of love; he has ſhewed mercy to the greateſt of ſinners, and has ſhed his love abroad in their hearts. He has given them faith to ſee their intereſt in him, and then they were happy, living or dying: for whether they lived, they lived unto the Lord; or whether they died, they died unto the Lord: ſo that living and dying they were the Lord's.

True, ſay you, I believe this was the happy caſe of Mr Hervey, and of many others; but I am full of doubts and fears, becauſe I am ſuch an unworthy creature, that I do not deſerve any mercy. Nor did they: God did not treat them upon the footing of deſert; what he gave them was mere bounty, flowing from the riches of his unmerited love. That is the way in which he beſtows his great ſalvation. All the bleſſings of it are free, as free for one ſinner as for another. None are excluded, becauſe they are great ſinners; Paul found mercy: and none are rejected, becauſe of their unworthineſs; Mary Magdalen was pardoned; and why may not you? For all the gifts of God flow from his free grace, and are beſtowed upon unworthy ſinners; and if you are one of them, you are a proper object to receive the bleſſings of free grace; and the ſenſe of your unworthineſs ſhould make you more earneſt in aſking, but it is no bar to your receiving, all the bleſſings of ſalvation; for Jeſus Chriſt aſſures us in his word, "that he came to ſeek "and to ſave that which was loſt;" ſuch loſt ſinners as you are.

Thus you ſee what encouragement you have to believe in God. You have his word and his promiſe to rely upon; you have the teſtimony of God's people, declaring that they were once, as you are, afraid of death, but now Chriſt has taken away the fear of it. They have ſeen the ſalvation of God, and know by faith, that all the bleſſings of it are freely given them in Chriſt Jeſus; therefore they are ready, they deſire depart. May the tender mercies of our God bring every one of you into this happy ſtate! And to thoſe who are already in it, I make my fourth remark.

to

My Chriſtian friends and brethren, you have ſeen the ſalvation of God, and are delivered from the fear of death: what return will you make unto the Lord for all the benefits which he hath done unto you? Certainly you will not forget the great things which he has already given you, and the greater things for which you are waiting; and let theſe conſiderations conſtrain you to love this divine Benefactor, and to ſerve him without fear, in an holy obedience, all the days of your lives. Give evidence of the ſincerity of your love, as your Lord requires; "If ye love me, keep my commandments:"—Keep near to me in my ways, and walk cloſe with me in mine ordinances, and you will not only thereby give proof of your love, but it will alſo grow exceedingly; and as it grows, your deſire to depart will grow with it; for when the love of Chriſt rules in the heart, you will be ready, yea, you will deſire to depart, and to be with him. This was the happy experience of our deceaſed brother; and let his example ſtir you up to great care and watchfulneſs in your holy walking heavenwards, that your faith may be always working by love, as his did. Conſider the graces of his life, and ſeek the ſame. Stop not ſhort, but try to get beyond him. Conſider his death. Remember with what perfect aſſurance he ſpake of his intereſt in Chriſt, and what ſtrong proofs he gave of it; and then pray that your faith may ſtand as unſhaken as his was in that great time of trial. And, above all, forget not what ſupported him in his laſt moments; it was the clear view he had of his intereſt in the great ſalvation of God:—— "This, this," ſays he, "ſupports me,"—now at the approach of death. Oh how precious did ſalvation then appear to him, when he found death coming diſarmed, and without a ſting! and it grew ſtill more precious, when, with his laſt breath, he declared, that death had no power to hurt the peace of God, which ruled in his heart; for even then he found ſalvation precious. You need not fear, my brethren, but this will be your happy experience. God has given you the knowledge of ſalvation by the remiſſion of your ſins; and as your faith grows exceedingly, ſalvation will grow exceedingly precious. The greater experience you hereby get of the love of Chriſt, the more will you be ſupported under the trials of life, and the better prepared for the trials of death. You will find, that the ſweet ſenſe of Chriſt's love in the heart will enable you to rejoice in ſuffering, and then you need not fear but it will enable you to rejoice in the ſufferings of death. For who or what ſhall ſeparate believers from the love of Chriſt? Shall the troubles of life, or the pains of death? ſhall tribulation, or diſtreſs, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſs, or peril, or ſword? No; in all theſe things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. More than conquerors! Oh glorious warfare, in which believers not only conquer their enemies, but alſo reap innumerable and endleſs bleſſings to themſelves. Even death is to them a real bleſſing; they expect it, they find it ſo, and they are more than conquerors over it, through him that loved them.

In the laſt place, I muſt put you all in remembrance, that neither the words of my text, nor what has been ſaid upon them, will be of any benefit without a bleſſing from God. We cannot ſee his ſalvation with the eye of faith, nor experience the power of it, without the help of his grace. It is from him, who has done all for us, that all muſt be done in us; and if ſome good impreſſions have been made this day upon any of your hearts, they will ſoon wear away, unleſs he preſerve and ſtrengthen them. If you deſire, at preſent, to live Mr Hervey's life, and to die his death, this deſire will be ineffectual, unleſs it be carried into act by the mighty working of God's Spirit: he is all in all. For which reaſon we always begin and always end the hearing of the word with prayer; being aſſured, that if Paul ſhould plant, and Apollos ſhould water, yet it would be to no purpoſe, unleſs God ſhould give the increaſe. Oh that it may be abundant this day to his glory, and to the good of your ſouls. To that end let us pray—

O almighty and moſt merciful God, we humbly beſeech thee to look down with mercy upon this congregation, and to bleſs the words which we have heard this day with our outward ears. Make them the means of opening the blind eyes which have never ſeen their want of thy ſalvation. Lord, enlighten them, and help them to ſeek, until they find pardon and peace in thee. Be gracious to thoſe who are now waiting upon thee, believing, that after they have ſeen thy ſalvation, they ſhall be able to depart in peace. O Lord God, manifeſt it unto them, and add this day to the number of thoſe who have ſeen and experienced it. We deſire to glorify thee for every living Chriſtian who knows in whom he has believed, and is ready and prepared to depart in peace. We give all the praiſe to the riches of thy free grace. And we alſo bleſs thy holy name for all thy ſervants departed this life in thy faith and love, beſeeching thee to give us grace ſo to follow their good examples, as they followed Chriſt; that with them we may be partakers of thy heavenly kingdom. Grant this, O Father, for Jeſus Chriſt's ſake, our only Mediator and Advocate; to whom, with thee, and the Holy Spirit, three co-equal perſons in one Jehovah, be honour, and glory, and bleſſing, and praiſe, for ever and ever. Amen.

REMARKS ON
LORD BOLINGBROKE's LETTERS ON THE STUDY and USE of HISTORY;
SO FAR AS THEY RELATE TO THE HISTORY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT, AND ESPECIALLY TO THE CASE of NOAH, denouncing a Curse upon CANAAN.
In a LETTER to a LADY of QUALITY.

Merſes profundo, pulchrior evenit. HOR.

PREFACE.

THE reader will ſee, from the date of the following letter, that it was written a conſiderable time ago. From which circumſtance he will probably conclude, that it was not intended for publication. A conjecture which is perfectly juſt. The publication is owing to the Right Honourable perſonage, whoſe name, though it would grace and recommend his papers, the author is not allowed to mention. Her Ladyſhip's commands, which would admit of no excuſe, drew the remarks from his pen; and her deſire, which with him will always have the force of a command, has brought them to the preſs.——It will give him the higheſt pleaſure, if, while he is paying the debt of obedience and gratitude to a Noble friend, he may ſupport the dignity of the divine word; may raiſe its eſteem, and promote its ſtudy among men: becauſe then he may reaſonably hope to promote the beſt intereſts of his fellow-creatures; and ſubſerve that grand deſignation of the almighty Majeſty, expreſſed by the pſalmiſt,—Thou haſt magnified thy word above all thy name *.

* Pſal. cxxxviii. 2.

A LETTER.

MADAM,

AS you was pleaſed to aſk my opinion concerning LORD BOLINGBROKE's remarks on the ſcriptural hiſtory, I have procured the book; have peruſed what relates to the ſubject; and ſubmit to your judgment the thoughts which occurred: aſſuring your Ladyſhip, that, though many might diſcuſs the point much more clearly and ſatisfactorily than the perſon you favoured with your commands; yet no one can think it a greater honour to receive them, or a greater pleaſure to execute them.

"The Old Teſtament," it is alledged, "is no ſuffi-"cient foundation for chronology from the beginning of "time *."—To enter upon the niceties of chronology, would, perhaps, be too difficult a reſearch; at leaſt, it would require from your Ladyſhip a more painful attention, than I ſhould chuſe to occaſion by any of my letters. And I very frankly own, that I am by no means maſter of the argument, nor equal to the taſk. Others, I don't doubt, whoſe inclination has diſpoſed, and whoſe genius has fitted them for this particular ſtudy, will undertake to decide the queſtion, and give the honour where the honour is due.——This, however, from a very ſcanty ſurvey of the caſe, I can eaſily diſcern; that the chronologer will no where find ſuch memorable events for fixing his æras, nor ſuch early and ſubſtantial aids for computing his time, as from the Moſaic monuments, and the ſacred annals.

From the beginning of the world to the flood, we have an orderly gradation of time, marked out by the lives of ten eminent patriarchs.——From the flood, we may proceed to that glorious promiſe of a Redeemer, made to Abraham; In thy ſeed ſhall all the nations of the earth be bleſſed *.——From this promiſe, to the miraculous deliverance of the Iſraelites from Egyptian bondage. ——From thence, to the building of Solomon's temple; which was an illuſtrious type † of that divine perſon, in whom dwells all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily.—— From the building of this magnificent ſtructure, to the demolition of it by the Babylonian monarch.——From thence, to the conqueſt of Babylon by Cyrus the Perſian. ——And from the reign of Cyrus, to that grand, that moſt important of all tranſactions, the death of Meſſiah the Prince; when he finiſhed the tranſ-

* See Lord Bolingbroke's letters on the ſtudy and uſe of hiſtory, vol. i. page 98.

* Gen. xxii. 18. † John ii. 21.

greſſion,

...and made an end of sins, and made reconciliation for iniquity, and brought in everlasting righteousness *.

The intermediate spaces, between each of these very distinguished periods, may, I believe, be ascertained, to a considerable degree of exactness, from the sacred volumes. If so, this will constitute a more comprehensive and perfect system of chronology, than can be derived from the Olympiads of the Grecians, or the Hegira of the Mahometans; from the Persian, the Roman, or any other epocha.

But the history of the Old Testament is much more necessary to be known, and much more easy to be understood. Yet this, my Lord suggests, is not a complete history of the first ages †.—We allow the suggestion. It neither is, nor has materials for, a complete universal history. It pretends to nothing more, than to relate the affairs of one particular family; in which the church of GOD was to subsist, and from which the SAVIOUR of men was to spring. Nevertheless, so many collateral incidents are touched upon, so many branches of this main stream are occasionally pursued, as present us with a collection of the most ancient, the most curious, and most instructive facts.

Here we are brought acquainted with the creation of the world, and the formation of man. The origin of evil, both natural and moral, is discovered in the fall of our first parents; and the displeasure of GOD against sin, is manifested by the waters of a general deluge.—Here we see the preservation of our species in the ark, and repeopling of the earth by Noah; the invention of polite arts ‡, and the rise of useful manufactures ‖; the establishment of nations, and the founders of their principal kingdoms §. Not to add, that these records are the royal archives, in which the charter of our sovereignty over the creatures is preserved, and the original draught of the covenant of grace ¶ deposited.—Here then, may we not challenge any, or all the books, written in every language under heaven? What memoirs go so far back into antiquity? what memoirs are so interesting to all mankind?—Had they been transmitted to us by any Grecian or Roman author, how would they have been admired and valued! how lavishly, and indeed how justly, praised!

Another excellency of these writings (and peculiar to these alone) is, That they not only reach backward, as far as the very birth of things; but proceed forwards, even into the remotest futurity.—They foretold the ruin of Babylon ††, the noblest, the best fortified, and most commodiously situated metropolis in the universe; who said, and no one would have suspected it to be a vain boast, I shall be a lady for ever ‡‡. Yet the scriptures pronounced her utter destruction ==, and specified the person who should bring about this great catastrophe.—They pointed out the place of his abode ≈;—they described him by several distinguishing circumstances —;—they particularized the genius of his warlike enterprizes * *;—they mentioned his very name * ;—all this, some hundreds of years before the event took place, or the conqueror was born.

They foretold the rejection and calamities of the disobedient Jews, who are the chief subject of their history; (and this, surely, could not be with a view to aggrandize their nation, or to answer any sinister design): that they should be subdued by their enemies, lose the favour of their GOD, and the possession of their native land; yet not be settled, as a colony, in some particular tract of the victor's dominions, but be scattered abroad under the whole heavens †.——This was threatened by their JEHOVAH,—this is recorded in their books,—and this is, even now, so remarkably fulfilled, as to be a fact of the utmost notoriety. Go into the most polite or most barbarous countries, the nearest or most distant parts of the world; you will, every where, find living evidences of this scriptural prediction.

The scriptures speak in the most explicit and peremptory terms, with regard to the restoration of the Jews ‡.——This restoration could not be effected, at least could not be observed, if they had been blended and incorporated with the inhabitants of other climes. Therefore, to be a presumptive proof of its accomplishment; and to render it, when accomplished, the most observable of all revolutions; they have subsisted a distinct people, amidst all the regions whither they have been driven.——A most singular and astonishing circumstance! How soon were the Danes, the Saxons, and the Normans, mingled with the Britons! and how entirely are they all melted down and lost among the natives of our isle! But the Jews, like a drop of oil on the water, have continued a separate community; and, through dispersed into all nations, are not, through the long course of seventeen hundred years, embodied with any.——This is such a peculiarity in the dispensations of providence, as I can never sufficiently admire: and is, I think, an undeniable voucher to the authenticity of the scriptures; held forth, as it were by the hand of Omnipotence, in the sight of all the world.

Such events the ancient scriptures foretell, and such facts they relate; facts of incomparable grandeur, and events of the greatest importance. All which are delivered in such a majestic simplicity of style, as nothing

* Dan. ix. 24. † Pag. 83.

‡ Gen. iv. 21. ‖ Gen. iv. 20. 22.

§ Gen. chap. x. Which, though but little adverted to, is the noblest piece of geographical antiquity extant in the world. It shews us how the whole earth, from the three sons of Noah, was overspread, inhabited, and denominated. It discovers the true source of the several nations; about which profane authors either say nothing at all, or else say what is chimerical, precarious, false.

¶ Gen. i. 28. † Gen. iii. 15. †† Is. xiii. 19. &c. xvii. 24. ‡‡ Is. xlvii. 7. == Is. xiii. 19. 20. &c. xvi. 23. ≈ Is. xlvi. 11.

* That he should besiege and take the most impregnable of cities, Is. xlv. 1. 2.;—that he should enrich himself with immense spoils, Is. lv. 3.;—that he should not be a tyrant, but a shepherd to the captive Jews;—should release them from their captivity, and both permit and promote the rebuilding of their temple, Is. xliv. 28.

 He is called a ravenous bird, Is. xlvi. 11. denoting his speed, agility, and great expedition. Which were more like the flight of a swift-winged bird, (this is the exact sense of the original עיט, than the march of an army, with all its encumbrances. This is acknowledged by Tigranes, in his first expostulatory discourse with Cyrus: Ταχει δε τοσουτῳ περιεσῃ αυτων ωστε πορρωθεν αφικομενων σου πολλω σοφω, πριν τους παρ' εκεινων δυναμιν αθροισασθαι. You far exceed the king of Armenia in the subtleness of your motions, that, before he could get together the few forces quartered in his neighbourhood, you are come from a distant country, and have surrounded him with a large army. Xenoph. Cyropæd. lib. III.——Thus Alexander, whose marches and whose victories were almost incredibly swift, is beautifully and exactly characterized by the prophet Daniel: As I was considering, behold! an he-goat came from the west on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground. Chap. viii. 5. No orator, with all the powers of language, could more beautifully have described the rapidity and the extent of the Macedonian conquests; nor could any historian, though writing after the accomplishment of the events, have described them more exactly.

* Is. xliv. 28. xlv. 1. † Deut. xxviii. 64. Amos ix. 9.

‡ Ezek. xi. 17. Amos ix. 14. 15. Zech. xiv. 10. 11. I have not ventured to determine, whether this restoration of the Jews is to be understood of a return to their own country, or of their conversion to the faith of CHRIST. Though I think, the latter is the meaning of the Holy Spirit; will be no less wonderful than the former; and seems to be supported by such passages as the following.—They shall look on ME, whom they have pierced, and mourn. The gift of repentance, not the circumstance of place, is the material point, Zech. xii. 10.—When it shall turn, not the tribes of Israel to Jerusalem, but the heart of the Israelites to the LORD, 2 Cor. iii. 16.—Then all Israel shall be saved, Rom. xi. 26. shall be made partakers of the gospel, of its sacred privileges, and its great salvation. In which they will enjoy all, more than all the blessings, which Canaan could afford. Of which, that goodly land, in its utmost fertility, affluence, and glory, was but a type.

can equal but their preciſe veracity.—Yet theſe books Lord Bolingbroke diſparages; and, at the ſame time, extols the writings of Tacitus.—The remains of Tacitus, he tells us, "are precious remains *;" Thoſe of the holy ſcripture "are dark and imperfect accounts †." In Tacitus, "hiſtory preſerves her integrity, and her "luſtre ‡." In the holy ſcripture, inſtead of hiſtory, you have "an heap of fables; which can pretend to "nothing but ſome inſcrutable truths, and therefore "uſeleſs to mankind ‖."—Every line of Tacitus has weight ⊥, and cannot be mentioned without admiration. Whereas, the ſacred hiſtory is put upon a level with the extravagancies of Amadis of Gaul +, and "can never gain ſufficient credit from any reaſonable "man ++."

Who is this uncircumciſed Philiſtine, ſaid David, that he ſhould defy the armies of the living GOD =? And who is this Tacitus, would I aſk, this darling author, that he ſhould be raiſed to the ſkies, while the divine hiſtorians are trodden to the duſt?——If your Ladyſhip is unacquainted with his character, let me give it in the words of a moſt elegant and maſterly critic. "Having "conſidered the principal qualities of Tacitus as a "writer and an hiſtorian, I cannot help thinking, "that there is a falſe ſublime and affectation in his "deſcriptions; a ſcurrility and ſatirical vein, with "too epigrammatical a conciſeneſs in his wit; an a-"cuteneſs, but too ſpeculative, and a policy over-re-"fined in his obſervations; a malignant and ill-natur-"ed turn in his characters; a philoſophy too abſtract-"ed and elevated in his reaſonings, and a vanity in his "learning. In ſhort, that he is in antiquity a pedant; "in the philoſophy of nature a ſceptic; in morals "looſe; in deſcription gaudy and pompous; in poli-"tics ſubdolous, refined, and knaviſh **."

Yet this is the writer that muſt be placed in ſuch great ſuperiority to Moſes, Joſhua, and Samuel; this the hiſtory (riſe Criticiſm, and reſent the indignity!) that is ſpoken of with applauſe and rapture, even while the ſacred annals are treated with diſreſpect and obloquy.

I might recount the glorious privileges exhibited in this bleſſed book; the ineſtimable promiſes made to the righteous; the tenderly-compaſſionate invitations addreſſed to ſinners; the refined and exalted diſplays of morality; with many other noble particulars;—which it is the prerogative of ſcripture to contain,—the wiſdom of mankind to believe,—and the only felicity of our nature to be intereſted in them, and influenced by them.

But my Lord is ready to agree on theſe topics. He expreſſes, in ſome places at leaſt, no diſlike of the doctrinal and prophetical parts.——Nay, he has contrived an expedient to reſcue them from the diſhonour which he would bring upon the hiſtorical. He allows the former to be written under the inſpiration of the holy and unerring Spirit. The latter, he affirms, are "purely human, and therefore fallible ††."—Proceeding upon this ſuppoſition, he ſcruples not to repreſent them, as the devices of craft, or the blunders of ignorance *.

I muſt beg leave to obſerve, that ſuch a diſtinction is without the leaſt ground of reality to ſupport it; and would, if admitted, be an effectual method to ſubvert the whole of revelation. For, if it could be proved, that the authors of this hiſtory were ſo weak as to fall into palpable errors, where a common degree of ſagacity would have ſecured them from miſtaking; or if they were ſo treacherous as to palm upon the world a multiplicity of forgeries; ſo impious as to aſcribe their falſehoods to the GOD of truth; this would at once ruin their character as men, and deſtroy their credit as writers. At this rate, who could depend upon their teſtimony in any point whatever?

Beſides, many of the doctrinal parts of ſcripture refer to, and are derived from, the hiſtorical. If the latter were a parcel of impoſitions and miſtakes, what degree of veracity or dignity could the former claim? If the foundation is a bubble, how can the ſuperſtructure ſtand?—Whether his Lordſhip, by ſuch a ſpecious pretence of ſerving the intereſts of true religion, intended ſecretly to undermine it, I will not preſume to ſay. But this I may venture to declare, that his ſcheme is very ſhrewdly calculated to compaſs ſuch an end. Grant what his Lordſhip aſks; and what all the enemies of Chriſtianity wiſh, will undoubtedly follow.

Farther, Madam,—ſuch a diſtinction is contrary to the expreſs declaration of the New Teſtament; which poſitively aſſerts, that ALL ſcripture is given by inſpiration of GOD †.—Our bleſſed LORD, who was very well qualified to diſcern truth, and equally zealous to maintain it, makes no ſuch difference.——He ſays in general, Search the ſcriptures ‡; the whole collection of ſacred writings.—Whatſoever things, adds St Paul, not ſome particular paſſages only, but WHATSOEVER THINGS were written aforetime, were written for our learning ‖; and muſt therefore have been under ſuch a divine ſuperintendency, as ſecured them from all poſſibility of error. Otherwiſe, they might be written, not for our learning, but for our deception.——So that St Paul's direction is as contrary to Lord Bolingbroke's diſtinction, as the eaſt is oppoſite to the weſt. We may as ſoon bring thoſe two points of the hemiſphere together, as reconcile his Lordſhip's refinements with the apoſtle's religion.

I believe, it will be equally difficult to render his Lordſhip conſiſtent with himſelf.——His conceſſion overthrows his diſtinction.——Admitting the doctrinal parts of the ſcripture to be true, the veracity of the hiſtorical is, by neceſſary conſequence, and beyond all contradiction, eſtabliſhed. They are indiſſolubly connected: they mutually bear on, and mutually ſuſtain each other; and muſt ſtand or fall together. They are like an arch moſt exactly finiſhed; not a ſtone of which can be taken away, without diſconcerting the whole ſtructure; and like an arch, firmly founded, as well as correctly finiſhed, the more they are preſſed, the ſtronger they will appear.

My Lord ſays indeed, That "CHRIST came not "to conſecrate all the written traditions of the Jews ⊥." He ſays it, but where or how does he prove it?—By written traditions of the Jews, I ſuppoſe we are to underſtand all the Hebrew ſcriptures. The drift of the diſcourſe leads us to this ſenſe. Now, it is apparent, that our Saviour has actually conſecrated, has ſet the ſeal of authenticity and infallibility to the law of Moſes, to the pſalms, and to the prophets ++. By appealing to them as deciſive, and by allowing them to be predictive, he has acknowledged them to be divine.

* Page 161. † Page 108. ‡ Page 161.
‖ Page 121. ⊥ Page 161. + Page 121.
++ Page 118.——If, in the pages I have referred to, and the ſentences I have quoted, my Lord does not aim at the ſcriptural records, I ſhall very willingly, nay, moſt gladly acknowledge myſelf miſtaken. To me, after a repeated and attentive peruſal of the paſſages, he appears to mean thoſe, and thoſe principally. ——He means, according to his own profeſſion, ſuch ancient hiſtory as he had been deſcribing (ſee page 118.), and I am very ſure, the principal ſubject of the preceding ſheets was the ſacred.—But why ſhould not his Lordſhip ſpeak his ſentiments plainly? Is it for want of ingenuity? or owing to diffidence in the cauſe? = 1 Sam. xvii. 26.

 The treatiſe, which furniſhes me with this extract, is written by Mr Hunter; is entitled, Obſervations on Tacitus; and, if my reader has not peruſed them, I dare venture to aſſure him, that he has one of the higheſt entertainments in polite literature yet to come. See page 184. †† Page 96.

* That this is no aggravated imputation, every attentive reader of his Lordſhip's letters will eaſily perceive; and I believe, it will appear too plainly from the paſſages to be produced in the ſequel of this epiſtle. † 2 Tim. iii. 16. ‡ John v. 39.
‖ Rom. xv. 4. ⊥ Page 94. ++ Luke xxiv. 44.

ly inſpired; to be unqueſtionably true. And a very little acquaintance with Jewiſh antiquities will inform us, that, in theſe three partitions, the whole body of the Hebrew ſcriptures is comprehended?——What then becomes of his Lordſhip's aſſertion? or to whoſe diſcredit does it tend? that of the Jewiſh ſcriptures, or that of his own knowledge?

I muſt deſire your Ladyſhip to take notice of the expreſſion in this paſſage. It is ſomewhat ſingular, and deſerves a particular regard. Written traditions is the phraſe. Every one knows that we explode, and very juſtly, thoſe ſuperſtitious whimſies of the Jews, which paſs under the denomination of traditions. Yet my Lord thinks proper, to call the hiſtories of the Old Teſtament by this diſreputable name; only he admits one difference, that whereas the former were tranſmitted by ſtrength of memory, the latter are committed to writing.——But is this an honeſt repreſentation? is this free from all malignant diſguiſe?

Let us put the matter to the following trial. The word legend, when applied to any modern ſtory, raiſes the ſame contemptible and abſurd idea, as the word tradition excites, when applied to any Jewiſh notion. Would my Lord, or would his friends think, that due honour or common juſtice was done to his ſketch of the hiſtory and ſtate of Europe, if it ſhould be ſtyled, in our public papers, Lord Bolingbroke's written legends?——The impropriety and the malevolence of ſuch a title would be undeniable and odious: Who then can vindicate the propriety of his Lordſhip's language, or clear it from being a moſt injurious miſrepreſentation of the ſacred records? which, however ſome of the facts might come down, in a traditionary channel, to the writers, by paſſing through their hands, receive the ſtamp of undoubted certainty; and are no longer traditions, but oracles.

I wiſh, this had been the only inſtance of artifice and impoſition uſed in the letters under examination.——Why are ſo many idle tales, and ſcandalous ſtories, raked together, and expoſed to view *?——Why? but to put a cheat upon the inattentive reader, and depretiate † the dignity of the divine word? depretiate it, much in the ſame manner, as its moſt illuſtrious object and author was formerly diſhonoured; not only by the falſe accuſations, with which he was charged; but alſo by the infamous company, with whom he was numbered.——Did my Lord imagine, that theſe tales were really believed, even by the warmeſt advocates for holy writ? No: he muſt know in his conſcience, that they never were received by the generality of divines; neither are mentioned by authors of diſcernment, unleſs it be to confute and reject them.——However, be they credited or not, it was apprehended, they might ſerve a purpoſe. But whether it be the purpoſe of integrity, impartiality, and truth, I leave to the determination of others.

Still it is urged, That theſe ſcriptures are "full of "additions, interpolations, and tranſpoſitions ‡."——That they are full of additions, is more eaſily aſſerted, than evinced. I can find but one inſtance ſpecified by his Lordſhip. Which is the account "of the death and "ſepulture of Moſes, with a ſort of funeral panegyric *," recorded in the laſt chapter of Deuteronomy. Here it is taken for granted, that we are reduced to a terrible dilemma,—either to own, that this paragraph was written by Moſes himſelf; and then we may expect to hear of impoſſibility and abſurdity;—or elſe, that it is all ſuppoſitious; and then the ſcriptures muſt have paſſed through tampering fingers, and ſuffered adulteration?—But ſuppoſe this ſmall appendix was made by Joſhua; a man, whoſe mind was illuminated, and his hand guided, by the Spirit of the Moſt High? Does ſuch an addition deſerve to be branded with an ignominious, or even brought into diſeſteem by a ſuſpicious character?—Or, what if ſome other prophet, whoſe name is unknown, ſuperadded this valuable anecdote? Is the concealment of the penman's name ſufficient to impeach the genuineneſs, or invalidate the authority, of the paſſage? eſpecially, ſince it has been approved by other inſpired writers, and received the Imprimatur of the Holy Ghoſt?—I know not who is the printer of his Lordſhip's two volumes; yet, though ignorant of this circumſtance, for other very ſatisfactory reaſons, I have no doubt but they are the genuine productions of his pen.

My Lord would have done well to conſider,—whether it was a probable or a practicable thing, to interpolate a ſet of books, which were ſtudied with ſo much accuracy, and kept with ſo much vigilance; the number of whoſe verſes, eſpecially in the Pentateuch, was computed; and the arrangement of the very letters known.—Whether, after the coming of Chriſt, the jealous eye which the Jews and Chriſtians had on each other, was not an inſurmountable bar againſt any innovations or material alterations?——As for tranſpoſitions, they are uſed by the moſt approved hiſtorians. When uſed with judgment, they redound to the reputation of the writer, and increaſe the pleaſure of the reader. And would his Lordſhip make that a diſparagement of the ſacred narrative, which is a recommendation of any ordinary compoſition?

But my Lord imagines, that he has found out a ſubſtantial reaſon for the aforementioned diſtinction;——has detected ſuch improprieties in the ſacred narrative, as "contradict all our notions of order and of juſtice †." He produces, by way of ſpecimen, the caſe of Noah denouncing a curſe upon Canaan.——This, it ſeems, is the capital abſurdity; this the glaring error; which, he concludes, is ſufficient to uncanonize the hiſtories of the Old Teſtament, and degrade their writers from the claſs of inſpiration.——This, therefore, if your Ladyſhip pleaſes, we will examine a little more particularly.

The charge in general is thus expreſſed. "One is "tempted to think, that the patriarch was ſtill drunk; "and that no man in his ſenſes could hold ſuch lan-"guage, or paſs ſuch a ſentence."——Was I at leiſure to criticiſe upon words, I ſhould be tempted to obſerve, that the diction "no man could hold ſuch lan-"guage," may be French, but is ſcarcely Engliſh.——However, from the expreſſion I paſs to the ſentiment.——This, for candour and ſolidity, is much like the reflection of the Jews, on the memorable day of Penteceſt.——When the apoſtles addreſſed the inhabitants of various countries, each in his own native tongue; ſome of their hearers aſcribed this miraculous ability——to what? we are amazed, when we read,——to the intoxicating power of wine ‡.——Strange! that exceſſive drinking, which incapacitates other people for talking common ſenſe, ſhould enable the diſciples of CHRIST to ſpeak all kinds of languages!——Is it not equally ſtrange, that a drunken diſorder ſhould enable the patriarch to deliver prophecies, and foretell future events!

* See page 85, 86, 88.—102.—108, 109.

† I would by no means indulge a petulant or cenſorious humour. Yet I cannot forbear thinking, that the ſcriptures are too often depretiated in his Lordſhip's performance; ſometimes by ſneer; ſometimes by cavil; and ſometimes even by languid approbation, or a counterfeit ſort of praiſe. Such as,—"If the foundations of Chriſtianity have been laid in truth," page 123.——"ſages which ſeem favourable to the doctrine of the Trinity." Page 98.—Though I ſhould be loath to reject any teſtimony, in favour of Chriſtianity; ſtill more loath to give up ſo eminent a name as Lord B——e to the Deiſtical party; yet I cannot prevail upon myſelf to acknowledge, that we are much, if at all obliged to him, for theſe poor, jejune, cold compliments. Such a teſtimony, and ſuch compliments, are juſt as ſerviceable to the momentous cauſe, as a broken tooth is ſerviceable to the eater, or foot out of joint to the walker. Prov. xxv. 19. They are, in truth, mere δωρα αδωρα—or, as Mr. Pope more ſtrongly expreſſes the ſentiment, events! which (as I hope to prove) was the real import of the ſpeech.

They damn with faint praiſe.

‡ Page 95, 96.

* Page 102. † Page 110. ‡ Acts ii. 13.

Perhaps, this curſe may ſeem to be the effect, if not of diſorderly indulgence, yet of intemperate paſſion. And how incompatible is this with the character of a preacher of righteouſneſs? Surely Noah ſhould not have been ſo forward to call for the thunderbolts of vengeance.—Any benevolent man, much more a pious progenitor, would rather have deprecated the blow.——I wonder, his Lordſhip did not ſtart this objection; which would have been much more plauſible, and much leſs ſhocking. To this, in caſe it had been ſtarted, we might reply,—That Noah acted as the oracle of GOD. This, and many other ſuch paſſages, which ſeem to be imprecations, are really predictions. Holy men ſpoke, as they were influenced by the Spirit; and uttered, not the ſuggeſtions of their own minds, but the will of almighty GOD.——Which inclines me to think, it might be no leſs proper, and much more ſuitable to the prophetic ſtyle, if we tranſlated ſuch paſſages, as indicatives, rather than imperatives; making them declaratory of what is decreed in the cabinet of heaven, and will as certainly take place, as if it already exiſted. Curſed is, rather than be, Canaan. Bleſſed of the LORD is, inſtead of be, his land, Deut. xxxiii. 13. Thus Iſaiah, foretelling the incarnation of that wonderful and adorable perſon, whom he ſtyles the mighty GOD, ſays, To us a child is born *; ſo calling the things that are not, as though they were.——Such a manner of ſpeaking would remove from this particular paſſage, all that ſounds harſh, or ſeems uncharitable; and would, in the general, impart an unequalled majeſty † to the language of ſcripture.

It was GOD then, and not man, from whom this avenging ſentence came. And GOD, to ſhew his utter deteſtation of all iniquity, to manifeſt his ſingular delight in all virtue, frequently takes occaſion to denounce vengeance, or promiſe happineſs, when ſome notorious evil is committed, or ſome laudable good performed. And was there not a moſt notorious evil committed here?—Charity, ſays the apoſtle, covereth all things ‡; draws a veil over the various infirmities of every common neighbour. But this man (man ſhall I ſay? rather monſter of ingratitude) ſees the ſhame of a father,——an aged § father,——a pious father; and inſtead of concealing, when he cometh forth, he telleth it.——Fools they are, abandoned profligates, that make a mock at ſin. What name then can be bad enough for a profane and unnatural wretch, who makes ſport with a parent's folly, a parent's ſinfulneſs, a parent's miſery?—Surely this was a moſt flagrant violation of filial reverence, filial love, and filial duty ||. Which not only implied ſo many particular offences, each attended with its reſpective guilt, but indicated the offender to be deſtitute of all piety. For, to argue in the apoſtle's ſtrain, how could this man venerate a father in heaven, whom he had not ſeen; if he was ſo irreverent to a father on earth, whom he had ſeen?

But ſuppoſing the turpitude and immorality of the action to be enormous, and ſuch as deſerved ſome ſignal vengeance; the vengeance, it is objected, was miſapplied. "For Ham alone offended: Canaan was inno-"cent,"——My Lord is not ſure that Canaan was innocent, though he aſſerts it pretty confidently. The contrary notion has obtained among the Jews. They apprehend, that Canaan was firſt in the tranſgreſſion, and, inſtead of being reproved, was imitated by his father. Biſhop Patrick, Mr Poole, and other eminent commentators, think this to be no improbable opinion.

If his Lordſhip was unacquainted with the Hebrew, he will ſcarcely be thought qualified to pronounce ſo peremptorily concerning a caſe related in that language. If he was acquainted with the original, he acts ſomewhat unfairly in ſaying, "This notion is not only without, "but againſt the expreſs authority of the text *." For he muſt know, that it receives ſome countenance even from the text itſelf. I would by no means offend your Ladyſhip's eyes, with any rugged figures, or uncouth quotations. But you may venture to believe me, when I aſſure you, that the moſt exact tranſlation of ver. 24. is, Noah knew what his ſon had done to him, the or that little one †. Ham could not ſo properly be ſtyled the little one; ſince he was the middlemoſt, and is always placed in that order; Shem, Ham, Japheth. But the deſcription agrees perfectly well with Canaan, the grandſon of Noah; and it was cuſtomary among the Jews, to call the grandchildren, the ſons of their grandfather ‡.

Canaan, it is added, "was alone curſed."——The words would run ſmoother, if tranſpoſed in this manner, Canaan alone was curſed. As for the fact, that wants ſome better confirmation than my Lord's bare aſſertion. To me it is evident, that Ham was not exempted from the curſe. What? If it did not fall upon him in perſon? yet to be puniſhed in his offſpring muſt be very affecting, and no leſs afflicting.

But hold; my Lord has foreſtalled us in this reply. Inſtead of waiting for it, or acquieſcing in it; he plays it upon us, with an air of triumph. "Will it be ſaid, "——this has been ſaid,—that Ham was puniſhed in his "poſterity ||."——It has; and, with his Lordſhip's leave, I will venture to ſay it again. Nor ſhould I, in caſe Lord Bolingbroke was alive, have went farther than his own breaſt, for a proof of my aſſertion. Would he, with all his exalted ideas of liberty, have thought it no puniſhment on himſelf, provided he had been the father of children, to have heard them doomed to a ſtate of ſlavery; nay, to be, as he very rightly explains the ſacred phraſe, "the vileſt and worſt of ſlaves?"—— eſpecially if, like Ham, he was appointed, in the courſe of providence, to be the father of ſeveral nations?—— and if the doom had been pronounced by a perſon, of whoſe prophetic ſpirit there was ſo inconteſtable an evidence, as the univerſal inundation was of Noah's.

* If. ix. 6.

† Bleſſed be, is what any holy perſon might ſay, and comprehends no more than a ſupplicatory benediction. Bleſſed is, ſuits only the mouth of a prophet, and implies an authoritative bleſſing.

‡ 1 Cor. xiii. 7. πανθα στεγει. This is one article in the fineſt diſplay of ſocial virtue that ever was exhibited to the world; and ſhould, I think, be tranſlated (not beareth, but) covereth or concealeth all things. The natural import of the word juſtifies, and the context evidently requires this ſenſe. Otherwiſe, the firſt and laſt clauſes of the verſe will coincide in their meaning, or rather make an unmeaning tautology.

‖ Lev. xix. 32.

§ The turpitude and immorality of this offence will appear in blacker colours, if we conſider the very peculiar reverence, which, in thoſe days of primitive ſimplicity, was paid to any aged perſon, much more to an aged parent.

Credebant hoc grande nefas, et morte piandum,
Si juvenis vetulo non aſſurrexerat, et ſi
Barbato cuicunque puer. Juven. Satyr. XIII.

We may ſee, from that awful threatening, Prov. xxx. 17. with what extreme deteſtation the moſt holy GOD reſents ſuch an unnatural behaviour. The eye that MOCKETH AT HIS FATHER, and deſpiſeth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley ſhall pick it out, and the young eagle ſhall eat it. Nay, it ſhould ſeem from this text, as though all nature was ready to teſtify its abhorrence of ſuch a crime; and, rather than it ſhould eſcape condign puniſhment, the moſt inſenſible animals would riſe up to execute vengeance.

* Page 111.

† Though it would have been very unpolite, to quote Hebrew in writing to a Lady: it may be judged proper, perhaps be thought neceſſary, now the letter is made public, to produce the original expreſſion; that where an argument is derived from the preciſe ſignification of the phraſe, the learned reader may examine and determine for himſelf.—בני הקטן Gen. ix. 24. The word קטן is uſed of Benjamin, Jacob's youngeſt ſon, and tranſlated a little one, Gen. xliv. 20.

‡ Gen. xxix. 5. 1 Chron. i. 17. ‖ Page 111.

Since

Since my Lord has no more communication with us or our affairs, I appeal to any, to every parental heart. Let nature,—fond, compassionate, yearning nature speak,—whether the infliction of such a penalty on the son, (perhaps a favourite son, like Joseph), the son's sons, and the latest posterity?—whether this be not properly a punishment of the father? whether the father must not feel by anticipation, what his wretched progeny must endure in reality?—Nature once spoke to such a query, and this was her language; O my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! would GOD I had died for thee! O Absalom, my son, my son *!! Did history ever record, or poetry ever invent, so melancholy a moan? It breathes the very soul of woe; and exemplifies the sentiment, which his Lordship would explode.

David, it is plain, was punished in the calamitous exit of this young prince; in the disasters sustained, and the disorders committed, by his other children †. Adam thought himself punished in the ruin which he brought upon the human race; and laments it, in the most pathetic terms, as the severest distress attending his apostasy ‡.—One wiser than Adam, one greater than David, whose judgment is always according to truth, is evidently of the same opinion; and, for that reason, has formed the sanction of a most sacred commandment, upon this very principle; He will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate him.—What GOD has so expressly threatened, he has actually done; not on this only, but on various other emergencies. Thus Esau suffered in his descendents ‖; Jehu in his family §; and Hezekiah in his children ¶; who all, like the Canaanites, were children of their fathers disobedience +; inheritors of their sin, as well as of their name.—But this would anticipate the reply to another objection.

Where is the equity of cursing a people, that are yet unborn? Does not this "contradict all our notions of "order and of justice?"—It may be contrary to our notions, or at least it would be unjustifiable in our practice; but is quite otherwise with regard to the all-seeing GOD. Is it not agreeable to the strictest rules of justice, for a magistrate, when he has heard the witnesses, summed up the evidence, and found the prisoner guilty;—is it not agreeable to the strictest rules of justice, to pass sentence upon such a criminal? The question can admit of no doubt. Yet it is equally certain, that this was the very case with reference to the supreme Judge, and those sinners the Canaanites.——They practised the grossest and most inhuman idolatries; they abandoned themselves to the most horrid immoralities; such as violated nature; confounded all order; and such as it would be shocking even to mention +.——Now all these provoking crimes were present to the view of HIM, by whose inspiration Noah spake. He saw them with the same circumstantial exactness, as if they had been already perpetrated,——Let us take these very important particulars into consideration, the excessive wickedness of those nations, and the all-foreseeing discernment of JEHOVAH; and then who will dare to insinuate, that the everlasting Sovereign acted unjustly? that he launched the lightnings of his indignation, in an arbitrary manner, or upon an innocent people?—Who will be so precipitate, as to affirm with my Lord, that "no other "writer but a Jew, could impute to the œconomy of "divine Providence the accomplishment of such a pre-"diction; nor make the Supreme Being the executor "of such a curse *?"

The former of those circumstances will appear in a proper light, what his Lordship calls, "cruelties com-"mitted by Joshua in the conquest of the Canaanites." It will make them appear to be acts of righteous vengeance; a much-needed and most desirable extirpation of a pestilent people; altogether as serviceable to the public, as it was formerly, to destroy the wolves from our island; or as it is, at present, to deliver over some flagitious malefactors to the sentence of the law.—Yet the execution of this vengeance was delayed, year after year, century after century. The seed of Abraham, for several ages, were not permitted to enter upon the possession of their destined inheritance; because the iniquity of the Amorites, which was the cause of their extirmination, was not yet full †.—Does it then bespeak the man of integrity, to represent those proceedings of Joshua, under the abhorred image of cruelties; which were acts of a justice, exemplary, salutary, and greatly to be revered? Is it becoming an honest inquirer after truth, to suggest, without the least shadow of proof, a selfish and malignant reason, for the destruction of the Canaanites; when a reason, the most equitable in its nature, the most beneficial in its consequences, is expressly and repeatedly assigned by the sacred historian ‡?——This I refer to your Ladyship's decision; who, I am sure, will not err on the uncharitable extreme; yet, I believe, will find it difficult, with all your good-nature, to acquit the author of these letters from the charge of disingenuity.

May I not add,—this way of foretelling, yet respiting the punishment, is gracious both in itself, and in its consequences?——In itself; because a reprieve is always reckoned an alleviation of the sentence, even though it be not the forerunner of a pardon.——In its consequences; because it afforded large space for recollection, and should have awakened the offenders to a sense of their guilt. It should have incited them to use all possible diligence to avert the doom, both by a personal reformation, and by educating their families religiously. Why did they not act as king Ahab acted ‖, and argue as the men of Nineveh argued §, in a following age, but on a like occasion?——Instead of this, instead of betaking themselves to consideration and prayer, to repentance and amendment, they ran to the same, to greater excess of ungodliness.

So that these people, being evidently inheritors of their father's sinful nature, and obstinately persisting in their father's sinful ways, were most deservedly partakers of his curse. And though GOD is that uncontrollable Sovereign, who giveth not, is under no obligation to give, account of any of his matters ¶; though he often has reasons for his dispensations absolutely unsearchable by any mortal; yet here he is clearly vindicated

* 2 Sam. xviii. 33. † 2 Sam. xii. 10.

‡ See the whole of Adam's disconsolate complaint; part of which are the following lines:

——Yet well, if here would end
The misery, I deserv'd it, and would bear
My own deservings: but this will not serve.
All that I eat, or drink, or shall beget,
Is propagated curse. O voice! once heard
Delightfully, Increase and multiply;
Now death to hear! Parad. Lost, book X. 725.

‖ Compare Gen. xxvii. 40. with 2 Sam. viii. 14. Thou shalt serve thy brother; here is the sentence. All they of Edom became David's servants; here its execution.

§ Hos. i. 4. ¶ Is. xxxix. 6. 7.

\+ Morum quoque filii, Juv. Sat. XIII.

+ Lev. xviii. 24.

* Pag. 110. † Gen. xv. 16.

‡ Gen. xv. 16. Deut. ix. 5. FOR THE WICKEDNESS of those nations, the LORD thy GOD doth drive them out from before thee.—See also Lev. xviii. 25. Where the sacred writer describes their execrable and unparallelled vileness, by one of the strongest and boldest figures imaginable. So vile they were, that the very country loathed them; was weary to bear them; and acted like a disgusted nauseating stomach, when oppressed with foul and offensive food: The land itself vomiteth out her inhabitants.—Let no squeamish critic betray his false taste, and worse temper, by carping at the expression. But let all be astonished at the outrageous impiety of the Canaanites; and adore the vindictive arm of JEHOVAH; and acknowledge, that such horrible miscreants were (not for some reasons of state, as my Lord is pleased to insinuate, deemed only, but were) really, and on the most substantial principles of justice, an accursed race. Pag. 112.

‖ 1 Kings xxi. 27. 29. § Jonah iii. 9. ¶ Job xxxiv. 13.

even before men,—even before the ſinners themſelves. They themſelves muſt confeſs the juſtice of their doom; and own, that GOD hath done righteouſly, but they have done wickedly: that GOD has ſhewed all long-ſuffering, and given full warning before the blow fell. Whereas they, notwithſtanding this forbearance and this admonition, have continued incorrigible; and without any other change, but that of becoming more conſummately vile.

Agreeably to all this, and conformably to the moſt acknowledged rules of equity, it is declared by the ſacred hiſtorian, that the Amorites, the deſcendents of Canaan, ſuffered not till they had filled up the meaſure of their iniquities *; their own, as well as their father's. ——All which, I ſhould imagine, is ſufficient, not only to juſtify the counſels, but to glorify the judgments, of the great JEHOVAH; ſufficient alſo to ſatisfy any inquirer, who is (as my Lord very handſomely expreſſes himſelf) "candid but not implicit, willing to be informed yet curious to examine."

My Lord's curioſity to examine, ſhall I ſay? or his reſolution to be diſſatisfied? proceeds ſtill farther. Accordingly he adds, "Who does not ſee, that the curſe and "the puniſhment, in this caſe, fell on Canaan and his "poſterity, excluſively of the reſt of the poſterity of "Ham†?"—The particle of, ſo frequently repeated in a ſingle ſentence, can hardly be admired as an elegance ‡ of ſpeech. But, taking no more notice of ſuch little blemiſhes, I ſhall conſider the weight, not the poliſh, of his Lordſhip's arguments.—As for this argument, I verily think, when laid in the balance of impartiality and candour, it will be found wanting. For, admitting the objection in its full ſcope, what follows? Why, that the righteous GOD pardoned ſome criminals, when he might juſtly puniſh all. And if it ſhould have pleaſed the ſupreme judge to repeal the ſentence, and remit the penalty, with regard to ſome offenders, who ſhall arraign his conduct? who ſhall cenſure his providence? To exerciſe mercy is his great prerogative; an act not of debt, but of royal bounty, which he exerciſes, when and to whom it ſeemeth good in his ſight: I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy ‖, is his high and holy reſolve.

I might therefore anſwer his Lordſhip's queſtion, by aſking another; which I might propoſe, in the plain but ſolemn words of our LORD JESUS CHRIST: "If theſe "are ſpared, while thoſe are puniſhed, what is that to "thee? Is thine eye evil, becauſe GOD is good?"—But I ſhall rather reply to the objection, by denying the fact. The puniſhment was not confined to Canaan and his poſterity. It reached the other deſcendents of Ham; Miſraim himſelf, the father of the Egyptians, (as will be ſhewn in a proper place), not excepted. Canaan, 'tis true, is particularly mentioned.—Becauſe he was (as from this very circumſtance is extremely probable) an accompliſe § with Ham, in the breach of filial duty.—Becauſe this branch of the family was more than ordinarily corrupt, nay, beyond meaſure vitious.—Becauſe the Canaanites were, in the firſt place, and in the fulleſt manner, to feel the effects of the curſe.—And Moſes, being charged with a commiſſion to execute the vengeance on this people only, had no occaſion to concern himſelf with any other. Juſt as the ſheriff of a county, demanding the body of a condemned malefactor, produces the dead-warrant for his execution; without intermeddling, or thinking himſelf under any neceſſity to intermeddle, with the other priſoners in the jail.—This leads me to a new, and, if I judge right, by far the moſt important inquiry; namely, whether the curſe was executed, as well as pronounced?

As I haſten to the proof of this particular, my Lord embarraſſes and retards me with a freſh obſtacle. He himſelf has thought proper to inform us, "why the "poſterity of Canaan was to be deemed an accurſed race." But he lets the world know, "it is not ſo eaſy to ac-"count, why the poſterity of the righteous Shem, that "great example of filial reverence, became ſlaves to "another branch of the family of Ham, during more "than fourſcore years *."——I am by no means convinced, that the point propoſed enters into the merits of our cauſe. Should the reaſons for this diſpenſation remain an impenetrable ſecret; yet, if we clear up the propriety, and demonſtrate the equity, of the curſe denounced, we compaſs our main end, and confute the grand cenſure. However, as the queſtion is preſented, it ſhall be conſidered: and though his Lordſhip ſhould affect to ſneer, I chuſe rather, in imitation of thoſe noble writers, whoſe dignity I would aſſert, to be ſerious.

Why were the Iſraelites ſojourners in Egypt?—A reaſon occurs, that is worthy of a gracious GOD, and greatly for the public good: That they might carry thither the knowledge of the everlaſting JEHOVAH, and of the promiſed MESSIAH; of the only acceptable method of worſhip, and the only effectual way of ſalvation.——As Egypt was the parent of literature, and the fountain-head of ſcience; as men of letters and curioſity came, from all parts of the world, to complete their ſtudies at Egypt; if theſe heavenly doctrines were received THERE, they would be more likely, ſome ſtreams of them at leaſt, to be tranſfuſed into all climes, and improve every nation. So that the people of the LORD, the only depoſitaries of divine philoſophy, were ſettled in this land of general reſort, with much the ſame wiſe and beneficent views, as the ableſt profeſſors of learning are placed at our famous univerſities.——

But why were they ſlaves in Egypt?—This might be to try them, and to humble them; to ſhew them what was in their heart, and to purge out their droſs. We are taught in ſcripture, that the Almighty chaſtens whom he loves, and ſcourges the men whom he receiveth to himſelf. Even the Heathen claſſics, my Lord's favourite authors, have frequently remarked, That adverſity is a ſchool, in which both private perſons and public ſocieties have learned the moſt heroic virtues.——Beſides, this might be intended to animate and inſpirit the Iſraelites for their invaſion of Canaan. They were, in the general, a ſupine and grovelling † ſet of people. Had they been ſettled in a ſtate tolerably eaſy, or in territories that were but moderately commodious, they might never have aſpired after the land flowing with milk and honey; never have made any reſolute efforts to poſſeſs their deſtined inheritance. But, being driven by the laſh, and inſtigated by the goad, of pungent galling ſlavery, they were even conſtrained to burſt the chains, and puſh their way to

* Gen. xv. 16. † Pag. 110. 112.

‡ This, and one or two preceding remarks of the ſame nature, are ſcarcely worth our notice. Neither ſhould I have mentioned them, had they not fell in my way; and were it not to put a query upon the popular notion, that his Lordſhip's ſtyle is ſo correct, elegant, and noble, as to be a ſtandard for fine writing. It cannot, in my apprehenſion, juſtly claim this honour. If others think differently, I leave them to enjoy their opinion; and ſhall not (though it would be eaſy enough to multiply proofs) add a word more upon the ſubject.

‖ Rom. ix. 16.

§ This is rendered ſtill more credible, by that particularity of ſtyle, which the ſcripture uſes in ſpeaking of Ham. Ham the father of Canaan, Gen. ix. 18. 22. Why of Canaan ſo eſpecially? Had he no other children, no other ſons?—Several other.—But this diſtinction ſeems to be a brand of infamy ſet upon the offender; and intimates, that he who was father of Canaan by blood, was his partner, was his brother in iniquity.

* Pag. 112.

† Let none imagine, that the wiſdom of GOD is impeached, by ſelecting to himſelf a people of this character. His clemency, his forbearance, and all thoſe benign perfections, which are ſo neceſſary for the ſalvation of ſinners, are hereby diſplayed with peculiar advantage, and to our unſpeakable conſolation.

liberty

liberty and Canaan. Their insupportable slavery was somewhat like bending the bow, and straining the string, in order to launch the arrow.——Farther, GOD almighty assures Abraham, that his seed, though enslaved for a while, should come out of their bondage with great substance *; with the silver, the gold, the jewels, and the choicest treasures of Egypt. So that, when labouring for their taskmasters, they were, in fact, labouring for themselves. The wealth of the oppressors was laid up for the oppressed. And the season of their affliction in the enemies country, was like the rigorous cold of winter; which, far from obstructing, only makes preparation for the blossoms of spring, and the fruits of autumn. ——These considerations might have solved the difficulty to his Lordship, as a politician.

Other reasons are suggested by our divines; which, if my Lord had thought it worth his while to regard, might have given better satisfaction, and yielded more edification. They would have reminded the Right Honourable querist,——that such a gloomy aspect of the Jewish affairs, made way for the brightest manifestation of GOD's glorious attributes; of his power, in rescuing them from their tyrannical rulers; of his faithfulness, in fulfilling his promise made to their fathers; of his goodness, in supporting and conducting them; keeping them, amidst the most formidable dangers, as the apple of an eye; and bearing them, even through the most insuperable difficulties, as on eagle's wings †. This also opened a most conspicuous theatre, for that amazing train of miracles, which have been, in all ages, as serviceable to the faith of Christians, as they were formerly conducive to the welfare of the Jews.——They would farther have informed his Lordship, and have confirmed their opinion by apostolical authority, that the whole of this most wonderful transaction was typical of spiritual things; was a series of living lessons, delivered, according to the eastern method of conveying knowledge, in figures and emblems. The Egyptian bondage was a resemblance of our natural condition; which is a state of the most abject slavery to sin.——The arbitrary and injurious impositions of the taskmasters shadow forth, though but faintly, the tyranny of unruly appetites, and imperious passions.——That barbarous edict for the destruction of all the infant males, fitly enough represents the genuine tendency of carnal and corrupt affections; which destroy our true comfort, subvert our noblest interests, are as death to the joys and to the hopes of our souls. —Their deliverance from that miserable state, was an expressive sign of our redemption from the guilt and the dominion of sin ‡. Both which the LORD JESUS accomplishes; the one by price, the other by power: not by slaying the first-born, but by shedding his own blood; not by softening rocks into a stream, but taking away the heart of stone; not by turning the current of Jordan backward, but by turning all our desires into a new channel.——The many troubles and oppositions they met with in the wilderness, exhibit a lively picture of the molestations that attend, and the temptations that assault, the Christian. Trials await us. Snares are around us. Through many conflicts, and much tribulation, we must enter into the kingdom of heaven. Only let us beware, lest, like the ungrateful Israelites, we forget the GOD of our salvation, and fall after the same example of unbelief.—The cloud, that was spread over them by day, to intercept the glare, and screen them from the heat of the sun; the fire, that shone before them in the night, to chear the nocturnal darkness, and lead them through the trackless desert; were not these very amiable and exact emblems of our Saviour's merits, and of his holy word? The former of which are refreshing to the guilty conscience, as the veil of a thick interposing cloud is welcome to a traveller in sultry climes. The latter is a light to our feet, and a lantern to our paths to guide us in the way everlasting.——Their passage through Jordan, the priests that bare the ark of the covenant going before them *, and standing in the midst of the river, till all the congregation were passed over; this very emphatically prefigured our great High Priest, bearing our sins, fulfilling the law in our stead, abolishing death, and making it a safe as well as short transition to life eternal.

You will excuse me, Madam, for expatiating upon these topics. They are so inviting, so pleasing, so comfortable, that I can hardly persuade myself to leave them. ——If any other parts of the epistle, through a kind of unhappy necessity almost inseparable from controversy, should resemble the asperity of the thorn; this, I hope, will bear some affinity to the fragrance of the rose. For which cause it is, that I chuse only to touch, and but lightly touch, the one; while I would open the other into a full expansion, and a rich effusion.——Let me add one more observation on this head, and I have done. It is apprehended by very judicious persons, that the punishment of the Egyptians, and their total overthrow, may be a presage of the misery and ruin, which will sooner or later fall upon individuals and nations, that reject the glorious gospel, and vilify its sacred repository, THE BIBLE.

If the reasons I have offered, are neither tiresome, nor unsatisfactory to your Ladyship, I shall proceed the more chearfully to shew, that the curse was executed, as well as pronounced.——Had it been the senseless extravagance of a man intoxicated with liquor, or the rash imprecation of a man heated with resentment, or the designing interpolation of some crafty statesman, would the holy, the gracious, the true GOD have set the broad seal of heaven to it? would HE, who over-rules all events, have suffered it to succeed,—have commanded it to succeed,—nay, have brought it himself to pass, by a mighty hand, and stretched-out arm? Impossible to conceive! ——If therefore it was really brought to pass, and with a surprising punctuality, and not by any competency of human means, but by the most evident display of divine power, this will be such a proof of its credibility, its reasonableness, and equity, as no one, who thinks reverently of the Deity, can deny.

Canaan was to be a servant to Shem.——This was accomplished, when the Israelites, the descendents of Shem, conquered the land of Canaan, slew thirty of its kings †, and took possession of their cities; when the Gibeonites particularly, who composed one of their principal states ‡, became hewers of wood, and drawers of water, to the congregation ‖; or, in other words, the most menial servants to the lowest of the people.

By what instruments was this extraordinary revolu-

* Gen. xv. 14.

† See Deut. xxxii. 10, 11. These, I think, are most delightful and inimitably-delicate representations. Let the pious critic try, if he can conceive those tender offices, that unintermitted vigilance, and assiduity of protecting, cherishing cares, which are expressed in these fine images. For my part, I own myself incapable of describing them; but most earnestly wish, that every reader as well as myself may learn them in that best of schools, the school of experience.

‡ The divine writer to the Hebrews, makes the land of Canaan, typical of a better country, even of an heavenly, Heb. xi. 16. xii. 22. According to the same author, the peaceful settlement of the Israelites in Canaan, suggested to their thoughts, and pointed out to their faith, that everlasting rest which remaineth for the people of GOD, Heb. iii. 4, 5, &c. Since the terminus ad quem (as the schoolmen speak) is evidently mystical and allegorical; may we not conclude, that the terminus a quo is mystical and allegorical likewise? Then it will follow, upon the clearest principles of analogy, that the intermediate steps and advances are of the same nature; significative of refined and spiritual things, under earthly and sensible images. —This, if I mistake not, is put beyond all doubt, 1 Cor. x. 1, 2, &c.

* See Josh. iii. 13, 14, &c.

† Josh. xii. 1, 24. ‡ Josh. x. 2. ‖ Josh. ix. 27.

tion

tion wrought?—by one of the fineſt armies in the eaſt or weſt? marſhalled by the braveſt officers, and headed by the moſt experienced general? No; but by a raw, undiſciplined, enſlaved people; who were deſtitute of military ſkill, and without any perſonal qualifications, or warlike apparatus for ſo difficult, ſo dangerous an enterprize.

Through what obſtacles was it begun, carried on, and completed?——In ſpite of the attempts of one potent monarch to detain them in ſervitude; in ſpite of the reſolution of ſeveral combined kings, to diſpute with them every inch of ground to the laſt drop of their blood. A deep river, and an arm of the ſea muſt be croſſed, by ſix hundred thouſand men, with their wives, their children, their cattle; and without any veſſel to tranſport them, or any bridge to tranſmit them.——They muſt dwell, forty years, in a deſolate, inhoſpitable, barren wilderneſs! which was infeſted by ravenous beaſts, and fiery flying ſerpents; in which there was neither water, nor corn, nor any ſort of accommodation for abode, or ſuſtenance for life.

How were all theſe difficulties ſurmounted?——Not by the arm of fleſh; this was utterly impracticable; but by the moſt aſtoniſhing interpoſition of Omnipotence. ——The Egyptian tyrant is humbled, and brought to their terms, by the infliction of ten tremendous plagues. ——The waters of the river are dried, and the waves of the great deep are divided, ſo as to yield them a ſafe, unobſtructed * paſſage.——A ſtream guſhes even from the hard rock; and gives them drink, as it had been out of the great depths.——Prodigious quantities of manna † deſcend, with every morning-dew; and ſupply them, not from the garner, but from heaven, with their daily bread.——Vaſt flights of quails arrive, with every ſetting ſun; and drop, like a bird ſhot through the wing ‡, in the midſt of their camp, and round about their habitations.——The walls of an impregnable city fall to the ground, at the blaſt of rams horns ‖. The ſun ſtands ſtill in the midſt of heaven, at the voice of a man §. All the hoſts of the nations, with all their weapons of war, are driven aſunder as the foam upon the waters, and cut off as the tops of the ears of corn.

And is it probable, can it be poſſible, that every element, and all nature, ſhould not only concur, but alter their eſtabliſhed courſe, depart from the fundamental laws of their creator, on purpoſe to ratify, what was bolted out by the patriarch in a drunken revel, or ſoiſted into the text by ſome Hebrew Machiavelian?

Canaan was to be ſervant alſo to Japheth!——Purſuant to this prediction, did not the Grecks and Romans, who derive their lineage from Japheth, make themſelves maſters of the reſidue of Canaan? Tyre built by the Sidonians, and Thebes * by Cadmus, were both deſtroyed by Alexander the Grecian. Carthage, founded by Dido, was, after a long ſucceſſion of loſſes, and a vaſt effuſion of blood, demoliſhed by Scipio the Roman. Which loſſes made Hannibal, a child of Canaan, cry out, with a mixture of aſtoniſhment and deſpondency, Agnoſco fortunam Carthaginis! i. e. † "I ſee plainly the hand of "deſtiny working, I ſee that oracular doom haſting to its "accompliſhment, in theſe dreadful calamities ſuſtain-"ed by Carthage!"

If theſe facts are true, which have the unanimous conſent of hiſtorians for their ſupport, what can we ſay of his Lordſhip's aſſertion, "that Canaan was "ſervant to "Shem, though not to Japheth ‡?" This, I am apprehenſive, will be found as falſe, as the following objection is weak. In which he urges, that "Canaan was "ſervant to one of his uncles, not to his brethren ‖." ——Such a cavil (for certainly it deſerves no better name) diſcovers an utter ignorance of the Hebrew phraſeology; or elſe, a ſtrange inattention to it; I would not ſay, an egregious miſrepreſentation of it. I thought every one had known, till Lord Bolingbroke undeceived me, that nothing is more common in the oriental idiom, than to expreſs any relatives of the male line, by the denomination of brethren §.

* He led them through the deep, encumbered as they were with their kneading-troughs, and ſurrounded with frightful billows, as an horſe in the wilderneſs: with as much eaſe and ſpirit, as ſome courageous courſer makes his way through (מדבר) a plain, open, champaign country. Iſ. lxiii. 13.

† We are not to think, that the manna took its name from any reſemblance to the medicinal drug, which, among us, is ſo commonly known, and ſo frequently uſed. It is rather derived from the abrupt expreſſion of the Iſraelites, on their firſt beholding this wonderful food. They cried out with amazement, מן הוא Man Hu? What is this? Which exclamation, denoting their own ſurpriſe, and the unexpected as well as unparallelled nature of the gift, became both a memorial of the one, and a denomination of the other.

‡ This is deſcribed with the utmoſt vigour and beauty, in that ſublime piece of ſacred poetry, Pſal. lxxviii. 27, 28. He rained fleſh upon them as duſt, and winged (here lies a peculiar emphaſis, and thus ſhould the original עוף כנף be tranſlated, winged) fowl like as the ſand of the ſea. Yet, though they were furniſhed with wings, and therefore might eaſily eſcape, they neglected to make uſe of their natural powers. They fell round the Iſraelitiſh tents, like the rain from heaven, which returneth not; and like the ſand of the ſhore, which cannot be numbered.

This whole pſalm is a manifeſt proof of the obſervation, which was made in a preceding paragraph,—That the hiſtorical and doctrinal paſſages of ſcripture are like the deed and its counter-part, in their ſubſtance exactly correſponding; and, like the links of the ſame chain, in their connection abſolutely inſeparable.

‖ Joſh. vi. § Joſh. x. 12, 13.

* "Alexander laid ſiege to this city, took it by ſtorm, and en-"tirely deſtroyed it; ſlaying ninety thouſand of the inhabitants, "and ſelling the reſt, to the number of thirty thouſand more, in-"to ſlavery." Prideaux's Connect. vol. I. p. 479.

† Vid. Liv. lib. xxvii. ad finem.——A writer of the firſt repute, for elegant taſte, and penetrating judgment, thinks it more than probable, that Hannibal, in this diſpirited and hopeleſs acknowledgment, refers to the prophecy under conſideration: which will juſtify my free, though, I hope, not erroneous tranſlation of the paſſage.——What the ſame author adds, is ſo very ingenious, and ſo appoſite to my purpoſe, that I will beg leave to tranſcribe it.

"That the Romans were no ſtrangers to the ſame divine oracle, "appears from Virgil:"

Progeniem ſed enim Trojano a ſanguine duci
Audierat, Tyrias olim quæ verteret arces.
Hinc populum late regem, belloque ſuperbum,
Venturum excidio Lybiæ. Sic volvere Parcas.

"In tranſlating which, if we only name the anceſtors, inſtead "of the deſcendents, the original prophecy glares upon us."

From Japheth's loins deriv'd, a race ſhe knew
Deſign'd the ſtrength of Canaan to ſubdue:
Wide-ſpread their empire, deſtin'd to ſucceed
And waſte the ſons of Ham: So fate decreed!

See Mr Ridley's ſermons at Lady Moyer's lecture, p. 252.

‡ The words at large are, "Canaan became ſervant of ſervants "to Shem, though not to Japheth, when the Iſraelites conquered "Paleſtine." Page 111.—I muſt beg leave to inquire, why the laſt clauſe is added? Is it to prove, that when the Iſraelites ſubdued the Canaanites, the deſcendents of Ham were not, by this victory, made ſervants to Japheth's offſpring? If ſo, my Lord encounters a phantom of his own raiſing, and confutes what no man aſſerts.—Is it to inſinuate, that, becauſe the race of Canaan were not, at this time, made vaſſals to the poſterity of Japheth, therefore they never were; and, of conſequence, the prophecy was eluded? This ſeems to be the deſign of the ſentence. Abſtracted from this deſign, I ſee not what end it can anſwer. But this is to draw, from premiſes that are true, a concluſion that is falſe; and is juſt as good logic, as the libertine's argument is ſound divinity, "Ven-"geance is not yet, therefore it never will be, executed." See 2 Pet. iii. 4.

‖ Page 111.

§ See Gen. xiii. 8. where Abraham and Lot, though uncle and nephew, are called brethren.—Gen. xxiv. 48. where Bethuel, another of Abraham's nephews, is ſtyled his brother.——Gen. xvi. 12. xxiv. 27.

I hope, your Ladyſhip will not think this, or any of my other remarks, indecently free. In the preſence of the moſt high GOD, all men are upon a level. When the honour of his divine word or glorious attributes is concerned, we are to know no man after the fleſh *; pay no deferential regard to the diſtinctions of birth, or elevations of character. In theſe liſts the privileges of peerage ceaſe. And I ſhould reckon myſelf the moſt abject of creatures, if, through reſpect of perſons, I could palliate or ſecrete the truth, when the ever-venerable oracles of inſpiration are treated with contempt. A violation of decency this! by whatever hand it is offered, or from whatever quarter it comes, incomparably more flagrant than ſcandalum magnatum.

Pardon, Madam, this digreſſion, and permit me farther to obſerve,—That the progeny of Ham, in another line, are, to this very day, the ſlaves of the whole trading world. The negrees I mean; whoſe deſcent is from that unhappy man. And what is their country, but the market of ſlavery? Are not their perſons bought † and ſold as the meaneſt commodities? are they not debaſed to the moſt ſordid, and haraſſed with the moſt toilſome drudgery? made, in the ſtrictly-literal ſenſe of the phraſe, ſervants of ſervants?

I have not forgotten what I promiſed to make appear, with relation to the Egyptians; neither ſhall I overlook what his Lordſhip has remonſtrated from the ſame quarter. "The deſcendents of Miſraim," he ſays, "another of the ſons of Ham, were the Egyptians: and "they were ſo far from being ſervants of ſervants to "their couſins the Shemites, that theſe were ſervants of "ſervants to them ‡."——For a ſeaſon they were. But this ſervitude was calculated for the good of their community, and redounded to the glory of their GOD. It terminated in ſuch a ſignal deliverance, as brought honour and opulence to themſelves, confuſion and ruin to their enemies. Does it then follow, from this temporary ſuperiority of the Egyptians, which ended in ſo diſaſtrous a manner, that they were excepted in the denunciation of the curſe, or favoured with an act of indemnity?

What ſays the ſupreme Arbitrator? The nation whom they ſerve will I judge ‖: I myſelf will puniſh; not by any human inſtruments, but by my own immediate hand. Accordingly, they were viſited with the moſt dreadful and deſtructive plagues. In the laſt of which, the firſt-born, the flower of their kingdom, were cut off; and at length, their king, and his whole army, periſhed in the Red ſea. Does my Lord make no account of theſe moſt terrible and unexampled judgments?

Beſides, what was the condition of this people in the following ages? If we conſult Ezekiel, he will declare it, as clearly by the ſpirit of prophecy §, as if he had lived on the ſpot, and ſeen the face of affairs. And it came to paſs, in the eleventh year, in the firſt month, in the ſeventh day of the month, that the word of the LORD came unto me, ſaying, Son of man, I have broken the arm of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and lo, it ſhall not be bound up to be healed, to put a roller to bind it, to make it ſtrong to hold the ſword.——I will ſcatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will diſperſe them through the countries.—Egypt ſhall be the baſeſt of kingdoms, neither ſhall it exalt itſelf any more among the nations.—And there ſhall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt.—Is not all this confirmed by ancient hiſtory, and by the preſent ſtate of Africa? From the one we learn, that the Egyptians were ſubject, firſt to the Perſians, next to the Grecians, then to the Romans; afterwards to the Arabs. And from the other it appears, that they now wear the Turkiſh yoke; are governed not by a prince of their own, but by the Grand Seignor and his baſhaws.

Nay, let any perſon look around upon all the countries peopled by the progeny of Ham; and I am much miſtaken, if he does not find them, what the pſalmiſt deſcribes, dark places of the earth, and full of the habitations of cruelty *; the dens of rapine, and the dungeons of ignorance; where ſlavery drags the chain, and tyranny lifts the ſcourge.—Inſomuch, that we need not ſcruple to ſay, in the emphatical words of Joſhua, Not one thing has failed of all the good, or the evil things, which the LORD ſpake by the mouth of Noah, concerning each of his ſons reſpectively. All are come to paſs, not one thing has failed †.

This calls upon me to clear up another part of the prediction;—the bleſſing pronounced upon Shem, and the enlargement promiſed to Japheth: which will afford a new argument, to maintain the authenticity of the paſſage, and aſſert its divine inſpiration.

I ſaid, the bleſſing pronounced upon. Becauſe I would not tranſlate the words, Bleſſed be the LORD GOD of Shem; but, Bleſſed of the LORD GOD is Shem. This will put a ſtriking contraſt between the doom of the irreligious ſcoffer, and the reward of filial piety: this is what we naturally expect from a GOD, who is not unrighteous to forget his people, and their labours of love: this ſenſe the original language will very commodiouſly bear ‡, and the event ſeems to require. For how manifeſtly, how eminently, was this benedictive ſentence fulfilled! ſince, in the poſterity of Shem, the church of GOD was eſtabliſhed, and his true worſhip propagated. From him, the Redeemer of mankind, that bleſſing of bleſſings, according to the fleſh ſprung.

The great enlargement of Japheth's territories, is no leſs certain, and no leſs remarkable. He had, for his poſſeſſion, the iſles of the ſea weſtward, and the fine extenſive countries near them; Spain, Italy, Greece, Aſia the leſs, all Europe, and the vaſt regions towards the north; which anciently the Scythians, now the Tartars inhabit; from whom the Americans, the people of the new world, ſeem to be derived.——By Japheth's dwelling in the tents of Shem, is meant the converſion of the European Gentiles to the goſpel of CHRIST: who, through a long progreſſion of years, were aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, ſtrangers to the covenants of promiſe, having no hope of eternal life, and without any ſaving knowledge of GOD in the world ‖: but were, in due time, perſuaded to embrace the true faith; were made (as the apoſtle elegantly ſpeaks, and in a ſtrain perfectly correſponding with the language of our prophecy) fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſehold of GOD §. An event, altogether as undeniable, as it is important, delightful, and glorious.

Upon the whole, I cannot but think that his Lordſhip has planted his battery, and played his artillery, if not like an unſkilful, at leaſt like an unſucceſsful engineer. He has planted his battery againſt a place, too well fortified to admit of any impreſſion, and that muſt infallibly triumph over every aſſault. He has ſo played his artillery, that it recoils upon himſelf, and cruſhes his own deſign.—And this, I apprehend, will always be the iſſue, when men even of the fineſt genius and moſt improved capacities preſume to attack the ſcriptures of eternal truth.

* 2 Cor. v. 16.

† No leſs than thirty thouſand, I have been informed, are, every year, bought for ſlaves by the Engliſh only.

‡ Pag. 112. ‖ Gen. xv. 14.

§ Ezek. xxx. 20. 21. 23. xxix. 15. xxx. 13.

* Pſal. lxxiv. 20. † Joſh. xxiii. 14.

‡ Gen. ix. 26. ברך יהוה אלהי שם—words of the very ſame import, in the very ſame conſtruction, are thus rendered by our tranſlators, Deut. xxxiii. 13. and will hardly admit of any other interpretation; יהוה ארצו מבורכת Bleſſed OF the LORD, &c.

‖ Eph. ii. 12. § Eph. ii. 19.

This very passage, instead of disproving, unspeakably ennobles, the divine writings. It shews, that they bear the stamp of that all-over-ruling power, which purposes, and none shall disannul it;—or that all-comprehending knowledge, which discerns events, long, long before they come into existence.—And let any unprejudiced reader judge, what degree of esteem those books may fairly challenge, whose least considerable, or, in his Lordship's opinion, most obnoxious parts, have such a depth, and such a dignity of wisdom! such as will be admired and revered, so long as historic truth has any credit, or commercial intelligence any being.

Shall I trespass upon your Ladyship's patience a little farther?——The penmen of the Old Testament carry all the marks of the most disinterested and undesigning sincerity. They record the failings of their favourite and most illustrious heroes, without concealing the punishment inflicted on such miscarriages.——The uniform tendency of their narratives and observations is, to promote a religion the most pure, the most benevolent, the most elevated imaginable; as remote from all selfish aims, and every low art of collusion, as the heavens are higher than the earth.——They were men singularly qualified for their work; being either eye-witnesses of the facts they relate, or else contemporaries with the persons they describe, or still more remarkably distinguished, by their ability to work miracles, and their insight into futurity.——As to the facts related, some of them had an anniversary memorial, on which they were commemorated: some of them had significant ceremonies, by which they were represented. They were publickly read in the synagogues, and universally known through the nation. It was a duty of religion, to talk of them by day, to meditate on them by night, and diligently to instruct the children in them. And were not these circumstances a security, an invincible security against any attempt to corrupt, or innovate, or alter?—So that their writings appear with every character, both internal and external, of genuine truth; and with the most unquestionable credentials, from the GOD of power, and GOD of wisdom †. Consequently, they have a credibility of their own, sufficient both to claim and support, the faith of an ancient Jew; such as must command the assent of every rational and honest inquirer, even before the Christian dispensation took place.

If my Lord had duly adverted to these considerations, surely he would have expunged that bold and rash assertion, "Without Christianity we have no obligation to believe the Old Testament ‡."—Surely he would never have left behind him, that unwarrantable and injurious insinuation, that the Hebrew original deserves no better credit, than the fabulous story ‡ of the Septuagint translation;—nor have found any reason to "protest, that he knew of no rule to go by ||," (in settling the degree of assent due to the several parts of the Old Testament), but the fanciful distinction which has already been examined.—He would rather have found reason to adopt and subscribe Agur's confession of faith; a man, who was famous in his own, who will be famous in every generation, and for this among other most judicious maxims,

EVERY word of GOD is pure *. 'Tis all gold, fine gold, without any the least alloy!

For my own part, I freely acknowledge to your Ladyship, that I value the sacred history (even exclusive of its connection with the transcendent glories of CHRIST and the unspeakable benefits of redemption) on the very same principles, which incline our connoisseurs to value those celebrated antiquities they call medals singular; because it is supposed, there is but one of the sort extant.—Considering the private interests, and personal attachments, which are so apt to bias the human mind; considering the imperfect information, and ignorance of causes, to which all other writers are unavoidably subject; I cannot but conclude, that the sacred history is, in point of strict, precise, universal veracity, SINGULAR. There is none other beside this, no, not one in the whole world, that is free from all the false colourings of prejudice; clouded with no mixture of uncertainty; most minutely true; and to be depended on, in every particular. The sacred history is not only seated on the throne of truth, but, in these respects, possesses it without a rival.

Lord Bolingbroke is fond of Davila †; because Davila discovers the hidden springs of action, and traces up almost every enterprize to its source ‡.—Is this so valuable a qualification in the Italian? How then shall we admire the inspired historians? who disclose to us, not the secret measures of a court, but the unsearchable counsels of heaven; not the little motives that actuate the politician, but the deep designs of the universal Sovereign: and all this, not from precarious surmise, but with the fullest assurance. An excellency to which no other narrative on earth can lay any claim.

The scriptures throw light upon the most memorable transactions, that have passed in the Heathen world, and are recorded by the classic authors.—When the Assyrian monarch subdues kingdoms, and ravages nations; we are apt to think, he is only gratifying his insatiable ambition. But the scripture assures us, that he was the staff in JEHOVAH's hand, and the rod of his indignation §, an instrument made use of by the King of kings, to execute his righteous vengeance.—When Cyrus is habituated to all the noble exercises, educated in all the fine accomplishments, that form the gallant prince, and constitute the complete general; Xenophon sees nothing more than the exertion of human policy. But Isaiah beholds the all-superintending arm of the LORD, girding § this hero, and preparing him for the deliverance of his people.—So that the scripture-history is itself the grandest and most useful; while its intercurrent observations are a key to open the most celebrated affairs, which give weight and estimation to other annals.

The grandest and most useful.—This will appear to be more than a bare assertion, if we recollect, that here is a display of that great Messiah, who is the hope of Israel ¶, and the desire of all nations ‡; a display of him in his mysterious incarnation, his wonderful person, and all the gracious, the benign majesty of his media-

* Another very extraordinary peculiarity in these writings, and, to me at least, an undoubted proof, that their authors were divinely inspired, is, their perfect agreement and entire consistency throughout.—Though they were composed by different men, placed in very different stations of life, and flourishing in very distant ages of the world; yet they are as consonant and harmonious, as if they had all been penned by the same hand.—Any thing equal to this, I never saw, never heard of; and I believe, the most inveterate or most sagacious adversaries of the Old Testament will not attempt to produce a parallel.

† Pag. 94.

‡ The story is told, pag. 86.—The insinuation is made, in a prolix, confused, and obscure paragraph, pag. 87.

|| Pag. 100.

* Prov. xxx. 5. St Peter bears much the same testimony to the whole order of scriptural writings. With regard to their use, he calls them milk; because nothing is so well adapted to nourish our faith and our holiness. With regard to their quality, he styles them ἀδολον, sincere, unadulterated, pure; without any mixture of falsehood, or any tincture of folly. 1 Pet. ii. 2.

† He wrote a history of the civil wars of France, in fifteen books, containing all that was remarkable, from the death of Henry II. in 1559, to the peace of Vervins in 1598. It was originally written in Italian, and translated into French by J. Bodin. Collier's Hist. Dict.

‡ Pag. 167. || Is. xlv. 5.

§ Is. xlv. 5. I have girded thee, though thou hast not known me. Xenophon's Κυρου Παιδεια, though written with quite a different view, is a very fine, and perhaps the very best comment on Isaiah's beautiful and expressive phrase, חגרתיך.

¶ Acts xxviii. 20. ‡ Hag. ii. 7.

ral offices. From the original promise (made to our first parents) through all its progressive revolutions, till it centres in the New Testament, as the only-begotten of the Father *, with a lustre and dignity suitable to so divine a personage ——Which is an event, of such incommunicable condescension, magnificence, and grace, that all the prophets bear witness to it †, and the very angels desire to look into it ‡.

How then must your Ladyship be surprised, to see Lord Bolingbroke undertaking to assign the principal scope of the Mosaic ‖ history, (the former part of it at least,) and not enlarging, not dwelling upon, no, nor so much as mentioning, the Redeemer: That all-glorious, all-important REDEEMER, who is the sum and substance of the whole scriptures: the Alpha and Omega in all the revelations of GOD: —of whom Moses §, wrote, and whose day Abraham saw ¶: —whose righteousness was preached by Noah ††, and his final advent foretold by Enoch ‡‡: —whose merits apprehended by faith, were the recommendation of Abel's sacrifice =, and the consolation of Adam ==, under the loss of immortality, an expulsion from paradise: —from whom many, if not all, the antediluvian patriarchs borrow their honours, and stand upon everlasting record, chiefly as being in the number of his progenitors. —— This capital omission is (to use his Lordship's own language) "a manifest abuse of "sacred history, and quite inexcusable in a writer, who "knew, or should have known —," that, in its most early as well as in its later periods, it invariably testifies of CHRIST —.

Thus to undertake, and thus to execute, is as if some pretender to anatomy should engage to explain the nature of animal motion, and say not a word concerning the nerves, the muscles, the heart; or, as if some smatterer in geography should offer to exhibit a complete map of our country, and leave entirely out of his plan, the cities, the towns, and the rivers. —— Yet this is not the only incident, on which my Lord, however critical in profane literature, discovers himself to have been very remiss in the study, at least very superficial in the knowledge, of his Bible.

From which hint I would take occasion to entreat, and with the most affectionate earnestness, all that are inclined to dispute against this divine book, first to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with it. —— And would they once set about the momentous work, with a candid, upright, and impartial mind; free from the jaundice of prejudices; not blinded with the fumes of self-conceit; not intoxicated with the cup of vitious pleasure: if they would thus examine the inspired volumes, they would soon perceive such a lovely constellation of truth, of wisdom, and of grace, shining forth from every page, as must turn their disesteem into admiration, and their aversion into delight.

But if they bring with them a fondness for fame, a haughty self-sufficiency of spirit, or an ignoble attachment to sensual gratifications; if they are determined to cherish, and will on no consideration divorce, these seducers of the heart, and perverters of the judgment; we cannot wonder, that the scriptures should appear to them, with much the same aspect, as the miraculous cloud appeared to the Egyptians; which threw darkness on their paths, and shed horror on their souls, even while it gave light to the steps, and alacrity to the hopes, of the Israelites . —— In this case, we may assign a reason for their opposition, from the unhappy circumstances recorded of Ishmael *: Their hand, their tongue, their pen, is against the word of GOD; because the word of GOD is against them, their tempers, and their ways.

In the sacred narrations, we behold the arm of the LORD revealed. —— Other historians only guess at the interposition of an avenging, or propitious GOD. And though conjectures of this kind occur but very rarely in their works; they are frequently censured, as a presumptuous intrusion upon the arcana of heaven. —— But the penmen of scripture, with unerring certainty declare, This is the LORD's doing; a stroke from the sword of his justice †, or a reward from the riches of his goodness ‡.

Here we perceive, as in the brightest mirror, what practices he favours, and what methods he opposes; what courses are attended with his blessing, and what behaviour provokes his displeasure. —— These records set before us the most striking exemplifications, both of the divine threatenings, and of the divine promises; demonstrating, from repeated experience, that the former are more than vain menaces; the latter are far from alluring fallacies. By which means, they are admirably well adapted, to inculcate those fundamental lessons of practical religion; —a continual advertence to GOD; —a believing dependence on GOD; —and an habitual expectation of success in our schemes, not merely from any address or industry of our own, but from the all-powerful benediction of GOD; —which are, of all other precepts, perhaps, the most salutary and beneficial to mankind.

My remarks would be immoderately prolix, were they to enumerate all the perfections of sacred history. —I shall content myself with wishing, that your Ladyship may esteem, may reverence, may love the whole book of GOD, —only in proportion to its worth. —— Then, I am persuaded, it will have your highest esteem, your profoundest reverence, and most devoted love.

Before I conclude, give me leave, Madam, to make one request: which I make, under a sense of my various obligations to your Ladyship, with all the engaging acts of your condescension and generosity full in my view. It ought therefore to be, and it really is, expressive of the most unfeigned thankfulness for your favours, and of the truest zeal for your happiness. It is this, —That you would carry on a daily intercourse, and cultivate a holy, an intimate familiarity, with the inspired writers, and their inestimable volumes. —— Read them. Recollect them. Weigh them. —— Contemplate them in their magnificent whole, in their beautiful parts, and their harmonious connections.

I should be afraid to recommend, in this zealous manner, and to this assiduous perusal, the most correct

* John i. 14. † Acts x. 43. ‡ 1 Pet. i. 12.
‖ Page 109. § John v. 46. ¶ John viii. 56.
†† 2 Pet. ii. 5. It can hardly be doubted, but Noah preached the very same righteousness, of which he himself was an heir: and that, we are assured, was the righteousness of faith, Heb. xi. 7.
‡‡ Jude 14. = Heb. xi. 4. == Gen. iii. 15.
~ Page 178. ~ John v. 39.

* Gen. xvi. 12. His hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him.

 Exod. xiv. 20. It was a cloud and darkness to them, but it gave light by night to these.

† See 2 Chron. x. 15. —xv. 6. —xxv. 20. —xxviii. 5, 6. —xxix. 8, 9.

‡ See 2 Chron. xii. 7. —xiii. 15, 16, 18. —xiv. 6, 12. —xxvi. 5. —xxvii. 6. —I refer to the Chronicles, rather than to the other parts of sacred history, in order to create a higher esteem for these excellent memoirs. Many people, I believe, are contentedly ignorant of the Chronicles; because some of the first chapters consist of Hebrew names, which are forbidding, and of genealogical tables, which are useless to the generality of readers. —But, notwithstanding their unpromising introduction, they contain the most memorable and momentous occurrences. They are interspersed with the most weighty and edifying remarks. They are worthy of our repeated perusal, and will amply repay the most careful attention. —I would compare them to some noble mine, whose surface is barren, and seems to include nothing valuable. But, as you penetrate the soil, the treasure opens. The deeper you go, the more riches you find. And, instead of regretting the little toil of application, you are only grieved, that you undertook the gainful search no sooner.

com-

compositions, that ever proceeded from a human pen. But here I am under no apprehension of your exhausting the mine, and complaining of emptiness; under no apprehension, left the entertainment should flatten upon your taste, and create disgust. The more we search those storehouses of wisdom, the better we understand those oracles of truth, the more they will approve themselves to our judgment, and become dearer, still dearer to our affections.——The pages of scripture, like the productions of nature, will not only endure the test, but improve upon the trial. The application of the microscope to the one, and a repeated meditation on the other, are sure to display new beauties, and present us with higher attractives.——Nay, the very attempts of an adversary to blacken the scriptures, serve only to increase their lustre. For my part, I never should have seen the prediction of Noah rising, with such perspicuity, propriety, and glory, to observation, had not Lord Bolingbroke made an effort to overwhelm it with objections, and sink * it into discredit.

Above all, may we bring to this best of studies, an humble mind: a mind deeply sensible of its own ignorance and weakness; yet frequently and chearfully lifted up to GOD, for his enlightening and animating Spirit: that, by his sacred influences, our understandings may be opened to understand the scriptures †, and our hearts opened to receive them ‡; to understand them, in all the fulness of their heavenly meaning; to receive them, in all the force of their transforming power.——That, reading the threatenings, we may tremble ‖ at the awful word, and acknowledge ourselves justly liable to those terrible judgments; but at the same time believe, that CHRIST has delivered us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us §.——That, reading the promises, we may confess ourselves unworthy of an interest in such unspeakable blessings; yet rest assured, that all the promises of GOD are yea and amen in CHRIST JESUS ¶; are our unquestionable portion, through his merits and atonement; and will certainly be fulfilled, through his intercession and faithfulness.——Reading the precepts, let us rejoice in the belief, that our Saviour, obedient unto death, has fulfilled them perfectly for our justification; that our Saviour, exalted unto heaven, has engaged to put his Spirit within us for our sanctification; causing us to walk in his statutes, and to keep his judgments, and do them †.——Contemplating the various examples, may we use some of them, as admonitory sea-marks, to avoid the rocks of sin; use others, as a conducting clue, to guide our feet into the way of peace; use all, as so many incitements, to awaken our circumspection, or quicken our diligence, in making our calling and election sure.

Then we shall have another proof, that the original of these holy books is not from man, but from the LORD JEHOVAH: a proof, which some people may explode, as imaginary or enthusiastical, but is really of the utmost solidity, and of the last importance; which, though by no means independent on, much less exclusive of, other evidences, is, nevertheless, to each individual person, incomparably more valuable than any, or every other attestation. We shall HAVE THE WITNESS IN OURSELVES *. We shall experience, on our own souls, the happy energy of the scriptures. They will be the instrument of working such a lively faith in CHRIST, such an ardent love of GOD, such a cordial benevolence for our fellow-creatures †, as cannot fail to exalt our desires, refine our affections, and dignify our tempers;—such as will administer comfort under affliction, and impart an additional relish to prosperity;—such as will teach us to order our conversation right, amidst all the snares, all the labyrinths of time: and gradually train us up for the pure bliss, and consummate enjoyments of eternity.

May THIS proof, Madam, be written on your heart, ——written in bright and indelible characters,——written by the finger of the living GOD!——Then, I am assured, every attempt to stagger your belief, or withdraw your veneration from THE BIBLE, will be like an attempt to shatter the rock in pieces with a bubble, or to pierce the adamant with a feather.——This is not only the sincere wish, but, so long as religion and gratitude have any place in my breast, it will also be the earnest prayer of much obliged,

Your LADYSHIP's

and most obedient humble servant,

April 22. 1752.

JAMES HERVEY.

POSTSCRIPT.

I have taken no notice of his Lordship's animadversions, relating to the genuineness of the gospel-history: because this would be entering upon a new field, which I leave open and untouched, for some more able defender of that invaluable depositum.——Not that I apprehend, there is any thing very formidable in the attack. But I think it would be serviceable, as I am persuaded it is easy, to shew the weakness and unreasonableness of those arguments, which men of superior abilities are obliged to take up with, when they list themselves under the banner of scepticism or infidelity.——It would also be a piece of public justice, to inquire into the sincerity, probity, and consistency of those writers; who, in some places, lay a mighty stress upon the authority of the New Testament, (page 94.) in others, endeavour to sap the very foundation of its credibility, (page 177.)

---

* An allusion to the motto, in the title-page,

Morsu profundo, pulchrior evenit, and expressive of its meaning.

† Luke xxiv. 45.

‡ Acts xvi. 14.—Such is the darkness, such the depravity of our minds, that they will not, they cannot, be made wise unto salvation, even from the scriptures themselves, without the powerful agency of the blessed Spirit. Unless his influences enlighten our understandings; and apply the doctrines, when understood, to our hearts; we shall be, even with the word of light and life in our hands, somewhat like blind Bartimeus, sitting amidst the beams of day; or like the withered arm, with invaluable treasures before it. This, I think, experience must acknowledge; this, I am very certain, the texts referred to, in concert with many others, evince.

‖ See Ezra x. 3.—2 Chron. xxxiv. 27. where it might not be amiss, to compare the temper of true believers, and the behaviour of an illustrious king, with the spirit that runs thro' his Lordship's performance.

§ Gal. iii. 13. ¶ 2 Cor. i. 20. † Ezek. xxxvi. 27.

* 1 John v. 10.

† This is what his Lordship means, or ought to mean, when he speaks of "the proper force of religion; that force which subdues "the mind, and awes the conscience by conviction," page 182. And I am well assured, whatever he may surmise to the contrary, that this voucher to the real inspiration of the scriptures, and divine original of Christianity, "is not wanting." Nay, I durst venture to engage, that it never will be wanting to any person, who seeks it with due attention, and becoming diligence; and neither forgets nor neglects those necessary preparatives, prescribed by the great Master of the Christian school:—The one comprehended in this maxim, If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of GOD. John vii. 17. The other delivered in the following direction, If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of GOD, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. Jam. i. 5.

CONSIDERATIONS on the prevailing Cuſtom of viſiting on SUNDAYS.

THE ſentiments here offered againſt the prevailing cuſtom of profaning the Sabbath, will probably ſatisfaction to every ſerious reader, and be productive of much good; eſpecially as it is in every body's power to reform one, and as then his own conduct will be a tacit reproof to his acquaintance, who may probably, through his example, be induced to weigh theſe proceedings attentively, and no longer follow a multitude to do evil.—It is certainly a matter of importance to inquire whether Sunday-viſits are juſtifiable upon the principles of ſcripture and of reaſon? as the conſcientious obſervation of the Sabbath has of late years been ſo much diſregarded; and as it is now become the principal day of viſiting among perſons of all ranks. The chief advocates for the continuance of ſuch a practice ſhould, methinks, defend it publicly, that their arguments may be properly examined, if (in their opinion) ſuch a cuſtom can admit of any rational defence. And thoſe who are ſufficiently convinced by what is here advanced, ſhould reſolve to diſcontinue Sunday-viſits themſelves, and diſcountenance them in others, as far as they can conſiſtent with decency and prudence.——That the number of ſuch well-diſpoſed perſons may be daily increaſing, is undoubtedly the hearty wiſh of every one who is ſincerely deſirous of promoting the glory of GOD, and the good of mankind.

Qu. Whether it be right for TRULY-SERIOUS perſons to viſit on Sundays?

THE perſons here mentioned, are the truly-ſerious. As to many people, it matters not whether they are at home or abroad: GOD is not in all their thoughts; they have no concern for their eternal welfare; they therefore are, in every place, altogether and alike unprofitable.

But when we begin to diſcern the things that are excellent; when we ſincerely deſire to "obtain ſal-"vation, with eternal glory, by JESUS CHRIST;" then, whether it be proper to fall into the prevailing cuſtom of viſiting on Sundays? is the queſtion.

Were our companions religious, and was our converſation edifying, I ſhould make no ſcruple to give my voice in the affirmative. Every parlour would then be a little ſanctuary; would echo back the exhortations, and ſecond the deſigns of the pulpit; and we might truly ſay, It is good for us to be here.

But, alas! where do we find ſuch company? when do we hear ſuch converſation? The general converſation is all impertinence; not ſo much as ſeaſoned with a ſpice of religion. They talk of vanity every one with his neighbour, Pſal. xii. 2. For which reaſon, I cannot think it ſafe or expedient, allowable or innocent, HABITUALLY to viſit on Sundays.

It is inconſiſtent with the beſt example. I was in the Spirit on the LORD's day, ſays St John. I was filled with the communications of the HOLY SPIRIT, giving me clear views of CHRIST, bright hopes of glory, and ſhedding abroad the love of GOD in my heart. But is this compatible with the idle, trifling, inſignificant chat, which ingroſſes our ordinary viſits?

OBJECTION I. Will it be ſaid, the apoſtle's was a peculiar caſe? I anſwer, it was a peculiarly-happy caſe. And will a prudent Chriſtian relinquiſh the proſpect of ſuch unſpeakable happineſs, for the moſt empty and deluſive amuſement? But, I believe, it was not peculiar to the apoſtle; rather the common privilege of all believers; written as a pattern for their practice, and to be the plan of their expectations.

It is contrary to the divine prohibition. The negative law, relating to the Sabbath, is, not doing thy own ways, not finding thy own pleaſure, not ſpeaking thy own words, Iſ. lviii. 13.——Not doing thy own ways; abſtaining from ſecular buſineſs, and all worldly purſuits.——Not finding thy own pleaſure; renouncing all thoſe recreations and amuſements, which may tend to gratify thy taſte, not to glorify thy almighty LORD.——Not ſpeaking thy own words; converſing on ſpiritual, ſublime, and heavenly ſubjects; not on low, earthly, temporal matters, which, having no reference to the Creator's honour, are therefore called thy own. However ſome people may act, or whatever they may think, this is the expreſs and unalterable law eſtabliſhed by the GOD of heaven. Whether it be poſſible to mingle in modiſh company, and obey this law, let thoſe judge who are acquainted with the world.

It breaks the divine command. The poſitive law relating to the Sabbath is, Remember the Sabbath-day, to keep it holy. REMEMBER, take particular notice of THIS injunction. It is a duty greatly to be regarded, and moſt conſcientiouſly to be obſerved. Upon the due obſervance of this, our diſpoſition and ability to obſerve the other precepts, in good meaſure, depends. Keep it holy; devote it to holy purpoſes; ſpend it in holy exerciſes; and not barely an hour or two; not barely the intervals of private and public devotion; but the day, the Sabbath-day, the whole day. Neither will the whole day be too long, if we make conſcience of diſcharging the ſeveral duties of religion, reading and meditation; prayer and praiſe; teaching our children, and inſtructing our domeſtics; examining our hearts, and taking heed to our ways. All theſe offices, if properly performed, will leave very little, rather no time for unneceſſary elopements. And ſhall we huddle over all theſe important offices, or totally neglect ſome of them, only to indulge ourſelves in the moſt unprofitable levities? at once doing an injury to our ſpiritual intereſts, and violating the divine precept.

I fear, it will be a kind of crucifying afreſh our bleſſed Maſter, Heb. vi. 6. This expreſſion we have often read, but think ourſelves free from the guilt implied in it, and indeed from the very likelihood of contracting it. But let us be reminded, that we crucify our LORD afreſh, when we give others occaſion to conclude, that we have very little eſteem for him, or gratitude to him; conſequently, that he has little or no excellency, for which we or others ſhould deſire him. Now, what elſe can the world conclude, when they ſee us giving into the vanities of a licentious mode, on that very day, which is ſacred to the commemoration of his reſurrection? "Surely," might the children of this world ſay, "if "theſe Chriſtians had any real reverence for their "LORD, they would ſhew it on his own day. They "would either be retired to contemplate and adore him, "or elſe come abroad to exalt and glorify him. But "they come abroad to be as frothy in their talk, and as "trifling in their temper, as forgetful of their SAVIOUR; "and as regardleſs of his honour, as the moſt arrant "worldling among us all." To afford a handle for ſuch reflections, is to wound the REDEEMER in the houſe of his friends.

It will grieve the HOLY SPIRIT, Eph. iv. 30. Chriſtians believe, that he is infinitely wiſe, all-gracious, and ever bleſſed; that he dwells in their hearts, and is the ſource of all their holineſs and all their happineſs. Therefore we pray daily in our liturgy, that the HOLY SPIRIT may not be taken from us. On Sunday, we commemorate the deſcent of this divine gueſt; and are, in a particular manner, to implore his preſence, and cultivate his influences. But can this be done, by neglecting his expreſs prohibition, and breaking his poſitive command; by diſregarding the examples which he has ſet before us; and diſhonouring that SAVIOUR whom he delights to magnify? Beſides, dare any mortal preſume to ſay in his heart amidſt a circle of our polite viſitants, "I am now acting in a "manner becoming my relation to the eternal SPIRIT. "Theſe ſentiments and this diſcourſe are ſuitable to his "dignity, wiſdom, and glory; a proper method of ce-"lebrating and honouring the day of his miraculous "miſſion!"

Should any one aſk, "what is meant by grieving the "HOLY SPIRIT?" It means offending his exalted Majeſty, and cauſing him to act as men commonly act, when they are grieved and diſpleaſed with any one; they withdraw from his company, and viſit him no more. When Samuel was grieved for Saul's miſbehaviour, it is written, "He came no more to ſee Saul." If the almighty COMFORTER be provoked to deal thus with our ſouls, alas! what a loſs muſt we ſuſtain! a loſs, unſpeakable, irreparable, eternal!

So that if this practice were not ſinful, it muſt be exceedingly detrimental; and that, not in one only, but in various reſpects. Have we received ſpiritual good from the public ordinances? The admonition of heaven is, We ought to give the more earneſt heed to the things which we have heard, leſt at any time we ſhould let them ſlip, Heb. ii. 1. By this practice, we not only ſuffer them to ſlip, but open as it were a leak for their immediate diſcharge. Have we been under edifying impreſſions from our private exercises? The unerring direction is, Quench not the Spirit. Stifle not the ſerious deſires which he has awakened. Allow them their full ſcope, till they are formed into gracious habits. By the practice under conſideration, we pour water inſtead of oil upon the feeble flame. We extinguiſh what we ſhould cheriſh. Is the heavenly ſeed ſown in our breaſts? Theſe diſſipating interviews are the ravenous birds, which follow the ſeedſman, and devour the grain: ſo that nothing takes root. No fruit of faith, of joy, or love is produced.

Let me only add, that, on a dying-bed, the miſimprovement of all our time will be moſt bitterly regretted. How much more the miſimprovement of thoſe hours, which GOD himſelf has hallowed, has ſet apart for the nobleſt purpoſes, and is wont to bleſs in an eſpecial manner! "While others were ſeeking the pearl "of great price, and gathering thoſe treaſures of wiſ-"dom and grace, which endure to everlaſting life; I, "alas! was ſquandering away the precious opportuni-"ties in very vanity." To ſee the curtain of time dropping, to ſee a vaſt eternity opening before, and to have ſuch reflections haunting our conſcience; this will cauſe miſery not to be expreſſed, create anguiſh not to be conceived.

OBJECTION II. Will it be ſaid, in anſwer to theſe conſiderations, "That company, even trifling com-"pany, is a relaxation. We return to the inſtruction "of our families, and to our evening devotion with "freſh alacrity, being ſick of theſe triflers?" a ſtrange argument! It ſhould rather be reverſed. The objectors might truly ſay, Being ſick of religion and its ſervice, we want ſuch triflers to afford us ſome relief. The ſincere ſervant of CHRIST would find no recreation, but feel grief of heart, in ſuch interviews. It muſt be a real affliction to obſerve his divine LORD abſolutely diſregarded; diſregarded on the day peculiarly devoted to his honour; every vanity now preferred before him, as Barabbas the robber was formerly. The true refreſhment for our ſouls conſiſts in having our faith increaſed, our hope elevated, and our views of heaven enlarged; in contemplating the infinite perfection and glory of our Redeemer; the infinite grandeur, and fulneſs of his propitiation; and our complete, I might have ſaid, our infinite ſecurity from wrath and vengeance, by being intereſted in his merits.

OBJECTION III. "Sunday is the beſt part of our "time for this purpoſe; buſineſs is ſuſpended; every "body is ready dreſſed; all circumſtances invite." Is it the beſt part of our time? Then let it be devoted to the beſt of beings. Who is more worthy of our choice thoughts, affections, hours, than that divinely-compaſſionate Saviour, who offered himſelf, in the very prime of his life, a bleeding victim for our ſins, that his ſacrifice might have every recommending circumſtance which could render it acceptable to GOD, and available for man?

OBJECTION IV. "It is the univerſal cuſtom. "To diſcontinue it, would render us unfaſhionable." And cannot you bear to be a little unfaſhionable for his ſake, who was deſpiſed and rejected, who humbled himſelf to death, even the death of the croſs, for your ſake? Is it the univerſal cuſtom? Then cuſtom is the idol, which we are called to renounce. I muſt ſay of cuſtom, in this caſe, as Elijah ſaid of Baal; If cuſtom be GOD, follow its dictates; but if JEHOVAH be GOD obſerve his precepts. It is written in the ſcriptures, Rom. xii. 2. Be not conformed to this world. To what does this prohibition relate? To ſuch ungodly cuſtoms no doubt. No battery of cannon was ever pointed more directly againſt a citadel to be demoliſhed, than this text againſt ſuch cuſtoms. In indifferent matters, let the Chriſtian avoid ſingularity; let him dreſs ſomewhat like his neighbours; let him make an appearance ſuitable to his ſtation: but let him not follow a multitude to profane the Sabbath, or to do any evil. HERE religious perſons ſhould, by all means, be ſingular; ſhould diſtinguiſh themſelves by a becoming zeal for their GOD; ſhould ſet an example, and ſhine as lights, in the midſt of a crooked and perverſe generation: otherwiſe, they may do, not themſelves only, but others alſo, incredible harm.

OBJECTION V. Some perhaps may ſtart, and reply, "If theſe things are ſo, to what a degree of ſinful "negligence is even the Chriſtian world arrived!"—With regard to the world called Chriſtian, this is too true. And no meaſure of ſorrow can be ſufficient to bewail the deplorable degeneracy. Negligence, or rather obſtinacy, in this capital inſtance, is a melancholy indication of no leſs diſobedience in other reſpects.

OBJECTION VI. "This will be irkſome, will ren-"der our religion a burden." I hope, no one that pretends to ſeriouſneſs will offer to make this objection. The ſinners in Zion made it. For which reaſon they are branded, and by the divine SPIRIT himſelf, with infamy that will never be blotted out: O! what a wearineſs is it! when will the Sabbath, and its irkſome ſolemnities, be gone? Mal. i. 13. and Amos viii. 5. This diſcovers a heart alienated from GOD, that has not taſted the good word of grace, and favours not the things which be of CHRIST. Otherwiſe, ſuch would be the language, "One day, thus employed, is better than a "thouſand," Pſal. lxxxiv. 10. Is it tedious and burdenſome to paſs a ſingle day in devout exercises? How then ſhall we paſs, how ſhall we endure the ages of eternity? ſince we are aſſured, that thoſe happy beings who ſtand around the throne, clothed with white robes, ſerve their GOD day and night, for ever and ever, in his temple. In the regions of immortality they find a heaven; becauſe there they have a never-ceaſing and eternal communion with GOD; becauſe there they have an uninterrupted and everlaſting Sabbath.

A TREATISE on the religious Education of DAUGHTERS.

Train up a child in the way she should go: and when she is old, she will not depart from it. Prov. xxii. 6.

ADVERTISEMENT.

AS this little treatise was intended for the press, by Mr HERVEY, he had transcribed it from his short-hand copy.—The candid reader will, however, make the proper allowances for a posthumous piece, which would undoubtedly have appeared less defective had it been revised by the ingenious AUTHOR.

IT has long been a prevailing report, that, among persons of education and distinction, true religion is very rare. This, I would hope, is an invidious rumour rather than a true representation of the case. May it not be an artifice of the grand enemy? calculated to bring the best and noblest of causes into disrepute; as though politeness and piety were inconsistent; as though grace and good-breeding were irreconcileable. —Is then the faith of CHRIST quite fatal to refined manners? as the rod of Moses was to the counterfeit miracles of the magicians. No: it is rather like the influence of the sanctuary on the rod of Aaron; which, while it remained at a distance from the tabernacle, was a dry, sapless, and barren stick; but, when deposited before the ark, was quickened into vegetable light, was adorned with a milk-white bloom, and enriched with full-grown fruit; or, as the sacred historian expresses this surprising fact, "It brought forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds." Numb. xvii. 8.

I find upon the list of saints, the most renowned kings, and victorious generals; the ablest politicians, and the greatest philosophers: men, that have bid the sun stand still, and prolong the departing day; have laid an embargo upon darkness, and protracted the shades of night; have commanded the ground to cleave asunder, and transmit their presumptuous foes to a strange and inevitable destruction; have divided the impetuous waves, and led their followers to safety and to conquest, through the depths of the sea: men, who have walked in the burning fiery furnace, as under the shelter of an embowering arbour; and sat in the lion's den, amidst a herd of hungry monsters, with as much serenity, and as much security, as amidst a circle of bosom-friends.

I myself have known various persons, admired for their accomplished behaviour, and revered for their exalted station, who have thought it their highest honour to be servants of JESUS CHRIST. My excellent friend Camillus, at whose house I now reside, is one of the number. I cannot refrain from giving a portrait of Camillus; or rather, of a few of his most distinguishing features: for to paint him in full proportion, as he daily appears, in all the mild, the benign majesty of—domestic authority,—parental government,—and Christian zeal;—to do this, would require a much abler hand than mine.

Camillus, not long ago, entertained in his house a young clergyman, who was always treated with a respect, suitable to the dignity of his office, and the piety of his behaviour. Having lately presented the worthy ecclesiastic to a living, and always requiring residence on the benefice, he is now destitute of a chaplain. Remembering, however, that all Christians are spiritual priests; he thinks it no dishonour to have an immediate and personal audience with the King of heaven; nor acting at all out of character, to represent the wants of his household, with his own mouth, at the throne of grace.

Before supper is introduced, the evening-incense ascends. This, rather than a later hour, is pitched upon, that the little congregation may join in the sacred service, with a lively devotion. After a plentiful meal, when the limbs are weary, people, even though kneeling, and in the presence of God, are more inclined to nod than to pour out their souls; are very, very apt to mistake the cushion for a pillow.——No servant is allowed to be absent; one only excepted, whose presence in the kitchen is absolutely necessary. Acquainted with their master's resolution, they are careful, so to manage their affairs, and dispatch their business, that no avoidable obstacle may intervene, to detain them from the stated worship.

When all are assembled, without either tumultuous disorder in their approach, or a slovenly negligence in their apparel, a chapter is read. Camillus makes the choice. He imagines, it is not so useful for his family, whose memories are weak, and their capacities scanty, to read the lesson for the day. He has, therefore, selected some of the most instructive and animating portions of scripture; and judges it advisable to peruse these again and again, rather than to go regularly through the whole inspired writings.——The servants take it by turns to read; which improves them in the practice, and keeps them awake. If any of them discovers a disposition to sleep, to him the office is sure to be assigned.

When the chapter is finished, Camillus singles out some one verse, of very weighty and edifying import; which, for the space of five or six minutes, he explains, applies, and affectionately urges upon their consciences. ——This done, with great seriousness, and profound reverence, he offers up evening-prayers. His prayers consist of short sentences, and the whole is performed in a little time. Every part is pronounced with that deliberate slowness, and solemn accent, which command attention, and create awe. He makes a very perceivable pause, at the close of each petition; that every one may have leisure to add, in silence, a hearty Amen; and to recollect the merits of that blessed Redeemer, which render every thanksgiving acceptable, and every supplication successful.

In the morning, before breakfast, the worship of the living God is renewed. At this juncture, Camillus omits the chapter; but requires one of his domestics to repeat the verse on which he enlarged the preceding night. None knows which shall be called to this task; therefore every one is obliged to be properly prepared. He throws the substance of his exhortation into a few searching and interesting questions, which he addresses to one of his children or servants; for, in this respect, no difference is made.——All are equally enjoined to remember: all are equally accountable for what they hear.——Sometimes he encourages those, whose answers shew, that they have given diligent heed to his instructions. Sometimes he puts on an air of severity, mixed with tenderness, and reproves the notoriously negligent. Always he inculcates the principal points; charging them to retain the doctrines in their memory, and revolve them in their thoughts, while they are pursuing their respective business.——These doctrines are are the ſeed of faith; the root of godlineſs. Unleſs THESE be lodged in the mind, and operate on the heart, he never expects to have his domeſtics commence true believers, or real Chriſtians. No more than the huſbandman can reaſonably expect a crop in harveſt, without ſowing his field; or the floriſt promiſe himſelf a blow of tulips, without planting his parterre.

I have given a glimple of Camillus, at the head of his family; let me now ſhew my favourite in another attitude.——Camillus is convinced, that no truſt is of ſuperior, or of equal importance, to the tuitionary cultivation * of an immortal ſoul. As Providence has bleſſed him with two fine daughters, their preſent and future happineſs is the reigning object of his care. He has no intereſt ſo much at heart, as to give them a truly-refined education; ſuch as may render them an ornament and a bleſſing to ſociety, while they paſs the time of their ſojourning here below; and may train them up for a ſtate of everlaſting bliſs, when the world and its tranſitory ſcenes ſhall be no more.

Camillus never could perſuade himſelf to admire the maxims of prudence, ſaid to be gathered from the extravagant rant of our tragedies; and leſs is his eſteem for thoſe modeſt diſpoſitions, which people pretend to imbibe from the luſcious gallantries of comedy. For which reaſon, he has no impatient deſire to ſecure, for Miſs Miniſſa and Miſs Serena, a place in the front-box.—However, as we are apt immoderately to covet what is abſolutely forbidden, he has himſelf attended them, once or twice, to the theatrical entertainments, and public diverſions; thinking it much the ſafeſt method, that their curioſity ſhould be gratified under his own inſpection; and hoping to make them ſenſible how much they endanger their virtue, who too often frequent them; how ſhamefully they debaſe their affections, who are paſſionately fond of them; and what mere phantoms they follow, who ſeek for ſatisfaction in ſuch deluſory delights.

They learn to dance, in order to acquire a genteel air, and a graceful demeanor; not to ſhine at a ball, or win the worthleſs admiration of fops.——He is content to have them unacquainted with the wild and romantic fables of Heathen poetry; nor is under any painful apprehenſions of damping the ſprightlineſs of their temper, though they have no taſte for the chimerical adventures of our romances, and are ſtrangers to the looſe intrigues of our novels; being fully perſuaded, that there is as much ſound ſenſe, as ſmartneſs of thought, in that celebrated ſaying,

Retire, and read your BIBLE, to be gay;
There truths abound of ſovereign aid to peace †!

He has introduced them to the knowledge of hiſtory, and its inſtructive facts. They have a tolerable idea of the four univerſal monarchies, ſo eminent for their great events, and ſo circumſtantially foretold in ſcripture. They have been led through the moſt remarkable tranſactions of our own country, and are pretty well acquainted with the preſent ſtate of Europe. They have, all along, been taught to obſerve the wonderful revolutions of empires, and the adorable procedure of providence: that they may diſcern how the faſhion of this world paſſeth away ‡; and how happy are the people, how happy the perſons, who have the LORD for their GOD.——They have been taught to obſerve the honourable ſucceſs, that has uſually attended the practice of integrity, guided by prudence; together with the ſcandal and ruin which have always purſued Folly in her ſenſeleſs rambles, and dogged Vice to her horrid haunts: that they may ſee the rocks on which ſome have ſplit, and avoid the deſtructive track; ſee the road, which has conducted others to the haven of happineſs, and ſteer the ſame auſpicious courſe.

They have been initiated in geography, and underſtand the ſeveral diviſions of the globe: the extent of its principal kingdoms; and the manners of their various inhabitants. They will tell you the peculiar commodities which each climate produces: whence comes the tea, that furniſhes their breakfaſt; and whence the ſugar that renders it palatable: what mountains ſupply them with wines, and what iſland ſend them their ſpices: in what groves the ſilk-worms ſpin the materials for their cloaths; and what mines * ſupply them with the diamonds that ſparkle in their ear-rings.——A ſcreen, covered with a ſet of coloured maps, and a cuſtom of referring from the public papers to thoſe beautiful draughts, has rendered the acquiſition of this knowledge a diverſion rather than a taſk; has enticed them into a valuable branch of ſcience, under the inviting diſguiſe of amuſement.——This ſerves to enlarge their apprehenſions of things; gives them magnificent thoughts of the great Creator; and may help to ſuppreſs that ſilly ſelf-admiration, which prompts ſo many pretty idols, to fancy themſelves the only conſiderable creatures under heaven.

They ſpell to perfection; and have obtained this art, by a ſort of play, rather than by laborious application. Whenever they aſked any little gratification, it has been their papa's cuſtom to make them ſpell the word, which if they performed aright, they ſeldom failed to ſucceed in their requeſt.——They are miſtreſſes of the needle; and the youngeſt, whoſe genius inclines that way, is expert in uſing the pencil. Muſic is their recreation, not their buſineſs. The eldeſt, to a ſkilful finger, adds a melodious and well-regulated voice. She often entertains me with ſinging an anthem to her harpſichord. Entertains, did I ſay? ſhe really edifies me. Theſe truly-excellent performances exalt the deſires, and compoſe the affections. They inſpire ſuch a ſerenity of delight, as leaves neither a ſting in the conſcience, nor a ſtain on the imagination. Methinks, they bring us a little antepaſt of heaven, and tune our ſouls for its harmonious joys.

Thoroughly verſed in the moſt practical parts of arithmetic, they have each her week, wherein to be entruſted with the management of a ſum of money.——This they diſburſe, as circumſtances require, for the ſmaller neceſſaries of the family. Of this they keep an exact account, and make a regular entry of each particular in their day-book.—Not long ago, a tenant of inferior rank came to Camillus with his rent. Inſtead of receiving it himſelf, he referred him to Miſs Serena. You would have been delighted to obſerve the behaviour of our little landlady, on this occaſion; the engaging condeſcenſion, with which ſhe addreſſed the honeſt ruſtic; the tender good-nature, with which ſhe inquired after my dame and the family at home; the ready dexterity with which ſhe wrote and ſubſcribed a proper receipt; and, above all, her amiable generoſity, in returning half a crown, to buy a copy-book for his

* Senſerit, quid mens rite, quid indoles
Nutrita fauſtis ſub penetralibus
Poſſet. HOR.

The meaning of which in Engliſh is:

"What could be done we know, were we but led
"By bright example, and by virtue bred."

† Dr Young's eighth night-thought.

